Till you have done your business in the city:

If this be courtesy, sir, accept of it.

Ped. O, sir, I do; and will repute you ever

The patron of my life and liberty.

Tra. Then go with me, to make the matter good.

This, by the way, I let you understand;—

My father is here look'd for every day,

To pass assurance⁵ of a dower in marriage

'Twixt me and one Baptista's daughter here:

In all these circumstances I'll instruct you:

Go with me, sir, to clothe you as becomes you.

[Exeunt.]

referring to Gascoigne's Supposes, from which Shakspeare took this part of his plot.

assurances of the realm, because thereby each man's property is assured to him. So in a subsequent scene:—

they are busied about a counterfeit assurance.

² So in King Henry VI. Part 3.

³ Peace, wilful boy, or I will charm your tongue.

In Psalm lvi. we read of the charmer who charms wisely, in order to quell the fury of the adder.

deriving it from enguer, French, to catch with bird-lime: but without sufficient reason. Mr. Gifford, in a SCENE III. A Room in Petruchio's House.Enter KATHARINA and GRUMIO.Gru. No, no; forsooth; I dare not, for my life.Kath. The more my wrong, the more his spite appears:

What, did he marry me to famish me?
 Beggars that come unto my father's door,
 Upon entreaty, have a present alms;
 If not, elsewhere they meet with charity:
 But I,—who never knew how to entreat,—
 Am starv'd for meat, giddy for lack of sleep:
 With oaths kept waking, and with brawling fed:
 And that which spites me more than all these wants,

He does it under name of perfect love;
 As who should say,—if I should sleep, or eat,
 'Twere deadly sickness, or else present death.—
 I pry'thee go, and get me some repast;
 I care not what, so it be wholesome food.

Gru. What say you to a neat's foot?Kath. 'Tis passing good; I pry'thee let me have it.Gru. I fear it is too choleric a meat:—

How say you to a fat tripe, finely broil'd?

Kath. I like it well; good Grunio, fetch it me.Gru. I cannot tell; I fear, 'tis choleric.

What say you to a piece of beef, and mustard?

Kath. A dish that I do love to feed upon.Gru. Ay, but the mustard is too hot a little.¹*Kath.* Why, then the beef, and let the mustard rest.Gru. Nay, then I will not; you shall have the mustard,

Or else you get no beef of Grunio.

Kath. Then both, or one, or any thing thou wilt.Gru. Why, then the mustard without the beef.Kath. Go, get thee gone, thou false deluding slave, [Beats him.]

That feed'st me with the very name of meat:

Sorrow on thee, and all the pack of you,

That triumph thus upon my misery!

Go, get thee gone, I say.

Enter PETRUCHIO with a dish of meat; and Hortensio.Pet. How fares my Kate? What, sweeting, all amok?²*Hor.* Mistress, what cheer?Kath. 'Faith, as cold as can be.Pet. Pluck up thy spirits, look cheerfully upon me.

Here, love; thou see'st how diligent I am,
 To dress thy meat myself, and bring it thee:

[Sets the dish on a table.]

I am sure, sweet Kate, this kindness merits thanks.

What, not a word? Nay then, thou lov'st it not;

And all my pains is sorted to no 'proof.'³—

Here, take away this dish.

Kath. Pray you, let it stand.Pet. The poorest service is repaid with thanks;
 And so shall mine, before you touch the meat.Kath. I thank you, sir.Hor. Signior Petruchio, fye! you are to blame!
 Come, mistress Kate, I'll hear you company.Pet. Eat it up all, Hortensio, if thou lov'st me.—[Aside.]

Much good do it unto thy gentle heart!

Kate, eat apace:—And now, my honey love,

Will we return unto thy father's house;

And revel it as bravely as the best,
 With silken coats, and caps, and golden rings,
 With ruffs, and cuffs, and farthingales, and things;
 With scarfs, and fans, and double change of very,⁴

With amber bracelets, beads, and all this knavery.
 What, hast thou din'd? The tailor stays thy leisure,
 To deck thy body with his ruffling⁵ treasure.

Enter Tailor.

Come, tailor, let us see these ornaments;

Enter Haberdasher.

Lay forth the gown.—What news with you, sir?

Hab. Here is the cap your worship did bespeak.Pet. Why, this was moulded on a porringer!

A velvet dish;—fye, fye! 'tis lewd and filthy:

Why, 'tis a cockle, or a walnutshell,

A knack, a toy, a trick, a baby's cap;

Away with it; come, let me have a bigger.

Kath. I'll have no bigger; this doth fit the time,

And gentlewomen wear such caps as these.

Pet. When you are gentle, you shall have one too,

And not till then.

Hor. That will not be in haste. [Aside.]Kath. Why, sir, I trust, I may have leave to speak;

And speak I will; I am no child, no babe:

Your betters have endur'd me say my mind;

And, if you cannot, best you stop your ears.

My tongue will tell the anger of my heart;

Or else my heart, concealing it, will break:

And, rather than it shall, I will be free

Even to the uttermost, as I please, in words.

Pet. Why, thou say'st true; it is a paltry cap,A custard-coffin,⁶ a bauble, a silken pie:

I love thee well, in that thou lik'st it not.

Kath. Love me, or love me not, I like the cap;

And it I will have, or I will have none.

Pet. Thy gown? why, ay:—Come, tailor, let us see't.

O mercy, God! what masking stuff is here?

What's this? a sleeve! 'tis like a demi-cannon:

What! up and down, carv'd like an apple-tart?

Here's snip, and nip, and cut, and slish, and slash,

Like to a censor⁷ in a barber's shop:—

Why, what, o' devil's name, tailor, call'st thou this?

Hor. I see, she's like to have neither cap nor gown. [Aside.]Tai. You bid me make it orderly and well,

According to the fashion, and the time.

Pet. Marry, and did; but if you be remember'd,

I did not bid you mar it to the time.

Gru. hop me over every kennel home,

For you shall hop without my custom, sir:

I'll none of it; hence, make your best of it.

Kath. I never saw a better-fashion'd gown,
 More quaint,⁸ more pleasing, nor more commendable;

Belike, you mean to make a puppet of me.

Pet. Why, true; he means to make a puppet of thee.Tai. She says, your worship means to make a puppet of her.Pet. O monstrous arrogance! Thou liest, thou thread,

Thou thimble, can be no doubt that we should read 'proof with a mark of elision for approof; but sort is used in the sense of sorter, French, to issue, to terminate.' 'It sorted not'¹ is frequently used by writers of that period for, it did not end so; or, it did not answer. Shakespeare uses sort for lot, chance, more than once.

⁴ Finery.⁵ To ruffle, in Shakespeare's time, signified to flaunt, to strut, to swagger.⁶ A coffin was the culinary term for the raised crust of a pie or custard.⁷ These censers resembled our brasiers in shape, they had pierced convex covers.⁸ Quaint was used as a term of commendation by our ancestors. It seems, when applied to dress, to have meant spruce, trim, neat, like the French coints

¹ This is agreeable to the doctrine of the times. In The Glasse of Humours, no date, p. 60, it is said, 'But note here, that the first diet is not only in avoiding superfluity of meats, and surfeits of drinks, but also in eschewing such as are obnoxious, and least agreeable with our happy temperate state; as for a choleric man to abstain from all salt, scorched, dry meats, from mustard, and such like things as will aggravate his malignant humours.' Petruchio before objects to the over-roasted mutton.

² That is, all sunk and dispirited. This gallicism is frequent in many of the old plays.³ 'And all my labour has ended in nothing, or proved nothing,' says Johnson. This can hardly be right. Mr.
 Douce's suggestion, that it means 'all my labour is adapted to no approof,' is much better; indeed there

Thou yard, three-quarters, half-yard, quarter, nail,
Thou flea, thou nit, thou winter cricket thou :—
Brav'd in mine own house with a skein of thread !
Away, thou rag, thou quantity, thou remnant ;
Or I shall so be-mete¹ thee with thy yard,
As thou shalt think on prating whilst thou liv'st !
I tell thee, I, that thou hast marr'd her gown.

Tai. Your worship is deceiv'd ; the gown is made

Just as my master had direction :

Grumio gave order how it should be done.

Gru. I gave him no order, I gave him the stuff.

Tai. But how did you desire it should be made ?

Gru. Marry, sir, with needle and thread.

Tai. But did you not request to have it cut ?

Gru. Thou hast faced many things.²

Tai. I have.

Gru. Face not me ; thou hast brav'd³ many men, brave not me ; I will neither be fac'd nor brav'd. I say unto thee,—I bid thy master cut out the gown ; but I did not bid him cut it to pieces :⁴ ergo, thou liest.

Tai. Why, here is the note of the fashion to testify.

Pet. Read it.

Gru. The note lies in his throat, if he say I said so.

Tai. Imprimis, a loose-bodied gown :

Gru. Master, if ever I said loose-bodied gown,⁵ sew me in the skirts of it, and beat me to death with a bottom of brown thread : I said, a gown.

Pet. Proceed.

Tai. With a small compassed cape ;⁶

Gru. I confess the cape.

Tai. With a trunk sleeve ;—

Gru. I confess two sleeves.

Tai. The sleeves curiously cut.

Pet. Ay, there's the villany.

Gru. Error i'the bill, sir ; error i'the bill. I commanded the sleeves should be cut out, and sewed up again ; and that I'll prove upon thee, though thy little finger be armed in a thimble.

Tai. This is true, that I say ; an I had thee in place where, thou should'st know it.

Gru. I am for thee straight : take thou the bill,⁷ give me thy mete-yard, and spare not me.

Hor. God-a-mercy, Grumio ! then he shall have no odds.

Pet. Well, sir, in brief, the gown is not for me.

Gru. You are i'the right, sir ; 'tis for my mistress.

Pet. Go, take it up unto thy master's use.

Gru. Villain, not for thy life : Take up my mistress' gown for thy master's use !

Pet. Why, sir, what's your conceit in that ?

Gru. O, sir, the conceit is deeper than you think for :

Take up my mistress' gown to his master's use !

O, fye, fye, fye !

Pet. Hortensio, say thou wilt see the tailor paid :—
[Aside.]

Go take it hence ; be gone, and say no more.

Hor. Tailor, I'll pay thee for thy gown to-morrow.

Take no unkindness of his hasty words :

Away, I say ; commend me to thy master.

[Exit Tailor.]

Pet. Well, come, my Kate ; we will unto your father's,

Even in these honest mean habiliments ;
Our purses shall be proud, our garments poor ;
For, 'tis the mind that makes the body rich ;
And as the sun breaks through the darkest clouds,
So honour peereth in the meanest habit.
What, is the jay more precious than the lark,
Because his feathers are more beautiful ?
Or is the adder better than the eel,
Because his painted skin contents the eye ?
O, no, good Kate ; neither art thou the worse
For this poor furniture, and mean array.
If thou account'st it shame, lay it on me :
And therefore, frolic ; we will hence forthwith,
To feast and sport us at thy father's house.—
Go, call my men, and let us straight to him ;
And bring our horses unto Long-lane end,
There will we mount, and thither walk on foot.
Let's see ; I think, 'tis now some seven o'clock,
And well we may come there by dinner time.

Kath. I dare assure you, sir, 'tis almost two ;
And 'twill be supper time, ere you come there.

Pet. It shall be seven, ere I go to horse ;
Look, what I speak, or do, or think to do,
You are still crossing it.—Sir, let's alone :
I will not go to-day ; and ere I do,
It shall be what o'clock I say it is.

Hor. Why, so ! this gallant will command the sun.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. Padua. Before Baptista's House. Enter
TRANIO, and the Pedant dressed like VINCENTIO.

Tra. Sir, this is the house ; Please it you, that I call ?

Ped. Ay, what else ? and, but⁹ I be deceived,
Signior Baptista may remember me.
Near twenty years' ago, in Genoa, where
We were lodgers at the Pegasus.¹⁰

Tra. 'Tis well :
And hold your own, in any case, with such Austerity as 'longeth to a father.

Enter BIONDELLO.

Ped. I warrant you : But, sir, here comes your boy ;

'Twere good, he were school'd.

Tra. Fear you not him. Sirrah, Biondello,
Now do your duty thoroughly, I advise you ;
Imagine 'twere the right Vincentio.

Bion. Tut ! fear not me.

Tra. But hast thou done thy errand to Baptista ?
Bion. I told him, that your father was at Venice ?
And that you look'd for him this day in Padua.

Tra. Thou'rt a tall¹¹ fellow ; hold thee that to drink.
Here comes Baptista :—set your countenance, sir.—

Enter BAPTISTA and LUCENTIO.

Signior Baptista, you are happily met.—

Sir, [to the Pedant.]

This is the gentleman I told you of ;

I pray you, stand good father to me now,

Give me Bianca for my patrimony.

Ped. Soft, son !—

Sir, by your leave : having come to Padua
To gather in some debts, my son Lucentio
Made me acquainted with a weighty cause
Of love between your daughter and himself :
And,—for the good report I hear of you ;
And for the love he beareth to your daughter,
And she to him,—to stay him not too long play is supposed to be exhibited, were introduced, from the old play, by Mr. Pope in his edition.

¹ Lord. Who's within there ! [Enter Servants.]
Asleep again ! Go take him easily up, and put him in his own apparel again. But see you wake him not in any case.

² Serv. It shall be done, my lord ; come, help to bear him hence. [They bear off Sly.]

Johnson thought the fifth act should begin here.

³ See the note on Act iii. Sc. 1.

¹⁰ Shakspeare has here taken a sign out of London, and hung it up in Padua. The Pegasus is the arms of the Middle Temple, and is a very popular sign.

¹¹ I. e. a high fellow, a brave boy, as we now say, Vide note on Merry Wives of Windsor, Act i. Sc. 4.

1 Be-measure.

2 Turned up many garments with facings.

3 Grumio quibbles upon to brave, to make fine, as he does upon facing.

4 Mr. Douce remarks that this scene appears to have been originally borrowed from a story of Sir Philip Caulthrop and John Drakes, a silly shoemaker of Norwich, related in Camden's Remains and Leigh's Accidence of Armorie.

5 This being a very customary dress with women of abandoned character, was probably not much in repute.

6 A round cape.

7 A quibble is intended between the written bill and the bill or weapon of a foot soldier.

8 After this exceunt the characters before whom the

I am content, in a good father's care,
To have him match'd; and,—if you please to like
No worse than I, sir,—upon some agreement,
Me shall you find most ready and most willing
With one consent to have her so bestow'd;
For curious? I cannot be with you,
Signior Baptista, of whom I hear so well.

Bap. Sir, pardon me in what I have to say :—
Your plainness, and your shortness, please me well.
Right true it is, your son Lucentio here
Doth love my daughter, and she loveth him,
Or both dissemble deeply their affections:
And, therefore, if you say no more than this,
That like a father you will deal with him,
And pass² my daughter a sufficient dower,
The match is made, and all is done:
Your son shall have my daughter with consent.

Tra. I thank you, sir. Where then do you know best,
We be affied;³ and such assurance ta'en,
As shall with either part's agreement stand?

Bap. Not in my house, Lucentio; for you know,
Pitchers have ears, and I have many servants:
Besides, Old Gremio is hearkening still;
And, happily,⁴ we might be interrupted.

Tra. Then at my lodging, an it like you, sir:
There doth my father lie; and there, this night
We'll pass the business privately and well:
Send for your daughter by your servant here,
My boy shall fetch the scrivener presently.
The worst is this,—that, at so slender warning,
You're like to have a thin and slender pittance.

Bap. It likes me well:—Cambio, hie you home,
And bid Bianca make her ready straight:
And, if you will, tell what hath happened:—
Lucentio's father is arrived in Padua,
And how she's like to be Lucentio's wife.

Luc. I pray the gods she may, with all my heart!
Tra. Dally not with the gods, but get thee gone.
Signior Baptista, shall I lead the way?
Welcome! one mess is like to be your cheer:
Come, sir: we'll better it in Pisa.

Bap. I follow you.
[Exeunt TRANIO, Pedant, and BAPTISTA.]

Bion. Cambio.—
Luc. What say'st thou, Biondello?
Bion. You saw my master wink and laugh upon you?

Luc. Biondello, what of that?
Bion. 'Faith, nothing: but he has left me here behind, to expound the meaning or moral⁵ of his signs and tokens.

Luc. I pray thee, moralize them.
Bion. Then thus. Baptista is safe, talking with the deceiving father of a deceitful son.

Luc. And what of him?
Bion. His daughter is to be brought by you to the supper.

Luc. And then?—
Bion. The old priest at St. Luke's church is at your command at all hours.

Luc. And what of all this?
Bion. I cannot tell; except⁶ they are busied about a counterfeit assurance: Take you assurance of her, *cum privilegio ad imprimendum solum*⁷ to the church;—take the priest, clerk, and some sufficient honest witnesses:

If this be not that you look for, I have no more to say,
But, bid Bianca farewell for ever and a day.
[Going.]

Luc. Hear'st thou, Biondello?
Bion. I cannot tarry: I knew a wench married in an afternoon as she went to the garden for parsley to stuff a rabbit; and so may you, sir; and so adieu, sir. My master hath appointed me to go to Saint Luke's, to bid the priest be ready to come against you come with your appendix. [Exit.]

Luc. I may, and will, if she be so contented:
She will be pleas'd, then wherefore should I doubt?
Hap what hap may, I'll roundly go about her:
It shall go hard, if Cambio go without her. [Exit.]

SCENE V. A public road. Enter PETRUCHIO, KATHARINA, and HORTENSIO.

Pet. Come on, o' God's name: once more toward our father's.

Good Lord, how bright and goodly shines the moon!
Kath. The moon! the sun; it is not moonlight now.

Pet. I say, it is the moon that shines so bright.
Kath. I know, it is the sun that shines so bright.

Pet. Now, by my mother's son, and that's myself,
It shall be moon or stars, or what I list,
Or ere I journey to your father's house:—
Go on, and fetch our horses back again.—
Evermore cross'd, and cross'd; nothing but cross'd.

Hor. Say as he says, or we shall never go.
Kath. Forward, I pray, since we have come so far,
And be it moon, or sun, or what you please:
And if you please to call it a rush candle,
Henceforth I vow it shall be so for me.

Pet. I say it is the moon.
Kath. I know, it is the moon.

Pet. Nay, then you lie; it is the blessed sun.
Kath. Then, God be bless'd, it is the blessed sun:—

But sun it is not, when you say it is not;
And the moon changes, even as your mind.
What you will have it nam'd, even that it is;
And so it shall be so,⁹ for Katharine.

Hor. Petruchio, go thy ways; the field is won.
Pet. Well, forward, forward: thus the bow should run,

And not unluckily against the bias.—
But soft; what company is coming here?

Enter VINCENTIO, in a travelling dress.
Good-morrow, gentle mistress: Where away?—
[To VINCENTIO.]

Tell me, sweet Kate, and tell me truly too,¹⁰
Hast thou beheld a fresher gentlerwoman?
Such war of white and red within her cheeks?
What stars do spangle heaven with such beauty,
As those two eyes become that heavenly face?
Fair lovely maid, once more good day to thee?
Sweet Kate, embrace her for her beauty's sake.

Hor. 'A will make the man mad, to make a woman of him.

Kath. Young budding virgin, fair, and fresh, and sweet,
Whither away? or where is thy abode?
Happy the parents of so fair a child;
Happier the man, whom favourable stars
Allot thee for his lovely bed-fellow!¹¹ worth preserving, and which Pope thought to be from the hand of Shakespeare.

¹ Faire lovely maiden, young and affable,
More clear of hue, and far more beautiful
Than precious sardonyx or purple rocks
Of amethysts, or glistening hyacinth—
—Sweet Kate, entertaine this lovely woman.—

Kath. Fair lovely lady, bright and chryselline
Beauteous and stately as the eye-train'd bird;
As glorious as the morning wash'd with dew,
Within whose eyes she takes her dawning beams,
And golden summer sleeps upon thy cheeks.
Wrap up thy radiations in some cloud,
Lest that thy beauty make this stately town
Inhabitable, like the burning zone,
With sweet reflections of thy lovely face.

¹¹ This is from the fourth book of Ovid's Metamorpho- ses, by Golding, 1586, p. 56. Ovid borrowed his ideas from the sixth book of the Odyssey, 184, &c.

1 i. e. scrupulous. 2 Assure, or convey; a law term.
3 Betrothed.

4 Happily, in Shakspeare's time, signified perad- venture, as well as fortunately; we now write it haply.

5 i. e. the secret purpose.
6 The first folio reads expect.

7 These were the words of the old exclusive privilege for imprinting a book. A quibble is meant.

8 Here in the old play, the Tinker speaks again:—
'Stie. Sim, must they be married now?'

Lord. I, my lord.
Enter Fernando and Sander.
'Stie. Look, Sim, the fool is come again now.'

⁹ We should probably read, 'and so it shall be still, for Katharine.'

¹⁰ In the first sketch of this play are two passages

Pet. Why, how now, Kate! I hope thou art not mad;

This is a man, old, wrinkled, faded, wither'd;
And not a maiden, as thou say'st he is.

Kath. Pardon, old father, my mistaking eyes,
That have been so bedazzled with the sun,
That every thing I look on seemeth green:¹
Now I perceive thou art a reverend father;
Pardon, I pray thee, for my mad mistaking.

Pet. Do, good old grandsire; and, withal, make known

Which way thou travellest; if along with us,
We shall be joyful of thy company.

Vin. Fair sir,—and you, my merry mistress,—
That with your strange encounter much amaz'd me;
My name is call'd—Vincentio; my dwelling—Pisa;
And bound I am to Padua; there to visit
A son of mine, which long I have not seen.

Pet. What is his name?

Vin. Lucentio, gentle sir.
Pet. Happily met; the happier for thy son.

And now by law as well as reverend age,
I may entitle thee—my loving father;

The sister to my wife, this gentlewoman,
Thy son by this hath married: Wonder not,
Nor be not griev'd; she is of good esteem,
Her dowry wealthy, and of worthy birth;

Beside, so qualified as may be seem
The spouse of any noble gentleman.

Let me embrace with old Vincentio;
And wander we to see thy honest son,
Who will of thy arrival be full joyous.

Vin. But is this true? or is it else your pleasure,
Like pleasant travellers to break a jest
Upon the company you overtake?

Hor. I do assure thee, father, so it is.
Pet. Come, go along, and see the truth hereof;

For our first merriment hath made thee jealous.
[Exeunt PET. KATH. and VIN.]

Hor. Well, Petruchio, this hath put me in heart.
Have to my widow; and if she be froward,
Then hast thou taught Hortensio to be untoward.
[Exit.]

ACT V.

SCENE I. Padua. Before Lucentio's House.
Enter on one side BIONDELLO, LUCENTIO, and
BIANCA; GREMIO walking on the other side.

Bion. Softly and swiftly, sir; for the priest is ready.

Luc. I fly, Biondello: but they may chance to need thee at home, therefore leave us.

Bion. Nay, faith, I'll see the church o' your back;
and then come back to my master² as soon as I can.
[Exeunt LUC. BIAN. and BION.]

Gre. I marvel Cambio comes not all this while.
Enter PETRUCHIO, KATHARINA, VINCENTIO, and Attendants.

Pet. Sir, here's the door, this is Lucentio's house,
My father's bears more toward the market-place;
Thither must I, and here I leave you, sir.

Vin. You shall not choose, but drink before you go;
I think, I shall command your welcome here,
And, by all likelihood, some cheer is toward.
[Knocks.]

Gre. They're busy within, you were best knock louder.
Enter Pedant above at a window.

Ped. What's he, that knocks as he would beat down the gate?

Vin. Is Signior Lucentio within, sir?
Ped. He's within, sir, but not to be spoken withal.

Vin. What if a man bring him a hundred pound or two, to make merry withal?

Ped. Keep your hundred pounds to yourself; he shall need none, so long as I live.

Pet. Nay, I told you, your son was beloved in Padua.—Do you hear, sir?—to leave frivolous circumstances,—I pray you, tell Signior Lucentio, that his father is come from Pisa, and is here at the door to speak with him.

Ped. Thou liest: his father is come from Pisa,³ and here looking out at the window.

Vin. Art thou his father?
Ped. Ay, sir; so his mother says, if I may believe her.

Pet. Why, how now, gentleman! [To VINCENTIO.]
Why, this is flatknavery, to take upon you another man's name.

Ped. Lay hands on the villain; I believe 'a means to cozen somebody in this city under my countenance.

Re-enter BIONDELLO.
Bion. I have seen them in the church together:
God send 'em good shipping!—But who is here?
mine old master, Vincentio? now we are undone,
and brought to nothing.

Vin. Come hither, crack-hemp.
[Seeing BIONDELLO.]

Bion. I hope, I may choose, sir.
Vin. Come hither, you rogue: What, have you forgot me?

Bion. Forgot you? no, sir: I could not forget you, for I never saw you before in all my life.

Vin. What, you notorious villain, didst thou never see thy master's father, Vincentio?

Bion. What, my old worshipful old master? yes, marry, sir; see where he looks out of the window.
Vin. Is't so, indeed? [Beats BIONDELLO.] Bion. Help, help, help! here's a madman will murder me. [Exit.]

Ped. Help son! help, Signior Baptista!
[Exit, from the window.]

Pet. Pr'ythee, Kate, let's stand aside, and see the end of this controversy. [They retire.]
Re-enter Pedant below; BAPTISTA, TRANIO, and Servants.

Tra. Sir, what are you that offer to beat my servant?

Vin. What am I, sir? nay, what are you, sir?—
O immortal gods! O fine villain! A silken doublet!
a velvet hose! a scarlet cloak! and a copatain hat!—O, I am undone! I am undone! while I play the good husband at home, my son and my servant spend all at the university.

Tra. How now! what's the matter?

Bap. What is the man lunatic?

Tra. Sir, you seem a sober ancient gentleman by your habit, but your words show you a madman:
Why, sir, what concerns it you, if I wear pearl and gold? I thank my good father, I am able to maintain it.

Vin. Thy father? O, villain! he is a sail-maker in Bergamo.

Bap. You mistake, sir; you mistake, sir: Pray, what do you think is his name?

Vin. His name? as if I knew not his name; I have brought him up ever since he was three years old, and his name is—Tranio.

Ped. Away, away, mad ass! his name is Lu- centio; and he is mine only son, and heir to the lands of me, Signior Vincentio.

Vin. Lucentio! O, he hath murdered his master!
—Lay hold on him, I charge you, in the duke's name:—O, my son, my son!—tell me, thou villain, where is my son Lucentio?

Tra. Call forth an officer:⁴ [Enter one with an

5 Here, in the original play, the Tinker speaks again:
'Slie. I say, weele have no sending to prison.

Lord. My lord, this is but the play; they're but in jest.
Slie. I tell thee, Sim, weele have no sending
To prison, that's flat; why, Sim, am I not Don Christo Vari?

Therefore, I say, they shall not gos to prison.

Officer. Carry this mad knave to the gaol :—Father Baptista, I charge you see that he be forth coming.

Vin. Carry me to the gaol!

Gre. Stay, officer; he shall not go to prison.

Bap. Talk not, Signior Gremio; I say, he shall go to prison.

Gre. Take heed, Signior Baptista, lest you be coney-catched¹ in this business; I dare swear, this is the right Vincentio.

Ped. Swear, if thou darest.

Gre. Nay, I dare not swear it.

Tru. Then thou wert best say, that I am not Lucentio.

Bap. Yes, I know thee to be Signior Lucentio.

Gre. Away with the dotard; to the gaol with him.

Vin. Thus strangers may be haled and abused :—
O monstrous villain!

Re-enter BIONDELLO, with LUCENTIO, and BIANCA.

Bion. O, we are spoiled, and—Yonder he is; deny him, forswear him, or else we are all undone.

Luc. Pardon, sweet father. [Kneeling.]

Vin. Lives my sweet son?

[BIONDELLO, TRANIO, and Pedant run out.]

Bion. Pardon, dear father. [Kneeling.]

Bap. How hast thou offended?

Where is Lucentio?

Luc. Here's Lucentio,

Right son unto the right Vincentio;

That have by marriage made thy daughter mine,

While counterfeit supposes bleard² thine eyne.³

Gre. Here's packing,⁴ with a witness, to deceive us all!

Vin. Where is that damned villain, Tranio,

That fac'd and brav'd me in this matter so?

Bap. Why, tell me, is not this my Cambio?

Bian. Cambio is chang'd into Lucentio.

Luc. Love wrought these miracles. Bianca's love

Made me exchange my state with Tranio,

While he did bear my countenance in the town;

And happily I have arriv'd at last

Unto the wished haven of my bliss :—

What Tranio did, myself enforc'd him to;

Then pardon him, sweet father, for my sake.

Vin. I'll slit the villain's nose, that would have sent me to the gaol.

Bap. But do you hear, sir? [To LUCENTIO.]
Have you married my daughter without asking my good-will?

Vin. Fear not, Baptista; we will content you, go to: But I will in, to be revenged for this villainy. [Exit.]

Bap. And I, to sound the depth of this knavery. [Exit.]

Luc. Look not pale, Bianca; thy father will not frown. [Exeunt. LUC. and BIAN.]

Gre. My cake is dough:⁵ But I'll in among the rest:

Out of hope of all,—but my share of the feast. [Exit.]

PETRUCHIO and KATHARINA advance.

Kath. Husband, let's follow, to see the end of this ado.

Pet. First kiss me, Kate, and we will.

Kath. What, in the midst of the street?

Pet. What, art thou ashamed of me?

Kath. No, sir; God forbid :—but ashamed to kiss.

Lord. No more they shall not, my lord :
They be runne away.

Sir. Are they run away, Sir? that's well:

Then gie some more drinke, and let them play againe.

Lord. Here, my lord.⁶

1 I. e. deceived, cheated.

2 This is probably an allusion to Gascoigne's comedy, entitled Supposes, from which several of the incidents are borrowed. Gascoigne's original was Ariosto's I Suppositi. The word supposes was often used as it is in the text, by Shakespeare's contemporaries; one instance, from Drayton's epistle of King John to Matilda, may suffice :—

And tell me those are shadows and supposes.⁷

3 Plotings, underhand contrivances.

Pet. Why, then let's home again :—Come, sirrah, let's away.

Kath. Nay, I will give thee a kiss : now pray thee, love, stay.

Pet. Is not this well?—Come, my sweet Kate; Better once than never, for never too late. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. A Room in Lucentio's House. A Banquet set out. Enter BAPTISTA, VINCENTIO, GREMIO, the Pedant, LUCENTIO, BIANCA, PETRUCHIO, KATHARINA, HORTENSIO, and Widow. TRANIO, BIONDELLO, GRUMIO, and others. at tending.

Luc. At last, though long, our jarring notes agree. And time it is, when raging war is done,⁸

To smile at 'scapes and perils overblown.—

My fair Bianca, bid my father welcome.

While I with selfsame kindness welcome thine :—

Brother Petruccio,—sister Katharina,—

And thou, Hortensio, with thy loving widow,—

Feast with the best, and welcome to my house;

My banquet⁹ is to close our stomachs up,

After our great good cheer: Pray you, sit down;

For now we sit to chat, as well as eat.

[They sit at table.]

Pet. Nothing but sit and sit, and eat and eat!

Bap. Padua affords this kindness, son Petruccio.

Pet. Padua affords nothing but what is kind.

Hor. For both our sakes, I would that word were true.

Pet. Now, for my life, Hortensio fears his widow.

Wid. Then never trust me if I be afraid.

Pet. You are sensible, and yet you miss my sense; I mean, Hortensio is afraid of you.

Wid. He that is giddy, thinks the world turns round.

Pet. Roundly replied.

Kath. Mistress, how mean you that?

Wid. Thus I conceive by him.

Pet. Conceive by me!—How likes Hortensio that?

Hor. My widow says, thus she conceives her tale.

Pet. Very well mended: Kiss him for that, good widow.

Kath. He that is giddy, thinks the world turns round :—

I pray you, tell me what you meant by that.

Wid. Your husband, being troubled with a shrew, Measures my husband's sorrow by his woe:¹⁰

And now you know my meaning.

Kath. A very mean meaning.

Wid. Right, I mean you.

Kath. And I am mean indeed, respecting you.

Pet. To her, Kate!

Hor. To her, widow!

Pet. A hundred marks, my Kate does put her down.

Hor. That's my office.

Pet. Spoke like an officer :—Ha' to thee, lad.

[Drinks to HORTENSIO.]

Bap. How likes Gremio these quick-witted folks?

Gre. Believe me, sir, they butt together well.

Bian. Head, and butt? a hasty-witted body

Would say, your head and butt were head and horn.

Vin. Ay, mistress bride, hath that awaken'd you?

Bian. Ay, but not frighted me; therefore I'll sleep again.

Pet. Nay, that you shall not; since you have begun,

Have at you for a bitter¹¹ jest or two.

4 An obsolete proverb, repeated on the loss of hope or expectation. Its meaning is not easily explained. It has been suggested that a cake which comes out of the oven in a state of dough, is utterly spoiled.

5 The old copy reads come; the emendation is Rowe's.

6 The banquet here, as in other places of Shakespeare, was a refection similar to our modern dessert, consisting of cakes, sweetmeats, fruits, &c.

7 As this was meant for a rhyming couplet, it should be observed that shrew was pronounced shrove. See also the finale, where it rhymes to so.

8 The old copy reads better. The emendation is Campbell's.

Bian. Am I your bird? I mean to shift my bush, And then pursue me as you draw your bow:— You are welcome all.

[Exeunt BIANCA, KATHARINA, and Widow.]

Pet. She hath prevented me.—Here, Signior Tranio,

This bird you aim'd at, though you hit her not; Therefore, a health to all that shot and miss'd.

Tra. O, sir, Lucentio slipp'd me like his greyhound,

Which runs himself, and catches for his master.

Pet. A good swift¹ simile, but something currish.

Tra. 'Tis well, sir, that you hunted for yourself; 'Tis thought, your deer does hold you out a bay.

Bap. O ho, Petruchio, Tranio hits you now.

Luc. I thank thee for that gird,² good Tranio.

Hor. Confess, confess, hath he not hit you here?

Pet. 'A has a little gall'd me, I confess;

And, as the jest did glance away from me,

'Tis ten to one it maim'd you two outright.

Bap. Now, in good sadness, son Petruchio,

I think thou hast the veriest shrew of all.

Pet. Well, I say—no; and therefore, for assurance,

Let's each one send unto his wife;

And he, whose wife is most obedient

To come at first when he doth send for her,

Shall win the wager which we will propose.

Hor. Content:—What is the wager?

Luc. Twenty crowns. Twenty crowns.

Pet. Twenty crowns!

I'll venture so much on my hawk, or hound,

But twenty times so much upon my wife.

Luc. A hundred, then.

Hor. Content.

Pet. A match; 'tis done.

Hor. Who shall begin?

Luc. That will I. Go,

Biondello, bid your mistress come to me.

Bian. I go. [Exit.]

Bap. Son, I will be your half, Bianca comes.

Luc. I'll have no halves; I'll bear it all myself.

Re-enter BIONDELLO.

How now! what news?

Bian. Sir, my mistress sends you word

That she is busy, and she cannot come.

Pet. How! she is busy, and she cannot come!

Is that an answer?

Gre. Ay, and a kind one too:

Pray God, sir, your wife send you not a worse.

Pet. I hope, better.

Hor. Sirrah, Biondello, go, and entreat my wife

To come to me forthwith. [Exit BIONDELLO.]

Pet. O, ho! entreat her!

Nay, then she must needs come.

Hor. I am afraid, sir,

Do what you can, yours will not be entreated

Re-enter BIONDELLO.

Now where's my wife?

Bian. She says, you have some goodly jest in hand;

She will not come; she bids you come to her.

Pet. Worse and worse; she will not come! O vile,

Intolerable, not to be endur'd!

Sirrah, Grumio, go to your mistress;

Say, I command her come to me. [Exit GRUMIO.]

Hor. I know her answer.

Pet. What?

Hor. She will not.

Pet. The fouler fortune mine, and there an end.

Enter KATHARINA.

Bap. Now, by my holidame, here comes Ka-tharina!

Kath. What is your will, sir, that you send for me?

Pet. Where is your sister, and Hortensio's wife?

Kath. They sit conferring by the parlour fire.

Pet. Go fetch them hither; if they deny to come,

Swinge me them soundly forth unto their husbands: Away, I say, and bring them hither straight.

[Exit KATHARINA.]

Luc. Here is a wonder, if you talk of a wonder.

Hor. And so it is; I wonder what it bodes.

Pet. Marry, peace it bodes, and love, and quiet life,

An awful rule, and right supremacy;

And, to be short, what not, that's sweet and happy.

Bap. Now fair befall thee, good Petruchio!

The wager thou hast won; and I will add

Unto thy losses twenty thousand crowns;

Another dowry to another daughter,

For she is chang'd, as she hath never been.

Pet. Nay, I will win my wager better yet;

And show more sign of her obedience,

Her new-built virtue and obedience.

Re-enter KATHARINA, with BIANCA and Widow.

See, where she comes; and brings your froward wives

As prisoners to her womanly persuasion.—

Katharina, that cap of yours becomes you not;

Off with that bauble, throw it under foot.

[KATHARINA pulls off her cap, and throws it down.]

Wid. Lord, let me never have a cause to sigh,

Till I be brought to such a silly pass!

Bian. Fye! what a foolish duty call you this?

Luc. I would, your duty were as foolish too:

The wisdom of your duty, fair Bianca,

Hath cost me a hundred crowns since supper-time.

Bian. The more fool you for laying on my duty.

Pet. Katharine, I charge thee, tell these headstrong women

What duty they do owe their lords and husbands.

Wid. Come, come, you're mocking; we will have no telling.

Pet. Come on, I say; and first begin with her.

Wid. She shall not.

Pet. I say, she shall;—and first begin with her.

Kath. Fye, fye! unknit that threat'ning unkind brow;

And dart not scornful glances from those eyes,

To wound thy lord, thy king, thy governor:

It blots thy beauty, as frosts do bite the meads;

Confounds thy fame, as whirlwinds shake fair buds;

And in no sense is meet or amiable.

A woman mov'd, is like a fountain troubled,

Muddy, ill seeming, thick, bereft of beauty;

And, while it is so, none so dry or thirsty

Will deign to sip, or touch one drop of it.

Thy husband is thy lord, thy life, thy keeper,

Thy head, thy sovereign; one that cares for thee,

And for thy maintenance: commits his body

To painful labour, both by sea and land;

To watch the night in storms, the day in cold,

While thou liest warm at home, secure and safe;

And craves no other tribute at thy hands,

But love, fair looks, and true obedience;—

Too little payment for so great a debt.

Such duty as the subject owes the prince,

Even such a woman oweth to her husband.

And, when she's froward, peevish, sullen, sour,

And, not obedient to his honest will,

What is she, but a foul contending rebel,

And graceless traitor to her loving lord?

I am asham'd, that women are so simple

To offer war, where they should kneel for peace;

Or seek for rule, supremacy, and sway,

When they are bound to serve, love, and obey.

Why are our bodies soft, and weak, and smooth,

Unapt to toil and trouble in the world;

But that our soft conditions³ and our hearts,

Should well agree with our external parts?

Come, come, you froward and unable worms!

My mind hath been as big as one of yours,

My heart as great; my reason, haply, more;

To bandy word for word, and frown for frown

But now, I see, our lances are but straws;

Our strength as weak, our weakness past compare,⁴

That seeming to be most, which we least are.

² A gird is a cut, a sarcasm, a stroke of satire.

³ That is, the gentle qualities of our minds.

Then vail your stomachs,¹ for it is no boot;
And place your hands below your husband's foot:
In token of which duty, if he please,
My hand is ready, may it do him ease.

Pet. Why, there's a wench!—Come on, and kiss me, Kate.

Luc. Well, go thy ways, old lad; for thou shalt ha't.

Vin. 'Tis a good hearing, when children are toward.

Luc. But a harsh hearing when women are froward.

Pet. Come, Kate, we'll to bed:—

We three are married, but you two are sped.²

'Twas I won the wager, though you hit the white;³

[To LUCENTIO.]

And, being a winner, God give you good night!

[Exeunt PETRUCHIO and KATE.]

1 'Vail your stomachs,' abate your pride, your spirit, it is no boot, i. e. it is profitless, it is no advantage.

2 i. e. the fate of you both is decided; for you both have wives who exhibit early proofs of disobedience.

3 The white was the central part of the mark or butt in archery. Here is also a play upon the name of Bianca, which is white in Italian.

4 The old play continues thus:—

Then enter two, bearing Slie in his own apparel againe, and leaves him where they found him, and then goes out: then enters the Tapster.

Tapster. Now that the darksome night is overpast, And dawning day appears in christall ekie,
Now must I haste abroad: but softe! who's this?

What, Slie? O wondrous! hath he laine heere all night!

Hor. Now go thy ways, thou hast tam'd a curst shrew.

Luc. 'Tis a wonder, by your leave, she will be tam'd so. [Exeunt.]

OF this play the two plots are so well united that they can hardly be called two, without injury to the art with which they are interwoven. The attention is entertained with all the variety of a double plot, yet is not distracted by unconnected incidents.

The part between Katharina and Petruchio is eminently spritely and diverting. At the marriage of Bianca, the arrival of the real father, perhaps, produces more perplexity than pleasure. The whole play is very popular and diverting. JOHN SON.

He wake him: I thinke he's starved by this,
But that his belly was so stufft with ale:

What now, Slie? awake for shame.

Slie. [Awaking.] Sim, give's more wine.—What all the players gone?—Am I not a lord?

Tap. A lord, with a murrain?—Come, art thou drunk still?

Slie. Who's this? Tapster!—Oh I have had the bravest dream that ever thou heard'st in all thy life.

Tap. Yea, marry, but thou hadst best get thee home, for your wife will curse you for dreaming here all night.

Slie. Will she? I know how to tame a shrew. I dreamt upon it all this night, and thou hast wak'd me out of the best dream that ever I had; but I'll to my wife, and tame her too, if she anger me.

WINTER'S TALE.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

THE story of this play is taken from The Pleasant History of Dorastus and Fawnia, by Robert Greene, which was first printed in 1588. The parts of Antigonus, Paulina, and Autolycus are of the poet's own creation; and many circumstances of the novel are omitted in the play.

'A booke entitled A Winter's Night's Pastime, entered at Stationer's Hall, in 1594, but which has not come down to us, may have suggested the title, by which Shakespeare thought the romantic and extraordinary incidents of the play well characterised: he several times in the course of the last act makes one of his characters remark its similarity to An old tale. Schlegel has observed that 'The Winter's Tale is as appropriately named as the Midsummer Night's Dream. It is one of those tales which are peculiarly calculated to beguile the dreary leisure of a long winter evening, which are even attractive and intelligible to childhood, and which, animated by fervent truth in the delineation of character and passion, invested with the decoration of a poetry lowering itself, as it were, to the simplicity of the subject, transport even manhood back to the golden age of imagination. The calculation of probabilities has nothing to do with such wonderful and fleeting adventures, ending at last in general joy; and accordingly Shakspeare has here taken the greatest liberties with anachronisms and geographical errors: he opens a free navigation between Sicily and Bohemia, makes Julio Romano the contemporary of the Delphic Oracle, not to mention other incongruities.'

It is extraordinary that Pope should have thought only some single scenes of this play were from the hand of Shakspeare. It breathes his spirit throughout;—in the serious parts as well as in those of a lighter kind: and who but Shakspeare could have conceived that exquisite pastoral scene in which the loves of Florizel and Perdita are developed? It is indeed a pastoral of the golden age, and Perdita 'no Shepherdess, but Flora, and breathing flowers, in the spring-tide of youth and beauty. How gracefully she distributes her emblematic favours! What language accompanies them! Well may Florizel exclaim:

Peering in April's front,

'—when you speak, sweet,
I'd have you do it ever!'

The reader reechoes the sentiment of the lover, and is sorry to come to the close. With what modest unconscious dignity are all her words and actions accompanied: even Polixenes, who looks on her with no favourable eye, says that there is —nothing she does or says

But smacks of something greater than herself.

The Shepherds and Shepherdesses, with whom she has been brought up, are such as ordinary life affords, and are judicious foils to this delightful couple of lovers.

The arch roguery and mirthful stratagem of Autolycus are very amusing, and his character admirably sustained. 'The jealousy of Leontes (says the judicious Schlegel) is not, like that of Othello, developed with all the causes, symptoms, and gradations; it is brought forward at once, and is portrayed as a distempered frenzy. It is a passion which does not produce the catastrophe, but merely ties the knot of the piece.' But it has the same intemperate course, is the same soul-goading passion which wrings a noble nature to acts of revengeful cruelty; at which, under happier stars, it would have shuddered, and which are no sooner committed than repented of.

The patient and affecting resignation of the wronged Hermione under circumstances of the deepest anguish; and the zealous and courageous remonstrances of the faithful Paulina, have the stamp of Shakspeare upon them. Indeed I know not what parts of this drama could be attributed to any even of the most skillful of his contemporaries. It was perhaps the discrepancies of the plot (which in fact almost divides it into two plays with an interval of sixteen years between,) and the anachronisms, which made Dryden* and Pope overlook the beauties of execution in this enchanting play.

* Dryden, in the Essay at the end of the second part of the Conquest of Grenada, speaking of the plays of Shakspeare and Fletcher, says:—'Witness the limeness of their plots; many of which, especially those which they wrote first (for even that age refined itself in some measure,) were made up of some ridiculous incoherent story, which in one play many times took up the business of an age. I suppose I need not name Pericles, nor the historical plays of Shakspeare; besides many of the rest, as The Winter's Tale, Love's Labour's Lost,

Malone places the composition of the Winter's Tale in 1611, because it was first licensed for representation by Sir George Bucke, Master of the Revels, who did not assume the functions of his office until August 1610. The mention of the 'Puritan singing psalms to horn-pipes' also points at this period, as does another passage, which is supposed to be a compliment to James on his escape from the Gowrie Conspiracy. These are conjectures, but probable ones; Malone had in former instances placed the date much earlier; first in 1594, and then in 1602. The supposition that Ben Jonson intended a sneer at this play in his induction to Bartho-

Measure for Measure, which were either grounded on impossibilities, or at least so meanly written, that the comedy neither caused your mirth, nor the serious parts your concernment.' Pope, in his Preface to Shakspeare, almost reaches this: 'I should conjecture (says he) of some of the others, particularly Love's Labour's Lost, The Winter's Tale, Comedy of Errors, and Titus An- lomew Fair has been satisfactorily answered by Mr. Gifford.†

Horace Walpole in his Historic Doubts attempts to show that The Winter's Tale was intended (in compliment to Queen Elizabeth) as an indirect apology for her mother Ann Boleyn; but the ground for his conjecture is so slight as scarcely to deserve attention. Indeed it may be answered that the plot of the play is not the invention of Shakspeare, who therefore cannot be charged with this piece of flattery; if it was intended, it must be attributed to Greene, whose novel was published in 1589. I think with Mr. Boswell that these supposed allusions by Shakspeare to the history of his own time are very much to be doubted.

dronicus, that only some characters or single scenes, or perhaps a few particular passages, are from the hand of Shakspeare.'

ACT I.

SCENE I. Sicilia. An Antichamber in Leontes' Palace. Enter CAMILLO and ARCHIDAMUS.

Archidamus.

If you shall chance, Camillo, to visit Bohemia, on the like occasion whereon my services are now on foot, you shall see, as I have said, great difference betwixt our Bohemia, and your Sicilia.

Cam. I think, this coming summer, the King of Sicilia means to pay Bohemia the visitation which he justly owes him.

Arch. Wherein our entertainment shall shame us, we will be justified in our loves: for, indeed,—

Cam. Beseech you,——

Arch. Verily, I speak it in the freedom of my knowledge: we cannot with such magnificence—in so rare—I know not what to say.—We will give you sleepy drinks; that your senses, unintelligent of our insignificance, may, though they cannot praise us, as little accuse us.

Cam. You pay a great deal too dear for what's given freely.

Arch. Believe me, I speak as my understanding instructs me, and as mine honesty puts it to utterance.

Cam. Sicilia cannot show himself over-kind to Bohemia. They were trained together in their childhoods; and there rooted betwixt them then such an affection, which cannot choose but branch now. Since their more mature dignities, and royal necessities made separation of their society, their encounters, though not personal, have been royally attorned,¹ with interchange of gifts, letters, loving embassies; that they have seemed to be together, though absent; shook hands, as over a vast;² and embraced, as it were, from the ends of opposed winds. The heavens continue their loves!

Arch. I think, there is not in the world either malice, or matter, to alter it. You have an unspeakable comfort of your young prince Mamillius; it is a gentleman of the greatest promise, that ever came into my note.

Cam. I very well agree with you in the hopes of him: it is a gallant child; one that, indeed, physics the subject,³ makes old hearts fresh: they, that went on crutches ere he was born, desire yet their life, to see him a man.

Arch. Would they else be content to die?

Cam. Yes; if there were no other excuse why they should desire to live.

Arch. If the king had no son, they would desire to live on crutches till he had one. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The same. A Room of State in the Palace. Enter LEONTES, POLIXENES, HERMIONE, MAMILLIUS, CAMILLO, and Attendants.

Pol. Nine changes of the wat'ry star have been The shepherd's note, since we have left our throne Without a burden: time as long again

Would be fill'd up, my brother, with our thanks:

And yet we should, for perpetuity,

Go hence in debt: And therefore, like a cipher.

Yet standing in rich place, I multiply,

With one we-thank-you, many thousands more

That go before it.

Leon

Stay your thanks awhile;

And pay them when you part.

Pol.

Sir, that's to-morrow. I am question'd by my fears, of what may chance, Or breed upon our absence: That⁴ may blow No sneaping⁵ winds at home, to make us say, This is put forth too truly!⁶ Besides, I have stay'd⁷ To tire your royalty.

5 Sneaping, nipping.

6 I. e. to make me say, I had too good reason for my fears concerning what may happen in my absence from home.

Leon. We are tougher, brother,
Than you can put us to't.

Pol. No longer stay.

Leon. One seven-night longer.

Pol. Very sooth, to-morrow.

Leon. We'll part the time between's then: and in that

I'll no gain-saying.

Pol. Press me not, 'beseech you, so: There is no tongue that moves, none, none i'the world So soon as yours, could win me: so it should now, Were there necessity in your request, although 'Twere needful I denied it. My affairs Do even drag me homeward: which to hinder Were, in your love, a whip to me: my stay, To you a charge and trouble: to save both, Farewell, our brother.

Leon. Tongue-tied, our queen? speak you.

Her. I had thought, sir, to have held my peace, until

You had drawn oaths from him not to stay. You, sir, Charge him too coldly: Tell him, you are sure, All in Bohemia's well: this satisfaction The by-gone day proclaim'd; say this to him, He's beat from his best ward.

Leon. Well said, Hermione.

Her. To tell he longs to see his son, were strong: But let him say so then, and let him go; But let him swear so, and he shall not stay,

We'll twack him hence with distaffs.— Yet of your royal presence [To Pol.] I'll adventure The borrow of a week. When at Bohemia

You take my lord, I'll give him my commission, To let him there a month, behind the gest¹ Prefix'd for his parting: yet, good deed,² Leontes, I love thee not a jar o' the clock behind What lady she her lord.—You'll stay?

Pol. No, madam.

Her. Nay, but you will?

Pol. I may not, verily.

Her. Verily!

You put me off with limber vows: But I, Though you would seek to unsphere the stars with oaths,

Should yet say, Sir, no going. Verily, You shall not go; a lady's verily is As potent as a lord's. Will you go yet?

Force me to keep you as a prisoner, Not like a guest; so you shall pay your fees, When you depart, and save your thanks. How say you?

My prisoner? or my guest? by your dread verily, One of them you shall be.

Pol. Your guest, then, madam: To be your prisoner, should import offending; Which is for me less easy to commit, Than you to punish.

Her. Not your gaoler, then, But your kind hostess. Come, I'll question you Of my lord's tricks, and yours, when you were boys; You were pretty lordings³ then.

Pol. We were, fair queen, Two lads that thought there was no more behind, But such a day to-morrow as to-day, And to be boy eternal.

Her. Was not my lord the verier wag o' the two?

Pol. We were as twinn'd lambs, that did frisk i' the sun,

And bleat the one at the other: what we chang'd, Was innocence for innocence; we knew not The doctrine of ill doing, nor dream'd

That any did: Had we pursued that life, And our weak spirits ne'er been higher rear'd With stronger blood, we should have answer'd heaven.

Boldly, Not Guilty; the imposition clear'd,⁴ Hereditarily ours.

Her. By this we gather, You have tripp'd since.

Pol. O, my most sacred lady Temptations have since then been born to us; for In those unfledg'd days was my wife a girl; Your precious self had then not cross'd the eyes Of my young play-fellow,

Her. Grace to boot!⁵ Of this make no conclusion; lest you say, Your queen and I are devils: Yet, go on; The offences we have made you do, we'll answer; If you first sinn'd with us, and that with us You did continue fault, and that you slipp'd not With any but with us.

Leon. Is he won yet?

Her. He'll stay, my lord.

Leon. At my request he would not. Hermione, my dearest, thou never spok'st To better purpose.

Her. Neyer?

Leon. Never, but once.

Her. What? have I twice said well? when was't before?

I pr'ythee, tell me: Cram us with praise, and make us As fat as tame things: One good deed, dying tongueless, Slaughters a thousand, waiting upon that. Our praises are our wages: You may ride us, With one soft kiss, a thousand furlongs, ere With spur we heat an acre. But to the goal;— My last good was, to entreat his stay; What was my first? it has an elder sister, Or I mistake you: O, 'would, her name were Grace! But once before I spoke to the purpose: When? Nay, let me hav't; I long.

Leon. Why that was when Three crabbed months had sour'd themselves to death, Ere I could make thee open thy white hand, And clasp thyself my love; then didst thou utter, I am yours for ever.

Her. It is grace, indeed.— Why, lo you now, I have spoke to the purpose twice: The one for ever earn'd a royal husband; The other, for some while a friend.

[Giving her hand to POLIXENES.]

Leon. Too hot, too hot: [Aside.]

To mingle friendship far, is mingling bloods. I have tremor cordis on me:—my heart dances; But not for joy,—not joy.—This entertainment May a free face put on; derive a liberty From heartiness, from bounty, fertile bosom,⁶ And well become the agent: it may, I grant; But to be paddling palms, and pinching fingers, As now they are: and making practis'd smiles, As in a looking-glass;—and then to sigh, as 'twere The mort o' the deer;⁷ O, that is entertainment My bosom likes not, nor my brows.—Mamillius, Art thou my boy?

Man. Ay, my good lord.

Leon. I ficks? Why, that's my bawcock.⁸ What, hast smutch'd thy nose?—

⁵ 'Grace to boot.' An exclamation equivalent to give us grace.

⁶ At entering into any contract, or plighting of troth, this clapping of hands together set the seal. Numerous instances of allusion to the custom have been adduced by the editors: one shall suffice, from the old play of Ram Alley: 'Come, clap hands, a match.' The custom is not yet disused in common life.

⁷ '—from bounty, fertile bosom,' I think with Malone that a letter has been omitted, and that we should read: '—from bounty's fertile bosom.'

⁸ I. e. the death of the deer. The mort was also certain notes played on the horn at the death of the deer.

⁹ 'Bawcock.' A burlesque word of endearment sup-

¹ To let had for its synonymes to stay or stop; to let him there, is to stay him there. Gests were scrolls in which were marked the stages or places of rest in a progress or journey, especially a royal one.

² I. e. indeed, in very deed, in troth. Good deed is used in the same sense by the Earl of Surrey, Sir John Heyward, and Gascoigne.

³ Lordings, a diminutive of lords, often used by Chaucer.

⁴ I. e. setting aside the original sin, bating the imposition from the offence of our first parents, we might have boldly protested our innocence.

They say, it's a copy out of mine. Come, captain,
We must be neat; not neat, but cleanly, captain:
And yet the steer, the heifer, and the calf,
Are all call'd, neat.—Still virginaling!

[Observing POLIXENES and HERMIONE.]

Upon his palm?—How now, you wapon calf?
Art thou my calf?

Mam. Yes, if you will, my lord.

Leon. Thou want'st a rough pash, and the shoots that I have,²

To be full³ like me: yet, they say, we are Almost as like as eggs; women say so,
That will say any thing: But were they false
As o'er-dyed blacks,⁴ as wind, as waters; false
As dice are to be wish'd, by one that fixes
No bourn 'twixt his and mine; yet were it true
To say this boy were like me.—Come, sir page,
Look on me with your welkin's eye: Sweet villain!
Most dear'st! my collop¹⁰—Can thy dam?—may't be?

Affection! thy intention stabs the centre;⁷
Thou dost make possible, things not so held;
Communicat'st with dreams;—(How can this be?)
With what's unreal thou coactive art,
And fellow'st nothing: Then, 'tis very credent,⁸
Thou may'st conjoin with something; and thou dost;
(And that beyond commission, and I find it);
And that to the infection of my brains,
And hardening of my brows.

Pol. What means Sicilia?

Her. He something seems unsettled.

Pol. How, my lord?

What cheer? how is't with you, best brother?

Her. You look,

As if you held a brow of much distraction:

Are you mov'd, my lord?

Leon. No, in good earnest.—

How sometimes nature will betray its folly,
Its tenderness, and make itself a pastime
To harder bosoms! Looking on the lines
Of my boy's face, methought I did recoil
Twenty-three years; and saw myself unbreech'd,
In my green velvet coat; my dagger muzzled,
Lest it should bite its master, and so prove,
As ornaments oft do, too dangerous.

How like, methought, I then was to this kernel,
This squash,⁹ this gentleman:—Mine honest friend,
Will you take eggs for money?¹⁰

Mam. No, my lord, I'll fight.

Leon. You will? why, happy man be his dole!¹¹—

my brother,

Are you so fond of your young prince, as we

Do seem to be of ours?

Pol. If at home, sir,

He's all my exercise, my mirth, my matter:

Now my sworn friend, and then mine enemy;

My parasite, my soldier, statesman, all;

He makes a July's day short as December;

And, with his varying childness, cures in me

Thoughts that would thicken my blood.

Leon. So stands this squire posed to be derived from beau-coq, or boy-cock. It occurs again in Twelfth Night, and in King Henry V. and in both places is coupled with chuck or chick. It is said that bra-cock is still used in Scotland.

1 Still playing with her fingers as a girl playing on the virginals. Virginals were stringed instruments played with keys like a spinnet, which they resembled in all respects but in shape, spinnets being nearly triangular, and virginals of an oblong square shape like a small piano forte.

2 Thou wantest a rough head, and the budding horns that I have. A pash in some places denoting a young bull calf whose horns are springing; a mad pash, a mad-brained boy.

3 i. e. entirely.

4 i. e. old faded stuffs of other colours dyed black.

5 Welkin is blue, i. e. the colour of the welkin or sky.

6 In King Henry VI. Part I. we have—

'God knows, thou art a collop of my flesh.'

7 Affection here means imagination. Intention is earnest consideration, eager attention. It is this vehemence of mind which affects Leontes, by making him

Offic'd with me: We two will walk. my lord,
And leave you to your graver steps.—Hermione,
How thou lov'st us, show in our brother's welcome;
Let what is dear in Sicily be cheap:
Next to thyself, and my young rover he's Apparent¹² to my heart.

Her. If you would seek us,

We are yours 'till the garden; Shall's attend you there.

Leon. To your own bents dispose you: you'll be found,

Be you beneath the sky:—I am angling now,

Though you perceive me not how I give line.

Go to, go to!

[Aside. Observing POLIXENES and HERMIONE.]

How she holds up the neb,¹³ the bill to him!

And arms her with the boldness of a wife

To her allowing¹⁴ husband! Gone already!

Inch-thick, knee-deep, o'er head and ears a fork'd

one!¹⁵

[Exeunt POL. HER. and Attendants.]

Go, play, boy, play;—thy mother plays, and I

Play too; but so disgrac'd a part, whose issue

Will hiss me to my grave; contempt and clamour

Will be my knell.—Go, play, boy, play.—There have been,

Or I am much deceiv'd, cuckolds are now;

And many a man there is, even at this present,

Now, while I speak this, holds his wife by the arm,

That little thinks, she has been sluic'd in his absence,

And his pond fish'd by his next neighbour, by

Sir Smile, his neighbour: nay, there's comfort in't,

Whiles other men have gates; and those gates

open'd,

As mine, against their will: Should all despair,

That have revolted wives, the tenth of mankind

Would hang themselves. Physic for't there is none;

It is a bawdy planet, that will strike

Where 'tis predominant; and 'tis powerful, think it,

From east, west, north, and south: Be it concluded,

No barricado for a belly; know it;

It will let in and out the enemy,

With bag and baggage: many a thousand of us

Have the disease, and feel't not.—How now, boy?

Mam. I am like you, they say.

Leon. Why, that's some comfort.—

What! Camillo there?

Cam. Ay, my good lord.

Leon. Go play, Mamilius; thou'rt an honest man.—[Exit MAMILLIUS.]

Camillo, this great sir will yet stay longer.

Cam. You had much ado to make his anchor hold;

When you cast out, it still came home.¹⁶

Leon. Didst note it?

Cam. He would not stay at your petitions; made

His business more material.¹⁷

Leon. Didst perceive it?

They're here with me already:¹⁸ whispering,

rounding.¹⁹

Sicilia is a so-forth: 'Tis far gone,

When I shall gust²⁰ it last.—How came't, Camillo,

That he did stay?

Cam. At the good queen's entreaty.

conjure up unreal causes of disquiet; and thus, in the poet's language, 'stabs him to the centre.'

8 Credent, credible.

9 i. e. an immature pea-pool.

10 'Will you take eggs for money?' A proverbial phrase for 'will you suffer yourself to be cajoled or imposed upon?'

11 i. e. may happiness be his portion!

12 Their apparent, next claimant.

13 i. e. mouth.

14 i. e. approving

15 i. e. a horned one, a cuckold.

16 'It still came home,' a nautical term, meaning,
'the anchor would not take hold.'

17 The more you requested him to stay, the more urgent he represented that business to be which summoned him away.

18 Not Polixenes and Hermione, but casual observers.

19 To round in the ear was to tell secretly, to whisper.

20 i. e. taste it:—

ille domus sciet ultimus.

Juv. Sat. 4.

Leon. At the queen's, be't: good, should be pertinent;
But so it is, it is not. Was this taken
By any understanding pate but thine?
For thy conceit is soaking, will draw in
More than the common blocks:—Not noted, is't,
But of the finer natures? by some severals,
Of head-piece extraordinary? lower messes,¹
Perchance, are to this business purblind: say.

Cam. Business, my lord? I think, most understand Bohemia stays here longer.

Leon.

Ha?

Cam.

Stays here longer.

Leon. Ay, but why?

Cam. To satisfy your highness, and the entreaties
Of our most gracious mistress.

Leon.

Satisfy

The entreaties of your mistress?—satisfy?—
Let that suffice. I have trusted thee, Camillo,
With all the nearest things to my heart, as well
My chamber-councils: wherein, priestlike, thou
Hast cleans'd my bosom; I from thee departed Thy penitent reform'd: but we have been Deceiv'd in thy integrity, deceiv'd
In that which seems so.

Cam.

Be it forbid, my lord!

Leon. To bide upon't:—Thou art not honest: or,
If thou inclin'st that way, thou art a coward;
Which hoxes² honesty behind, restraining
From course requir'd: Or else thou must be counted
A servant, grafted in my serious trust,
And therein negligent; or else a fool,
That see'st at a game play'd home, the rich stake drawn,
And tak'st it all for jest.

Cam.

My gracious lord,

I may be negligent, foolish, and fearful;
In every one of these no man is free,
But that his negligence, his folly, fear,
Amongst the infinite doings of the world,
Sometime puts forth: In your affairs, my lord,
If ever I were wilful-negligent,
It was my folly; if industriously
I play'd the fool, it was my negligence,
Not weighing well the end; if ever fearful
To do a thing, where I the issue doubted,
Whereof the execution did cry out
Against the non-performance,³ 'twas a fear
Which oft affects the wisest: these, my lord,
Are such allow'd infirmities, that honesty
Is never free of. But, 'beseech your grace,
Be plainer with me; let me know my trespass
By its own visage: if I then deny it,
'Tis none of mine.

Leon.

Have not you seen, Camillo,

(But that's past doubt: you have; or your eye-glass
Is thicker than a cuckold's horn;) or heard,
(For, to a vision so apparent, rumour
Cannot be mute,) or thought,—(for cogitation Resides not in that man, that does not think,)—
My wife is slippery? If thou wilt confess,

1 Messes is here put for degrees, conditions. The company at great tables were divided according to their rank into higher and lower messes. Those of lower condition sitting below the great standing salt in the centre of the table.

2 To hox is to hamstring, the proper word is to hough.

3 This is expressed obscurely, but seems to mean 'the execution of which (when done) cried out against the nonperformance of it before;' or, as Johnson ironically expresses it, was 'a thing necessary to be done,' but which Camillo had delayed doing because he doubted the issue.

4 Theobald quoted this passage in defence of the well known line in his Double Falsehood, 'None but himself can be his parallel.'—'For who does not see at once,' says he, 'that he who does not think has no thought in him.' In the same light the subsequent editors view this passage, and read with Pope, 'that does not think it.' But the old reading is right, and the absurdity only in the misapprehension of it. Leontes means to say, 'Have you not thought that my wife is slippery (for cogitation resides not in the man that does

(Or else be impudently negative, To have nor eyes, nor ears, nor thought,) then say, My wife's a hobby-horse; deserves a name As rank as any flax-wench, that puts to Before a truth-plight: say it, and justify it.

Cam. I would not be a stander-by, to hear My sovereign mistress clouded so, without My present vengeance taken: 'Shrew my hear You never spoke what did become you less Than this, which to reiterate, were sin As deep as that, though true.'

Leon.

Is whispering nothing?

Is leaning cheek to cheek? Is meeting noses? Kissing with inside lip? stopping the career Of laughter with a sigh? (a note infallible Of breaking honesty:) horsing foot on foot? Skulking in corners? wishing clocks more swift? Hours, minutes? noon, midnight? and all eyes blind With the pin and web,⁶ but theirs, theirs only, That would unseen be wicked? is this nothing? Why, then, the world, and all that's in't, is nothing; The covering sky is nothing; Bohemia nothing; My wife is nothing; nor nothing have these nothings, If this be nothing.

Cam.

Good my lord, be cur'd

Of this disease'd opinion, and betimes;
For 'tis most dangerous.

Leon.

Say, it be; 'tis true.

Cam.

No, no, my lord.

Leon.

It is: you lie, you lie:

I say, thou liest, Camillo, and I hate thee; Pronounce thee a gross lout, a mindless slave; Or else a hovering temporizer, that Canst with thine eyes at once see good and evil, Inclining to them both: Were my wife's liver Infected as her life, she would not live The running of one glass.'

Cam.

Who does infect her?

Leon. Why he, that wears her like his medal,⁷ hanging

About his neck, Bohemia: Who—if I Had servants true about me: that bare eyes To see alike mine honour as their profits, Their own particular thrifts,—they would do that Which should undo more doing: Ay, and thou, His cup-bearer,—whom I from meaner form Have bench'd,⁸ and rear'd to worship; who may'st

Plainly, as heaven sees earth, and earth sees heaven, How I am galled,—might'st bespice a cup,⁹ To give mine enemy a lasting wink; Which draught to me were cordial.

Cam.

Sir, my lord,

I could do this: and that with no rash¹⁰ potion, But with a ling'ring dram, that should not work Maliciously like poison: But I cannot Believe this crack to be in my dread mistress, So sovereignly being honourable. I have lov'd thee,

Leon.

Make't thy question, and go rot!¹¹ not think my wife is slippery.') The four latter words, though disjoined from the word think by the necessity of a parenthesis, are evidently to be connected in construction with it.

5 To reiterate your accusation of her would be as great a sin as that, if committed, of which you accuse her.

6 The pin and web is the cataract in an early stage. 7 i. e. one hour.

8 The old copy reads 'her medal.' The allusion is to the custom of wearing a medallion or jewel appended to a ribbon about the neck.

9 'Bespice a cup.' So in Chapman's Translation of the tenth book of the Odyssey:—

— with a festival

She'll first receive thee; but will spice thy bread

With flowery poisons.'

10 Rash is hasty; as in King Henry IV. Part II. 'rash gunpowder.' Maliciously is malignantly, with effects openly hurtful.

11 Make that, i. e. Hermione's disloyalty, which is a clear point, a subject of doubt, and go rot! Dost think, I am such a fool as to torment myself, and bring disgrace on me and my child, without sufficient grounds?

Dost think, I am so muddy, so unsettled,
To appoint myself in this vexation? sully
The purity and whiteness of my sheets,
Which to preserve, is sleep; which being spotted,
Is goads, thorns, nettles, tails of wasps?¹
Give scandal to the blood of the prince my son,
Who, I do think is mine, and love as mine;
Without ripe moving to't? Would I do this?
Could man so blench?²

Cam. I must believe you, sir;
I do: and will fetch off Bohemia for't:
Provided, that when he's remov'd, your highness
Will take again your queen, as yours at first;
Even for your son's sake; and thereby, for sealing
The injury of tongues in courts and kingdoms
Known and allied to yours.

Leon. Thou dost advise me,
Even so as I mine own course have set down:
I'll give no blemish to her honour, none.

Cam. My lord,
Go then; and with a countenance as clear
As friendship wears at feasts, keep with Bohemia,
And with your queen: I am his cupbearer;
If from me he have wholesome beverage,
Account me not your servant.

Leon. This is all;
Do't, and thou hast the one half of my heart;
Do't not, thou split'st thine own.

Cam. I'll do't, my lord.
Leon. I will seem friendly, as thou hast advis'd me. [Exit.]

Cam. O miserable lady!—But, for me,
What case stand I in? I must be the poisoner
Of good Polixenes: and my ground to do't
Is the obedience to a master; one,
Who, in rebellion with himself, will have
All that are his, so too.—To do this deed,
Promotion follows: If I could find example
Of thousands, that had struck anointed kings,
And flourish'd after, I'd not do't: but since
Nor brass, nor stone, nor parchment, bears not one,
Let villainy itself forswear't. I must Forsake the court: to do't, or no, is certain
To me a break-neck. Happy star, reign now!
Here comes Bohemia.

Enter POLIXENES.

Pol. This is strange! methinks,
My favour here begins to warp. Not speak?—
Good-day, Camillo.

Cam. Hail, most royal sir!

Pol. What is the news? 'the court?

Cam. None rare, my lord.

Pol. The king bath on him such a countenance,
As he had lost some province, and a region,
Lov'd as he loves himself: even now I met him
With customary compliment; when he,
Wasting his eyes to the contrary, and falling
A lip of much contempt, speeds from me; and
So leaves me to consider what is breeding,
That changes thus his manners.

Cam. I dare not know, my lord.

Pol. How! dare not? do not. Do you know, and dare not

Be intelligent to me? 'Tis thereabouts;
For, to yourself, what you do know, you must;
And cannot say you dare not. Good Camillo,
Your chang'd complexions are to me a mirror,
Which shows me mine chang'd too: for I must be A party in this alteration, finding Myself thus alter'd with it.

Cam. There is a sickness
Which puts some of us in distemper; but

I cannot name the disease; and it is caught
Of you that yet are well.

Pol. How! caught of me?
Make me not sighted like the basilisk:
I have look'd on thousands, who have sped the better

By my regard, but kill'd none so. Camillo,—
As you are certainly a gentleman; thereto
Clerk-like, experienc'd, which no less adorns
Our gentry, than our parents' noble names,
In whose success we are gentle,³—I beseech you,
If you know aught which does behave my knowledge

Thereof to be inform'd, imprison it not
In ignorant concealment.

Cam. I may not answer.

Pol. A sickness caught of me, and yet I well!
I must be answer'd.—Dost thou hear, Camillo,
I conjure thee, by all the parts of man,
Which honour does acknowledge,—whereof the least

Is not this suit of mine,—that thou declare
What incidency thou dost guess of harm
Is creeping toward me; how far off, how near;
Which way to be prevented, if to be;
If not, how best to bear it.

Cam. Sir, I'll tell you;
Since I am charg'd in honour, and by him
That I think honourable: Therefore, mark my counsel;

Which must be even as swiftly follow'd, as
I mean to utter it; or both yourself and me
Cry, lost, and so good-night.

Pol. On, good Camillo.

Cam. I am appointed him to murder you.⁴

Pol. By whom, Camillo?

Cam. By the king.

Pol. For what?

Cam. He thinks, nay, with all confidence he swears,

As he had seen't, or been an instrument.
To vice⁵ 'you to't,—that you have touch'd his queen Forbiddenly.

Pol. O, then my best blood turn
To an infected jelly; and my name
Be yoked with his, that did betray the best!⁶
Turn then my freshest reputation to
A savour, that may strike the dullest nostril
Where I arrive; and my approach be shunn'd,
Nay, hated too, worse than the great⁷ infection
That e'er was heard, or read!

Cam. Swear his thought over⁸

By each particular star in heaven, and
By all their influences, you may as well
Forbid the sea for to obey the moon,
As, or by oath, remove, or counsel, shake
The fabric of his folly; whose foundation
Is pil'd upon his faith,⁹ and will continue
The standing of his body.

Pol. How should this grow?

Cam. I know not: but, I am sure, 'tis safer to Avoid what's grown, than question how 'tis born.
If therefore you dare trust my honesty,—
That lies enclosed in this trunk, which you Shall bear along impawn'd,—away to-night.
Your followers I will whisper to the business;
And will, by twos, and threes, at several posterns, Clear them of the city: For myself, I'll put
My fortunes to your service, which are here
By this discovery lost. Be not uncertain:
For, by the honour of my parents, I
Have utter'd truth: which if you seek to prove,
I dare not stand by; nor shall you be safer peare's time meant any kind of winding screw. The vice of a clock was a common expression.

⁶ That is Judas. A clause in the sentence of excommunicated persons was: 'let them have part with Judas that betrayed Christ.'

⁷ 'Swear his thought over.' The meaning apparently is 'over-swear his thought by.' &c.

⁸ 'Is pil'd upon his faith.' This folly which is erected on the foundation of settled belief.

¹ Something is necessary to complete the verse.
Hammer reads:—

² 'Is goads and thorns, nettles and tails of wasps.'

³ To blench is to start off, to shrink.

⁴ Success, for succession. Gentle, well born, was opposed to simple.

⁵ 'I am appointed him to murder you.' I am the person appointed to murder you.

⁶ i. e. to screw or move you to it. A vice in Shaks-

Than one condemn'd by the king's own mouth, thereon
His execution sworn.

Pol. I do believe thee:
I saw his heart in his face.¹ Give me thy hand;
Be pilot to me, and thy places shall Still neighbour mine;² My ships are ready, and
My people did expect my hence departure
Two days ago.—This jealousy
Is for a precious creature; as she's rare,
Must it be great; and, as his person's mighty,
Must it be violent; and as he does conceive,
He is dishonour'd by a man which ever Profess'd to him, why, his revenges must
In that be made more bitter. Fear o'ershades me;
Good expedition be my friend, and comfort
The gracious queen, part of his theme, but nothing
Of his ill-ta'en suspicion!³ Come, Camillo;
I will respect thee as a father, if Thou bear'st my life off hence: Let us avoid.

Cam. It is in mine authority, to command
The keys of all the posterns: Please your highness
To take the urgent hour: come, sir, away.

[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. The same. Enter HERMIONE, MARILLIUS, and Ladies.

Her. Take the boy to you: he so troubles me,
'Tis past enduring.

1 Lady. Come, my gracious lord,
Shall I be your playfellow?

Mam. No, I'll none of you.

1 Lady. Why, my sweet lord?

Mam. You'll kiss me hard; and speak to me as if I were a baby still.—I love you better.

2 Lady. And why so, my lord?

Mam. Not for because
Your brows are blacker; yet black brows, they say,
Become some women best; so that there be not Too much hair there, but in a semicircle,
Or half-moon made with a pen.

2 Lady. Who taught you this?

Mam. I learn'd it out of women's faces.—Pray
now

What colour are your eye-brows?

1 Lady. Blue, my lord.

Mam. Nay, that's a mock: I have seen a lady's nose

That has been blue, but not her eye-brows.

2 Lady. Hark ye:

The queen, your mother, rounds apace: we shall Present our services to a fine new prince,
One of these days; and then you'd wanton with us,
If we would have you.

1 Lady. She is spread of late
Into a goodly bulk: Good time encounter her!

Her. What wisdom stirs amongst you? Come,
sir, now

I am for you again: Pray you, sit by us,
And tell 's a tale.

Mam. Merry, or sad, shall't be?

Her. As merry as you will.

Mam. A sad tale's best for winter:
I have one of sprites and goblins.

Her. Let's have that, good sir.
Come on, sit down:—Come on, and do your best
To fright me with your sprites: you're powerful at it.

Mam. There was a man,—

'To find the mind's construction in the face.'

² i. e. I will place thee in elevated rank always near to my own in dignity, or near my person.

³ Johnson might well say, 'I can make nothing of the following words:—

and comfort

The gracious queen, part of his theme, but nothing
Of his ill-ta'en suspicion.'

He suspected the line which connected them to the rest to have been lost. I have sometimes thought that we should read not noting instead of but nothing. Perhaps they will bear this construction: 'Good expedition

Her. Nay, come, sit down; then on.

Mam. Dwelt by a church-yard;—I will tell it softly;

You crickets shall not hear it.

Her. Come on then,
And give't me in mine ear.

Enter LEONTES, ANTIGONUS, Lords, and others.

Leon. Was he met there? his train? Camillo with him?

1 Lord. Behind the tuft of pines I met them; never Saw I men scour so on their way: I ey'd them

Even to their ships.

Leon. How bless'd am I

In my just censure? In my true opinion?—
Alack, for lesser knowledge!⁴ How accurs'd,
In being so blest!—There may be in the cup
A spider⁵ steep'd, and one may drink; depart,
And yet partake no venom; for his knowledge
Is not infected: but if one present
The abhorr'd ingredient to his eye; make known,
How he hath drunk, he cracks his gorge, his sides
With violent hefts:⁷—I have drunk, and seen the spider.

Camillo was his help in this, his pander:—
There is a plot against my life, my crown;
All's true that is mistrusted:—that false villain,
Whom I employ'd, was pre-employ'd by him:
He has discover'd my design, and I
Remain a pinch'd thing;⁸ yea, a very trick
For them to play at will:—How came the posterns
So easily open?

1 Lord. By his great authority;
Which often hath no less prevail'd than so,
On your command.

Leon. I know't too well.—

Give me the boy; I am glad, you did not nurse him:
Though he does bear some signs of me, yet you
Have too much blood in him.

Her. What is this? sport?

Leon. Bear the boy hence, he shall not come about her;

Away with him:—and let her sport herself
With that she's big with; for 'tis Polixenes
Has made thee swell thus.

Her. But I'd say, he had not,
And, I'll be sworn, you would believe my saying,
Howe'er you lean to the nayward.

Leon. You, my lords,

Look on her, mark her well; be but about
To say, she is a goodly lady, and
The justice of your hearts will thereto add,
'Tis pity, she's not honest, honourable:
Praise her but for this her without-door form,
(Which, on my faith, deserves high speech) and straight

The shrug, the hum, or ha; these petty brands,
That calumny doth use:—O, I am out,
That mercy does; for calumny will sear⁹
Virtue itself:—these shrugs, these hums, and has,
When you have said, she's goodly, come between,
Ere you can say she's honest: But be it known,
From him that has most cause to grieve it should be,
She's an adulteress.

Her. Should a villain say so,

The most replenish villain in the world,
He were as much more villain: you, my lord,
Do but mistake.

Leon. You have mistook, my lady,
Polixenes for Leontes: O thou thing,
Which I'll not call a creature of thy place, be my friend, and may my absence bring comfort to the gracious queen who is part of his theme, but who knows nothing of his unjust suspicion.'

⁴ i. e. judgment.

⁵ 'Alack, for lesser knowledge!' that is, O that my knowledge were less!

⁶ Spiders were esteemed poisonous in our author's time.

⁷ Hefts, heavings, things which are heaved up.

⁸ i. e. a thing pinch'd out of clouts, a puppet for them to move and actuate as they please.'

⁹ i. e. will brand it.

Least barbarism, making me the precedent,
Should a like language use to all degrees,
And mannerly distinguishment leave out
Betwixt the prince and beggar!—I have said,
She's an adulteress; I have said with whom:
More, she's a traitor! and Camillo is
A federy¹ with her; and one that knows
What she should shame to know herself,
But² with her most vile principal, that she's
A bed-swarver, even as bad as those
That vulgars give bold'st titles; ay, and privy
To this their late escape.

Her. No, by my life,
Privy to none of this: How will this grieve you,
When you shall come to clearer knowledge, that
You thus have publish'd me? Gentle my lord,
You scarce can right me thoroughly then, to say
You did mistake.

Leon. No, no; if I mistake
In those foundations which I build upon,
The centre is not big enough to bear
A school-boy's top.³—Away with her to prison:
He, who shall speak for her, is afar off guilty,
But that he speaks.⁴

Her. There's some ill planet reigns:
I must be patient till the heavens look
With an aspect more favourable.—Good my lords,
I am not prone to weeping, as our sex
Commonly are; the want of which vain dew,
Perchance, shall dry your pities: but I have
That honourable grief lodg'd here, which burns Worse than tears down: 'Beseech you all, my lords,

With thoughts so qualified as your charities
Shall best instruct you, measure me;—and so
The king's will be perform'd!

Leon. Shall I be heard?

[To the Guards.]

Her. Who is't that goes with me?—'Beseech
your highness,

My women may be with me; for, you see,
My plight requires it. Do not weep, good fools;
There is no cause: when you shall know your mistress

Has deserv'd prison, then abound in tears,
As I come out: this action, I now go on,⁵
Is for my better grace.—Adieu, my lord:
I never wish'd to see you sorry; now,
I trust, I shall.—My women, come; you have leave.

Leon. Go, do our bidding; hence.

[Exeunt Queen and Ladies.]

1 Lord. 'Beseech your highness, call the queen again.

Ant. Be certain what you do, sir; lest your justice
Prove violence; in the which three great ones suffer,
Yourself, your queen, your son.

1 Lord. For her, my lord,—
I dare my life lay down, and will do't, sir,
Please you to accept it, that the queen is spotless
I'the eyes of heaven, and to you; I mean,
In this which you accuse her.

Ant. If it prove
She's otherwise, I'll keep my stables⁶ where
I lodge my wife; I'll go in couples with her;
Then when I feel, and see her, no further trust her;
For every inch of woman in the world,
Ay, every dram of woman's flesh, is false,
If she be.

¹ Federy. This word, which is probably of the poet's own invention, is used for confederate, accomplice.

² One that knows what she should be ashamed to know herself, even if the knowledge of it was shared but with her paramour. It is the use of but for be-out (only, according to Malone) that obscures the sense.

³ i. e. no foundation can be trusted.

⁴ 'He who shall speak for her is afar off guilty,

But that he speaks.'

He who shall speak for her is remotely guilty in merely speaking.

⁵ i. e. what I am now about to do.

⁶ Much has been said about this passage: one has thought it should be stable-stand; another that it means station. But it may be explained thus:—'If she prove

Leon. Hold your peaces.

1 Lord.

Good my lord.—

Ant. It is for you we speak, not for ourselves:
You are abus'd, and by some putter-on,
That will be damn'd for't; 'would I knew the villain,
I would land-damn' him: Be she honour-flaw'd,—
I have three daughters; the eldest is eleven;
The second, and the third, nine, and some five;
If this prove true, they'll pay for't: by mine honour,
I'll geld them all: fourteen they shall not see,
To bring false generations; they are coheirs;
And I had rather glib⁸ myself, than they Should not produce fair issue.

Leon. Cease; no more.

You smell this business with a sense as cold
As is a dead man's nose: but I do see't and feel't,
As you feel doing thus; and see withal
The instruments that feel.⁹

Ant. If it be so,

We need no grave to bury honesty;
There's not a grain of it, the face to sweeten
Of the whole dungy earth.

Leon.

What! lack I credit?

1 Lord. I had rather you did lack, than I, my lord,
Upon this ground: and more it would content me
To have her honour true, than your suspicion;
Be blam'd for't how you might.

Leon.

Why, what need we

Commune with you of this? but rather follow
Our forceful instigation? Our prerogative
Calls not your counsels; but our natural goodness
Imparts this: which,—if you (or stupified,
Or seeming so in skill) cannot, or will not,
Relish as¹⁰ truth, like us; inform yourselves,
We need no more of your advice: the matter,
The loss, the gain, the ordering on't, is all Properly ours.

Ant.

And I wish, my liege,

You had only in your silent judgment tried it,
Without more overture.

Leon.

How could that be?

Either thou art most ignorant by age,
Or thou wert born a fool. Camillo's flight,
Added to their familiarity,
(Which was as gross as ever touch'd conjecture,
That lack'd sight only, nought for approbation,¹¹
But only seeing, all other circumstances
Made up to the deed) doth push on this proceeding:
Yet, for a greater confirmation,
(For, in an act of this importance, 'twere
Most piteous to be wild) I have despatch'd in post,
To sacred Delphos, or Apollo's temple,
Cleomenes and Dion, whom you know
Of stuff'd sufficiency:¹² Now from the oracle
They will bring all; whose spiritual counsel had Shall stop, or spur me. Have I done well?

1 Lord. Well done, my lord.

Leon. Though I am satisfied, and need no more Than what I know, yet shall the oracle
Give rest to the minds of others; such as he,
Whose ignorant credulity will not Come up to the truth: so have we thought it good,
From our free person she should be confined;
Lest that the treachery of the two fled hence,
Be left her to perform. Come, follow us;
We are to speak in public: for this business
Will raise us all.

Ant. [Aside.] To laughter, as I take it,
If the good truth were known. [Exeunt.]

false, I'll make my stables or kennel of my wife's chamber; I'll go in couples with her like a dog, and never leave her for a moment; trust her no further than I can feel and see her.'

⁷ 'I would land-damn him.' Johnson interprets this: 'I will damn or condemn him to quit the land.'

⁸ Glib or lib, i. e. castrate.

⁹ I see and feel my disgrace, as you, Antigonus, now feel my doing this to you, and as you now see the instruments that feel, i. e. my fingers. Leontes must here be supposed to touch or lay hold of Antigonus.

¹⁰ The old copy reads a truth. Rowe made the correction.

¹¹ i. e. proof.

¹² i. e. of abilities more than sufficient.

SCENE II. The same. The outer Room of a Prison. Enter PAULINA and Attendants.

Paul. The keeper of the prison,—call to him;

[Exit an Attendant.]

Let him have knowledge who I am,—Good lady! No court in Europe is too good for thee, What dost thou then in prison?—Now, good sir, Re-enter Attendant, with the Keeper.

You know me, do you not?

Keeper. For a worthy lady, And one whom I much honour.

Paul. Pray you, then, Conduct me to the queen.

Keeper. I may not, madam; to the contrary I have express commandment.

Paul. Here's ado, To lock up honesty and honour from The access of gentle visitors!—Is it lawful, Pray you, to see her women? any of them? Emilia?

Keeper. So please you, madam, to put Apart these your attendants, I shall bring Emilia forth.

Paul. I pray now, call her. [Exit Attendant.]

Keeper. And, madam, I must be present at your conference.

Paul. Well, be it so, prythee. [Exit Keeper.]

Here's such ado to make no stain a stain, As passes colouring.

Re-enter Keeper, with EMILIA.

Dear gentlewoman, how fares our gracious lady?

Emil. As well as one so great, and so forlorn, May hold together: On her frights and griefs (Which never tender lady hath borne greater), She is, something before her time, deliver'd.

Paul. A boy?

Emil. A daughter; and a goodly babe, Lusty, and like to live: the queen receives Much comfort in't: says, My poor prisoner, I am innocent as you.

Paul. I dare be sworn: These dangerous unsafe lunes! o'the king! be-shrew them!

He must be told on't, and he shall: the office Becomes a woman best; I'll take't upon me: If I prove honey-mouth'd, let my tongue blister; And never to my red-look'd anger be The trumpet any more:—Pray you, Emilia, Commend my best obedience to the queen; If she dares trust me with her little babe, I'll show't the king, and undertake to be Her advocate to th' louddest: We do not know How he may soften at the sight o'the child; The silence often of pure innocence Persuades, when speaking fails.

Emil. Most worthy madam, Your honour, and your goodness, is so evident, That your free undertaking cannot miss A thriving issue; there is no lady living, So meet for this great errand: Please your ladyship To visit the next room, I'll presently Acquaint the queen of your most noble offer; Who, but to-day, hammer'd of this design; But durst not tempt a minister of honour, Lest she should be denied.

Paul. Tell her, Emilia, I'll use that tongue I have: if wit flow from it, As boldness from my bosom, let it not be doubted I shall do good.

Emil. Now be you blest for it! I'll to the queen: Please you, come something nearer.

Keeper. Madam, if't please the queen to send the babe,

I know not what I shall incur, to pass it, Having no warrant.

Paul. You need not fear it, sir:

1 Lunes. This word has not been found in any other English writer; but it is used in old French for frenzy, lunacy, folly. A similar expression occurs in The Revenger's Tragedy, 1609.

The child was prisoner to the womb; and is, By law and process of great nature, thence Freed and enfranchis'd: not a party to The anger of the king; nor guilty of, If any be, the trespass of the queen.

Keeper. I do believe it.

Paul. Do not you fear: upon Mine honour, I will stand 'twixt you and danger. [Exit.]

SCENE III. The same. A Room in the Palace. Enter LEONTES, ANTIGONUS, Lords, and other Attendants.

Leon. Nor night, nor day, no rest: It is but weakness

To bear the matter thus; mere weakness, if The cause were not in being;—part o' the cause, She, the adulteress;—for the harlot king Is quite beyond mine arm, out of the blank And level² of my brain, plot-proof: but she I can hook to me: Say, that she were gone, Given to the fire, a moiety of my rest Might come to me again.—Who's there?

1 Attend. My lord! [Advancing.]

Leon. How does the boy?

1 Attend. He took good rest to-night; 'Tis hop'd his sickness is discharg'd.

Leon. To see, His nobleness! Conceiving the dishonour of his mother, He straight declin'd, droop'd, took it deeply; Fasten'd and fix'd the shame on't in himself; Threw off his spirit, his appetite, his sleep, And downright languish'd.—Leave me solely:—go, See how he fares. [Exit Attend.—Fye, fye! no thought of him;—

The very thought of my revenges that way Recoil upon me: in himself too mighty; And in his parties, his alliance,—Let him be, Until a time may serve: for present vengeance, Take it on her. Camillo and Polixenes Laugh at me; make their pastime at my sorrow: They should not laugh, if I could reach them; nor Shall she, within my power.

Enter PAULINA, with a Child.

1 Lord. You must not enter. Paul. Nay, rather, good my lords, be second to me. Fear you his tyrannous passion more, alas, Than the queen's life? a gracious innocent soul; More free, than he is jealous.

Ant. That's enough. 1 Attend. Madam, he hath not slept to night; commanded

None should come at him.

Paul. Not so hot, good sir; I come to bring him sleep. 'Tis such as you,— That creep like shadows by him, and do sigh At each his needless heavings,—such as you Nourish the cause of his awaking: I Do come with words as medicinal as true; Honest, as either; to purge him of that humour, That presses him from sleep.

Leon. What noise there, ho?

Paul. No noise, my lord; but needful conference About some gossips for your highness.

Leon. How?—

Away with that audacious lady: Antigonus, I charg'd thee, that she should not come about me; I knew she would.

Ant. I told her so, my lord, On your displeasure's peril, and on mine, She should not visit you.

Leon. What, can't at not rule her

Paul. From all dishonesty, he can: in this, (Unless he take the course that you have done, Commit me, for committing honour) trust it, He shall not rule me.

2 Blank and level mean mark and aim, or direction They are terms of gunnery.

3 I. e. leave me alone.

Ant. Lo you now, you hear!
When she will take the rein, I let her run;
But she'll not stumble.

Paul. Good my liege, I come,—
And, I beseech you, hear me, who profess¹
Myself your loyal servant, your physician,
Your most obedient counsellor; yet that dare
Less appear so, in comforting your evils,²
Than such as most seem yours:—I say, I come
From your good queen.

Leon. Good queen!
Paul. Good queen, my lord, good queen: I say,
good queen;
And would by combat make her good, so were I
A man, the worst³ about you.

Leon. Force her hence.
Paul. Let him, that makes but trifles of his eyes,
First hand me: on my own accord, I'll off;
But, first, I'll do my errand.—The good queen,
For she is good, hath brought you forth a daughter;
Here 'tis; commends it to your blessing.

[Laying down the Child.]
Leon. Out!
A mankind⁴ witch? Hence with her, out o' door:
A most intelligencing bawd!

Paul. Not so:
I am as ignorant in that, as you
In so entitling me: and no less honest
Than you are mad; which is enough, I'll warrant,
As this world goes, to pass for honest.

Leon. Traitors!
Will you not push her out? Give her the bastard:—
Thou dotard [To Antigonus], thou art womantir'd,⁵ unroosted

By thy dame Partlet here:—take up the bastard;
Take't up, I say; give't to thy crone.⁶
Paul. For ever
Unvenerable be thy hands, if thou
Takest up the princess, by that forced⁷ baseness
Which he has put upon't!

Leon. He dreads his wife.
Paul. So, I would, you did; then, 'twere past all doubt,
You'd call your children yours.

Leon. A nest of traitors!
Ant. I am none, by this good light.

Paul. Nor I; nor any,
But one, that's here; and that's himself: for he
The sacred honour of himself, his queen's,
His hopeful son's, his babe's, betrays to slander, Whose sting is sharper than the sword's;⁸ and will not

(For, as the case now stands, it is a curse
He cannot be compell'd to't,) once remove
The root of his opinion, which is rotten,
As ever oak, or stone, was sound.

Leon. A callat,⁹
Of boundless tongue; who late hath beat her husband,
And now baits me!—This brat is none of mine;
It is the issue of Polixenes:
Hence with it; and, together with the dam,
Commit them to the fire.

Paul. It is yours;
And, might we lay the old proverb to your charge,
So like you, 'tis the worse.—Behold, my lords,
Although the print be little, the whole matter
And copy of the father: eye, nose, lip,
The trick of his frown, his forehead; nay, the valley,
The pretty dimples of his chin, and cheek; his smiles;

The very mould and frame of hand, nail, finger:—
And, thou, good goddess nature, which hast made it
So like to him that got it, if thou hast
The ordering of the mind too, 'mongst all colours
No yellow¹⁰ in't; lest she suspect, as he does,
Her children not her husband's!

Leon. A gross hag!—
And, lozel,¹¹ thou art worthy to be hang'd,
That wilt not stay her tongue.

Ant. Hang all the husbands
That cannot do that feat, you'll leave yourself
Hardly one subject.

Leon. Once more, take her hence.
Paul. A most unworthy and unnatural lord
Can do no more.

Leon. I'll have thee burn'd.

Paul. I care not:
It is a heretic that makes the fire,
Not she which burns in t.—I'll not call you tyrant;
But this most cruel usage of your queen
(Not able to produce more accusation Than your own weak-hing'd fancy) something sa-vours

Of tyranny, and will ignoble make you,
Yea, scandalous to the world.

Leon. On your allegiance,
Out of the chamber with her. Were I a tyrant,
Where were her life? she durst not call me so,
If she did know me one. Away with her.

Paul. I pray you, do not push me; I'll be gone.
Look to your babe, my lord; 'tis yours: Jove send her
A better guiding spirit!—What need these hands?—
You, that are thus so tender o'er his follies,
Will never do him good, not one of you.
So, so:—Farewell; we are gone. [Exit.]

Leon. Thou, traitor, hast set on thy wife to this.—
My child? away with't!—even thou, that hast
A heart so tender o'er it, take it hence,
And see it instantly consum'd with fire;
Even thou, and none but thou. Take it up straight:
Within this hour bring me word, 'tis done
(And by good testimony,) or I'll seize thy life,
With what thou else call'st thine: If thou refuse,
And wilt encounter with my wrath, say so;
The bastard brains with these my proper hands
Shall I dash out. Go, take it to the fire;
For thou sett'st on thy wife.

Ant. I did not, sir:
These lords, my noble fellows, if they please,
Can clear me in't.

I Lord. We can; my royal liege,
He is not guilty of her coming hither.

Leon. You are liars all.

I Lord. 'Beseech your highness, give us better credit:

We have always truly serv'd you; and beseech
So to esteem of us; And on our knees we beg
(As recompense of our dear services, Past, and to come) that you do change this purpose;
Which, being so horrible, so bloody, must
Lead on to some foul issue: We all kneel.

Leon. I am a feather for each wind that blows;—
Shall I live on, to see this bastard kneel
And call me father? Better burn it now,
Than curse it then. But, be it; let it live:
It shall not neither.—You, sir, come you hither;

[To Antigonus.]
You, that have been so tenderly officious
With lady Margery, your midwife, there,

² 'In comforting your evils.' To comfort, in old language, is to aid, to encourage. Evils here mean wicked courses.

³ I. e. the weakest, or least warlike.

⁴ 'A mankind witch.' In Junius's Nomenclator, by Abraham Fleming, 1583, Virago is interpreted 'A manly woman, or a mankind woman.' Johnson asserts that the phrase is still used in the midland counties for a woman violent, ferocious, and mischievous.

⁵ I. e. hen-pecked. To tire in Falconry is to tear with the beak. Partlet is the name of the hen in the old story of Reynard the Fox.

⁶ A crone was originally a toothless old ewe; and thence became a term of contempt for an old woman.

⁷ Forced is false; uttered with violence to truth. Baseness for bastardy; we still say base born.

⁸ 'Whose sting is sharper than the sword's.' So in Cymbeline:

'Slander,
Whose edge is sharper than the sword, whose tongue
Outvenoms all the worms of Nile.'

⁹ A callat is a trull.

¹⁰ 'No yellow,' the colour of jealousy.

¹¹ Lozel, a worthless fellow; one lost to all goodness. From the Saxon Losian, to perish, to be lost. Lozel, lozliche, are all of the same family.

To save this bastard's life:—for 'tis a bastard,
So sure as this beard's gray,¹—what will you adventure—

To save this brat's life?

Ant. Any thing, my lord,
That his ability may undergo,
And nobleness impose: at least, thus much;
I'll pawn the little blood which I have left,
To save the innocent: any thing possible.

Leon. It shall be possible: Swear by this sword,²
Thou wilt perform my bidding.

Ant. I will, my lord.

Leon. Mark, and perform it; (seest thou?) for the fail—

Of any point in't shall not only be
Death to thyself, but to thy lewd-tongu'd wife;
Whom, for this time, we pardon. We enjoin thee,
As thou art liegeman to us, that thou carry
This female bastard hence; and that thou bear it
To some remote and desert place, quite out
Of our dominions; and that there thou leave it,
Without more mercy, to its own protection,
And favour of the climate. As by strange fortune
It came to us, I do in justice charge thee,—
On thy soul's peril, and thy body's torture,—
That thou commend it strangely to some place,³
Where chance may nurse, or end it: Take it up.

Ant. I swear to do this, though a present death
Had been more merciful.—Come on, poor babe:
Some powerful spirit instruct the kites and ravens,
To be thy nurses! Wolves, and bears, they say,
Casting their savageness aside, have done
Like offices of pity.—Sir, be prosperous
In more than this deed doth require! and blessing,⁴
Against this cruelty, fight on thy side,
Poor thing, condemn'd to loss!⁵

[Exit, with the Child.

No, I'll not rear

Leon.

Another's issue.

1 Atten. Please your highness, posts,
From those you sent to the oracle, are come
An hour since: Cleomenes and Dion,
Being well arrived from Delphos, are both landed,
Hasting to the court.

1 Lord. So please you, sir, their speed
Hath been beyond account.

Leon.

Twenty-three days
They have been absent: 'Tis good speed; foretells,
The great Apollo suddenly will have
The truth of this appear. Prepare you, lords;
Summon a session, that we may arraign
Our most disloyal lady: for, as she hath Been publicly accus'd, so shall she have
A just and open trial. While she lives,
My heart will be a burden to me. Leave me;
And think upon my bidding. [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I. The same. A Street in some Town.
Enter CLEOMENES and DION.

Cleo. The climate's delicate; the air most sweet;
Fertile the isle;⁶ the temple much surpassing
The common praise it bears.

Dion. I shall report,
For most it caught me, the celestial habits
(Methinks, I so should term them,) and the reverence
Of the grave wearers. O, the sacrifice!
How ceremonious, solemn, and unearthly
It was it's offering!

Cleo. But, of all, the burst

¹ Leontes must mean the beard of Antigonus, which he may be supposed to touch. He himself tells us that twenty-three years ago he was unbreech'd, of course his age must be under thirty, and his own beard would hardly be gray.

² It was anciently a practice to swear by the cross at the hilt of a sword.

³ I. e. commit it to some place as a stranger. To commend is to commit, according to the old dictionaries.

⁴ I. e. the favour of heaven.

⁵ I. e. to exposure, or to be lost or dropped.

⁶ Warburton has remarked that the temple of Apollo was at Delphi, which was not an island. But Shak-

And ear-deafening voice o'the oracle,
Kin to Jove's thunder, so surpris'd my sense,
That I was nothing.

Dion. If the event o' the journey
Prove as successful to the queen,—O, be't so!—
As it hath been to us, rare, pleasant, speedy,
The time is worth the use on't.⁷

Cleo. Great Apollo,
Turn all to the best! These proclamations,
So forcing faults upon Hermione,
I little like.

Dion. The violent carriage of it
Will clear, or end, the business: When the oracle,
(Thus by Apollo's great divine seal'd up)
Shall the contents discover, something rare,
Even then will rush to knowledge.—Go,—fresh horses;—

And gracious be the issue! [Exit.

SCENE II. The same. A Court of Justice. LEON-TES, Lords, and Officers, appear properly seated.

Leon. This sessions (to our great grief, we pronounce)

Even pushes against our heart: The party tried,
The daughter of a king; our wife; and one
Of us too much belov'd.—Let us be clear'd
Of being tyrannous, since we so openly
Proceed in justice; which shall have due course,
Even to the guilt, or the purgation.—
Produce the prisoner.

Off. It is his highness' pleasure, that the queen
Appear in person here in court.—Silence!

HERMIONE is brought in, guarded; PAULINA and Ladies, attending.

Leon. Read the indictment.

Off. Hermione, queen to the worthy Leontes, king of Sicilia, thou art here accused and arraigned of high treason, in committing adultery with Polixenes, king of Bohemia; and conspiring with Camillo to take away the life of our sovereign lord and king, thy royal husband; the pretence⁸ whereof being by circumstances partly laid open, thou, Hermione, contrary to the faith and allegiance of a true subject, didst counsel and aid them, for their better safety, to fly away by night.

Her. Since what I am to say, must be but that Which contradicts my accusation; and
The testimony on my part, no other
But what comes from myself; it shall scarce boot me
To say, Not guilty: mine integrity,
Being counted falsehood,⁹ shall, as I express it,
Be so receiv'd. But thus,—If powers divine
Behold our human actions (as they do),
I doubt not then, but innocence shall make False accusation blush, and tyranny
Tremble at patience.—You, my lord, best know
(Who least will seem to do so,) my past life
Hath been as continent, as chaste, as true.
As I am now unhappy; which¹⁰ is more
Than history can pattern, though devis'd,
And play'd to take spectators: For behold me,—
A fellow of the royal bed, which owe¹¹
A moiety of the throne, a great king's daughter,
The mother to a hopeful prince—here standing
To prate and talk for life, and honour, 'fore
Who please to come and hear. For life, I prize it
As I weigh grief, which I would spare:¹² for honour, appears little regarded geographical accuracy. He followed Green's Dorastus and Fawnia, in which it is called the isle of Delphos. There was a temple of Apollo in the isle of Delos.

⁷ 'The time is worth the use on't' that is, the event of our journey will recompense us for the time we spent in it.

⁸ I. e. the design. Shakspeare often uses the word for design or intention.

⁹ I. e. my virtue-being accounted wickedness, my assertion of it will pass but for a lie. Falsehood means both treachery and lie.

¹⁰ Which, that is, which unhappiness.

¹¹ Own, possess.

¹² I prize my life no more than I value grief, which I would willingly spare. This sentiment, which is pro-

'Tis a derivative from me to mine,
And only that I stand for. I appeal
To your own conscience, sir, before Polixenes
Came to your court, how I was in your grace,
How merited to be so; since he came,
With what encounter so uncurent I
Have strain'd, to appear thus:¹ if one jot beyond
The bound of honour; or, in act, or will,
That way inclining; harden'd be the hearts
Of all that hear me, and my near'st of kin
Cry, Fye upon my grave!

Leon. I ne'er heard yet,
That any of these bolder vices wanted
Less impudence to gainsay what they did,
Than to perform it first.²

Her. That's true enough;
Though 'tis a saying, sir, not due to me.

Leon. You will not own it.

Her. More than mistress of,
Which comes to me in name of fault, I must not
At all acknowledge. For Polixenes,
(With whom I am accus'd) I do confess,
I lov'd him, as in honour he requir'd;
With such a kind of love, as might become
A lady like me; with a love, even such,
So, and no other, as yourself commanded:
Which not to have done, I think, had been in me
Both disobedience and ingratitude,
To you, and toward your friend; whose love had spoke,

Even since it could speak, from an infant freely,
That it was yours. Now, for conspiracy,
I know not how it tastes; though it be dish'd
For me to try how: all I know of it,
Is, that Camillo was an honest man;
And, why he left your court, the gods themselves,
Wotting no more than I, are ignorant.

Leon. You knew of his departure, as you know
What you have underta'en to do in his absence.

Her. Sir,
You speak a language that I understand not:
My life stands in the level³ of your dreams,
Which I'll lay down.

Leon. Your actions are my dreams;
You had a bastard by Polixenes,
And I but dream'd it:—As you were past all shame
(Those of your fact⁴ are so,) so past all truth:
Which to deny, concerns more than avails:⁵ for as Thy brat hath been cast out, like to itself,
No father owning it (which is, indeed,
More criminal in thee, than it,) so thou
Shalt feel our justice; in whose easiest passage,
Look for no less than death.

Her. Sir, spare your threats;
The bug⁶ which you would fright me with, I seek.
To me can life be no commodity:
The crown and comfort of my life, your favour,
I do give lost; for I do feel it gone,
But know not how it went: My second joy,
And first-fruits of my body, from his presence
I am barr'd, like one infectious: My third comfort,
Starr'd most unluckily,⁷ is from my breast,
The innocent milk in its most innocent mouth,
Haled out to murder: Myself on every post
Proclaim'd a strumpet; with immodest hatred,
The child-bed privilege denied, which 'longs

To women of all fashion:—Lastly, hurried
Here to this place, i'the open air, before
I have got strength of limit.⁸ Now, my liege,
Tell me what blessings I have here alive,
That I should fear to die? Therefore, proceed.
But yet hear this; mistake me not;—No! life,
I prize it not a straw:—but for mine honour
(Which I would free,) if I shall be condemn'd
Upon surmises; all proofs sleeping else,
But what your jealousies awake; I tell you,
'Tis rigour, and not law.—Your honours all,
I do refer me to the oracle;
Apollo be my judge.

1 Lord. This your request
Is altogether just: therefore, bring forth,
And in Apollo's name, his oracle.

[Exeunt certain Officers.]

Her. The emperor of Russia was my father:
O, that he were alive, and here beholding
His daughter's trial! that he did but see
The flatness⁹ of my misery; yet with eyes
Of pity, not revenge!

Re-enter Officers with CLEOMENES and DION.

Offi. You here shall swear upon this sword of justice,

That you, Cleomenes and Dion, have Been both at Delphos; and from thence have brought

This seal'd-up oracle, by the hand deliver'd
Of great Apollo's priest; and that, since then,
You have not dar'd to break the holy seal,
Nor read the secrets in't.

Cleo. Dion. All this we swear.

Leon. Break up the seals and read.

Offi. [Reads.] *Hermione is chaste, Polixenes blameless, Camillo a true subject, Leontes a jealous tyrant, his innocent babe truly begotten; and the king shall live without an heir, if that, which is lost, be not found.*¹⁰

Lords. Now blessed be the great Apollo!

Her. Praised!

Leon. Hast thou read truth?

Offi. Ay, my Lord; even so
As it is here set down.

Leon. There is no truth at all i'the oracle:
The sessions shall proceed; this is mere falsehood.

Enter a Servant, hastily.

Serv. My lord the king, the king!

Leon. What is the business?

Serv. O sir, I shall be hated to report it;
The prince your son, with mere conceit and fear
Of the queen's speed,¹¹ is gone.

Leon. How! gone?

Serv. Is dead.

Leon. Apollo's angry; and the heavens themselves

Do strike at my injustice. [HERMIONE faints.
How now there?

Paul. This news is mortal to the queen:—Look down,

And see what death is doing.
Leon. Take her hence;
Her heart is but o'ercharg'd; she will recover.—
I have too much believed mine own suspicion:—
'Beseech you, tenderly apply to her

bably derived from Ecclesiasticus, iii. 11, cannot be too often impressed on the female mind: 'The glory of a man is from the honour of his father; and a mother in dishonour is a reproach to her children.'

1 Encounter so uncurent is unallowed, or unlawful meeting.—Strain'd means swerv'd or gone astray from the line of duty.

2 It is to be observed that originally in our language, two negatives did not affirm, but only strengthen the negation. Examples of similar phraseology occur in several of our authors' plays, and even in the first act of this very drama: in this passage, Johnson observes that, according to the present use of words, less should be more, or wanted should be had.

3 See note 2, p. 316. To stand within the level of a gun is to stand in a direct line with its mouth, and in danger of being hurt by its discharge. This expression often occurs in Shakspeare.

4 i. e. they who have done like you. Shakspeare had this from Dorastus and Fawnia, 'it was her part to deny such a monstrous crime, and to be impudent in forswearing the fact, since she had passed all shame in committing the fault.'

5 It is your business to deny this charge; but the mere denial will be useless, will prove nothing.

6 Bugbear.

7 'Starr'd most unluckily.' Ill-starred; born under an inauspicious planet.

8 Strength of limit, i. e. the degree of strength which it is customary to acquire before women are suffered to go abroad after child-bearing.

9 'The flatness of my misery,' that is absoluteness, the completeness of my misery.

10 This is almost literally from Greene's novel.

11 i. e. of the event of the queen's trial. We still say, he sped well or ill.

Some remedies for life.—Apollo, pardon

[Exeunt PAULINA and Ladies, with HERM.]

My great profaneness 'gainst thine oracle!—
I'll reconcile me to Polixenes;
New woo my queen; recall the good Camillo;
Whom I proclaim a man of truth, of mercy;
For, being transported by my jealousies
To bloody thoughts and to revenge, I chose Camillo for the minister, to poison
My friend Polixenes: which had been done,
But that the good mind of Camillo tardied
My swift command, though I with death, and with Reward, did threaten and encourage him,
Not doing it, and being done: he, most humane,
And fill'd with honour, to my kingly guest
Unclass'd my practice; quit his fortunes here,
Which you knew great; and to the certain¹ hazard
Of all uncertainties himself commended,²
No richer than his honour:—How he glisters
Thorough my rust! and how his piety
Does my deeds make the blacker!³

Re-enter PAULINA.

Paul. Woe the while!
O, cut my lace; lest my heart, cracking it,
Break too!

1 Lord. What fit is this, good lady?

Paul. What studied torments, tyrant, hast for me?
What wheels? racks? fires? What faying?
boiling

In leads or oils? what old, or newer torture
Must I receive; whose every word deserves
To taste of thy most worst? Thy tyranny
Together working with thy jealousies,—
Fancies too weak for boys, too green and idle
For girls of nine!—O, think, what they have done,
And then run mad, indeed; stark mad! for all
Thy by-gone fooleries were but spices of it.
That thou betray'dst Polixenes, 'twas nothing;
That did but show thee, of a fool, inconstant,⁴
And damnable⁵ ungrateful: nor was't much,
Thou would'st have poison'd good Camillo's honour,⁶

To have him kill a king; poor trespasses,
More monstrous standing by: whereof I reckon
The casting forth to crows thy baby daughter,
To be or none, or little; though a devil
Would have shed water out of fire,⁷ ere done't:
Nor is't directly laid to thee, the death
Of the young prince; whose honourable thoughts
(Thoughts high for one so tender) cleft the heart
That could conceive a gross and foolish sire
Blemish'd his gracious dam: this is not, no,
Laid to thy answer: But the last,—O, lords,
When I have said, cry, woe!—the queen, the queen,
The sweetest, dearest, creature's dead; and vengeance for't

Not dropp'd down yet.

1 Lord. The higher powers forbid!

Paul. I say, she's dead; I'll swear't: if word,
nor oath,

Prevail not, go and see: if you can bring
Tincture, or lustre, in her lip, her eye,
Heat outwardly, or breath within, I'll serve you
As I would do the gods.—But, O thou tyrant!
Do not repent these things; for they are heavier
Than all thy woes can stir; therefore betake thee
To nothing but despair. A thousand knees
Ten thousand years together, naked, fasting,
Upon a barren mountain, and still winter
In storm perpetual, could not move the gods
To look that way thou wert.

Leon.

Go on, go on:

¹ Certain is not in the first folio, it was supplied by the editor of the second.

² See p. 318, note 3.

⁴ The same construction occurs in the second book of Phædrus's version of the Æneid:

'Thou canst not speak too much; I have deserv'd
All tongues to talk their bitterest.

1 Lord.

Say no more;

Howe'er the business goes, you have made fault
I'the boldness of your speech.

Paul.

I am sorry for't;

All faults I make, when I shall come to know them,
I do repent: Alas, I have show'd too much
The rashness of a woman: he is touch'd
To the noble heart.—What's gone, and what's past
help,

Should be past grief: Do not receive affliction
At my petition, I beseech you; rather
Let me be punish'd, that have minded you
Of what you should forget. Now, good my liege,
Sir, royal sir, forgive a foolish woman:
The love I bore your queen,—lo, fool again!—
I'll speak of her no more, nor of your children;
I'll not remember you of my own lord,
Who is lost too: Take your patience to you,
And I'll say nothing.

Leon.

Thou didst speak but well,

When most the truth; which I receive much better
Than to be pitied of thee. Pr'ythee, bring me
To the dead bodies of my queen, and son;
One grave shall be for both; upon them shall
The causes of their death appear, unto
Our shame perpetual: Once a day I'll visit
The chapel where they lie: and tears, shed there, Shall be my recreation: So long as Nature will bear up with this exercise,
So long I daily vow to use it. Come,
And lead me to these sorrows. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. Bohemia. A desert Country near the Sea. Enter ANTIGONUS, with the Child; and a Mariner.

Ant. Thou art perfect⁸ then, our ship hath touch'd upon
The deserts of Bohemia?

Mar.

Ay, my lord; and fear

We have landed in ill time: the skies look grimly,
And threaten present blusters. In my conscience,
The heavens with that we have in hand are angry,
And frown upon us.

Ant. Their sacred wills be done!—Go, get aboard;
Look to thy bark; I'll not be long, before
I call upon thee.

Mar. Make your best haste; and go not Too far i'the land; 'tis like to be loud weather;

Besides, this place is famous for the creatures
Of prey, that keep upon't.

Ant.

Go thou away:

I'll follow instantly.

Mar.

I am glad at heart

To be so rid o'the business. [Exa.]

Ant.

Come, poor babe:—

I have heard, (but not believ'd,) the spirits of the dead

May walk again: if such thing be, thy mother
Appear'd to me last night; for ne'er was dream
So like a waking. To me comes a creature,
Sometimes her head on one side, some another;
I never saw a vessel of like sorrow,
So fill'd, and so becoming: in pure white robes,
Like very sanctity, she did approach
My cabin where I lay: thrice bow'd before me;
And, gasping to begin some speech, her eyes
Became two spouts: the fury spent, anon
Did this break from her: Good Antigonus,
Since fate, against thy better disposition,
Hath made thy person for the thrower-out
Of my poor babe, according to thine oath,—
Places remote enough are in Bohemia,
There weep, and leave it crying; and, for the babe

⁶ When this the young men heard me speak, of wild they ceased wood.

⁵ Damnable is used here adverbially.

⁶ The poet forgot that Paulina was absent during the king's self-accusation.

⁷ I. e. a devil would have shed tears of pity, ere he would have perpetrated such an action.

⁸ I. e. well assured.

*Is counted lost for ever, Perdita,
I prythee call't; for this ungentle business,
Put on thee by my lord, thou ne'er shall see
Thy wife Paulina more:* and so, with shrieks,
She melted into air. Affrighted much,
I did in time collect myself; and thought
This was so, and no slumber. Dreams are toys:
Yet, for this once, yea, superstitiously,
I will be squar'd by this. I do believe Hermione hath suffer'd death; and that Apollo would, this being indeed the issue
Of king Polixenes, it should here be laid,
Either for life or death, upon the earth
Of its right father.—Blossom, speed thee well!

[Laying down the Child.]

There lie; and there thy character:¹ there these;

[Laying down a Bundle.]

Which may, if fortune please, both breed thee, pretty,

And still rest thine.—The storm begins:—Poor wretch,

That, for thy mother's fault, art thus expos'd
To loss, and what may follow!—Weep I cannot,
But my heart bleeds; and most accurs'd am I,
To be by oath enjoin'd to this.—Farewell!
The day frowns more and more; and thou art like to have
A lullaby too rough: I never saw
The heavens so dim by day. A savage clamour!²—
Well may I get aboard!—This is the chase;
I am gone for ever. [Exit, pursued by a Bear.]

Enter an old Shepherd.

Shep. I would, there were no age between ten and three-and-twenty; or that youth would sleep out the rest; for there is nothing in the between but getting wenches with child, wronging the ancientry, stealing, fighting.—Hark you now!—Would any but these boiled brains of nineteen and two-and-twenty, hunt this weather? They have scared away two of my best sheep; which, I fear, the wolf will sooner find than the master: if any where I have them, 'tis by the sea-side, browsing of ivy.³ Good luck, an't be thy will! what have we here? [Taking up the Child.] Mercy on't, a barme; a very pretty barme! A boy, or a child,⁴ I wonder? A pretty one; a very pretty one: Sure some scape: though I am not bookish, yet I can read waiting-gentlewoman in the scape. This has been some stair-work, some trunk-work, some behind-door work:
they were warmer that got this, than the poor thing is here. I'll take it up for pity: yet I'll tarry till my son come; he holla'd but even now. Whoa, ho, ho!

Enter Clown.

Clow. Hilloa, loa!

Shep. What, art so near? If thou'lt see a thing to talk on when thou art dead and rotten, come hither. What ailst thou, man?

Clow. I have seen two such sights, by sea, and by land;—but I am not to say, it is a sea, for it is now the sky; betwixt the firmament and it, you cannot thrust a bodkin's point.

Shep. Why, boy, how is it?

Clow. I would, you did but see how it chafes, how it rages, how it takes up the shore! but that's not to the point: O, the most piteous cry of the poor souls!

sometimes to see 'em, and not to see 'em: now the ship boring the moon with her main-mast; and anon swallowed with yest and froth, as you'd thrust a cork into a hog'shead. And then for the land service.—To see how the bear tore out his shoulder-bone! how he cried to me for help, and said, his name was Antigonus, a nobleman:—But to make an end of the ship:—to see how the sea flap-dragoned⁵ it; but, first, how the poor souls roared, and the sea mocked them;—and how the poor gentleman roared, and the bear mocked him, both roaring louder than the sea, or weather.

Shep. 'Name of mercy, when was this, boy?

Clow. Now, now; I have not winked since I saw these sights: the men are not yet cold under water, nor the bear half dined on the gentleman; he's at it
now.

Shep. 'Would, I had been by, to have helped the old man!⁶

Clow. I would you had been by the ship side, to have helped her; there your charity would have lacked footing.

[Aside.]

Shep. Heavy matters! heavy matters! but look thee here, boy. Now bless thyself; thou met'st with things dying, I with things new born. Here's a sight for thee; Look thee, a bearing-cloth⁷ for a squire's child! Look thee here: take up, take up, boy; open't. So, let's see; It was told me, I should be rich, by the fairies: this is some changel-ing!⁸—open't: What's within, boy?

Clow. You're a made⁹ old man; if the sins of your youth are forgiven you, you're well to live.
Gold! all gold!

Shep. This is fairy gold, boy, and 'twill prove so:
up with it, keep it close; home, home, the next¹⁰ way. We are lucky, boy; and to be so still, requires nothing but secrecy.—Let my sheep go:—
Come, good boy, the next way home.

Clow. Go you the next way with your findings;
I'll go see if the bear be gone from the gentleman, and how much he hath eaten: they are never curst,¹¹ but when they are hungry: if there be any of him left, I'll bury it.

Shep. That's a good deed; If thou may'st discern by that which is left of him, what he is, fetch me to the sight of him.

Clow. Marry, will I: and you shall help to put him i' the ground.

Shep. 'Tis a lucky day, boy; and we'll do good deeds on't. [Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

Enter Time, as Chorus.

Time. I,—that please some, try all; both joy and terror,

Of good and bad; that make, and unfold error;¹²—

Now take upon me, in the name of Time,

To use my wings. Impute it not a crime,

To me, or my swift passage, that I slide

Of sixteen years,¹³ and leave the growth untried

Of that wide gap;¹⁴ since it is in my power

7 A bearing-cloth, is the mantle of fine cloth, in which a child was carried to be baptized.

8 A changeling. Some child left behind by the fairies, in the room of one which they had stolen.

9 The old copies read mad. The emendation is Theobald's.

10 I. e. nearest.

11 Curst here signifies mischievous. The old adage says, 'Curst cows have short horns.'

12 Departed time renders many facts obscure, and in that sense is the cause of error. Time to come brings discoveries with it.

13 It is certain that Shakspeare was well acquainted with the laws of the drama, as they are called, but disregarded, nay wilfully departed from them, and 'snatch'd a grace beyond the reach of art.' His productions are not therefore to be tried by such laws.

14 I. e. leave unexamined the progress of the intermediate time which filled up the gap in Perdita's story.
The reasoning of Time is not very clear; he seems to 1 I. e. description. The writing afterward discovered with Perdita.

2 'A savage clamour.' This clamour was the cry of the dogs and hunters; then seeing the bear, he cries this is the chase, I. e. the animal pursued.

3 This is from the novel. It is there said to be 'sea ivie, on which they do greatly feed.'

4 A barme. This word is still in use in the northern dialects for a child. It is supposed to be derived from born, things born seeming to answer to the Latin nati.
Sieveins says that he had been told 'that in some of our inland countries a child signified a female infant in contradistinction to a male one; but the assertion wants confirmation, and we may rather refer this use of it to the simplicity of the shepherd.'

5 I. e. swallowed it, as our ancient topers swallowed flip-drasons.

6 Shakspeare, who knew that he himself designed Antigonus for an old man, has inadvertently given this knowledge to the shepherd, who had never seen him.

To o'erthrow law, and in one self-born hour
To plant and o'erwhelm custom: Let me pass
The same I am, ere ancient'st order was,
Or what is now received: I witness to
The times that brought them in; so shall I do
To the freshest things now reigning: and make stale
The glistering of this present, as my tale
Now seems to it. Your patience this allowing,
I turn my glass; and give my scene some growing,
As you had slept between. Leontes leaving
The effects of his fond jealousies; so grieving,
That he shuts up himself; imagine me,² Gentle spectators, that I now may be
In fair Bohemia; and remember well,
I mentioned a son o' the king's, which Florizel
I now name to you; and with speed so pace
To speak of Perdita, now grown in grace
Equal with wond'ring: What of her ensues,
I list not prophesy; but let Time's news
Be known, when 'tis brought forth:—a shepherd's daughter,

And what to her adheres, which follows after,
Is the argument³ of time: Of this allow,⁴
If ever you have spent time worse ere now;
If never yet, that Time himself doth say,
He wishes earnestly you never may. [Exit.]

SCENE I. The same. A Room in the Palace of Polixenes. Enter POLIXENES and CAMILLO.

Pol. I pray thee, good Camillo, be no more importunate: 'tis a sickness, denying thee any thing; a death, to grant this.

Cam. It is fifteen⁵ years, since I saw my country: though I have, for the most part, been aired abroad, I desire to lay my bones there. Besides, the penitent king, my master, hath sent for me: to whose feeling sorrows I might be some allay, or I o'er-ween to think so; which is another spur to my departure.

Pol. As thou lovest me, Camillo, wipe not out the rest of thy services, by leaving me now: the need I have of thee, thine own goodness hath made; better not to have had thee, than thus to want thee: thou, having made me businesses, which none without thee can sufficiently manage, must either stay to execute them thyself, or take away with thee the very services thou hast done: which if I have not enough considered, (as too much I cannot,) to be more thankful to thee, shall be my study; and my profit therein, the heaping friendships.⁶ Of that fatal country, Sicilia, prythee speak no more: whose very naming punishes me with the remembrance of that penitent, as thou call'st him, and reconciled king, my brother: whose loss of his most precious queen and children, are even now to be afresh lamented. Say to me, when saw'st thou the prince Florizel, my son? Kings are no less unhappy, their issue not being gracious, than they are in losing them, when they have approved their virtues.

Cam. Sir, it is three days since I saw the prince: What his happier affairs may be, he is to me unknown: but I have missingly noted,⁷ he is of late much retired from court; and is less frequent to his princely exercises, than formerly he hath appeared.

Pol. I have considered so much, Camillo; and with some care; so far, that I have eyes under my service, which look upon his removedness; from whom I have this intelligence; That he is seldom from the house of a most homely shepherd; a man, they say, that from very nothing, and beyond the imagination of his neighbours, is grown into an unspeakable estate.

Cam. I have heard, sir, of such a man, who hath a daughter of most rare note: the report of her is extended more than can be thought to begin from such a cottage.

Pol. That's likewise part of my intelligence. But, I fear the angle⁸ that plucks our son thither. Thou shalt accompany us to the place: where we will, not appearing what we are, have some question with the shepherd; from whose simplicity, I think it not uneasy to get the cause of my son's resort thither. Prythee, be my present partner in this business, and lay aside the thoughts of Sicilia.

Cam. I willingly obey your command.

Pol. My best Camillo!—We must disguise ourselves. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The same. A Road near the Shepherd's Cottage. Enter AUTOLYCUS, singing.

When daffodils begin to peer,—

With heigh! the doxy over the dale,—

Why, then comes in the sweet o' the year;

For the red blood reigns in the winter's pale.⁹

The white sheet bleaching on the hedge.—

With hey! the sweet birds, O, how they sing!—

Doth set my pugging¹⁰ tooth on edge;

For a quart of ale is a dish for a king.

The lark, that tirra-lirra chants,—

With, hey! with hey! the thrush and the jay:—

Are summer songs for me and my aunts.¹¹

While we lie tumbling in the hay.

I have served Prince Florizel, and, in my time, wore three-pile;¹² but now I am out of service.

But shall I go mourn, for that my dear?

The pale moon shines by night:

And when I wander here and there,

I then do most go right.

If tinkers may have leave to live,

And bear the sow-skin budget;

Then my account I well may give,

And in the stocks atouch it.

My traffick is sheets; when the kite builds, look to lesser linen.¹³ My father named me Autolycus; who, being, as I am, littered under Mercury, was likewise a snapper-up of unconsidered trifles: With die, and drab, I purchased this caparison; and my revenue is the silly cheat:¹⁴ Gallows, and knock, are too powerful on the highway: beating, and hanging, are terrors to me; for the life to come, I sleep out the thought of it.—A prize! a prize!

Enter Clown.

Clo. Let me see:—Every eleven wether—tods;¹⁵ every tod yields—pound and odd shilling; fifteen hundred shorn.—What comes the wool to?

Aut. If the springle hold, the cock's mine.

Clo. I cannot do it without counters.¹⁶—Let me see; what am I to buy for our sheep-shearing feast? Three pound of sugar; five pound of currants: rice mean, that he who overthrows everything, and makes as well as overwhelms custom, may surely infringe the laws of custom as they are made by him.

1 i. e. Imagine with me. It is a French idiom which Shakspeare has played upon in the Taming of the Shrew.

2 Argument, subject.

3 I. e. approve.

4 It should be sixteen, as Time has just stated, and future passages have it.

5 Heaping friendships, friendly offices.

6 Missingly noted, observed at intervals.

7 Angle is here used for the bait, or line and hook, that draws his son like a fish away.

8 Autolycus was the son of Mercury, and as famous for all the arts of fraud and thievery as his father.

9 I. e. 'the red, the spring blood now reigns over the parts lately under the dominion of winter.' A pale was a division, a place set apart from another, as the English pale, the pale of the church. The words pale and red were used for the sake of the antithesis. The glow of spring reigns over the paleness of winter.

10 A puggard was a cant name for some kind of thief.

11 Aunt was a cant word for a band or trull.

12 I. e. rich velvet, so called.

13 Autolycus means that his practice was to steal sheets; leaving the smaller linen to be carried away by the kites, who will sometimes carry it off to line their nests.

14 The silly cheat is one of the slang terms belonging to coney-catching or thievery. It is supposed to have meant picking of pockets.

15 Every eleven sheep will produce a tod or twenty-eight pounds of wool. The price of a tod of wool was about 20 or 22s. in 1581.

16 Counters were circular pieces of base metal, anciently used by the illiterate to adjust their reckonings.

—What will this sister of mine do with rice? But my father hath made her mistress of the feast, and she lays it on. She hath made me four-and-twenty nosegays for the shearers: three-man songmen¹ all, and very good ones; but they are most of them means² and bases: but one Puritan amongst them, and he sings psalms to hornpipes. I must have saffron, to colour the warden pies;³ mace,—dates,—none; that's out of my note: nutmegs, seven; a race, or two, of ginger; but that I may beg;—four pound of prunes, and as many of raisins o' the sun.

Aut. O, that ever I was born!

[Groveling on the ground.]

Clo. I' the name of me,—

Aut. O, help me, help me! pluck but off these rags; and then, death, death!

Clo. Alack, poor soul! thou hast need of more rags to lay on thee, rather than have these off.

Aut. O sir, the loathsomeness of them offends me more than the stripes I have received; which are mighty ones and millions.

Clo. Alas, poor man! a million of beating may come to a great matter.

Aut. I am robbed, sir, and beaten; my money and apparel ta'en from me, and these detestable things put upon me.

Clo. What, by a horse-man, or a foot-man?

Aut. A foot-man, sweet sir, a foot-man.

Clo. Indeed, he should be a foot-man, by the garments he hath left with thee; if this be a horse-man's coat, it hath seen very hot service. Lend me thy hand, I'll help thee; come, lend me thy hand. [Helping him up.]

Aut. O! good sir, tenderly, oh!

Clo. Alas, poor soul!

Aut. O, good sir, softly, good sir: I fear, sir, my shoulder-blade is out.

Clo. How now? canst stand?

Aut. Softly, dear sir; [Picks his pocket] good sir, softly; you ha' done me a charitable office.

Clo. Dost lack any money? I have a little money for thee.

Aut. No, good sweet sir; no, I beseech you, sir; I have a kinsman not past three quarters of a mile hence, unto whom I was going; I shall there have money, or any thing I want: Offer me no money, I pray you: that kills my heart.⁴

Clo. What manner of fellow was he that robbed you?

Aut. A fellow, sir, that I have known to go about with trol-my dames:⁵ I knew him once a servant of the prince; I cannot tell, good sir, for which of his virtues it was, but he was certainly whipped out of the court.

Clo. His vices, you would say; there's no virtue whipped out of the court: they cherish it, to make it stay there; and yet it will no more but abide.⁶

Aut. Vices I would say, sir. I know this man well: he hath been since an ape-bearer; then a process-server, a bailiff; then he compassed a motion⁷ of the prodigal son, and married a tinker's wife within a mile where my land and living lies; and, having flown over many knavish professions, he settled only in rogue: some call him Autolycus.

Clo. Out upon him! Prig,⁸ for my life, prig: he haunts wakes, fairs, and bear-batings.

Aut. Very true, sir, he sir, he; that's the rogue, that put me into this apparel.

Clo. Not a more cowardly rogue in all Bohemia; if you had but looked big, and spit at him, he'd have run.

Aut. I must confess to you sir, I am no fighter: I am false of heart that way; and that he knew, I warrant him.

Clo. How do you now?

Aut. Sweet sir, much better than I was; I can stand, and walk: I will even take my leave of you, and pace softly towards my kinsman's.

Clo. Shall I bring thee on the way?

Aut. No, good-faced sir: no, sweet sir.

Clo. Then fare thee well; I must go buy spices for our sheep-shearing.

Aut. Prosper you, sweet sir!—[Exit Clown.] Your purse is not hot enough to purchase your spice. I'll be with you at your sheep-shearing too: If I make not this cheat bring out another, and the shearers prove sheep, let me be unrolled,⁹ and my name put in the book of virtue!

Jog on, jog on, the foot-path way,

And merrily hent¹⁰ the stile-a:

A merry hour goes all the day,

Your sad tires in a mile-a.

[Exit.]

SCENE III. The same. A Shepherd's Cottage.

Enter FLORIZEL and PERDITA.

Fl. Thine your unusual weeds to each part of you

Do give a life; no shepherdess, but Flora, Peering in April's front. This your sheep-shearing Is as a meeting of the petty gods, And you the queen on't.

Per.

Sir, my gracious lord,

To chide at your extremes,¹¹ it not becomes me; O, pardon, that I name them; your high self, The gracious mark¹² o' the land, you have obscur'd With a swain's wearing; and me, poor lowly maid, Most goddess-like prank'd up: But that our feasts In every mess have folly, and the feeders Digest it with a custom, I should blush To see you so attired; sworn, I think, To show myself a glass.¹³

Fl.

I bless the time,

When my good falcon made her flight across Thy father's ground.

Per.

Now Jove afford you cause

To me, the difference¹⁴ forges afford; your greatness

Hath not been used to fear. Even now I tremble

To think, your father, by some accident,

Should pass this way, as you did: O, the fates!

How would he look, to see his work, so lowly,

Vilely bound up?¹⁵ What would he say? Or how Should I, in these my borrow'd flaunts, behold

The sternness of his presence?

1 i. e. singers of catches in three parts.

2 Means are tenors.

3 Wardens are a large sort of pear, called in French Poirs de Garde, because, being a late hard pear, they may be kept very long. It is said that their name is derived from the Anglo Saxon warden, to preserve. They are now called baking-pears, and are generally coloured with cochineal instead of saffron, as of old.

4 Dame Quickly, speaking of Falstaff, says:—'the king hath killed his heart.'

5 'Trol-my dames.' The old English title of this game was pigeon-holes; as the arches in the board through which the balls are to be rolled resemble the cavities made for pigeons in a dove-house.

6 'Abide,' only sojourn, or dwell for a time.

7 He compassed a motion, &c.; he obtained a puppet-show, &c.

8 Prig, another cant phrase for the order of thieves. Harman in his Caveat for Cursitor, 1573, calls a horse-stealer 'a prigger of prancers; for to prigge in their language is to steal.'

9 i. e. dismissed from the society of rogues.

10 To hent the stile is to take the stile. It comes from the Saxon hentan.

11 i. e. the extravagance of his conduct in disguising himself in shepherd's clothes, while he pranked her up most goddess-like.

12 The gracious mark of the land is the object of all men's notice and expectation.

13 'To show myself a glass.' She probably means, that the prince, by the rustic habit he wears, seems as if he had sworn to show her as in a glass how she ought to be dressed, instead of being so goddess-like prank'd up. And were it not for the license and folly which custom had made familiar at such feasts, as that of sheep-shearing, when mimetic sports were allowable, she should blush to see him so attired.

14 Meaning the difference between his rank and hers.

15 'Vilely bound up.' This was a metaphor natural enough to a writer, though not exactly suitable in the mouth of Perdita. Shakspeare has repeated it more than once in Romeo and Juliet.

Flo. Apprehend
Nothing but jollity. The gods themselves,
Humbling their deities to love, have taken
The shapes of beasts upon them:¹ Jupiter
Became a bull, and bellow'd; the green Neptune
A ram, and bleated; and the fire-rob'd god,
Golden Apollo, a poor humble swain,
As I seem now: Their transformations
Were never for a piece of beauty rarer;
Nor in a way so chaste: since my desires
Run not before mine honour; nor my lusts
Burn hotter than my faith.

Per. O but dear² sir,
Your resolution cannot hold, when 'tis
Opposed, as it must be by the power o' the king:
One of these two must be necessities,
Which then will speak; that you must change this purpose,
Or I my life.

Flo. Thou dearest Perdita,
With these forc'd³ thoughts, I pry'thee, darken not
The mirth o' the feast: Or I'll be thine, my fair,
Or not my father's: for I cannot be Mine own, nor anything to any, if
I be not thine: to this I am most constant,
Though destiny say, no. Be merry, gentle;
Strangle such thoughts as these, with any thing
That you behold the while. Your guests are coming:
Lift up your countenance; as it were the day
Of celebration of that nuptial, which
We two have sworn shall come.

Per. O lady fortune,
Stand you auspicious!
Enter Shepherd, with POLIXENES and CAMILLO, disguised; Clown, MOPSA, DORCAS, and others.

Flo. See, your guests approach:
Address yourself to entertain them sprightly,
And let's be red with mirth.

Shep. Fye, daughter! when my old wife liv'd, upon
This day, she was both pantler, butler, cook;
Both dame and servant: welcom'd all: serv'd all:
Would sing her song, and dance her turn: now here,
At upper end o' the table, now i' the middle;
On his shoulder, and his; her face o' fire
With labour; and the thing she took to quench it,
She would to each one sip: You are retired,
As if you were a feasted one, and not
The hostess of the meeting; Pray you, bid
These unknown friends to us welcome: for it is
A way to make us better friends, more known.
Come, quench your blushes; and present yourself
That which you are, mistress o'er the feast: Come on,
And bid us welcome to your sheep-shearing,
As your good flock shall prosper.

Per. Welcome, sir! [To POL.
It is my father's will I should take on me
The hostesship o' the day:—You're welcome, sir!
[To CAMILLO.
Give me those flowers there, Dorcas.—Reverend sirs.

For you there's rosemary, and rue; these keep

1 This speech is almost literally taken from the novel.

2 Dear is wanting in the oldest copy.

3 I. e. far-fetched, not arising from present objects.

4 I. e. appearance and smell. Rue, being used in exorcisms, was called herb of grace, and rosemary was supposed to strengthen the memory, it is prescribed for that purpose in the ancient herbals. Ophelia distributes the same plants with the same attributes.

5 For again in the sense of cause.

6 Surely there is no reference here to the impracticable pretence of producing flowers by art to rival those of nature, as Steevens supposed. The allusion is to the common practice of producing by art particular varieties of colours on flowers, especially on carnations.

7 In the folio edition it is spelt Gillyvors. Gelofer or gillofer was the old name for the whole class of carnations, pinks, and sweetwilliams; from the French gloffe. There were also stock-gelofers, and wall-gelofer. The variegated gilliflowers or carnations, being considered as a produce of art, were properly called nature's bastards, and being streaked with white and red, Perdita considers them a proper emblem of a painted or immortal woman; and therefore declines to meddle with

Seeming, and savour,⁴ all the winter long:
Grace, and remembrance, be to you both,
And welcome to our shearing!

Pol. Shepherdesse,
(A fair one are you,) well you fit our ages
With flowers of winter.

Per. Sir, the year growing ancient,—
Not yet on summer's death, nor on the birth
Of trembling winter,—the fairest flowers o' the season
Are our carnations, and streak'd gilliflowers,
Which some call nature's bastards: of that kind
Our rustic garden's barren; and I care not
To get slips of them.

Pol. Wherefore, gentle maiden,
Do you neglect them?

Per. For⁵ I have heard it said,
There is an art,⁶ which, in their pinedness, shares
With great creating nature.

Pol. Say, there be;
Yet nature is made better by no mean,
But nature makes that mean: so, o'er that art,
Which, you say, adds to nature, is an art
That nature makes. You see, sweet maid, we marry
A gentler scion to the wildest stock;
And make conceive a bark of baser kind
By bud of nobler race; This is an art
Which does mend nature,—change it rather: but
The art itself is nature.

Per. So it is.

Pol. Then make your garden rich in gilliflowers,⁷
And do not call them bastards.

Per. I'll not put
The dibble in earth to set one slip of them:
No more than, were I painted, I would wish
This youth should say, 'twere well: and only therefore

Desire to breed by me.—Here's flowers for you;
Hot lavender, mints, savory, marjoram;
The marigold, that goes to bed with the sun,
And with him rises weeping;⁸ these are flowers
Of middle summer, and, I think, they are given
To men of middle age: You are very welcome.

Cam. I should leave grazing, were I of your flock,
And only live by gazing.

Per. Out, alas!
You'd be so lean, that blasts of January
Would blow you through and through.—Now, my fairest friend,
I would, I had some flowers o' the spring, that might Become your time of day; and yours; and yours;
That wear upon your virgin branches yet
Your maidenheads growing:—O Proserpina,
For the flowers now, that, frighted, thou let'st fall
From Dis's waggon! daffodils,
That come before the swallow dares, and take
The winds of March with beauty; violets, dim
But sweeter than the lids of Juno's eyes,⁹
Or Cytherea's breath: pale primroses,
That die unmarried,¹⁰ ere they can behold them. She connects the gardener's art of varying the colours of these flowers with the art of painting the face, a fashion very prevalent in Shakspeare's time. This is Mr. Douce's very ingenious solution of this riddle, which had embarrassed Mr. Steevens.

8 'Some call it sponsus solis, the spouse of the sunne, because it sleeps and is awakened with him.'—Lapton's Notable Things, book, vi.

9 See Ovid's Metam. b. v.—

—ut summa vestem laxavit ab ora
Collecti flores tunicis cecidere remissis;
or the whole passage as translated by Golding, and given in the Variorum Shakspeare.

10 Johnson had not sufficient imagination to comprehend this exquisite passage, he thought that the poet had mistaken Juno for Pallas, and says, that 'sweeter than an eyelid is an odd image.' But the eyes of Juno were as remarkable as those of Pallas, and

—of a beauty never yet
Equalled in height of stature.
The beauties of Greece and other Asiatic nations tinged their eyelids of an obscure violet colour by means of some unguent, which was doubtless perfumed like those for the hair, &c. mentioned by Athenæus.

11 Perhaps the true explanation of this passage may be deduced from the subjoined verses in the original

Bright Phoebus in his strength, a malady
Most incident to maids; bold oxlips, and
The crown-imperial; lilies of all kinds,
The flower-de-luce being one! O, these I lack,
To make you garlands of; and, my sweet friend,
To strew him o'er and o'er.

Flo. What? like a corse?

Per. No, like a bank, for love to lie and play on;
Not like a corse: or if,—not to be buried,
But quick, and in mine arms. Come, take your flowers:

Methinks, I play as I have seen them do
In Whitsun' pastorals: sure, this robe of mine
Does change my disposition.

Flo. What you do,
Still betters what is done. When you speak, sweet,
I'd have you do it ever: when you sing,
I'd have you buy and sell so; so give alms;
Pray so; and for the ordering your affairs,
To sing them too: When you do dance, I wish you
A wave o' the sea, that you might ever do
Nothing but that; move still, still so, and own
No other function: Each your doing,
Se singular in each particular,
Crowns what you are doing in the present deeds,
That all your acts are queens.

Per. O Doricles,
Your praises are too large: but that your youth,
And the true blood, which fairly peeps through it,
Do plainly give you out an unstaid shepherd,
With wisdom I might fear, my Doricles;
You woo'd me the false way.

Flo. I think, you have
As little skill to fear,² as I have purpose
To put you to't.—But, come, our dance, I pray:
Your hand, my Perdita: so turtles pair,
That never mean to part.

Per. I'll swear for 'em.³

Pol. This is the prettiest low-born lass, that ever Ran on the green-sward: nothing she does, or seems,
But smacks of something greater than herself;
Too noble for this place.

Cam. He tells her something,
That makes her blood look out: Good sooth, she is
The queen of curds and cream.

Clo. Come on, strike up.
Mopsa must be your mistress: marry, garlic,
To mend her kissing with.

Mop. Now, in good time!

Clo. Not a word, a word; we stand upon our manners.⁴

Come, strike up. [Music.
Here a dance of Shepherds and Shepherdesses.

Pol. Pray, good shepherd, what Fair swain is this, which dances with your daughter?

Shep. They call him Doricles, and he boasts himself
To have a worthy feeding:⁵ but I have it
Upon his own report, and I believe it;
He looks like sooth:⁶ He says he loves my
daughter;

edition of Milton's Lycidas, which he subsequently omitted, and altered the epithet unwedded to forsaken in the preceding line:

'Bring the rathe primrose that unwedded dies,
'Colouring the pale cheek of unenjoy'd love.
Every reader will see that the 'texture and sentiments' are derived from Shakspeare; and it serves as a beautiful illustration of his meaning.

1 Thus Marlow in his Hero and Leander:—
'Through whose white skin softer than soundest sleep,
With damask eyes the ruby blood doth peep.'

2 I. e. you as little know how to fear that I am false, as, &c.

3 Johnson would transfer this speech to the king, and Ritson would read 'swear for one.' Mr. Douce has justly observed that no change is necessary. It is no more than a common phrase of acquiescence, like 'I'll warrant you.'

4 I. e. we are now on our good behaviour.

5 A valuable tract of pasturage.

6 Truth.

7 That is dexterously, nimbly.

8 The trade of a milliner was formerly carried on by men exclusively

9 'With a hie dildò dill, and a dildò dee,' is the bur-

I think so too; for never gaz'd the moon
Upon the water, as he'll stand, and read,
As 'twere, my daughter's eyes: and, to be plain,
I think, there is not half a kiss to choose,
Who loves another best.

Pol.

She dances feately.⁷

Shep. So she does any thing; though I report it,
That should be silent; if young Doricles
Do light upon her, she shall bring him that
Which he not dreams of.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. O master, if you did but hear the pedler at the door, you would never dance again after a tabor and pipe; no, the bagpipe could not move you: he sings several tunes, faster than you'll tell money; he utters them as he had eaten ballads, and all men's ears grew to his tunes.

Clo. He could never come better; he shall come in: I love a ballad but even too well; if it be doleful matter, merrily set down, or a very pleasant thing indeed, and sung lamentably.

Serv. He hath songs, for man, or woman, of all sizes; no milliner can so fit his customers with gloves;⁸ he has the prettiest love-songs for maids;
so without bawdry, which is strange; with such delicate burdens of dildos and fadings;⁹ jump her and thump her; and where some stretch-mouth'd rascal would, as it were, mean mischief, and break a foul gap into the matter, he makes the maid to answer, Whoop, do me no harm, good man; puts him off, slights him, with Whoop, do me no harm, good man.¹⁰

Pol. This is a brave fellow.

Clo. Believe me thou talkest of an admirable conceited fellow. Has he any unbraided wares?¹¹

Serv. He hath ribbands of all the colours i' the rainbow; points,¹² more than all the lawyers in Bohemia can learnedly handle, though they come to him by the gross; inkles,¹³ caddisses,¹⁴ cambrics, lawns: why, he sings them over, as they were gods or goddesses; you would think, a smock were a she-angel; he so chants to the sleeve-hand,¹⁵ and the work about the square on't.¹⁶

Clo. Prythee, bring him in; and let him approach singing.

Per. Forewarn him, that he use no scurrilous words in his tunes.

Clo. You have of these pedlers, that have more in 'em than you'd think, sister.

Per. Ay, good brother, or go about to think.

Enter AUTOLYCUS, singing.

*Lawn, as white as driven snow;
Cyprius, black as e'er was crow;
Gloves, as sweet as damask roses;
Masks for faces, and for noses;
Bugle-bracelet, necklace-amber,
Perfume for a lady's chamber;¹⁷
Golden quoifs, and stomachers,
For my lads to give their dears;
Pins, and poking-sticks of steel,¹⁸
What maids lack from head to heel:*

den of an old ballad or two. Fading is also another burden to a ballad found in Shirley's Bird in a Cage; and perhaps to others. It is also the name given to an Irish dance, probably from Fedan, I whistle, as it was danced to the pipes.

10 This was also the burden of an old ballad.

11 I. e. undamaged wares, true and good. This word has sadly perplexed the commentators, who have all left the reader in the dark as to the true meaning. The quotation by Steevens from 'Any Thing for a Quiet Life' ought to have led to a right explanation:—'She says that you sent ware which is not warrantable, braided ware, and that you give not London measure.'

12 Points, upon which lies the quibble, were laces with tags.

13 A kind of tape.

14 A kind of ferret or worsted lace.

15 Sleeve-hand, the cuffs, or wristband.

16 The work about the bosom of it.

17 Amber, of which necklaces were made fit to perfume a lady's chamber.

18 These poking-sticks are described by Stubbes in his

*Come, buy of me, come; come buy, come buy;
Buy, lads, or else your lasses cry;
Come buy, &c.*

Clo. If I were not in love with Mopsa, thou shouldst take no money of me; but being enthrall'd as I am, it will also be the bondage of certain ribbands and gloves.

Mop. I was promis'd them against the feast; but they come not too late now.

Dor. He hath promised you more than that, or there be liars.

Mop. He hath paid you all he promised you: may be, he has paid you more; which will shame you to give him again.

Clo. Is there no manners left among maids? will they wear their packetts, where they should bear their faces? Is there not milking-time, when you are going to bed, or kiln-hole,¹ to whistle off these secrets; but you must be tittle-tattling before all our guests? 'Tis well, they are whispering: Clamour your tongues,² and not a word more.

Mop. I have done. Come, you promised me a tawdry lace,³ and a pair of sweet gloves.⁴

Clo. Have I not told thee, how I was cozened by the way, and lost all my money?

Aut. And, indeed, sir, there are cozeners abroad; therefore it behooves men to be wary.

Clo. Fear not thou man, thou shalt lose nothing here.

Aut. I hope so, sir; for I have about me many parcels of charge.

Clo. What hast here? ballads?

Mop. 'Pray now, buy some: I love a ballad in print, a'-life; for then we are sure they are true.

Aut. Here's one to a very doleful tune, How a usurer's wife was brought to bed of twenty money-bags at a burden; and how she longed to eat adders' heads, and toads carbonadoed.

Mop. Is it true think you?

Aut. Very true; and but a month old.

Dor. Bless me from marrying a usurer!

Aut. Here's the midwife's name to't, one mistress Taleporter; and five or six honest wives' that were present: Why should I carry lies abroad?

Mop. 'Pray you now, buy it.

Clo. Come on, lay it by: And let's first see more ballads; we'll buy the other things anon.

Aut. Here's another ballad, of a fish, that appeared upon the coast, on Wednesday the fourscore of April, forty thousand fathom above water, and sung this ballad against the hard hearts of maids; it was thought, she was a woman, and was turned into a cold fish, for she would not exchange flesh with one that loved her: The ballad is very pitiful and as true.⁵

Dor. Is it true, think you?

Aut. Five justices' hands at it; and witnesses, more than my pack will hold.

Clo. Lay it by too: another.

Anatome of Abuses, Part ii:—'They be made of yron and steele, and some of brasse, kept as bright as silver, yea, some of silver itselfe; and it is well, if in processe of time, they grow not to be of gold. The fashion wherafter they be made, I cannot resemble to any thing so well as to a squirt or a little squibbe, which little children used to squirt water out withal; and when they come to starching and setting off their ruffes, then must this instrument be heated in the fire the better to stiffen the ruff.' Stowe informs us that 'about the sixteenth yeare of the queene (Elizabeth) began the making of steale poking-sticks, and until that time all lawn-dresses used setting sticks made of wood or bone.'

1 The kiln-hole generally means the fireplace for drying malt; still a noted gossiping place.

2 An expression taken from bell-ringing; now contracted to clame. The bells are said to be clammed, when, after a course of rounds or changes, they are all pulled off at once, and give a general clash or clam, by which the peal is concluded. As this clame is succeeded by a silence, it exactly suits the sense of the passage. —Nares.

3 A tawdry lace was a sort of necklace worn by country wenches; so named after St. Audrey (Ethelreda) who is said to have died of a swelling in her throat, which she considered as a particular judgment, for

Aut. This is a merry ballad; but a very pretty one. Mop. Let's have some merry ones.

Aut. Why, this is a passing merry one; and goes to the tune of, Two maids wooing a man: there's scarce a maid westward, but she sings it; 'tis in request, I can tell you.

Mop. We can both sing it; if thou'lt bear a part, thou shalt hear; 'tis in three parts.

Dor. We had the tune on't a month ago.

Aut. I can bear my part; you must know, 'tis my occupation: have at it with you.

SONG.

*A. Get you hence, for I must go;
Where, it fits you not to know.*

D. Whither? M. O, whither? D. Whither?

M. It becomes thy oath full well,

Thou to me thy secrets tell:

D. Me too, let me go thither.

M. Or thou go'st to the grange, or mill:

D. If to either, thou dost ill:

A. Neither. D. What, neither? A. Neither?

D. Thou hast sworn my love to be:

M. Thou hast sworn it more to me:

Then, whither go'st? say, whither.

Clo. We'll have this song out anon by ourselves: My father and the gentleman are in sad⁶ talk, and we'll not trouble them: Come, bring away thy pack after me. Wenches, I'll buy for you both:—Pedler, let's have the first choice.—Follow me, girls.

Aut. And you shall pay well for 'em. [Aside.

Will you buy any tape,

Or lace for your cape,

My dainty duck, my dear-a?

Any silk, any thread,

Any toys for your head,

Of the new'st, and fin'st, fin'st wear-a?

Come to the pedler;

Money's a meller,

That doth utter⁷ all men's ware-a.

[Exeunt Clown, AUT. DORC. and MOPSA.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Master, there is three carters, three shepherds, three neat-herds, three swine-herds, that have made themselves all men of hair;⁸ they call themselves saltiers;⁹ and they have a dance which the wenches say is a gallimaufry of gambols, because they are not in't: but they themselves are o' the mind, (if it be not too rough for some, that know little but bowling,) it will please plentifully.

Shep. Away! we'll none on't; here has been too much homely foolery already:—I know, sir, we weary you.

Pol. You weary those that refresh us: Pray, let's see these four threes of herdsmen.

Serv. One three of them, by their own report, sir, hath danced before the king; and not the worst of having been in her youth much addicted to wearing fine necklaces; or it probably implies that they were dressed in goat-skins. A dance of satyrs was no unusual entertainment in Shakspeare's time, or even at an earlier period. A very curious relation of a disguising or mummery of this kind, which had like to have proved fatal to some of the actors in it, is related by Froissart as occurring in the court of France in 1392.

4 Sweet, or perfumed gloves, are often mentioned by Shakspeare; they were very much esteemed, and a frequent present in the poet's time.

5 All extraordinary events were then turned into ballads. In 1604 was entered on the stationers' books—'A strange report of a monstrous fish that appeared in the form of a woman from her waist upward.' To this it is highly probable that Shakspeare alludes.

6 i. e. serious.

7 A sale or utterance of ware. Exactus.—Baret.

8 It is most probable that they were dressed in goat-skins. A dance of satyrs was no unusual entertainment in Shakspeare's time, or even at an earlier period. A very curious relation of a disguising or mummery of this kind, which had like to have proved fatal to some of the actors in it, is related by Froissart as occurring in the court of France in 1392.

9 Satyrs.

the three, but jumps twelve foot and a half by the squire.¹

Shep. Leave your prating; since these good men are pleased, let them come in; but quickly now.

Serv. Why, they stay at door, sir. [Exit.]

Re-enter Servant, with twelve Rustics habited like Satyrs. They dance, and then exeunt.

Pol. O, father, you'll know more of that hereafter.—

Is it not too far gone?—'Tis time to part them.—

He's simple, and tells much. [Aside.—How now, fair shepherd?

Your heart is full of something, that does take Your mind from feasting. Sooth, when I was young, And handed love, as you do, I was wont To load my she with knacks: I would have ransack'd

The pedler's silken treasury, and have pour'd it To her acceptance; you have let him go, And nothing marted² with him: if your lass Interpretation should abuse; and call this Your lack of love or bounty; you were straited³ For a reply; at least, if you make a care Of happy holding her.

Flo. Old sir, I know She prizes not such trifles as these are: The gifts she looks from me are pack'd and lock'd Up in my heart; which I have given already, But not deliver'd.—O, hear me breathe my life Before this ancient sir, who, it should seem, Hath sometime lov'd: I take thy hand; this hand, As soft as dove's down, and as white as it; Or Ethiopian's tooth, or the fann'd snow, That's bolted⁴ by the northern blasts twice o'er.

Pol. What follows this? How prettily the young swain seems to wash The hand, was fair before!—I have put you out:— But to your protestation; let me hear What you profess.

Flo. Do, and be witness to't.

Pol. And this my neighbour too? Flo. And he, and more Than he, and men; the earth, the heavens, and all; That,—were I crown'd the most imperial monarch, Thereof most worthy; were I the fairest youth That ever made eyes swerve; had force and knowledge,

More than was ever man's,—I would not prize them, Without her love: for her employ them all; Commend them, and condemn them, to her service, Or to their own perdition.

Pol. Fairly offer'd.

Cam. This shows a sound affection.

Shep. But, my daughter, Say you the like to him?

Per. I cannot speak So well, nothing so well; no, nor mean better: By the pattern of my own thoughts I cut out The purity of his.

Shep. Take hands, a bargain;— And, friends unknown, you shall bear witness to't: I give my daughter to him, and will make Her portion equal his.

Flo. O, that must be If the virtue of your daughter: one being dead, I shall have more than you can dream of yet; Enough then for your wonder: But, come on, Contract us 'fore these witnesses.

Shep. Come, your hand;— And, daughter, yours.

Pol. Soft, swain, a while, 'beseech you; Have you a father?

Flo. I have: But what of him?

Pol. Knows he of this?

Flo. He neither does, nor shall.

Pol. Methinks, a father

Is, at the nuptial of his son, a guest That best becomes the table. Pray you, once more; Is not your father grown incapable Of reasonable affairs? is he not stupid With age, and altering rheums? Can he speak? hear?

Know man from man? dispute his own estate?⁵ Lies he not bed-rid? and again does nothing, But what he did being childish?

Flo. No, good sir; He has his health, and ampler strength, indeed, Than most have of his age.

Pol. By my white beard, You offer him, if this be so, a wrong Something unfilial: Reason, my son, Should choose himself a wife; but as good reason The father (all whose joy is nothing else But fair posterity) should hold some counsel In such a business.

Flo. I yield all this; But, for some other reasons, my grave sir, Which 'tis not fit, you know, I not acquaint My father with this business.

Pol. Let him know't.

Flo. He shall not.

Pol. P'rythee, let him.

Flo. No, he must not.

Shep. Let him, my son; he shall not need to grieve

At knowing of thy choice.

Flo. Come, come, he must not:—

Mark our contract.

Pol. Mark your divorce, young sir, [Discovering himself.]

Whom son I dare not call; thou art too base To be acknowledg'd: Thou a sceptre's heir, That thus affect'st a sheep-hook!—Thou old traitor, I am sorry that, by hanging thee, I can but Shorten thy life one week.—And thou, fresh piece Of excellent witchcraft; who, of force, must know The royal fool thou cop'st with;—

Shep. O, my heart!

Pol. I'll have thy beauty scratch'd with briars, and made

More homely than thy state.—For thee, fond boy,— If I may ever know, thou dost but sigh, That thou no more shalt never see this knack, (as never

I mean thou shalt,) we'll bar thee from succession; Not hold thee of our blood, no, not our kin. Far⁷ than Deucalion off:—Mark thou my words; Follow us to the court.—Thou churl, for this time, Though full of our displeasure, yet we free thee From the dead blow of it.—And you, enchantment,—

Worthy enough a herdsman; yea, him too, That makes himself, but for our honour therein, Unworthy thee,—if ever, henceforth, thou These rural latches to his entrance open, Or hoop⁸ his body more with thy embraces, I will devise a death as cruel for thee, As thou art tender to't.

Per. Even here undone! [Exit.]

I was not much afraid: for once, or twice, I was about to speak;⁹ and tell him plainly, The selfsame sun, that shines upon his court, Hides not his visage from our cottage, but Looks on alike.¹⁰—Will't please you, sir, begone?

[To FLORIZEL.]

1 Foot rule, esquierre, Fr.
2 This is an answer to something which the shepherd is supposed to have said to Polixenes during the dance.

3 Bought, trafficked.

4 Straitened, put to difficulties.

5 That is sifted.

6 i. e. 'converse about his own affairs.'

7 Far, in the old spelling farre, i. e. farther. The ancient comparative of fer was ferrer.

8 The old copy reads hope.

9 Warburton remarks that Perdita's character is here finely sustained. 'To have made her quite astonished at the king's discovery of himself had not become her birth; and to have given her presence of mind to have made this reply to the king, had not become her education.'

10 To look on, or look upon, without any substantive annexed, is a mode of expression which, though now unusual, appears to have been legitimate in Shakspeare's time.

I told you what would come of this: 'Beseech you, Of your own state take care: this dream of mine,— Being now awake, I'll queen it no inch further, But milk my ewes, and weep.

Cam. Why, how now, father, Speak, ere thou diest.

Shep. I cannot speak, nor think, Nor dare to know that which I know.—O, sir,

[To FLORIZEL.
You have undone a man of fourscore three,¹ That thought to fill his grave in quiet: yea, To die upon the bed my father died, To lie close by his honest bones: but now Some hangman must put on my shroud, and lay me Where no priest shovels in dust.²—O cursed wretch!

[To PERDITA.
That knew'st this was the prince, and wouldst adventure

To mingle faith with him.—Undone! undone! If I might die within this hour, I have liv'd To die when I desire. [Exit.

Flo. Why look you so upon me? I am but sorry, not afraid! delay'd, But nothing altered: What I was, I am: More straining on, for plucking back; not following My leash³ unwillingly.

Cam. Gracious my lord, You know your father's temper: at this time He will allow no speech,—which, I do guess, You do not purpose to him;—and as hardly Will he endure your sight as yet, I fear: Then, till the fury of his highness settle, Come not before him.

Flo. I not purpose it. I think, Camillo.

Cam. Even he, my lord.
Per. How often have I told you, 'twould be thus? How often said, my dignity would last But till 'twere known?

Flo. It cannot fail, but by The violation of my faith; And then Let nature crush the sides o' the earth together, And mar the seeds within!—Lift up thy looks:— From my succession wipe me, father! I Am heir to my affection.

Cam. Be advis'd.
Flo. I am; and by my fancy:⁴ if my reason Will thereto be obedient, I have reason: If not, my senses, better pleas'd with madness, Do bid it welcome.

Cam. This is desperate, sir.
Flo. So call it; but it does fulfil my vow; I needs must think it honesty. Camillo, Not for Bohemia, nor the pomp that may Be theretofore glean'd; for all the aun sees, or The close earth wombs, or the profound seas hide In unknown fathoms, will I break my oath To this my fair below'd: Therefore, I pray you, As you have ever been my father's honour'd friend, When he shall miss me (as, in faith, I mean not To see him any more), cast your good counsels Upon his passion: Let myself and fortune Tug for the time to come. This you may know, And so deliver;—I am put to sea With her, whom here I cannot hold on shore; And most opportune to our⁵ need, I have A vessel rides fast by, but not prepar'd For this design. What course I mean to hold Shall nothing benefit your knowledge, nor Concern me the reporting.

Cam. O, my lord,

I would your spirit were easier for advice Or stronger for your need.

Flo. Hark, Perdita.—[Takes her aside.
I'll hear you by-and-by. [To CAMILLO.

Cam. He's irremovable Resolved for flight: Now were I happy, if His going I could frame to serve my turn; Save him from danger, do him love and honour; Purchase the sight again of dear Sicilia, And that unhappy king, my master, whom I so much thirst to see.

Flo. Now, good Camillo, I am so fraught with curious business, that I leave out ceremony. [Going.

Cam. Sir, I think You have heard of my poor services, i' the love That I have borne your father?

Flo. Very nobly Have you deserv'd: it is my father's music To speak your deeds; not little of his care To have them recompens'd as thought on.

Cam. Well, my lord, If you may please to think I love the king; And, through him, what is nearest to him, which is Your gracious self; embrace but my direction, (If your more ponderous and settled project May suffer alteration,) on mine honour I'll point you where you shall have such receiving As shall become your highness; where you may Enjoy your mistress (from the whom, I see, There's no disjunction to be made, but by, As heavens forefend! your ruin:) marry her; And (with my best endeavours, in your absence) Your discontenting⁶ father strive to qualify, And bring him up to liking.

Flo. How, Camillo, May this, almost a miracle, be done? That I may call thee something more than man, And, after that, trust to thee.

Cam. Have you thought on A place, whereto you'll go?

Flo. Not any yet: But as the unthought-on accident⁷ is guilty To⁸ what we wildly do; so we profess Ourselves to be the slaves of chance, and flies Of every wind that blows.

Cam. Then list to me: This follows,—if you will not change your purpose, But undergo this flight;—Make for Sicilia; And there present yourself, and your fair princess (For so, I see, she must be), 'fore Leontes; She shall be habited as it becomes The partner of your bed. Methinks, I see Leontes, opening his free arms, and weeping His welcomes forth: aska thee, the⁹ son, forgive-ness,

As 'twere i' the father's person: kisses the hands Of your fresh princess: o'er and o'er divides him 'Twixt his unkindness and his kindness; the one He chides to hell, and bids the other grow, Faster than thought, or time.

Flo. Worthy Camillo, What colour for my visitation shall I Hold up before him?

Cam. Sent by the king your father To greet him, and to give him comforts. Sir, The manner of your bearing towards him, with What you, as from your father shall deliver, Things known betwixt us three, I'll write you down: The which shall point you forth at every sitting,¹⁰ What you must say; that he shall not perceive

1 This speech of the old clown is admirably characteristic; his selfishness is seen by his concealing the adventure of Perdita, and here supported by the little regard he shows for his son or her: he is entirely taken up with himself, though fourscore and three.

2 Before the reform of the burial service by Edward VI. it was the custom for the priest to throw earth on the body in the form of a cross, and then sprinkle it with holy water.

3 Leash, a leading string.

4 Fancy here means love, as in other places already pointed out.

5 'Our need.' The old copy reads her. The emendation is Theobald's.

6 Discontenting, for discontented.

7 This unthought-on accident is the unexpected discovery made by Polixenes.

8 Guilty to, though it sound harsh to our ears, was the phraseology of Shakespeare.

9 The old copy reads, 'thee there son.' The correction was made in the third folio.

10 The council-days were called sittings, in Shakespeare's time.

But that you have your father's bosom there,
And speak his very heart.

Flo. I am bound to you :
There is some sap in this.

Cam. A course more promising
Than a wild dedication of yourselves
To unpath'd waters, undream'd shores ; most certain,
To miseries enough : no hope to help you ;
But as you shake off one, to take another :
Nothing so certain as your anchors : who
Do their best office, if they can but stay you
Where you'll be loath to be : Besides, you know,
Prosperity's the very bond of love ;
Whose fresh complexion and whose heart together
Affliction alters.

Per. One of these is true :
I think affliction may subdue the cheek,
But not take in¹ the mind.

Cam. Yea, say you so ?
There shall not, at your father's house, these seven years,
Be born another such.

Flo. My good Camillo,
She is as forward of her breeding, as
She is i' the rear our birth.

Cam. I cannot say, 'tis pity
She lacks instructions ; for she seems a mistress
To most that teach.

Per. Your pardon, sir, for this ;
I'll blush you thanks.

Flo. My prettiest Perdita.—
But, O, the thorns we stand upon !—Camillo,— Preserver of my father, now of me ;
The medicine of our house !—how shall we do ?
We are not furnished like Bohemia's son ;
Nor shall appear in Sicilia—

Cam. My lord,
Fear none of this ; I think, you know, my fortunes
Do all lie there : it shall be so my care
To have you royally appointed, as if
The scene you play, were mine. For instance, sir,
That you may know, you shall not want,—one word.
[They talk aside.]

Enter AUTOLYCUS.

Aut. Ha, ha ! what a fool honesty is ! and trust, his sworn brother, a very simple gentleman ! I have sold all my trumpery ; not a counterfeit stone, not a riband, glass, pomander,² brooch, table-book, ballad, knife, tape, glove, shoe-tie, bracelet, horn-ring, to keep my pack from fasting ; they throng who should buy first ; as if my trinkets had been hallowed,³ and brought a benediction to the buyer :
by which means, I saw whose purse was best in picture ; and, what I saw, to my good use, I remembered. My clown (who wants but something to be a reasonable man) grew so in love with the wenches' song, that he would not stir his petticoats, till he had both tune and words, which so drew the rest of the herd to me, that all their other senses stuck in ears : you might have pinch'd a placket,⁴ it was senseless ; 'twas nothing, to geld a codpiece of a purse ; I would have filed keys off, that hung in chains : no hearing, no feeling, but my sir's song, and admiring the nothing of it. So that, in this time of lethargy, I picked and cut most of their festival-purses ; and had not the old man come in with a whoobub against his daughter and the king's son, and scared my choughs from the chaff, I had not left a purse alive in the whole army.

[CAMILLO, FLORIZEL, and PERDITA come forward.]

Cam. Nay, but my letters by this means being there
So soon as you arrive, shall clear that doubt.

Flo. And those that you'll procure from king
Leontes—

Cam. Shall satisfy your father.

Per. Happy be you !
All, that you speak, shows fair.

Cam. Who have we here ?
[Seeing AUTOLYCUS.]

We'll make an instrument of this ; omit
Nothing, may give us aid.

Aut. If they have overheard me now,——why, hanging. [Aside.]

Cam. How now, good fellow ? Why shakest thou so ? Fear not, man ; here's no harm intended to thee.

Aut. I am a poor fellow, sir.

Cam. Why be so still ; here's nobody will steal that from thee : Yet, for the outside of thy poverty, we must make an exchange : therefore, discase thee instantly, (thou must think, there's necessity in't,) and change garments with this gentleman :
Though the pennyworth, on his side, be the worst,
yet hold thee, there's some boot.⁵

Aut. I am a poor fellow, sir ;—I know ye well enough. [Aside.]

Cam. Nay, pr'ythee, despatch : the gentleman is half flayed⁶ already.

Aut. Are you in earnest, sir ?—I smell the trick of it. [Aside.]

Flo. Despatch, I pr'ythee.

Aut. Indeed, I have had earnest ; but I cannot with conscience take it.

Cam. Unbuckle, unbuckle.—

[FLO. and AUTOL. exchange garments.]

Fortunate mistress,—let my prophecy
Come home to you !—you must retire yourself
Into some covert ; take your sweetheart's hat,
And pluck it o'er your brows ; muffle your face,
Dismantle you : and as you can, disliking
The truth of your own seeming ; that you may (For I do fear eyes over you) to shipboard Get undescried.

Per. I see, the play so lies,
That I must bear a part.

Cam. No remedy.—

Have you done there ?

Flo. Should I now meet my father,
He would not call me son.

Cam. Nay, you shall have No hat :—Come, lady, come.—Farewell, my friend.

Aut. Adieu, sir.

Flo. O Perdita, what have we twain forgot ?

Pray you, a word. [They converse apart.]

Cam. What I do next, shall be to tell the king
[Aside.]

Of this escape, and whither they are bound ;
Wherein my hope is, I shall so prevail,
To force him after : in whose company
I shall review Sicilia ; for whose sight
I have a woman's longing.

3 This alludes to the beads often sold by the Romanists, as made particularly efficacious by the touch of some relic.

4 Steevens has been very facetious about a placket, and has explained it to be the opening in a woman's petticoat. It was no such thing, it was nothing more than a stomacher ; as appears by Florio's Dictionary, under the word Torace : 'The breast or bulke of a man : also the middle space between the necke and the thighs : also a placket, a stomacher.' Thomas gives the same explanation of Thoraca, except that he spells the word placcard.

5 Boot is advantage, profit. We now say something to boot, something besides the articles exchanged for each other.

6 Stripped.

1 To take in, is to conquer, to get the better of.

2 Pomanders were little balls of perfumed paste, worn in the pocket, or hung about the neck, and even sometimes suspended to the wrist, according to Philips.
They were used as amulets against the plague or other infections, as well as for mere articles of luxury. Various receipts for making them may be found in old books of housewifery, and even in one or two old plays.
They have recently been revived and made into a variety of ornamental forms under the name of Amulets.
Fumigating pastilles are another modification of the pomander. The name is derived from pomme d'ambre,
I know not on what authority, for in all the old French dictionaries they are called pommes de senteur. Philips says pomamber, Dutch.

Flo. Fortune speed us!—

Thus we set on, Camillo, to the sea-side.

Cam. The swifter speed, the better.

[Exeunt FLO. PER. and Cam.]

Aut. I understand the business, I hear it: To have an open ear, a quick eye, and a nimble hand, is necessary for a cut-purse; a good nose is requisite also, to smell out work for the other senses. I see, this is the time that the unjust man doth thrive. What an exchange had this been, without boot? what a boot is here, with this exchange? Sure, the gods do this year connive at us, and we may do any thing extempore. The prince himself is about a piece of iniquity; stealing away from his father, with his clog at his heels: If I thought it were a piece of honesty to acquaint the king withal, I would not do it:¹ I hold it the more knavery to conceal it; and therein am I constant to my profession.

Enter Clown and Shepherd.

Aside, aside;—here is more matter for a hot brain: Every lane's end, every shop, church, session, hanging, yields a careful man work.

Clo. See, see; what a man you are now! there is no other way, but to tell the king she's a changeling, and none of your flesh and blood

Shep. Nay, but hear me.

Clo. Nay, but hear me.

Shep. Go to, then.

Clo. She being none of your flesh and blood, your flesh and blood has not offended the king: and, so, your flesh and blood is not to be punished by him. Show those things you found about her: those secret things, all but what she has with her: This being done, let the law go whistle; I warrant you.

Shep. I will tell the king all, every word, yea, and his son's pranks too: who, I may say, is no honest man neither to his father, nor to me, to go about to make me the king's brother-in-law.

Clo. Indeed, brother-in-law was the farthest off you could have been to him; and then your blood had been the dearer, by I know how much an ounce.

Aut. Very wisely; puppies!

[Aside.]

Shep. Well; let us to the king; there is that in this fardel, will make him scratch his beard.

Aut. I know not what impediment this complaint may be to the flight of my master.

Clo. 'Pray heartily, he be at palace.

Aut. Though I am not naturally honest, I am so sometimes by chance:—Let me pocket up my pedler's excrement.² [Takes off his false beard.] How now, rustics? whither are you bound?

Shep. To the palace, an' it like your worship.

Aut. Your affairs there? what? with whom? the condition of that fardel,³ the place of your dwelling, your names, your ages, of what having,⁴ breeding, and any thing that is fitting to be known, discover.

Clo. We are but plain fellows, sir.

Aut. A lie; you are rough and hairy: Let me have no lying; it becomes none but tradesmen, and they often give us soldiers the lie: but we pay them for it with stamped coin, not stabbing steel: therefore they do not give us the lie.⁵

Clo. Your worship had like to have given us one, if you had not taken yourself with the manner.⁷

1 Steevens reads, 'If I thought it were not a piece of honesty to acquaint the king withal, I would do it.' The transposition of the word not was made by Hamner; it does not render the passage more intelligible, and as we can extract a meaning out of the passage as it originally stood, I do not think so violent a transposition admissible.

2 We should probably read, 'by I know not how much an ounce.'

3 Thus in the Comedy of Errors: 'Why is time such a niggard of his hair, being as it is so plentiful an excrement?'

4 Fardel is a bundle, a pack or burthen. 'A pack that a man doth bear with him in the way,' says Baret.
5 i. e. estate, property.

6 The meaning is, they are paid for lying, therefore they do not give us the lie.

Shep. Are you a courtier, an't like you, sir?

Aut. Whether it like me, or no, I am a courtier. See'st thou not the air of the court, in these enfoldings? hath not my gait in it, the measure of the court?⁸ receives not thy nose court-odour from me? reflect I not on thy baseness, court-contempt? Think'st thou, for that I insinuate, or toze⁹ from thee thy business, I am therefore no courtier? I am courtier, cap-a-pie; and one that will either push on, or pluck back thy business there: whereupon I command thee to open thy affair.

Shep. My business, sir, is to the king.

Aut. What advocate hast thou to him?

Shep. I know not, an't like you.

Clo. Advocate's the court word for a pheasant; say you have none.

Shep. None, sir; I have no pheasant, cock, nor hen.¹⁰

Aut. How bless'd are we, that are not simple men!

Yet nature might have made me as these are, Therefore I'll not disdain.

Clo. This cannot but be a great courtier.

Shep. His garments are rich, but he wears them not handsomely.

Clo. He seems to be the more noble in being fantastical; a great man, I'll warrant; I know, by the picking on's teeth.

Aut. The fardel there? what's i' the fardel? Wherefore that box?

Shep. Sir, there lies such secrets in this fardel, and box, which none must know but the king; and which he shall know within this hour, if I may come to the speech of him.

Aut. Age, thou hast lost thy labour.

Shep. Why, sir?

Aut. The king is not at the palace; he is gone aboard a new ship to purge melancholy, and air himself: For, if thou be'st capable of things serious, thou must know, the king is full of grief.

Shep. So 'tis said, sir; about his son, that shox¹ I have married a shepherd's daughter.

Aut. If that shepherd be not in hand-fast, let him fly; the curses he shall have, the tortures he shall feel, will break the back of man, the heart of monster.

Clo. Think you so, sir?

Aut. Not he alone shall suffer what wit can make heavy, and vengeance bitter; but those that are germane¹¹ to him, though removed fifty times, shall all come under the hangman: which though it be great pity, yet it is necessary. An old sheep-whistling rogue, a ram-tender, to offer to have his daughter come into grace! Some say he shall be stoned; but that death is too soft for him, say I: Draw our throne into a sheep-cote! all deaths are too few, the sharpest too easy.

Clo. Has the old man e'er a son, sir, do you hear, an't like you, sir?

Aut. He has a son, who shall be flayed alive; then, 'ointed over with honey, set on the head of a wasp's nest; then stand, till he be three quarters and a dram dead: then recovered again with aquavite, or some other hot infusion: then raw as he is, and in the hottest day prognostication proclaims,¹² shall he be set against a brick wall, the sun looking with a southward eye upon him; where he is to behold him, with flies blown to death. But

7 That is, in the fact. Vide Love's Labour's Lost, Act I. Sc. I.

8 The measure, the stately tread of courtiers.

9 'Think'st thou because I wind myself into, or draw from thee thy business, I am therefore no courtier?' To toze is to pluck or draw out. As to toze or telze wool, Carpere lanam. See the old dictionaries.

10 Malone says, 'perhaps in the first of these speeches we should read, a present, which the old shepherd mistakes for a pheasant.' The clowns perhaps thought courtiers as corruptible as some justices then were, of whom it is said, 'for half a dozen of chickens they would dispense with a whole dozen of penal statutes.'

11 Germane, related.

12 The hottest day foretold in the almanack.

what talk we of these traitorly rascals, whose miseries are to be smiled at, their offences being so capital? Tell me (for you seem to be honest plain men) what you have to the king: being something gently considered,¹ I'll bring you where he is aboard, tender your persons to his presence, whisper him in your behalfs; and, if it be in man, besides the king, to effect your suits, here is man shall do it.

Clo. He seems to be of great authority: close with him, give him gold; and though authority be a stubborn bear, yet he is oft led by the nose with gold: show the inside of your purse to the outside of his hand, and no more ado: Remember stoned, and flayed alive.

Shep. An't please you, sir, to undertake the business for us, here is that gold I have: I'll make it as much more; and leave this young man in pawn, till I bring it you.

Aut. After I have done what I promised?

Shep. Ay, sir.

Aut. Well, give me the moiety:—Are you a party in this business?

Clo. In some sort, sir; but though my case be a pitiful one, I hope I shall not be flayed out of it.

Aut. O, that's the case of the shepherd's son:—Hang him, he'll be made an example.

Clo. Comfort, good comfort: we must to the king, and show our strange sights; he must know, 'tis none of your daughter nor my sister; we are gone else. Sir, I will give you as much as this old man does, when the business is performed; and remain, as he says, your pawn, till it be brought you.

Aut. I will trust you. Walk before toward the sea-side; go on the right hand; I will but look upon the hedge, and follow you.

Clo. We are blessed in this man, as I may say, even blessed.

Shep. Let's before, as he bids us; he was provided to do us good. [Exeunt Shepherd and Clown.]

Aut. If I had a mind to be honest, I see, fortune would not suffer me; she drops booties in my mouth. I am courted now with a double occasion; gold, and a means to do the prince my master good; which, who knows how that may turn back to my advancement? I will bring these two moles, these blind ones, aboard him: if he think it fit to shore them again, and that the complaint they have to the king concerns him nothing, let him call me rogue, for being so far officious; for I am proof against that title, and what shame else belongs to't: To him I will present them; there may be matter in it. [Exit.]

ACT V.

SCENE I. Sicilia. A room in the Palace of Leontes. Enter LEONTES, CLEOMENES, DION, PAULINA, and others.

Clo. Sir, you have done enough, and have performed.

A saintlike sorrow; no fault could you make, Which you have not redeem'd; indeed, paid down More penitence, than done trespass: at the last, Do, as the heavens have done; forget your evil: With them, forgive yourself.

Leon. Whilst I remember Her and her virtues, I cannot forget My blemishes in them; and so still think of The wrong I did myself; which was so much, That heirless it hath made my kingdom; and Destroy'd the sweet'st companion that e'er man Bred his hopes out of.

Paul. True, too true, my lord; If, one by one, you wedded all the world,

Or, from the all that are, took something good, To make a perfect woman; she, you kill'd, Would be unparallel'd.

Leon. I think so. Kill'd?

She I kill'd? I did so: but thou strik'st me

Sorely, to say I did; it is as bitter

Upon thy tongue, as in my thought: Now, good now,

Say so but seldom.

Clo. Not at all, good lady:

You might have spoken a thousand things that would

Have done the time more benefit, and grac'd

Your kindness better.

Paul. You are one of those, Would have him wed again.

Dion. If you would not so,

You pity not the state, nor the remembrance

Of his most sovereign dame; consider little,

What dangers, by his highness' fail of issue,

May drop upon his kingdom, and devour

Uncertain lookers-on. What were more holy,

Than to rejoice, the former queen is well?

What holier, than,—for royalty's repair,

For present comfort and for future good,—

To bless the bed of majesty again

With a sweet fellow to't?

Paul. There is none worthy,

Respecting her that's gone. Besides, the gods,

Will have fulfill'd their secret purposes:

For has not the divine Apollo said,

Is't not the tenour of his oracle,

That king Leontes shall not have an heir,

Till his lost child be found? which, that it shall,

Is all as monstrous to our human reason,

As my Antigonus to break his grave,

And come again to me; who, on my life,

Did perish with the infant. 'Tis your counsel,

My lord should to the heavens be contrary,

Oppose against their wills.—Care not for issue:

[To LEONTES.]

The crown will find an heir: Great Alexander

Left his to the worthiest; so his successor

Was like to be the best.

Leon. Good Paulina,—

Who hast the memory of Hermione,

I know, in honour,—O, that ever I

Had squar'd me to thy counsel!—then, even now,

I might have look'd upon my queen's full eyes;

Have taken treasure from her lips,—

Paul. And left them

More rich, for what they yielded.

Leon. Thou speak'st truth.

No more such wives; therefore no wife; one worse,

And better us'd, would make her sainted spirit

Again possess her corps; and, on this stage

(Where we offenders now appear,) soul-vex'd,

Begin, *And why to me?*⁴

Paul. Had she such power,

She had just cause.

Leon. She had; and would incense⁴ me

To murder her I married.

Paul. I should so:

Were I the ghost that walk'd, I'd bid you mark

Her eye; and tell me, for what dull part in't

You chose her: then I'd shriek, that even your ears

Should rift⁴ to hear me; and the words that follow'd

Should be, Remember mine.

Leon. Stars, stars,

And all eyes else dead coals!—fear thou no wife,

I'll have no wife, Paulina.

Paul. Will you swear

Never to marry, but by my free leave?

Leon. Never, Paulina; so be bless'd my spirit

Paul. Then, good my lords, bear witness to his oath.

1 i. e. being handsomely bribed: to consider often signified to reward.

2 i. e. at rest, dead.

3 The old copy reads, 'And begin, why to me.' The transposition of and was made by Steevens.

4 Incense, to instigate or stimulate, was the ancient sense of this word: it is rendered in the Latin dictionaries by dare stimulo.

5 i. e. split.

Cleo. You tempt him over-much.
Paul. Unless another,
 As like Hermione as is her picture,
 Affront¹ his eye.

Cleo. Good madam,—
Paul. I have done.
 Yet, if my lord will marry,—if you will, sir,
 No remedy, but you will: give me the office
 To choose you a queen: she shall not be so young
 As was your former; but she shall be such,
 As, walk'd your first queen's ghost, it should take joy
 To see her in your arms.

Leon. My true Paulina,
 We shall not marry, till thou bidd'st us.

Paul. That
 Shall be, when your first queen's again in breath;
 Never till then.

Enter a Gentleman.

Gent. One that gives out himself prince Florizel, Son of Polixenes, with his princess (she
 The fairest I have yet beheld,) desires access
 To your high presence.

Leon. What with him? he comes not
 Like to his father's greatness: his approach,
 So out of circumstance, and sudden, tells us,
 'Tis not a visitation fram'd, but forc'd
 By need, and accident. What train?

Gent. But few,
 And those but mean.

Leon. His princess, say you, with him?
Gent. Ay; the most peerless piece of earth, I think,
 That e'er the sun shone bright on.

Paul. O Hermione,
 As every present time doth boast itself
 Above a better, gone; so must thy grave*
 Give way to what's seen now. Sir, you yourself
 Have said, and writ so* (but your writing now Is colder than that theme*) *She had not been
 Nor was not to be equal'd*;—thus your verse
 Flow'd with her beauty once; 'tis shrewdly cbb'd,
 To say, you have seen a better.

Gent. Pardon, madam:
 The one I have almost forgot (your pardon:)
 The other, when she has obtain'd your eye,
 Will have your tongue too. This is a creature,
 Would she begin a sect, might quench the zeal
 Of all professors else: make proselytes
 Of who she but bid follow.

Paul. How? not women?
Gent. Women will love her, that she is a woman
 More worth than any man; men, that she is
 The rarest of all women.

Leon. Go, Cleomenes;
 Yourself, assisted with your honour'd friends,
 Bring them to our embracement.—Still 'tis strange,
(Exeunt CLEOMENES, Lords, and Gentlemen.)
 He thus should steal upon us.

Paul. Had our prince
 (Jewel of children) seen this hour, he had pair'd
 Well with this lord; there was not full a month
 Between their births.

Leon. Pr'ythee, no more; thou know'st,*
 He dies to me again, when talk'd of: sure,
 When I shall see this gentleman, thy speeches
 Will bring me to consider that which may Unfurnish me of reason.—They are come.—

Re-enter CLEOMENES, with FLORIZEL, PERDITA, and Attendants.

Your mother was most true to wedlock, prince;
 For she did print your royal father off;
 Conceiving you: Were I but twenty-one,

Your father's image is so hit in you,
 His very air, that I should call you brother,
 As I did him: and speak of something, wildly
 By us perform'd before. Most dearly welcome!
 And your fair princess, goddess!—O, alas!
 I lost a couple, that 'twixt heaven and earth
 Might thus have stood, begetting wonder, as
 You, gracious couple, do! and then I lost
 (All mine own folly) the society,
 Amity too, of your brave father; whom,
 Though bearing misery, I desire my life
 Once more to look on him.*

Flo. By his command
 Have I here touch'd Sicilia: and from him
 Give you all greetings, that a king, at friend,¹
 Can send his brother: and, but infirmity
 (Which waits upon worn times) hath something seiz'd

His wish'd ability, he had himself
 The lands and waters 'twixt your throne and his Measur'd, to look upon you; whom he loves
 (He bade me say so) more than all the sceptres,
 And those that bear them, living.

Leon. O, my brother,
 (Good gentleman!) the wrongs I have done thee,
 Afresh within me; and these thy offices,
 So rarely kind, are as interpreters
 Of my behind-hand slackness!—Welcome hither,
 As is the spring to the earth. And hath he too
 Expos'd this paragon to the fearful usage
 (At least, ungentle) of the dreadful Neptune,
 To greet a man, not worth her pains; much less
 The adventure of her person?

Flo. Good my lord,
 She came from Libya.

Leon. Where the warlike Smalus,
 That noble honour'd lord, is fear'd, and lov'd?

Flo. Most royal sir, from thence; from him, whose daughter

His tears proclaim'd his, parting with her: thence (A prosperous south-wind friendly) we have cross'd,
 To execute the charge my father gave me,
 For visiting your highness: My best train;
 I have from his Sicilian shores dismiss'd;
 Who for Bohemia bend, to signify
 Not only my success in Libya, sir,
 But my arrival, and my wife's, in safety,
 Here, where we are.

Leon. The blessed gods
 Purge all infection from our air, whilst you,
 Do climate here! You have a holy father,
 A graceful¹ gentleman; against whose person,
 So sacred as it is, I have done sin:
 For which the heavens, taking angry note,
 Have left me issueless; and your father's bless'd
 (As he from heaven merits it) with you,
 Worthy his goodness. What might I have been,
 Might I a son and daughter now have looked on,
 Such goodly things as you?

Enter a Lord.

Lord. Most noble sir,
 That, which I shall report, will bear no credit,
 Were not the proof so nigh. Please you, great sir,
 Bohemia greets you from himself, by me:
 Desires you to attach his son; who has (His dignity and duty both cast off)
 Fled from his father, from his hopes, and with
 A shepherd's daughter.

Leon. Where's Bohemia? speak.
Lord. Here in the city; I now came from him.
 I speak amazedly; and it becomes

1 i. e. meet his eye, or encounter it. Affrontare, Ital.
 Shakspeare uses this word with the same meaning again in Hamlet, Act iii. Sc. 1:

'That he, as 'twere by accident, may here
Affront Ophelia.'

1. e. thy beauties which are buried in the grave.

3 So relates not to what precedes, but to what follows: that she had not been equal'd.

4 i. e. than the corse of Hermione, the subject of your writing.

5 This old copy reads, 'Pr'ythee, no more; cease;'

thou know'st,' &c. Steevens made the omission of the redundant word, which he considers a mere un-logical gloss or explanation of no more.

6 Steevens altered this to look upon, but there are many instances of similar construction in Shakspeare, incorrect as they may now appear.

7 i. e. at amity, as we now say. Malone, contrary to his usual custom, would here desert the old reading, and says he has met with no example of similar phrase ology! He surely must have read very inattentively!

8 i. e. full of grace and virtue.

My marvel, and my message. To your court
While he was hast'ning (in the chase, it seems,
Of this fair couple,) meets he on the way
The father of this seeming lady, and
Her brother, having both their country quitted
With this young prince.

Flo. Camillo has betrayed me;
Whose honour, and whose honesty, till now,
Endur'd all weathers.

Lord. Lay't so to his charge;
He's with the king your father.

Leon. Who? Camillo?
Lord. Camillo, sir; I spake with him: who now
Has these poor men in question.¹ Never saw I
Wretches so quake: they kneel, they kiss the earth;
Forswear themselves as often as they speak;
Bohemia stops his ears, and threatens them
With divers deaths in death.

Per. O, my poor father!—
The heavens sets spies upon us, will not have
Our contract celebrated.

Leon. You are married?
Flo. We are not, sir, nor are we like to be;
The stars, I see, will kiss the valleys first:—
The odds for high and low's alike.

Leon. My lord,
Is this the daughter of a king?

Flo. She is,
When once she is my wife.

Leon. That once, I see, by your good father's speed,

Will come on very slowly. I am sorry
Most sorry, you have broken from his liking,
Where you were tied in duty: and as sorry,
Your choice is not so rich in worth² as beauty,
That you might well enjoy her.

Flo. Dear, look up:
Though fortune, visible an enemy,
Should chase us with my father; power no jot
Hath she, to change our loves.—³ Beseech you, sir,
Remember since you ow'd no more to time
Than I do now: with thought of such affections,
Step forth mine advocate; at your request,
My father will grant precious things, as trifles.

Leon. Would he do so, I'd beg your precious mistress,
Which he counts but a trifle.

Paul. Sir, my liege,
Your eye hath too much youth in't: not a month Fore your queen died, she was more worth such gazes
Than what you look on now.

Leon. I thought of her,
Even in these looks I made.—But your petition

[To FLORIZEL.
Is yet answer'd; I will to your father;
Your honour not o'erthrown by your desires,
I am a friend to them, and you: upon which errand
I now go toward him; therefore, follow me,
And mark what way I make: Come, good my lord.

SCENE II. The same. Before the Palace. Enter
AUTOLYCUS and a Gentleman.

Aut. Beseech you, sir, were you present at this relation?

1 Gent. I was by at the opening of the fardel, heard the old shepherd deliver the manner how he found it; whereupon, after a little amazement, we were all commanded out of the chamber; only this, methought, I heard the shepherd say, he found the child.

Aut. I would most gladly know the issue of it.
1 Gent. I make a broken delivery of the business;
—But the changes I perceived in the king, and Camillo, were very notes of admiration; they seem'd almost, with staring on one another, to tear the cases of their eyes; there was speech in their dumbness, language in their very gesture; they looked, as they had heard of a world ransomed, or one destroyed: A notable passion of wonder appeared in them: but the wisest beholder, that knew no more but seeing, could not say, if the importance⁴ were joy, or sorrow: but in the extremity of the one, it must needs be.

Enter another Gentleman.

Here comes a gentleman, that, happily, knows more:
The news, Rogero?

2 Gent. Nothing but bonfires: The oracle is fulfilled; the king's daughter is found: such a deal of wonder is broken out within this hour, that ballad-makers cannot be able to express it.

Enter a third Gentleman.

Here comes the lady Paulina's steward; he can deliver you more.—How goes it now, sir? this news, which is called true, is so like an old tale, that the verity of it is in strong suspicion: Has the king found his heir?

3 Gent. Most true; if ever truth were pregnant by circumstance: that, which you hear, you'll swear you see, there is such unity in the proofs. The man-dle of queen Hermione:—her jewel about the neck of it: the letters of Antigonus, found with it, which they know to be his character:—the majesty of the creature, in resemblance of the mother;—the affec-tion⁵ of nobleness, which nature shows above her breeding,—and many other evidences, proclaim her, with all certainty, to be the king's daughter. Did you see the meeting of the two kings?

2 Gent. No.

3 Gent. Then have you lost a sight, which was to be seen, cannot be spoken of. There might you have beheld one joy crown another; so, and in such manner, that, it seem'd, sorrow wept to take leave of them; for their joy waded in tears. There was casting up of eyes, holding up of hands; with countenance of such distraction, that they were to be known by garment, not by favour.⁶ Our king being ready to leap out of himself for joy of his found daughter; as if that joy were now become a loss, cries, O, thy mother, thy mother! then asks Bohemia forgiveness; then embraces his son-in-law; then again worries he his daughter, with clipping⁷ her;
now he thanks the old shepherd, which stands by,
like a weather-bitten conduit of many kings' reigns.⁸
I never heard of such another encounter, which lames report to follow it, and undoes description to do it.

2 Gent. What, pray you, became of Antigonus, that carried hence the child?

3 Gent. Like an old tale still; which will have matter to rehearse, though credit be asleep, and not an ear open: He was torn to pieces with a bear;
this avouches the shepherd's son; who has not only his innocence (which seems much) to justify him, but a handkerchief, and rings, of his, that Paulina knows.

1 Gent. What became of his bark, and his followers?

3 Gent. Wrecked the same instant of their master's death: and in the view of the shepherd: so that all the instruments which aided to expose the child, were even then lost, when it was found. But,
O, the noble combat, that, 'twixt joy and sorrow, was fought in Paulina! She had one eye declined for the loss of her husband; another elevated that the oracle was fulfilled: She lifted the princess from the earth;
and so locks her in embracing, as if she would pin her to her heart, that she might no more be in danger of losing.

1 Gent. The dignity of this act was worth the audience of kings and princes; for by such was it acted.

3 Gent. One of the prettiest touches of all, and

² Worth for descent or wealth.

³ i. e. import, the thing imported.

⁴ In Shakespeare's time, to affect a thing meant, to have a tendency or disposition to it. The affections were the dispositions, Appetitus animi.

⁵ Favour here stands for mien, feature.

⁶ i. e. embracing.

⁷ Conduits or fountains were frequently representations of the human figure. One of this kind has been already referred to in As You Like It, Act iv. Sc. 1.

that which angled for mine eyes (caught the water, though not the fish) was, when at the relation of the queen's death, with the manner how she came to it (bravely confessed, and lamented by the king,) how attentiveness wounded his daughter: till, from one sign of dolour to another, she did, with an alas! I would fain say, bleed tears; for, I am sure, my heart wept blood. Who was most marble there? changed colour; some swooned, all sorrowed: if all the world could have seen it, the woe had been universal.

1 Gent. Are they returned to the court?

3 Gent. No: the princess, hearing of her mother's statue, which is in the keeping of Paulina,—a piece many years in doing, and now newly performed by that rare Italian master, Julio Romano; who, had he himself eternity,¹ and could put breath into his work, would beguile nature of her custom, so perfectly he is her ape: he so near to Hermione hath done Hermione, that, they say, one would speak to her, and stand in hope of answer: thither with all greediness of affection, are they gone; and there they intend to sup.

2 Gent. I thought she had some great matter there in hand; for she hath privately, twice or thrice a day, ever since the death of Hermione, visited that removed² house. Shall we thither, and with our company piece the rejoicing?

1 Gent. Who would be thence, that has the benefit of access? every wink of an eye, some new grace will be born: our absence makes us unthrifty to our knowledge. Let's along. [Exeunt Gentlemen.]

Aut. Now, had I not the dash of my former life in me, would preferment drop on my head. I brought the old man and his son aboard the prince; told him, I heard them talk of a fardel, and I know not what: but he at that time, over-fond of the shepherd's daughter (so he then took her to be,) who began to be much sea-sick, and himself little better, extremity of weather continuing, this mystery remained undiscovered. But 'tis all one to me: for had I been the finder-out of this secret, it would not have relished among my other discredits.

Enter Shepherd and Clown.

Here come those I have done good to against my will, and already appearing in the blossoms of their fortune.

Shep. Come, boy; I am past more children; but thy sons and daughters will be all gentlemen born.

Clo. You are well met, sir: You denied to fight with me this other day, because I was no gentleman born: See you these clothes? say, you see them not, and think me still no gentleman born: you were best say, these robes are not gentlemen born. Give me the lie; do; and try whether I am not now a gentleman born.

Aut. I know, you are now, sir, a gentleman born.

Clo. Ay, and have been so any time these four hours.

Shep. And so have I, boy.

Clo. So you have:—but I was a gentleman born before my father: for the king's son took me by the hand, and called me, brother; and then the two kings called my father, brother; and then the prince, my brother, and the princess, my sister, called my father, father; and so we wept: and there was the first gentlemanlike tears that ever we shed.

Shep. We may live, son, to shed many more.

Clo. Ay; or else 'twere hard luck, being in so preposterous estate as we are.

Aut. I humbly beseech you, sir, to pardon me all the faults I have committed to your worship, and to give me your good report to the prince my master.

Shep. 'Pr'ythee, son, do; for we must be gentle, now we are gentlemen.

Clo. Thou wilt amend thy life?

1 'Who was most marble': that is, those who had the hardest hearts.

2 However misplaced the praise, it is no small honour to Julio Romano to be thus mentioned by the poet. By eternity Shakespeare only means immortality.

3 i. e. remote.

Aut. Ay, an it like your good worship.

Clo. Give me thy hand; I will swear to the prince, thou art as honest a true fellow as any is in Bohemia.

Shep. You may say it, but not swear it.

Clo. Not swear it, now I am a gentleman? Let boors and franklins⁴ say it, I'll swear it.

Shep. How if it be false, son?

Clo. If it be ne'er so false, a true gentleman may swear it in the behalf of his friend:—And I'll swear to the prince thou art a tall⁵ fellow of thy hands, and that thou wilt not be drunk; but I know thou art no tall fellow of thy hands, and that thou wilt be drunk; but I'll swear it: and I would, thou would'st be a tall fellow of thy hands.

Aut. I will prove so, sir, to my power.

Clo. Ay, by any means prove a tall fellow: If I do not wonder how thou darest venture to be drunk, not being a tall fellow, trust me not.—Hark! the kings and the princes, our kindred, are going to see the queen's picture. Come, follow us: we'll be thy good masters.⁶ [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The same. A Room in Paulina's House. Enter LEONTES, POLIXENES, FLORENZEL, PERDITA, CAMILLO, PAULINA, Lords and Attendants.

Leon. O grave and good Paulina, the great comfort That I have had of thee!

Paul. What, sovereign sir, I did not well, I meant well: All my services, You have paid home: but that you have vouchsaf'd With your crown'd brother, and these your contracted Heirs of your kingdoms, my poor house to visit, It is a surplus of your grace, which never My life may last to answer.

Leon. O Paulina, We honour you with trouble: But we came To see the statue of our queen: your gallery Have we pass'd through, not without much content In many singularities; but we saw no That which my daughter came to look upon, The statue of her mother.

Paul. As she liv'd peerless, So her dead likeness, I do well believe, Excels whatever yet you look'd upon, Or hand of man hath done; therefore I keep it Lonely,⁷ apart: But here it is: prepare To see the life as lively mock'd, as ever Still sleep mock'd death: behold; and say, 'tis well.

[PAUL undraws a curtain and discovers a Statue.]
I like your silence, it the more shows off Your wonder: But yet speak;—first, you, my liege, Comes it not something near?

Leon. Her natural posture:— Chide me, dear stone; that I may say, indeed, Thou art Hermione: or, rather, thou art she, In thy not chiding; for she was as tender As infancy and grace.—But yet, Paulina, Hermione was not so much wrinkled, nothing So aged, as this seems.

Pol. O, not by much.
Paul. So much the more our carver's excellence Which lets go by some sixteen years, and makes her As she liv'd now.

Leon. As now she might have done So much to my good comfort, as it is Now piercing to my soul. O, thus she stood, Even with such life of majesty (warm life, As now it coldly stands), when first I woud her! I am ashamed: Does not the stone rebuke me, For being more stone than it?—O, royal piece, There's magic in thy majesty; which has My evils conjured to remembrance; and From thy admiring daughter took the spirits, Standing like stone with thee:

4 i. e. Yeomen.

5 i. e. a bold, courageous fellow.

6 Good masters. It was a common petitionary phrase to ask a superior to be good lord or good master to it suppliant.

7 The old copy reads lovely.

Per. And give me leave;
And do not say, 'tis superstition, that
I kneel, and then implore her blessing.—Lady,
Dear queen, that ended when I but began,
Give me that hand of yours, to kiss.

Paul. O, patience;
The statue is but newly fix'd, the colour's
Not dry.

Cam. My lord, your sorrow was too sore laid on;
Which sixteen winters cannot blow away,
So many summers, dry; scarce any joy
Did ever so long live; no sorrow,
But kill'd itself much sooner.

Pol. Dear my brother,
Let him, that was the cause of this, have power
To take off so much grief from you, as he Will piece up in himself.

Paul. Indeed, my lord,
If I had thought the sight of my poor image Would thus have wrought¹ you (for the stone is mine,) I'd not have show'd it.²

Leon. Do not draw the curtain.
Paul. No longer shall you gaze on't; lest your fancy
May think anon, it moves.

Leon. Let be, let be.
'Would, I were dead, but that, methinks, already³—
What was he that did make it?—See, my lord,
Would you not deem, it breathed? and that those veins

Did verily bear blood?
Pol. Masterly done:
The very life seems warm upon her lip.
Leon. The fixture of her eye has motion in't,⁴
As we are mock'd with art.⁵

Paul. I'll draw the curtain;
My lord's almost so far transported, that He'll think anon it lives.

Leon. O sweet Paulina,
Make me to think so twenty years together;
No settled senses of the world can match
The pleasure of that madness. Let's alone.

Paul. I am sorry, sir, I have thus far stirr'd you;
but
I could afflict you further.

Leon. Do, Paulina;
For this affliction has a taste as sweet
As any cordial comfort.—Still, methinks,
There is an air comes from her: What fine chisel
Could ever yet cut breath? Let no man mock me,
For I will kiss her.

Paul. Good my lord, forbear:
The ruddiness upon her lip is wet;
You'll mar it, if you kiss it; stain your own
With oily painting: Shall I draw the curtain?

Leon. No, not these twenty years.

Per. So long could I Stand by, a looker on.

Paul. Either forbear,
Quit presently the chapel; or resolve you
For more amazement: If you can behold it,
I'll make the statue move indeed: descend,
And take you by the hand; but then you'll think (Which I protest against,) I am assisted
By wicked powers.

Leon. What you can make her do,
I am content to look on: what to speak,
I am content to hear; for 'tis as easy
To make her speak, as move.

Paul. It is requir'd,
You do awake your faith: Then, all stand still;
Or those that think it is unlawful business
I am about, let them depart.

Leon. Proceed;
No foot shall stir.

Paul. Music; awake her: strike.—
[Music.]

'Tis time; and descend; be stone no more: approach,
Strike all that look upon with marvel. Come:
I'll fill your grave up: stir; nay, come away;
Bequeath to death your numbness, for from him
Dear life redeems you.—You perceive she stirs:

[HERMIONE comes down from the Pedestal.]

Start not: her actions shall be holy, as,
You hear, my spell is lawful: do not shun her,
Until you see her die again; for then
You kill her double: Nay, present your hand:
When she was young, you woo'd her; now, in age,
Is she become the suitor.

Leon. O, she's warm! [Embracing her.]
If this be magic, let it be an art,
Lawful as eating.

Pol. She embraces him.

Cam. She hangs about his neck;

If she pertain to life, let her speak too.

Pol. Ay, and make't manifest where she has liv'd,
Or, how stol'n from the dead?

Paul. That she is living,
Were it but told you, should be hooted at
Like an old tale; but it appears she lives,
Though yet she speak not. Mark a little while.—
Please you to interpose, fair madam; kneel,
And pray your mother's blessing.—Turn, good lady;
Our Perdita is found.

[Presenting PER. who kneels to HER.]

Her. You gods, look down,
And from your sacred vials pour your graces
Upon my daughter's head!—Tell me, mine own, Where hast thou been preserved? where lived? how found

Thy father's court? for thou shalt hear, that I,— Knowing by Paulina that the oracle
Gave hope, thou wast in being,—have preserv'd
Myself to see the issue.

Paul. There's time enough for that;
Lest they desire, upon this push to trouble
Your joys with like relation. Go together,
You precious winners⁶ all; your exultation
Partake⁷ to every one. I, an old turtle,
Will wing me to some wither'd bough; and there,
My mate, that's never to be found again,
Lament till I am lost.⁸

Leon. O peace, Paulina;
Thou should'st a husband take by my consent,
As I by thine, a wife: this is a match,
And made between's by vows. Thou hast found mine;

But how is it to be question'd: for I saw her,
As I thought, dead: and have in vain said many
A prayer upon her grave: I'll not seek far
(For him, I partly know his mind,) to find thee
An honourable husband:—Come, Camillo,
And take her by the hand: whose⁹ worth, and honesty,

Is¹⁰ richly noted; and here justified
By us, a pair of kings.—Let's from this place.—
What!—Look¹¹ upon, my brother:—both your pardons,

8 Thus in Lodge's Rosalynde, 1592:—

'A turtle sat upon a leavelesse tree
Mourning her absent pheere
With sad and sorry cheere:
And whilst her plumes she rents,
And for her love laments, &c.

9 Whose relates to Camillo, though Paulina is the immediate antecedent. I have observed, in the loose construction of ancient phraseology, whose often used in this manner, where his would be more proper.

10 It is erroneously printed for is here in the late Variorum Shakspeare.

11 Look upon for look on. Thus in King Henry V. Part III. Act ii. Sc. 3.

'And look upon, as if the tragedy,' &c.

1 Worked, agitated.

2 The folio reads, 'I'd not have show'd it.' In the late edition of Malone's Shakspeare it stands, 'I'd not have show'd it.' But surely this is erroneous.

3 The sentence if completed would probably have been, 'but that, methinks, already I converse with the dead.'—His passion made him break off.

4 I. e. Though her eye be fixed, it seems to have motion in it.

5 As for as if. With has the force of by.

6 You who by this discovery have gained what you desired.

7 I. e. participate.

That e'er I put between your holy looks
My ill suspicion.—This your son-in-law,
And son unto the king (whom¹ heaven's directing,)
Is troth-pled to your daughter. Good Paulina,
Lead us from hence; where we may leisurely
Each one demand, and answer to his part Perform'd in this wide gap of time, since first
We were dissever'd: Hastily lead away. [Exeunt.]

THIS play, as Dr. Warburton justly observes, is, with all its absurdities, very entertaining. The character of Autolycus is naturally conceived, and strongly represented. JOHNSON.

*. This is not only a frigid note of approbation, but a unjustly attributed to Warburton, whose opinion is conveyed in more enthusiastic terms. He must in justice be allowed to speak for himself. 'This play

1 Whom is here used where him would be now employed.

throughout is written in the very spirit of its author. And in telling this homely and simple, though agreeable, country tale,

"Our sweetest Shakspeare, Fancy's child, Warbles his native wood-notes wild."

This was necessary to observe in mere justice to the play; as the meanness of the fable, and the extravagant conduct of it, had misled some of great name (i. e. Dryden and Pope) into a wrong judgment of its merit; which, as far as regards sentiment and character, is scarce inferior to any in the collection.*

ADDITIONAL NOTE.

I will just take occasion to observe here, that at page 316, Sc. 3, of this play, Paulina says of Hermione, contrasting her with Leontes, that she is — a gracious innocent soul;

More free than he is jealous.

Where the epithet free evidently means chaste, pure. I regret that this instance did not occur to me when I wrote the note on Twelfth Night, p. 108, note 6.

COMEDY OF ERRORS.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

THE general idea of this play is taken from the Menæchmi of Plautus, but the plot is entirely recast, and rendered much more diverting by the variety and quick succession of the incidents. To the twin brothers of Plautus are added twin servants, and though this increases the improbability, yet, as Schlegel observes, 'when once we have lent ourselves to the first, which certainly borders on the incredible, we should not probably be disposed to cavil about the second; and if the spectator is to be entertained with mere perplexities, they cannot be too much varied.' The clumsy and artificial mode of informing the spectator by a prologue of events, which it was necessary for him to be acquainted with in order to enter into the spirit of the piece, is well avoided, and shows the superior skill of the modern dramatist over his ancient prototype. With how much more propriety is it placed in the mouth of Ægeon, the father of the twin brothers, whose character is sketched with such skill as deeply to interest the reader in his griefs and misfortunes. Development of character, however, was not to be expected in a piece which consists of an uninterrupted series of mistakes and laughter-moving situations. Steevens most resolutely maintained his opinion that this was a play only retouched by the hand of Shakspeare, but he has not given the grounds upon which his opinion was formed. We may suppose the doggerel verses of the dramas, and the want of distinct characterization in the dramatis personæ, together with the farcical nature of some of the incidents made him draw this conclusion. Malone has given a satisfactory answer to the first objection, by adducing numerous examples of the same kind of long verse from the dramas of several of his contemporaries; and that Shakspeare was swayed by custom in introducing it into his early plays there can be no doubt; for it should be remembered that this kind of versification is to be found in Love's Labour's Lost, and in The Taming of the Shrew. His better judgment made him subsequently abandon it. The particular translation from Plautus which served as a model has not come down to us. There was a translation of the Menæchmi, by W. W. (Warner), published in 1593, which it is possible Shakspeare may have seen in manuscript: but from the circumstance of the brothers being, in the folio of 1623, occasionally styled Antipholus Erotes or Errotis, and Antipholus Sereptus, perhaps for Surreptus and Erraticus, while in Warner's translation the brothers are named Menæchmus Sosicles and Menæchmus the traveller, it is concluded that he was not the poet's authority. It is difficult to pronounce decidedly between the contending opinions of the critics, but the general impression upon my mind is that the whole of the play is from the hand of Shakspeare. Dr. Drake thinks it 'is visible throughout the entire play, as well in the broad exuberance of its mirth as in the cast of its more chastised parts, a combination of which may be found in the character of Pinch, who is sketched in his strongest and most marked style.' We may conclude with Schlegel's dictum, that 'this is the best of all written or possible Menæchmi; and if the piece is inferior in worth to other pieces of Shakspeare, it is merely because nothing more could be made of the materials.'

Malone first placed the date of this piece in 1593, or 1596, but lastly in 1592. Chalmers plainly showed that it should be ascribed to the early date of 1591. It was neither printed nor entered on the Stationers' books until it appeared in the folio of 1623.

SCENE, Ephesus.

ACT I.

SCENE I. A Hall in the Duke's Palace. Enter Duke, Ægeon, Gaoler, Officer, and other Attendants.

Ægeon.

PROCEED, Solinus, to procure my fall,
And, by the doom of death, end woes and all.

Duke. Merchant of Syracuse, plead no more;
I am not partial, to infringe our laws:

The enmity and discord, which of late
Sprung from the rancorous outrage of your duke
To merchants, our well-dealing countrymen,—
Who, wanting gilders¹, to redeem their lives,
Have seal'd his rigorous statutes with their bloods,
Excludes all pity from our threat'ning looks.
For, since the mortal and intestine jars
'Twixt thy seditious countrymen and us,
It hath in solemn synods been decreed,
Both by the Syracusans and ourselves,
To admit no traffic to our adverse towns:
Nay, more,

If any, born at Ephesus, be seen
At any Syracusan marts and fairs,
Again, if any, Syracusan born,
Come to the bay of Ephesus, he dies,
His goods confiscate to the duke's dispose;
Unless a thousand marks be levied,
To quit the penalty and to ransom him.
Thy substance, valued at the highest rate,
Cannot amount unto a hundred marks;
Therefore by law thou art condemn'd to die.

Æge. Yet this my comfort; when your words are done,

My woes end likewise with the evening sun.

Duke. Well, Syracusan, say, in brief, the cause
Why thou departedst from thy native home;
And for what cause thou cam'st to Ephesus?

Æge. A heavier task could not have been imposed,

Than I to speak my griefs unspeakable:
Yet, that the world may witness that my end
Was wrought by nature,² not by vile offence,
I'll utter what my sorrow gives me leave.
In Syracuse was I born: and wed
Unto a woman, happy but for me,
And by me too, had not our hap been bad.
With her I liv'd in joy; our wealth increas'd,
By prosperous voyages I often made
To Epidamnus, till my fatetor's death;
And the³ great care of goods at random lost,
Drew me from kind embracements of my spouse:
From whom my absence was not six months old,
Before herself (almost at fainting, under
The pleasing punishment that women bear)
Had made provision for her following me,
And soon, and safe, arriv'd where I was.
There she had not been long, but she became
A joyful mother of two goodly sons;
And, which was strange, the one so like the other,
As could not be distinguish'd but by names.
That very hour, and in the selfsame inn,
A poor⁴ mean woman was deliver'd
Of such a burden, male twins, both alike:
Those, for their parents were exceeding poor,
I bought, and brought up to attend my sons.
My wife, not meanly proud of two such boys,
Made daily motions for our home return:
Unwilling I agreed; alas! too soon.
We came aboard:
A league from Epidamnus had we sail'd,

Before the always wind-obeying deep
Gave any tragic instance⁵ of our harm:

But longer did we not retain much hope;
For what obscured light the heavens did grant
Did but convey unto our fearful minds
A doubtful warrant of immediate death;
Which, though myself would gladly have embrac'd,
Yet the incessant weepings of my wife,
Weeping before for what she saw must come,
And piteous plainings of the pretty babes,
That mourn'd for fashion, ignorant what to fear,
Forc'd me to seek delays for them and me.

And this it was,—for other means was none.—
The sailors sought for safety by our boat,
And left the ship, then sinking ripe, to us:

My wife, more careful for the latter-born,
Had fasten'd him unto a small spare mast,
Such as seafaring men provide for storms;
To him one of the other twins was bound,
Whilst I had been like heedful of the other.

The children thus dispos'd, my wife and I,
Fixing our eyes on whom our care was fix'd,
Fasten'd ourselves at either end the mast;

And floating straight, obedient to the stream,
Were carried towards Corinth, as we thought.
At length the sun, gazing upon the earth,
Dispers'd those vapours that offended us;

And, by the benefit of his wish'd light,
The seas wax'd calm, and we discovered
Two ships from far making main to us,
Of Corinth that, of Epidaurus this:

But ere they came,—O, let me say no more!
Gather the sequel by that went before.

Duke. Nay, forward, old man, do not break off so;
For we may pity, though not pardon thee.

Æge. O, had the gods done so, I had not now
Worthily term'd them merciless to us!

For, ere the ships could meet by twice five leagues,
We were encounter'd by a mighty rock;

Which being violently borne upon,⁶
Our helpful ship was splitt in the midst,

So that, in this unjust divorce of us,
Fortune had left to both of us alike

What to delight in, what to sorrow for.
Her part, poor soul! seeming as burdened

With lesser weight, but not with lesser woe,
Was carried with more speed before the wind;

And in our sight they three were taken up
By fishermen of Corinth, as we thought.

At length, another ship had seiz'd on us;
And, knowing whom it was their hap to save,
Gave healthful⁷ welcome to their shipwreck'd guests;

And would have reft the fisher's of their prey,
Had not their bark been very slow of sail,

And therefore homeward did they bend their course.—

Thus you have heard me sever'd from my bliss;
That by misfortunes was my life prolong'd,

To tell sad stories of my own mishaps.

Duke. And, for the sake of them thou sorrowest for,

Do me the favour to dilate at full
What hath befall'n of them, and thee, till now.

Æge. My youngest boy,⁸ and yet my eldest care,
At eighteen years became inquisitive

After his brother; and importun'd me,
That his attendant (for⁹ his case was like,

Reft of his brother, but¹⁰ retain'd his name)
Might bear him company in the quest of him:

Whom whilst I labour'd of a love to see,
Do me the favour to dilate at full

What hath befall'n of them, and thee, till now.

¹ A gilder was a coin valued from one shilling and sixpence to two shillings.

² i. e. natural affection.

³ The old copy reads he: the emendation is Malone's. It is a happy restoration; for the manner in which Steevens pointed this passage gave to it a confused if not an absurd meaning.

⁴ The word poor was supplied by the editor of the second folio.

⁵ Instance appears to be used here for symptom or prognostic. Shakespeare uses this word with very great latitude.

⁶ The first folio reads 'borne up.'

⁷ The second folio altered this to 'helpful welcome;' but change was unnecessary. A healthful welcome is a kind welcome, wishing health to their guests. It was not a helpful welcome, for the slowness of their bark prevented them from rendering assistance.

⁸ It appears, from what goes before, that it was the eldest, and not the youngest. He says, 'My wife, more careful of the latter-born,' &c.

⁹ The first folio reads so: the second for.

¹⁰ The personal pronoun he is suppressed: such phraseology is not unfrequent in the writings of that age.

I hazarded the loss of whom I lov'd.
 Five summers have I spent in furthest Greece,
 Roaming clean through the bounds of Asia,
 And, coasting homeward, came to Ephesus;
 Hopeless to find, yet loath to leave unsought,
 Or that, or any place that harbours men.
 But here must end the story of my life;
 And happy were I in my timely death,
 Could all my travels warrant me they live.

Duke. Hapless Ægeon, whom the fates have mark'd

To bear the extremity of dire mishap!
 Now, trust me, were it not against our laws,
 Against my crown, my oath, my dignity,
 Which princes, would they, may not disannul,
 My soul should sue as advocate for thee.
 But, though thou art adjudged to the death,
 And passed sentence may not be recall'd,
 But to our honour's great disparagement,
 Yet will I favour thee in what I can:
 Therefore, merchant, I'll limit thee this day,
 To seek thy help by beneficial help:
 Try all the friends thou hast in Ephesus;
 Beg thou, or borrow, to make up the sum,
 And live; if not,¹ then thou art doomed to die:—
 Gaoler, take him to thy custody.

Gaol. I will, my lord.

Æge. Hopeless and helpless doth Ægeon wend.²
 But to procrastinate his lifeless end. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. A public Place. Enter ANTIPHOLUS and DROMIO of Syracuse, and a Merchant.

Mer. Therefore, give out, you are of Epidamnus,
 Lest that your goods too soon be confiscated.
 This very day, a Syracusan merchant
 Is apprehended for arrival here;
 And, not being able to buy out his life,
 According to the statute of the town,
 Dies ere the weary sun set in the west.
 There is your money that I had to keep.

Ant. S. Go bear it to the Centaur, where we host,
 And stay there, Dromio, till I come to thee.
 Within this hour it will be dinner-time:
 Till that, I'll view the manners of the town,
 Peruse the traders, gaze upon the buildings,
 And then return, and sleep within mine inn;
 For with long travel I am stiff and weary.
 Get thee away.

Dro. S. Many a man would take you at your word,
 And go indeed, having so good a mean.

Ant. S. A trusty villain,³ sir; that very oft,
 When I am dull with care and melancholy,
 Lightens my humour with his merry jests.
 What, will you walk with me about the town,
 And then go to my inn, and dine with me?

Mer. I am invited, sir, to certain merchants,
 Of whom I hope to make much benefit;
 I crave your pardon. Soon, at five o'clock,
 Please, you, I'll meet with you upon the mart;
 And afterwards consort⁴ you till bed-time;
 My present business calls me from you now.

Ant. S. Farewell till then: I will go lose myself,
 And wander up and down, to view the city.

Mer. Sir, I commend you to your own content.

Ant. S. He that commends me to my own content,
 Commends me to the thing I cannot get.

I to the world am like a drop of water,
 That in the ocean seeks another drop;
 Who falling there to find his fellow forth,
 Unseen, inquisitive, confounds⁵ himself:
 So I, to find a mother, and a brother,
 In quest of them, unhappy, lose myself.

Enter DROMIO of Ephesus.

Here comes the almanack of my true date,⁶—

What now? How chance; thou art return'd so soon?
Dro. E. Return'd so soon! rather approach'd too late:

The capon burns, the pig falls from the spit:
 The clock hath stricken twelve upon the bell,
 My mistress made it one upon my cheek:
 She is so hot, because the meat is cold;
 The meat is cold because you come not home;
 You come not home, because you have no stomach;
 You have no stomach, having broken your fast;
 But we, that know what 'tis to fast and pray,
 Are penitent for your default to-day.

Ant. S. Stop in your wind, sir; tell me this, I pray;

Where have you left the money that I gave you?

Dro. E. O,—sixpence, that I had o' Wednesday last,

To pay the saddler for my mistress' crupper;—
 The saddler had it, sir, I kept it not.

Ant. S. I am not in a sportive humour now:

Tell me and dally not, where is the money?

We being strangers here, how dar'st thou trust

So great a charge from thine own custody?

Dro. E. I pray you, jest, sir, as you sit at dinner:

I from my mistress come to you in post;

If I return, I shall be post indeed;

For she will score your fault upon my pate.

Methinks, your maw, like mine, should be your clock,⁷

And strike you home without a messenger.

Ant. S. Come, Dromio, come, these jests are out of season;

Reserve them till a merrier hour than this:

Where is the gold I gave in charge to thee?

Dro. E. To me, sir? why you gave no gold to me.

Ant. S. Come on, sir knave, have done your foolishness,

And tell me, how thou hast dispos'd thy charge.

Dro. E. My charge was but to fetch you from the mart

Home to your house, the Phoenix, sir, to dinner;

My mistress, and her sister, stay for you.

Ant. S. Now, as I am a christian, answer me,

In what safe place you have bestow'd my money;

Or I shall break that merry scone⁸ of yours,

That stands on tricks when I am undispos'd:

Where is the thousand marks thou hadst of me?

Dro. E. I have some marks of yours upon my pate,

Some of my mistress' marks upon my shoulders,

But not a thousand marks between you both.—

If I should pay your worship those again,

Perchance you will not bear them patiently.

Ant. S. Thy mistress' marks! what mistress slave, hast thou?

Dro. E. Your worship's wife, my mistress at the Phoenix;

She that doth fast, till you come home to dinner,

And prays, that you will hie you home to dinner.

Ant. S. What, wilt thou flout me thus unto my face.

Being forbid? There, take you that, sir knave.

[Strikes him.]

¹ No, which is the reading of the first folio, was anciently; often used for not. The second folio reads not.
² Go.

³ That is, a faithful slave. It is the French sense of the word.

⁴ I. e. 'accompany you.' In this line the emphasis must be laid on time, at the end of the line, to preserve the metre.

⁵ Confounded, here, does not signify destroyed, as Malone asserts; but overwhelmed, mixed confusedly together, lost.

⁶ They were both born in the same hour, and therefore the date of Dromio's birth ascertains that of his master.

⁷ The old copy reads cock. The emendation is Pope's.

⁸ Scone is head. So in Hamlet, Act v. Sc. 1:—'Why does he suffer this rude knave to knock him about the scone?' A scone signified a blockhouse, or strong fortification, 'for the most part round, in fashion of a head,' says Blount. I suppose that it was anciently used for a lantern also, on account of the round form of that implement.

Dro. E. What mean you, sir? for God's sake, hold your hands;
Nay, an you will not, sir, I'll take my heels.

[Exit DROMIO E.]

Ant. S. Upon my life, by some device or other,
The villain is o'er-raught¹ of all my money.
They say, this town is full of cozenage:²
As, nimble jugglers, that deceive the eye;
Dark-working sorcerers, that change the mind;
Soul-killing witches, that deform the body;
Disguised cheaters, prating mountebanks,
And many such like liberties of sin:³
If it prove so, I will be gone the sooner.
I'll to the Centaur, to go seek this slave;
I greatly fear my money is not safe. [Exit.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. A Public Place. Enter ADRIANA, and LUCIANA.

Adr. Neither my husband, nor the slave return'd,
That in such haste I sent to seek his master!
Sure, Luciana, it is two o'clock.

Luc. Perhaps, some merchant hath invited him,
And from the mart he's somewhere gone to dinner;
Good sister, let us dine, and never fret:
A man is master of his liberty;

Time is his master; and when they see time,
They'll go, or come: If so, be patient sister.

Adr. Why should their liberty than ours be more?

Luc. Because their business still lies out o'doors.

Adr. Look, when I serve him so, he takes it ill.

Luc. O, know, he is the bridle of your will.

Adr. There's none but asses, will be bridled so.

Luc. Why, headstrong liberty is lash'd with woe,⁴

There's nothing, situate under Heaven's eye,
But hath his bound, in earth, in sea, in sky:

The beasts, the fishes, and the winged fowls,
Are their males' subjects, and at their controuls:

Men, more divine, the masters of all these,
Lords of the wide world, and wild watry seas,

Indued with intellectual sense and souls,
Of more pre-eminence than fish and fowls,

Are masters to their females, and their lords:

Then let your will attend on their accords.

Adr. This servitude makes you to keep unwee.

Luc. Not this, but troubles of the marriage bed.

Adr. But, were you wedded, you would bear some sway.

Luc. Ere I learn love, I'll practise to obey.

Adr. How if your husband start some other where?⁵

Luc. Till he come home again, I would forbear.

Adr. Patience, unmov'd, no marvel though she pause;⁶

They can be meek, that have no other cause.⁷

A wretched soul, bruis'd with adversity,
We bid be quiet, when we hear it cry;

But were we burden'd with like weight of pain,
As much, or more, we should ourselves complain:

So thou, that hast no unkind mate to grieve thee,
With urging helpless patience⁸ would'st relieve me:

But, if thou live to see like right bereft,
This fool-begg'd patience⁹ in thee will be left.

1 i. e. over-reached.

2 This was the character which the ancients gave of Ephesus.

3 That is, licentious actions, sinful liberties.

4 The meaning of this passage may be, that those who refuse the bridle must bear the lash, and that woe is the punishment of headstrong liberty.

5 'Elsewhere, other where : in another place, alibi,' says Baret. The sense is, 'How if your husband fly off in pursuit of some other woman?'

6 To pause is to rest, to be quiet.

7 i. e. no cause to be otherwise.

8 That is, by urging me to patience which affords no help.

9 'Fool-begg'd patience' is that patience which is so near to idiotic simplicity, that you might be represented to be a fool, and your guardianship begg'd accordingly.

10 i. e. scarce stand under them.

11 Home is not in the old copy: it was supplied to complete the verse by Capell.

Luc. Well, I will marry one day, but to try;—
Here comes your man, now is your husband nigh.

[Enter DROMIO of Ephesus.]

Adr. Say, is your tardy master now at hand?

Dro. E. Nay, he is at two hands with me, and that my two ears can witness.

Adr. Say, didst you speak with him? know'st thou his mind?

Dro. E. Ay, ay, he told his mind upon mine ear:
Beshrew his hand, I scarce could understand it.

Luc. Spake he so doubtfully, thou could'st not feel his meaning?

Dro. E. Nay, he struck so plainly, I could too well feel his blows; and withal so doubtfully, that I could scarce understand them.¹⁰

Adr. But say, I prythee, is he coming home?

It seems he hath great care to please his wife.

Dro. E. Why, mistress, sure my master is horn-mad.

Adr. Horn-mad, thou villain?

Dro. E. I mean not cuckold-mad; but, sure he's stark-mad:

When I desir'd him to come home to dinner,

He ask'd me for a thousand marks in gold:

'Tis dinner time, quoth I; My gold, quoth he:

Your meat doth burn, quoth I; My gold, quoth he:

Will you come home?¹¹ quoth I; My gold, quoth he:

Where is the thousand marks I gave thee, villain?

The pig, quoth I, is burn'd; My gold, quoth he:

My mistress, sir, quoth I; Hang up thy mistress;

*I know not thy mistress; out on thy mistress!*¹²

Luc. Quoth who?

Dro. E. Quoth my master:

I know, quoth he, no house, no wife, no mistress;—

So that my errand, due unto my tongue,

I thank him, I bear home upon my shoulders;

For, in conclusion, he did beat me there.

Adr. Go back again, thou slave, and fetch him home.

Dro. E. Go back again, and be new beaten home?

For God's sake, send some other messenger.

Adr. Back, slave, or I will break thy pate across.

Dro. E. And he will bless that cross with other beating:

Between you I shall have a holy head.

Adr. Hence, prating peasant; fetch thy master home.

Dro. E. Am I so round¹³ with you, as you with me,

That like a football you do spurn me thus?

You spurn me hence, and he will spurn me hither:

If I last in this service, you must case me in leather. [Exit.]

Luc. Fie, how impatience loureth in your face!

Adr. His company must do his minions grace,

Whilst I at home starve for a merry look.¹⁴

Hath homely age the alluring beauty took
From my poor cheek? then he hath wasted it:

Are my discourses dull? barren my wit?

If voluble and sharp discourse be marr'd,
Unkindness blunts it, more than marble hard.

Do their gay vestments his affections bait?
That's not my fault, he's master of my state.

What ruins are in me, that can be found
By him not ruin'd? then is he the ground

Of my defeatures:¹⁵ My decayed fair¹⁶

12 We have an equally unmetrical line in the first Act:—

'Therefore, merchant, I'll limit thee this day.'

13 He plays upon the word round, which signifies spherical, as applied to himself; and unrestrained, or free in speech or action, as regards his mistress. The King in Hamlet desires the Queen to be round with her son.

14 So in Shakspeare's Sonnets, the forty-seventh and seventy-fifth:—

'When that mine eye is famish'd for a look.'

'Sometimes all full with feeding on his sight,

'And by and by clean starved for a look.'

15 Defeat and defeature were used for disfigurement or alteration of features. Cotgrave has 'Un visage defaict: Groune very leane, pale, wan, or decayed in feature and colour.'

16 Fair, strictly speaking, is not used here for few

A sunny look of his would soon repair:
But, too unruly deer, he breaks the pale,
And feeds from home; poor I am but his stale.*

Luc. Self-harming jealousy!—fie, beat it hence.

Adr. Unfeeling fools can with such wrongs dispense.

I know his eye doth homage elsewhere
Or else, what lets² it but he would be here?
Sister, you know, he promised me a chain;
'Would, that alone, alone he would detain,
So he would keep fair quarter with his bed!
I see, the jewel, best enamelled,
Will lose his beauty; and though gold 'bides still,
That others touch, yet often touching will Wear gold: and no man, that hath a name,
But falsehood and corruption doth it shame.
Since that my beauty cannot please his eye,
I'll weep what's left away, and weeping die.

Luc. How many fond fools serve mad jealousy!
[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The same. Enter ANTIPHOLUS of Syracuse.

Ant. S. The gold, I gave to Dromio, is laid up
Safe at the Centaur; and the heedful slave
Is wander'd forth, in care to seek me out.
By computation, and mine host's report,
I could not speak with Dromio, since at first
I sent him from the mart: See, here he comes.

Enter DROMIO of Syracuse.

How now, sir? is your merry humour alter'd?
As you love strokes, so jest with me again.
You know no Centaur? you received no gold?
Your mistress sent to have me home to dinner?
My house was at the Phoenix? Wast thou mad,
That thus so madly thou didst answer me?

Dro. S. What answer, sir? when spake I such a word?

Ant. S. Even now, even here, not half an hour since.

Dro. S. I did not see you since you sent me hence,
Home to the Centaur, with the gold you gave me.

Ant. S. Villain, thou didst deny the gold's receipt;
And told'st me of a mistress, and a dinner;
For which, I hope, thou felt'st I was displeas'd.

Dro. S. I am glad to see you in this merry vein:
What means this jest? I pray you, master, tell me.

Ant. S. Yea, dost thou jeer and flout me in the teeth?

Think'st thou, I jest? Hold, take thou that, and that.

[Beating him.]

Dro. S. Hold, sir, for God's sake: now your jest is earnest;

Upon what bargain do you give it me?

Ant. S. Because that I familiarly sometimes
Do use you for my fool, and chat with you,
Your sauciness will jest upon my love,
And make a common of my serious hours.³
When the sun shines, let foolish gnats make sport,
But creep in crannies, when he hides his beams
If you will jest with me, know my aspect,⁴
And fashion your demeanour to my looks,
Or I will beat this method in your scone.

ness, as Steevens supposed; but for beauty. Shakspeare has often employed it in this sense, without any relation to whiteness of skin or complexion. The use of the substantive instead of the adjective, in this instance, is not peculiar to him; but the common practice of his contemporaries.

1 Though Shakspeare sometimes uses stale for a decoy or bait, I do not think that he meant it here; or that Adriana can mean to call herself his stalking-horse. Probably she means she is thrown aside, forgotten, cast off, become stale to him. The dictionaries, in voce Ereotus, countenance this explanation.

2 Hinders.

3 i. e. intrude on them when you please.

4 Study my countenance.

5 A scone was a fortification; to inscone was to hide, to protect as with a fort.

6 So in The Taming of the Shrew:—

'I tell thee, Kate, 'twas burnt and dried away,

Dro. S. Sconce, call you it? so you would leave battering, I had rather have it a head: an you use these blows long, I must get a scone for my head, and insconce⁵ it too; or else I shall seek my wit in my shoulders. But, I pray, sir, why am I beaten?

Ant. S. Dost thou not know?

Dro. S. Nothing, sir; but that I am beaten.

Ant. S. Shall I tell you why?

Dro. S. Ay, sir, and wherefore; for, they say, every why hath a wherefore.

Ant. S. Why, first,—for flouting me; and then, wherefore,—

For urging it the second time to me.

Dro. S. Was there ever any man thus beaten out of season?

When, in the why, and the wherefore, is neither rhyme nor reason?—

Well, sir, I thank you.

Ant. S. Thank me, sir? for what?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, for this something that you gave me for nothing.

Ant. S. I'll make you amends next, to give you nothing for something. But say, sir, is it dinner-time?

Dro. S. No, sir; I think the meat wants that I have.

Ant. S. In good time, sir, what's that?

Dro. S. Basting.

Ant. S. Well, sir, then 'twill be dry.

Dro. S. If it be, sir, I pray you eat none of it.

Ant. S. Your reason?

Dro. S. Lest it make you choleric,⁶ and purchase me another dry basting.

Ant. S. Well, sir, learn to jest in good time; There's a time for all things.

Dro. S. I durst have denied that, before you were so choleric.

Ant. S. By what rule, sir?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, by a rule as plain as the plain bald pate of father Time himself.

Ant. S. Let's hear it.

Dro. S. There's no time for a man to recover his hair, that grows bald by nature.

Ant. S. May he not do it by fine and recovery?⁷

Dro. S. Yes, to pay a fine for a periwig, and recover the lost hair of another man.

Ant. S. Why is time such a niggard of hair, being, as it is, so plentiful an excrement?⁸

Dro. S. Because it is a blessing that he bestows on beasts; and what he hath scant⁹ men in hair, he hath given them in wit.

Ant. S. Why, but there's many a man hath more hair than wit.¹⁰

Dro. S. Not a man of those, but he hath the wit to lose his hair.

Ant. S. Why, thou didst conclude hairy men plain dealers without wit.

Dro. S. The plainer dealer, the sooner lost: Yet he loseth it in a kind of jollity.

Ant. S. For what reason?

Dro. S. For two; and sound ones too.

Ant. S. Nay, not sound, I pray you.

Dro. S. Sure ones, then.

Ant. S. Nay, not sure, in a thing falsing.¹¹

And I expressly am forbid to touch it,
For it engenders choler, planteth anger.'

7 This is another instance of Shakspeare's acquaintance with technical law terms.

8 The old copy reads them: the emendation is Theobald's.

9 The following lines 'Upon [Suckling's] Aglaure, printed in folio,' may serve to illustrate this proverbial sentence:—

'This great voluminous pamphlet may be said
To be like one that hath more hair than head;
More excrement than body:—trees which sprout
With broadest leaves have still the smallest fruit.'

Parnassus Biceps. 1656.

10 Shakspeare too frequently alludes to this loss of hair by a certain disease. It seems to have been a joke that pleased him, and probably tickled his auditors.

11 To falsing, as a verb, has been long obsolete; but it was current in Shakspeare's time.

Dro. S. Certain ones then.

Ant. S. Name them.

Dro. S. The one, to save the money that he spends in tiring; the other, that at dinner they should not drop in his porridge.

Ant. S. You would all this time have proved, there is no time for all things.

Dro. S. Marry, and did, sir; namely, e'en¹ no time to recover hair lost by nature.

Ant. S. But your reason was not substantial, why there is no time to recover.

Dro. S. Thus I mend it: Time himself is bald, and therefore, to the world's end, will have bald followers.

Ant. S. I knew 'twould be a bald conclusion: But soft! who wafts² us yonder!

Enter ADRIANA and LUCIANA.

Adr. Ay, ay, Antipholus, look strange and frown; Some other mistress hath thy sweet aspects, I am not Adriana, nor thy wife.

The time was once, when thou unurg'd would'st vow,
That never words were music to thine ear,³
That never object pleasing in thine eye,
That never touch well welcome to thy hand,
That never meat sweet-savour'd in thy taste,
Unless I spake, look'd, touch'd, or carv'd to thee.
How comes it now, my husband, oh, how comes it,
That thou art then estranged from thyself?

Thyself I call it, being strange to me,
That, undividable, incorporate,
Am better than thy dear self's better part.
Ah, do not tear away thyself from me;
For know, my love, as easy may'st thou fall⁴
A drop of water in the breaking gulf,
And take unmingled thence that drop again,
Without addition, or diminishing,

As take from me thyself, and not me too.
How dearly would it touch thee to the quick,
Should'st thou but hear I were licentious?
And that this body, consecrate to thee,
By ruffian lust should be contaminate?
Would'st thou not spit at me, and spurn at me,
And hurl the name of husband in my face,
And tear the stain'd skin off my harlot brow,
And from my false hand cut the wedding ring,
And break it with a deep divorcing vow?

I know thou canst; and therefore, see, thou do it.
I am possess'd with an adulterate blot;
My blood is mingled with the crime of lust:
For, if we two be one, and thou play false,
I do digest the poison of thy flesh,
Being strumpeted⁵ by thy contagion.
Keep then fair league and truce with thy true bed;
I live disdain'd,⁶ thou undishonoured.

Ant. S. Plead you to me, fair dame? I know you not:

In Ephesus I am but two hours old,
As strange unto your town, as to your talk;
Who, every word by all my wit being scan'd,
Want wit in all one word to understand.

Luc. Fie, brother! how the world is chang'd with you:

When were you wont to use my sister thus?
She sent for you by Dromio home to dinner.

Ant. S. By Dromio?

Dro. S. By me?

Adr. By thee: and this thou didst return from him,
That he did buffet thee, and, in his blows
Denied my house for his, me for his wife.

Ant. S. Did you converse, sir, with this gentlewoman?

What is the course and drift of your compact?

Luc. What is the course and drift of your compact?

Ant. S. By Dromio?

Dro. S. By me?

Adr. By thee: and this thou didst return from him,
That he did buffet thee, and, in his blows
Denied my house for his, me for his wife.

Ant. S. Did you converse, sir, with this gentlewoman?

What is the course and drift of your compact?

Luc. What is the course and drift of your compact?

Ant. S. By Dromio?

Dro. S. By me?

Adr. By thee: and this thou didst return from him,
That he did buffet thee, and, in his blows
Denied my house for his, me for his wife.

Dro. S. I, sir? I never saw her till this time.

Ant. S. Villain, thou liest; for even her very words

Didst thou deliver to me on the mart.

Dro. S. I never spake with her in all my life.

Ant. S. How can she thus then call us by our names,

Unless it be by inspiration?

Adr. How ill agrees it with your gravity,

To counterfeit thus grossly with your slave,

Abetting him to thwart me in my mood?

Be it my wrong, you are from me exempt,⁷

But wrong not that wrong with a more contempt.

Come, I will fasten on this sleeve of thine

Thou art an elm, my husband, I a vine:⁸

Whose weakness, married to thy stronger state,

Makes me with thy strength to communicate:

If aught possess thee from me, it is dress,

Usurping ivy, briar, or idle⁹ moss:

Who, all for want of pruning, with intrusion

Infect thy sap, and live on thy confusion.

Ant. S. To me she speaks; she moves me for her theme:

What, was I married to her in my dream?

Or sleep I now, and think I hear all this?

What error drives our eyes and ears amiss?

Until I know this sure uncertainty,

I'll entertain the offer'd¹⁰ fallacy.

Luc. Dromio, go bid the servants spread for dinner.

Dro. S. O, for my heads! I cross me for a sinner.

This is the fairy land;—O, spite of spites!—

We talk with goblins, owls, and elvish sprites;¹¹

If we obey them not, this will ensue,

They'll suck our breath, or pinch us black and blue.

Luc. Why prat'st thou to thyself, and answer'st not?

Dromio, thou drone,¹² thou snail, thou slug, thou sot!

Dro. S. I am transformed, master, am not I?

Ant. S. I think, thou art, in mind, and so am I.

Dro. S. Nay, master, both in mind, and in my shape.

Ant. S. Thou hast thine own form.

Dro. S. No, I am an ape.

Luc. If thou art chang'd to aught, 'tis to an ass.

Dro. S. 'Tis true; she rides me, and I long for grass.

'Tis so, I am an ass; else it could never be,

But I should know her as well as she knows me.

Adr. Come, come, no longer will I be a fool,

To put the finger in the eye and weep,

Whilst man, and master, laugh my woes to scorn.—

Come sir, to dinner; Dromio, keep the gate:—

Husband, I'll dine above with you to day,

And shrive¹³ you of a thousand idle pranks:

Sirrah, if any ask you for your master,

Say, he dines forth, and let no creature enter.—

Come, sister:—Dromio, play the porter well.

Ant. S. Am I in earth, in heaven, or in hell?

Sleeping or waking? mad, or well advis'd?

Known unto these, and to myself disguis'd!

I'll say as they say, and persevere so,

And in this mist at all adventures go.

Dro. S. Master, shall I be porter at the gate?

Adr. Ay; and let none enter, lest I break your pate.

Luc. Come, come, Antipholus, we dine too late.

[Exeunt.]

8 So Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v. i.:

'They led the vine
To wed her elm. She spous'd about him twines
Her marriageable arms.'

9 i. e. unfruitful.

10 The old copy reads freed, which is evidently wrong, perhaps a corruption of proffered or offer'd.

11 Theobald changed owls to owphes in this passage most unwarrantably. It was those, 'unlucking birds,' the striges or screech-owls, which are meant.

12 The old copy reads 'Dromio, thou Dromio.' The emendation is Theobald's.

13 i. e. call you to confession.

1 The old copy, by mistake, has in.

2 i. e. beckons us.

3 Imitated by Pope in his Epistle from Sappho to Phaon:

'My music then you could for ever hear,
And all my words were music to your ear.'

4 Fall is here a verb active.

5 Shakspeare is not singular in the use of this verb.

6 i. e. unstain'd.

7 i. e. separated, parted.

ACT III.

SCENE I. The same. Enter ANTIPHOLUS of Ephesus, DROMIO of Ephesus, ANGELO, and BALTHAZAR.

Ant. E. Good signior Angelo, you must excuse us all:

My wife is shrewish when I keep not hours:
Say, that I linger'd with you at your shop,
To see the making of her carcanet,¹
And that to-morrow you will bring it home.
But here's a villain, that would face me down,
He met me on the mart; and that I beat him,
And charg'd him with a thousand marks in gold;
And that I did deny my wife and house:—
Thou drunkard, thou, what didst thou mean by this?

Dro. E. What you will, sir, but I know what I know:

That you beat me at the mart, I have your hand to show:

If the skin were parchment, and the blows you gave were ink,

Your own handwriting would tell you what I think.

Ant. E. I think, thou art an ass.

Dro. E. Marry so it doth appear
By the wrongs I suffer, and the blows I bear.
I should kick, being kick'd; and, being at that pass,
You would keep from my heels, and beware of an ass.

Ant. E. You are sad, signior Balthazar: 'Pray God, our cheer
May answer my good will, and your good welcome here.

Bal. I hold your dainties cheap, sir, and your welcome dear.

Ant. E. O, signior Balthazar, either at flesh or fish,
A table full of welcome makes scarce one dainty dish.

Bal. Good meat, sir, is common; that every churl affords.

Ant. E. And welcome more common; for that's nothing but words.

Bal. Small cheer, and great welcome, makes a merry feast.

Ant. E. Ay, to a niggardly host, and more sparing guest;
But though my cates be mean, take them in good part;

Better cheer may you have, but not with better heart.
But, soft; my door is lock'd; Go bid them let us in.

Dro. E. Maud, Bridget, Marian, Cicely, Gillian, Jem!

Dro. S. [within.] Mome,² malt-horse, capon, coxcomb, idiot, patch!³
Either get thee from the door, or sit down at the hatch:

Dost thou conjure for wenches, that thou call'st for such store,

When one is one too many? Go, get thee from the door.

Dro. E. What patch is made our porter? My master stays in the street.

Dro. S. Let him walk from whence he came, lest he catch cold on's feet.

Ant. E. Who talks within there? ho, open the door.

Dro. S. Right, sir, I'll tell you when, an you'll tell me wherefore.

Ant. E. Wherefore? for my dinner; I have not din'd to-day.

Dro. S. Nor to-day here you must not; come again, when you may.

Ant. E. What art thou, that keep'st me out from the house I owe?⁴

Dro. S. The porter for this time, sir, and my name is Dromio.

Dro. E. O villain, thou hast stolen both mine office and my name;

The one ne'er got me credit, the other mickle blame.
If thou had'st been Dromio to-day in my place,
Thou would'st have chang'd thy face for a name,
or thy name for an ass.

Luce. [within.] What a coil⁵ is there? Dromio, who are those at the gate?

Dro. E. Let my master in, Luce.

Luce. 'Faith, no; he comes too late:
And so tell your master.

Dro. E. O Lord, I must laugh:—

Have at you with a proverb.—Shall I set in my staff?

Luce. Have at you with another: that's,—When?

Dro. S. If thy name be call'd Luce, Luce, thou hast answer'd him well.

Ant. E. O you hear, you minion? you'll let us in, I hope?

Luce. I thought to have ask'd you.

Dro. S. And you said, no.

Dro. E. So, come, help; well struck; there was blow for blow.

Ant. E. Thou baggage, let me in.

Luce. Can you tell for whose sake?

Dro. E. Master knock the door hard.

Luce. Let him knock till it ake.

Ant. E. You'll cry for this, minion, if I beat the door down.

Luce. What needs all that, and a pair of stocks in the town?

Adr. [within.] Who is that at the door, that keeps all this noise?

Dro. S. By my troth, your town is troubled with unruly boys.

Ant. E. Are you there, wife? you might have come before.

Adr. Your wife, sir knave! go, get you from the door.

Dro. E. If you went in pain, master, this knave would go sore.

Ang. Here is neither cheer, sir, nor welcome; we would fain have either.

Bal. In debating which was best, we shall part⁶ with neither.

Dro. E. They stand at the door, master; bid them welcome hither.

Ant. E. There is something in the wind, that we cannot get in.

Dro. E. You would say so, master, if your garments were thin.

Your cake here is warm within; you stand here in the cold:

It would make a man mad as a buck, to be so bought and sold.⁷

Ant. E. Go, fetch me something, I'll break open the gate.

Dro. S. Break any breaking here, and I'll break your knave's pate.

Dro. E. A man may break a word with you, sir; and words are but wind;

Ay, and break it in your face, so he break it not behind.

Dro. S. It seems, thou wantest breaking; Out upon thee, hind!

Dro. E. Here is too much, out upon thee! I pray thee, let me in.

Dro. S. Ay, when fowls have no feathers, and fish have no fin.

4 I own, am owner of.

5 Bustle, tumult.

1 A carcanet or chain for a lady's neck; a collar or chain of gold and precious stones: from the French carcan. It was sometimes spelled karkanet and quarquest.

2 A mome was a fool or foolish jester. Momar is used by Plautus for a fool; whence the French momeur.

3 Patch was a term of contempt often applied to persons of low condition, and sometimes applied to a fool.

6 It seems probable that a line following this has been lost; in which Luce might be threatened with a rope; which would have furnished the rhyme now wanting. In a subsequent scene Dromio is ordered to go and buy a rope's end, for the purpose of using it on Adriana and her confederates.

7 Have part.

8 A proverbial phrase, meaning to be so over-reached by foul and secret practices.

Ant. E. Well, I'll break in; Go borrow me a crow.

Dro. E. A crow without feather; master, mean you so?

For a fish without a fin, there's a fowl without a feather:

If a crow help us in, sirrah, we'll pluck a crow together.¹

Ant. E. Go, get thee gone, fetch me an iron crow.

Bal. Have patience, sir: O, let it not be so:

Herein you war against your reputation,
And draw within the compass of suspect
The unviolated honour of your wife.

Once² this; your long experience of her wisdom,
Her sober virtue, years and modesty,
Plead on her part some cause to you unknown;
And doubt not, sir, but she will well excuse
Why at this time the doors are made³ against you.

Be rul'd by me; depart in patience,
And let us to the Tiger all to dinner:

And, about evening, come yourself alone
To know the reason of this strange restraint.

If by strong hand you offer to break in,
Now in the stirring passage of the day,
A vulgar comment will be made of it;

And that supposed by the common rout
Against your yet ungalleged estimation,
That may with foul intrusion enter in,
And dwell upon your grave when you are dead:

For slander lives upon succession;
For ever housed, where it gets possession.

Ant. E. You have prevail'd; I will depart in quiet,
And, in despite of mirth, mean to be merry.

I know a wench of excellent discourse,—
Pretty and witty; wild, and yet, too, gentle;

There will we dine: this woman that I mean,
My wife (but, I protest, without desert,)

Hath oftentimes unbraided me withal;
To her will we to dinner.—Get you home,

And fetch the chain; by this,⁴ I know, 'tis made:
Bring it, I pray you, to the Porcupine;

For there's the house; that chain will I bestow
(Be it for nothing but to spite my wife)

Upon mine hostess there; good sir, make haste:
Since mine own doors refuse to entertain me,

I'll knock elsewhere, to see if they'll disdain me.

Ang. I'll meet you at that place, some hour hence.

Ant. E. Do so; this jest shall cost me some expense.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The same. Enter LUCIANA, and ANTIPHOLUS of Syracuse.

Luc. And may it be that you have quite forgot
A husband's office? shall, Antipholus,

Even in the spring of love, thy love-strings rot?
Shall love, in building, grow so ruinous?⁵

If you did wed my sister for her wealth,
Then, for her wealth's sake, use her with more kindness:

Or, if you like elsewhere, do it by stealth;
Muffle your false love with some show of blindness:

1 The same quibble is to be found in one of the comedies of Plautus. Children of distinction among the Greeks and Romans had usually birds given them for their amusement. This custom Tyndarus, in The Captives, mentions, and says that, for his part, he had tam-tum upum. Upupa signifies both a laping and a mattock, or some instrument with which stone was dug from the quarries.

2 Once this, here means once for all; at once.

3 i.e. made fast. The expression is still in use in some countries.

4 By this time.

5 In the old copy the first four lines stand thus:—
'And may it be that you have quite forgot
A husband's office? shall, Antipholus,
Even in the spring of love, thy love-springs rot?
Shall love in buildings glow so ruinate?'
The present emendation was proposed by Steevens, though he admitted Theobald's into his own text. Love-springs are the buds of love, or rather the young shoots. 'The spring, or young shoots that grow out of the stems or roots of trees.'—Barett

Let not my sister read it in your eye;

Be not thy tongue thy own shame's orator;

Look sweet, speak fair, become disloyalty;

Apparel vice like virtue's harbinger:

Bear a fair presence, though your heart be tainted,

Teach sin the carriage of a holy saint:

Be secret—false; What need she be acquainted?

What simple thief brags of his own attainment?

'Tis double wrong, to truant with your bed,

And let her read it in thy looks at board:

Shame hath a bastard fame, well managed;

Ill deeds are doubled with an evil word.

Alas, poor women! make us but⁶ believe,

Being compact of credit,⁷ that you love us;

Though others have the arm, show us the sleeve;

We in your motion turn, and you may move us.

Then, gentle brother, get you in again;

Comfort my sister, cheer her; call her wife:

'Tis holy sport, to be a little vain,⁸

When the sweet breath of flattery conquers strife.

Ant. S. Sweet mistress (what your name is else,

I know not,

Nor by what wonder you do hit on mine,)
Less, in your knowledge and your grace, you show

not,

Than our earth's wonder; more than earth divine.

Teach me, dear creature, how to think and speak;

Lay open to my earthly gross conceit,

Smother'd in errors, feeble, shallow, weak,

The folded meaning of your words' deceit.

Against my soul's pure truth why labour you,

To make it wander in an unknown field?

Are you a god? would you create me new?

Transform me, then, and to your power I'll yield.

But if that I am I, then well I know,

Your weeping sister is no wife of mine,

Nor to her bed no homage do I owe;

Far more, far more to you do I decline.⁹

O, train me not, sweet mermaid,¹⁰ with thy note,

To drown me in thy sister's flood of tears;

Sing, siren, for thyself, and I will dote:

Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hairs,¹¹

And as a bed¹² I'll take thee, and there lie;

And, in that glorious supposition, think

He gains by death, that hath such means to die:—

Let love, being light, be drowned if she sink!¹³

Luc. What, are you mad, that you do reason so?

Ant. S. Not mad, but mated;¹⁴ how I do not know.

Luc. It is a fault that springeth from your eye.

Ant. S. For gazing on your beams, fair sun, being gaze where you should, and that will clear your sight.

Ant. S. As good to wink, sweet love, as look on night.

Luc. Why call you me love? call my sister so.

Ant. S. Thy sister's sister.

Luc. That's my sister.

Ant. S. No;

It is thyself, mine own self's better part;

Mine eye's clear eye, my dear heart's dearer heart;

My food, my fortune, and my sweet hope's aim;¹⁵

My sole earth's heaven, and my heaven's claim.

Luc. All this my sister is, or else should be.

6 Old copy, not.

7 i.e. being made altogether of credulity.

8 Vain is light of tongue.

9 'To decline; to turn or hang toward some place or thing.'—Barett.

10 Mermaid for siren.

11 So in Macbeth:—

'His silver skin laced with his golden blood.'

12 The first folio reads:—

'And as a bed I'll take thee, and there lie.'

Which Malone thus explains:—'I, like an insect, will take thy bosom for a rose, or other flower,' and there

'Involv'd in fragrance, burn and die.'

13 Malone says that by love here is meant the queen of love.

14 Mated means matched with a wife, and confounded.

A quibble is intended.

15 i.e. all the happiness I wish for on earth, and all that I claim from heaven hereafter.

Ant. S. Call thyself sister, sweet, for I aim¹ thee:

Thou wilt I love, and with thee lead my life;
Thou hast no husband yet, nor I no wife:
Give me thy hand.

Luc. O, soft, sir, hold you still;
I'll fetch my sister, to get her good will. [Exit Luc.]

Enter, from the House of ANTIPHOLUS of Ephesus, DROMIO of Syracuse.

Ant. S. Why, how now, Dromio? where run'st thou so fast?

Dro. S. Do you know me, sir? am I Dromio? am I your man? am I myself?

Ant. S. Thou art Dromio, thou art my man, thou art thyself.

Dro. S. I am an ass, I am a woman's man, and besides myself.

Ant. S. What woman's man? and how besides thyself?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, besides myself, I am due to a woman: one that claims me, one that haunts me, one that will have me.

Ant. S. What claim lays she to thee?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, such claim as you would lay to your horse; and she would have me as a beast; not that, I being a beast, she would have me; but that she, being a very beastly creature, lays claim to me.

Ant. S. What is she?

Dro. S. A very reverend body; ay, such a one as a man may not speak of, without he say, sir-reverence:² I have but lean luck in the match, and yet is she a wondrous fat marriage.

Ant. S. How dost thou mean, a fat marriage?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, she's the kitchen wench, and all grease; and I know not what use to put her to, but to make a lamp of her, and run from her by her own light. I warrant, her rags, and the tallow in them, will burn a Poland winter: if she lives till doomsday, she'll burn a week longer than the whole world.

Ant. S. What complexion is she of?

Dro. S. Swart,³ like my shoe, but her face, nothing like so clean kept: For why? she sweats, a man may go over shoes in the grime of it.

Ant. S. That's a fault that water will mend.

Dro. S. No, sir, 'tis in grain: Noah's flood could not do it.

Ant. S. What's her name?

Dro. S. Nell, sir;—but her name and three quarters, that is, an ell and three quarters, will not measure her from hip to hip.⁴

Ant. S. Then she bears some breadth?

Dro. S. No longer from head to foot, than from hip to hip; she is spherical, like a globe; I could find out countries in her.

Ant. S. In what part of her body stands Ireland?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, in her buttocks; I found it out by the bogs.

Ant. S. Where Scotland?

Dro. S. I found it by the barrenness; hard, in the palm of the hand.⁵

Ant. S. Where France?

1 The old copy reads I am thee. The present reading is Stevens. Others have proposed I mean thee; but aim for am at was sometimes used.

2 This is a very old corruption of have reverence, salva reverentia. See Blount's Glossography, 1682.

3 Swart, or swarth, i. e. dark, dusky, infuscus.

4 This poor conundrum is borrowed by Massinger in The Old Law.

5 Had this play been revived after the accession of James, it is probable this passage would have been struck out; as was that relative to the Scotch lord in The Merchant of Venice, Act I. Sc. I.

6 An equivocal, says Theobald, 'is intended. In 1589, Henry III. of France, being stabbed, was succeeded by Henry IV. of Navarre, whom he had appointed his successor; but whose claim the states of France resisted on account of his being a protestant. This I take to be what is meant by France making war against her heir. Elizabeth had sent over the Earl of Essex with four thousand men to the assist-

Dro. S. In her forehead; arm'd and reverted, making war against her heir.⁶

Ant. S. Where England?

Dro. S. I look'd for the chalky cliffs, but I could find no whiteness in them; but I guess it stood in her chin, by the salt rheum that run between France and it.

Ant. S. Where Spain?

Dro. S. Faith, I saw it not; but I felt it hot in her breath.

Ant. S. Where America, the Indies?

Dro. S. O, sir, upon her nose, all o'er embellish'd with rubies, carbuncles, sapphires, declining their rich aspect to the hot breath of Spain; who sent whole armadas of carracks⁷ to be ballast at her nose.

Ant. S. Where stood Belgia, the Netherlands?

Dro. S. O, sir, I did not look so low. To conclude, this drudge, or diviner, laid claim to me; call'd me Dromio, swore I was assur'd⁸ to her; told me what privy marks I had about me, as the mark on my shoulder, the mole in my neck, the great wart on my left arm, that I, amazed, ran from her as a witch: and, I think, if my breast had not been made of faith,⁹ and my heart of steel, she had transform'd me to a curtail-dog, and made me turn i' the wheel.¹⁰

Ant. S. Go, hie thee presently, post to the road; And if the wind blow any way from shore, I will not harbour in this town to-night.

If any bark put forth, come to the mart,
Where I will walk, till thou return to me.
If every one knows us, and we know none,
'Tis time, I think, to trudge, pack, and be gone.

Dro. S. As from a bear a man would run for life,
So fly I from her that would be my wife. [Exit.]

Ant. S. There's none but witches do inhabit here;
And therefore 'tis high time that I were hence.

She that doth call me husband, even my soul
Doth for a wife abhor; but her fair sister,
Possess'd with such gentle sovereign grace,
Of such enchanting presence and discourse,
Hath almost made me traitor to myself:
But, lest myself be guilty to¹¹ self-wrong,
I'll stop my ears against the mermaid's song.

Enter ANGELO.

Ang. Master Antipholus?

Ant. S. Ay, that's my name.

Ang. I know it well, sir: Lo, here is the chain; I thought to have ta'en you at the Porcupine.¹² The chain unfinish'd made me stay thus long.

Ant. S. What is your will, that I shall do with this?

Ang. What, please yourself, sir; I have made it for you.

Ant. S. Made it for me, sir! I bespoke it not.

Ang. Not once nor twice, but twenty times, you have:

Go home with it, and please your wife withal;

And soon at supper-time I'll visit you,

And then receive my money for the chain.

ance of Henry of Navarre, in 1591. This oblique sneer at France was therefore a compliment to the poet's royal mistress.⁷ The other allusion is not of a nature to admit of explanation.

7 Carracks, large ships of burthen; caraca, Spanish. Ballast is merely a contraction of ballasted; to ballast being the old autography: as we write dress for dress'd, embos for embossed, &c.

8 I. e. Affianced.

9 Alluding to the popular belief that a great share of faith was a protection from witchcraft.

10 A turnspit.

11 Pope, not understanding sufficiently the phraseology of Shakspeare, altered this to guilty of self-wrong. But guilty to was the construction of that age.

12 Porcupine throughout the old editions of these plays is written porpentine. I find it written porpys in an old phrase book, called Hormanni Vulpigaria, 1519, thus: 'Porpys have longer prickles than Yrchins.'

Ant. S. I pray you, sir, receive the money now,
For fear you ne'er see chain, nor money, more.

Ang. You are a merry man, sir; fare you well.

[Exit.]

Ant. S. What I should think of this, I cannot tell;
But this I think, there's no man is so vain,
That would refuse so fair an offer'd chain.
I see, a man here needs not live by shifts,
When in the streets he meets such golden gifts.
I'll to the mart, and there for Dromio stay;
If any ship put out, then straight away.

[Exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. The same. Enter a Merchant, Angelo, and an Officer.

Mer. You know, since Pentecost the sum is due,
And since I have not much importun'd you;
Nor now I had not, but that I am bound
To Persia, and want gilders for my voyage:
Therefore make present satisfaction,
Or I'll attach you by this officer.

Ang. Even just the sum, that I do owe to you,
Is growing¹ to me by Antipholus:
And in the instant that I met with you,
He had of me a chain; at five o'clock,
I shall receive the money for the same:
Pleaseth you walk with me down to his house,
I will discharge my bond, and thank you too.

Enter ANTIPHOLUS of Ephesus, and DROMIO of Ephesus, from the Courtezan's.

Off. That labour may you save; see where he comes.

Ant. E. While I go to the goldsmith's house, go thou

And buy a rope's end; that will I bestow
Among my wife and her confederates,
For locking me out of my doors by day.—
But soft, I see the goldsmith:—get thee gone:
Buy thou a rope, and bring it home to me.

Dro. E. I buy a thousand pound a year! I buy a rope! [Exit DROMIO.]

Ant. E. A man is well help up, that trusts to you.
I promised your presence, and the chain;
But neither chain, nor goldsmith came to me:
Belike, you thought our love would last too long,
If it were chain'd together; and therefore came not.

Ang. Saving your merry humour, here's the note,
How much your chain weighs to the utmost carat;
The fineness of the gold, and chargeful fashion;
Which doth amount to three odd ducats more
Than I stand indebted to this gentleman;
I pray you, see him presently discharg'd,
For he is bound to sea, and stays but for it.

Ant. E. I am not furnish'd with the present money;

Besides, I have some business in the town:
Good signior, take the stranger to my house,
And with you take the chain, and bid my wife
Disburse the sum on the receipt thereof;
Perchance, I will² be there as soon as you.

Ang. Then you will bring the chain to her yourself?

Ant. E. No! bear it with you, lest I come not time enough.

Ang. Well, sir, I will: Have you the chain about you?

Ant. E. An if I have not, sir, I hope you have:
Or else you may return without your money.

Ang. Nay, come, I pray you, sir, give me the chain;

Both wind and tide stays for this gentleman,
And I, to blame, have held him here too long.

Ant. E. Good lord, you use this dalliance, to excuse

Your breach of promise to the Porcupine:
I should have chid you for not bringing it,
But, like a shrew, you first begin to brawl.

Mer. The hour steals on; I pray you, sir, despatch.

Ang. You hear how he importunes me; the chain—

Ant. E. Why, give it to my wife, and fetch your money.

Ang. Come, come, you, know, I gave it you even now;

Either send the chain, or send by me some token.*

Ant. E. Fie! now you run this humour out of breath:

Come, where's the chain? I pray you let me see it.

Mer. My business cannot brook this dalliance;

Good sir, say, wher' you'll answer me, or no;

If not, I'll leave him to the officer.

Ant. E. I answer you! What should I answer you?

Ang. The money, that you owe me for the chain.

Ant. E. I owe you none, till I receive the chain.

Ang. You know, I gave it you half an hour since.

Ant. E. You gave me none; you wrong me much to say so.

Ang. You wrong me more, sir, in denying it:

Consider, how it stands upon my credit.

Mer. Well, officer, arrest him at my suit.

Off. I do; and charge you in the duke's name to obey me.

Ang. This touches me in reputation:

Either consent to pay this sum for me,

Or I attach you by this officer.

Ant. E. Consent to pay thee that I never had.

Arrest me, foolish fellow, if thou dar'st.

Ang. Here is thy fee; arrest him, officer;

I would not spare my brother in this ease,

If he should scorn me so apparently.

Off. I do arrest you, sir, you hear the suit.

Ant. E. I do obey thee, till I give thee bail:

But, sirrah, you shall buy this sport as dear

As all the metal in your shop will answer.

Ang. Sir, sir, I shall have law in Ephesus,

To your notorious shame, I doubt it not.

Enter DROMIO of Syracuse.

Dro. S. Master, there is a bark of Epidamnus,

That stays but till her owner comes aboard,

And then, sir, she bears away: our fraughtage,* sir,

I have convey'd aboard: and I have bought

The oil, the balsamum, and aqua-vite.

The ship is in her trim; the merry wind

Blows fair from land: they stay for naught at all,

But for their owner, master, and yourself.

Ant. E. How now! a madman! Why thou peevish⁶ sheep,

What ship of Epidamnus stays for me?

Dro. S. A ship you sent me to, to hire waftage.⁷

Ant. E. Thou drunken slave, I sent thee for a rope; and told thee to what purpose and what end.

Dro. S. You sent me for a rope's end as soon as You sent me to the bay, sir, for a bark.

Ant. E. I will debate this matter at more leisure, and teach your ears to list me with more heed.

To Adriana, villain, hie thee straight:

Give her this key, and tell her, in the desk,

That's cover'd o'er with Turkish tapestry, whether the token Angelo wishes Antipholus to send by him was to be verbal or material? Tokens were common in Shakspeare's time of many kinds; there were tavern tokens, which were counters of lead or leather. There were written tokens or bills, as they were then called, 'given to men by which they might receive a certain sum of money, &c. Such a one Angelo probably requires:

5 Freight, cargo.

6 Peevish was used for mad, or foolish.

7 i. e. carriage; hire is here a dissyllable, and is spelt hier in the old copy.

1 i. e. accruing.

2 The old copy reads their.

3 I will for I shall is a Scotticism; but it is not unfrequent in old writers on this side of the Tweed.

4 Malone has a very long note on this passage, in which he says: 'it was not Angelo's meaning, that Antipholus of Ephesus should send a jewel or other token by him, but that Antipholus should send him with a verbal token to his wife, by which it might be ascertained that he came from Antipholus; and that she might safely pay the price of the chain.' In the name of common sense, what does this prove?—Can it signify

There is a purse of ducats : let her send it ;
Tell her I am arrested in the street,
And that shall bail me : lie thee, slave ; be gone.
On, officer, to prison, till it come.

[Exeunt Mer. ANG. Officer, and ANT. E.]

Dro. S. To Adriana ! that is where we din'd,
Where Dowsabel did claim me for her husband :
She is too big, I hope, for me to compass.
Thither I must, although against my will,
For servants must their master's minds fulfil. [Exit.]

SCENE II. The same. Enter ADRIANA, and LUCIANA.

Adr. Ah, Luciana, did he tempt thee so ?

Might'st thou perceive austerly in his eye
That he did plead in earnest, yea or no ?

Look'd he or red, or pale ; or sad, or merrily ?
What observation mad'st thou in this case,
Of his heart's meteors tilting in his face ?¹

Luc. First, he denied you had in him no right.²

Adr. He meant, he did me none ; the more my spite.

Luc. Then swore he, that he was a stranger here.

Adr. And true he swore, though yet forsworn he were.

Luc. Then pleaded I for you.

Adr. And what said he ?

Luc. That love I begg'd for you, he begg'd of me.

Adr. With what persuasion did he tempt thy love ?

Luc. With words, that in an honest suit might move.

First, he did praise my beauty ; then my speech.

Adr. Did'st speak him fair ?

Luc. Have patience, I beseech.

Adr. I cannot, nor I will not, hold me still ;

My tongue, though not my heart, shall have his will.
He is deformed, crooked, old, and sere,³

Ill-fac'd, worse-bodied, shapeless every where ;

Vicious, ungentle, foolish, blunt, unkind ;

Stigmatical in making,⁴ worse in mind.

Luc. Who would be jealous then of such a one ?
No evil loss is will'd when it is gone.

Adr. Ah ! but I think him better than I say,

And yet would herein others' eyes were worse :

Far from her nest the lapwing cries away ;⁵

My heart prays for him, though my tongue do curse.

Enter DROMIO of Syracuse.

Dro. S. Here, go ; the desk, the purse ; sweet now, make haste.

Luc. How hast thou lost thy breath ?

Dro. S. By running fast.

Adr. Where is thy master, Dromio ? is he well ?

Dro. S. No, he's in tartar-limbo, worse than hell :

A devil in an everlasting garment⁶ hath him,

One, whose hard heart is button'd up with steel ;

A fiend, a fairy,⁷ pitiless and rough ;

A wolf, nay worse, a fellow all in buff ;

A back-friend, a shoulder-clapper, one that counter-mands

The passages of alleys, creeks, and narrow lands ;⁸

1 The allusion is to those meteors which have sometimes been thought to resemble armies meeting in the shock of battle. The following comparison in the second book of Paradise Lost best explains it :
'As when to warn proud cities, war appears
Wsg'd in the troubled sky, and armies rush
To battle in the clouds, before each van
Prick forth the airy knights, and couch their spears,
Fill thickest legions close ; with feats of arms
From either end of heaven the welkin burns.'

2 This double negative had the force of a stronger asseveration in the phraseology of that age.

3 Dry, withered.

4 Marked or stigmatised by nature with deformity.

5 This expression, which appears to have been proverbial, is again alluded to in Measure for Measure, Act i. Sc. 5.

6 The buff or leather jerkin of the sergeant is called an everlasting garment, because it was so durable.

7 Theobald would read a fury ; but a fairy, in Shakespeare's time, sometimes meant a malevolent spirit, and coupled as it is with pitiless and rough, the meaning is clear.

A hound that runs counter, and yet draws dry-foot well ;⁹

One that, before the judgment, carries poor souls to hell.¹⁰

Adr. Why man, what is the matter ?

Dro. S. I do not know the matter : he is 'rested on the case.

Adr. What, is he arrested ? tell me at whose suit ?

Dro. S. I know not at whose suit he is arrested, well ;

But is¹¹ in a suit of buff, which 'rested him, that can I tell :

Will you send him, mistress, redemption, the money in his desk ?

Adr. Go fetch it, sister.—This I wonder at,

[Exit LUCIANA.]

That he, unknown to me, should be in debt :

Tell me, was he arrested on a band ?¹²

Dro. S. Not on a band, but on a stronger thing ;

A chain, a chain ; do you not hear it ring ?

Adr. What, the chain ?

Dro. S. No, no, the bell : 'tis time that I were gone.
It was two ere I left him, and now the clock strikes one.

Adr. The hours come back ! that did I never hear.

Dro. S. O yes : If any hour meet a sergeant, a' turns back for very fear.

Adr. As if time were in debt ! how fondly dost thou reason ?

Dro. S. Time is a very bankrupt, and owes more than he's worth to season.

Nay, he's a thief too : Have you not heard men say,
That time comes stealing on by night and day ?

If he¹³ be in debt, and theft, and a sergeant in the way,

Hath he not reason to turn back an hour in a day ?

Enter LUCIANA.

Adr. Go, Dromio ; there's the money, bear it straight ;

And bring thy master home immediately.—

Come, sister : I am press'd down with conceit ;¹⁴
Conceit, my comfort, and my injury. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The same. Enter ANTIPHOLUS of Syracuse.

Ant. S. There's not a man I meet, but doth salute me

As if I were their well acquainted friend ;¹⁵
And every one doth call me by my name.

Some tender money to me, some invite me ;

Some other give me thanks for kindnesses ;

Some offer me commodities to buy ;

Even now a tailor call'd me in his shop,

And show'd me silks that he had bought for me,

And, therewithal, took measure of my body.

Sure, these are but imaginary wiles,

And Lapland sorcerers inhabit here.

Enter DROMIO of Syracuse.

Dro. S. Master, here's the gold you sent me for :
What, have you got the picture of old Adam new apparel'd ?¹⁶

8 The first folio reads, lans. Shakespeare would have put lans by for the sake of the rhyme.

9 'To hunt or run counter, signifies that the hounds or beagles hunt it by the heel,' i. e. run backward, mistaking the course of the game. To draw dry foot was to follow the scent or track of the game. There is a quibble upon counter, which points at the prison so called.

10 Hell was the cant term for prison. There was a place of this name under the Exchequer, where the king's debtors were confined.

11 Thus the old authentic copy. The omission of the personal pronoun was formerly very common : we should now write he's.

12 i. e. a bond. Shakespeare takes advantage of the old spelling to produce a quibble.

13 The old copy reads, 'If I,' &c.

14 Fanciful conception.

15 This actually happened to Sir H. Wotton when on his travels. See Reliquia Wottoniana, 1685, p. 676.

16 Theobald reads, 'What, have you got rid of the picture of old Adam ?' The emendation is approved and

Ant. S. What gold is this? what Adam dost thou mean?

Dro. S. Not that Adam, that kept the paradise, but that Adam that keeps the prison: he that goes in the calf's-skin that was kill'd for the prodigal: he that came behind you, sir, like an evil angel, and bid you forsake your liberty.

Ant. S. I understand thee not.

Dro. S. No? why, 'tis a plain case: he that went like a base-viol, in a case of leather; the man, sir, that, when gentlemen are tired, gives them a fob, and 'rests them; he, sir, that takes pity on decayed men, and gives them suits of durance; he that sets up his rest¹ to do more exploit with his mace than a morris-pike.²

Ant. S. What! thou mean'st an officer?

Dro. S. Ay, sir, the sergeant of the band; he, that brings any man to answer it, that breaks his band: one that thinks a man always going bed, and says, God give you good rest.

Ant. S. Well, sir, there rest in your foolery. Is there any ship puts forth to night? may we begone?

Dro. S. Why, sir, I brought you word an hour since, that the bark Expedition put forth to night; and then were you hindered by the sergeant, to tarry for the hoy Delay; Here are the angels that you sent for, to deliver you.

Ant. S. The fellow is distract, and so am I; And here we wander in illusions; Some blessed power deliver us from hence!

Enter a Courtezan.

Cour. Well met, well met, master Antipholus.

I see, sir, you have found the goldsmith now;

Is that the chain, you promis'd me to-day?

Ant. S. Satan, avoid! I charge thee tempt me not:

Dro. S. Master, is this mistress Satan?

Ant. S. It is the devil.

Dro. S. Nay, she is worse, she is the devil's dam; and here she comes in the habit of a light wench; and thereof comes, that the wenches say, God damn me, that's as much as to say, God make me a light wench. It is written, they appear to men like angels of light: light is an effect of fire, and fire will burn; ergo, light wenches will burn; Come not near her.

Cour. Your man and you are marvellous merry, sir. Will you go with me? We'll mend our dinner here.³

Dro. S. Master, if you do, expect spoon-meat, or bespeak a long spoon.⁴

Ant. S. Why, Dromio?

Dro. S. Marry, he must have a long spoon, that must eat with the devil.

Ant. S. Avoid then, fiend! what tell'st thou me of supping?

Thou art, as you are all, a sorceress:

I conjure thee to leave me, and be gone.

Cour. Give me the ring of mine you had at dinner, Or, for my diamond, the chain you promis'd; And I'll be gone, sir, and not trouble you.

Dro. S. Some devil's ask but the parings of one's nail,

A rush, a hair, a drop of blood,⁵ a pin,

A nut, a cherry-stone: but she, more covetous, Would have a chain.

Master, be wise; an if you give it her, The devil will shake her chain, and fright us with it.

Cour. I pray you, sir, my ring, or else the chain; I hope you do not mean to cheat me so.

Ant. S. Avaunt, thou witch! Come, Dromio, let us go.

adopted by Malone; but I think, with Johnson, that the text does not require interpolation.

1 This unfortunate phrase is again mistaken here by all the commentators. It has nothing to do with a musk-rest; and the rest of a pike is a thing of the imagination. It is a metaphorical expression for being determined, or resolutely bent to do a thing, taken from the game of Primero.

2 A morris pike is a moorish pike, commonly used in the 16th century. It was not used in the morris dance, as Johnson erroneously supposed.

3 Probably by purchasing something additional in the adjoining market.

Dro. S. Fly, pride, says the peacock: Mistress, that you know. [Exeunt ANT. and DRO.]

Cour. Now out of doubt, Antipholus is mad, Else would he never so demean himself: A ring he hath of mine worth forty ducats, And for the same he promis'd me a chain! Both one, and other, he denies me now. The reason that I gather he is mad (Besides this present instance of his rage,) Is a mad tale, he told to-day at dinner, Of his own doors being shut against his entrance. Belike, his wife, acquainted with his fits, On purpose shut the doors against his way. My wife is now, to hie home to his house, And tell his wife, that, being lunatic, He rush'd into my house, and took perforce My ring away: This course I fittest choose For forty ducats is too much to lose. [Exit.]

SCENE IV. The same. Enter ANTIPHOLUS of Ephesus, and an Officer.

Ant. E. Fear me not man, I will not break away; I'll give thee, ere I leave thee, so much money To warrant thee, as I am 'rested for. My wife is in a wayward mood to-day; And will not lightly trust the messenger, That I should be attach'd in Ephesus: I tell you, it will sound harshly in her ears.—

Enter DROMIO of Ephesus with a rope's end.

Here comes my man; I think, he brings the money. How now, sir? have you that I sent you for?

Dro. E. Here's that, I warrant you, will pay them all.⁶

Ant. E. But where's the money?

Dro. E. Why, sir, I gave the money for the rope.

Ant. E. Five hundred ducats, villain, for a rope?

Dro. E. I'll serve you, sir, five hundred at the rate.

Ant. E. To what end did I bid thee hie thee home? Dro. E. To a rope's end, sir: and to that end am I return'd.

Ant. E. And to that end, sir, I will welcome you. [Beating him.]

Off. Good sir, be patient.

Dro. E. Nay, 'tis for me to be patient; I am in adversity.

Off. Good now, hold thy tongue.

Dro. E. Nay, rather persuade him to hold his hands.

Ant. E. Thou whoreson, senseless villain!

Dro. E. I would I were senseless, sir, that I might not feel your blows.

Ant. E. Thou art sensible in nothing but blows, and so is an ass.

Dro. E. I am an ass indeed; you may prove it by my long ears.⁷ I have served him from the hour of my nativity to this instant, and have nothing at his hands for my service, but blows: when I am cold, he heats me with beating: when I am warm, he cools me with beating: I am waked with it, when I sleep; raised with it, when I sit; driven out of doors with it, when I go from home; welcomed home with it, when I return: nay, I bear it on my shoulders, as a beggar wont her brat; and, I think, when he hath lamed me, I shall beg with it from door to door.

Enter ADRIANA, LUCIANA, and the Courtezan, with PINCH and others.*

Ant. E. Come, go along; my wife is coming yonder.

4 This proverb is alluded to again in the Tempest, Act ii. Sc. 2, p. 50:—'He who eats with the devil had need of a long spoon.'

5 In the Witch, by Middleton, when a spirit descends, Hecate exclaims:

'There's one come down to fetch his dues,

A kisse, a coll, a sip of blood, &c.

6 i. e. punish them all by corporal correction. Falstaff says, in King Henry IV. Part I., 'I have pepper'd the rogues; two of them, I'm sure, I've pay'd.'

7 Long from frequent pulling.

8 In the old copy—'and a schoolmaster, called

Dro. E. Mistress, respice finem,¹ respect your end; or rather the prophecy, like the parrot, Beware the rope's end.

Ant. E. Wilt thou still talk? [Beats him.]

Cour. How say you now? is not your husband mad?

Adr. His incivility confirms no less.—

Good doctor Pinch, you are a conjuror;

Establish him in his true sense again,

And I will please you what you will demand.

Luc. Alas, how fiery and how sharp he looks!

Cour. Mark, how he trembles in his ecstasy!²

Pinch. Give me your hand, and let me feel your pulse.

Ant. E. There is my hand and let it feel your ear.

Pinch. I charge thee, Satan, hous'd within this man,

To yield possession to my holy prayers,

And to thy state of darkness hie thee straight;

I conjure thee by all the saints in heaven.

Ant. E. Peace, dotting wizard, peace; I am not mad.

Adr. O, that thou wert not, poor distressed soul!

Ant. E. You minion, you, are these your customers?

Did this companion,³ with a saffron face

Revel and feast it at my house to-day,

Whilst upon me the guilty doors were shut,

And I denied to enter in my house?

Adr. O, husband, God doth know you din'd at home,

Where 'would, you had remain'd until this time,

Free from these slanders, and this open shame!

Ant. E. Din'd at home! Thou villain, what say'st thou?

Dro. E. Sir, sooth to say, you did not dine at home.

Ant. E. Were not my doors lock'd up, and I shut out?

Dro. E. Perdy,⁴ your doors were lock'd, and you shut out.

Ant. E. And did not she herself revile me there?

Dro. E. Sans fable, she herself revil'd you there.

Ant. E. Did not her kitchen maid rail, tauht, and scorn me?

Dro. E. Certes, she did; the kitchen-vestal scorn'd you.

Ant. E. And did not I in rage depart from thence?

Dro. E. In verity you did;—my bones bear witness,

That since have felt the vigour of his rage.

Adr. Is't good to sooth him in these contraries?

Pinch. It is no shame; the fellow finds his vein,

And, yielding to him, humours well his frenzy.

Ant. E. Thou hast suborn'd the goldsmith to arrest me.

Adr. Alas, I sent you money to redeem you,

By Dromio here, who came in haste for it.

Dro. E. Money by me? heart and good-will you might,

But, surely, master, not a rag of money.

Ant. E. Went'st not thou to her for a purse of ducats?

Adr. He came to me, and I deliver'd it.

Luc. And I am witness with her, that she did.

Dro. E. God and the rope-maker, bear me witness, That I was sent for nothing but a rope!

Pinch. Mistress, both man and master is possess'd;

I know it by their pale and deadly looks:

They must be bound and laid in some dark room.

Pinch. As learning was necessary for an exorcist, the schoolmaster was often employed. Within a very few years, in country villages the pedagogue was still a reputed conjuror.

I Buchanan wrote a pamphlet against the Lord of Liddington, which ends with these words: respice finem, respice finem. Shakespeare's quibble may be borrowed from this. The parrot's prophecy may be understood by means of the following lines in Hudibras—

'Could tell what subtlest parrots mean,
That speak and think contrary clean;
What member 'tis of whom they talk,
When they cry rope, and walk, knave, walk.'

² This tremor was anciently thought to be a sure indication of being possessed by the devil.

Ant. E. Say, wherefore didst thou lock me forth to-day,

And why dost thou deny the bag of gold?

Adr. I did not, gentle husband, lock thee forth.

Dro. E. And, gentle master, I receiv'd no gold; But I confess, sir, that we were lock'd out.

Adr. Dissembling villain, thou speak'st false in both.

Ant. E. Dissembling harlot, thou art false in all;

And art confederate with a damned pack,

To make a loathsome object scorn of me:

But with these nails I'll pluck out these false eyes,

That would behold in me this shameful sport.

[PINCH and his Assistants bind ANT. and DRO.]

Adr. O, bind him, bind him, let him not come near me.

Pinch. More company;—the fiend is strong within him.

Luc. Ah me, poor man, how pale and wan he looks!

Ant. E. What, will you murder me? Thou gaoler, thou,

I am thy prisoner; wilt thou suffer them

To make a rescue?

Off. Masters, let him go;

He is my prisoner, and you shall not have him.

Pinch. Go, bind this man, for he is frantic too.

Adr. What wilt thou do, thou peevish⁵ officer?

Hast thou delight to see a wretched man

Do outrage and displeasure to himself?

Off. He is my prisoner; if I let him go,

The debt he owes, will be requir'd of me.

Adr. I will discharge thee, ere I go from thee

Bear me forth with unto his creditor,

And, knowing how the debt grows, I will pay it.

Good master doctor, see him safe convey'd

Home to my house.—O most unhappy day!

Ant. E. O most unhappy⁷ strumpet!

Dro. E. Master, I am here enter'd in bond for you.

Ant. E. Out on thee, villain! wherefore dost thou mad me?

Dro. E. Will you be bound for nothing? be mad,

Good master; cry, the devil.—

Luc. God help, poor souls, how idly do they talk!

Adr. Go, bear him hence.—Sister, go you with me.—

[Exeunt PINCH and Assistants with ANT. and DRO.]

Say now, whose suit is he arrested at?

Off. One Angelo, a goldsmith; Do you know him?

Adr. I know the man: What is the sum he owes?

Off. Two hundred ducats.

Adr. Say, how grows it due?

Off. Due for a chain, your husband had of him.

Adr. He did bespeak a chain for me, but had it not.

Cour. When as your husband, all in rage, to-day

Came to my house, and took away my ring

(The ring I saw upon his finger now),

Straight after, did I meet him with a chain.

Adr. It may be so, but I did never see it:—

Come, gaoler, bring me where the goldsmith is,

I long to know the truth hereof at large.

Enter ANTIPHOLUS of Syracuse, with his rapier drawn, and DROMIO of Syracuse.

Luc. God, for thy mercy! they are loose again.

Adr. And come with naked swords; let's call more help,

To have them bound again.

³ 'A customer,' says Malone, 'is used in Othello for a common woman. Here it seems to signify one who visits such women.' It is surprising that a man like Malone, whose life had been devoted to the study and elucidation of Shakespeare, should so often seem ignorant of the language of the poet's time. 'A customer' was a familiar, an intimate, a customary haunter of any place; as any of the old dictionaries would have shown him under the word convictudo or custom.

⁴ Companion is a word of contempt, anciently used as we now use fellow.

⁵ A corruption of the common French oath par Dieu.

⁶ Vide before, p. 345, note 6.

⁷ Unhappy for unlucky, i. e. mischievous.

Off. Away, they'll kill us.

[Exeunt Officer, Adr. and Luc.]

Ant. S. I see these witches are afraid of swords.

Dro. S. She, that would be your wife, now ran from you.

Ant. S. Come to the Centaur; fetch our stuff¹ from thence:

I long, that we were safe and sound aboard.

Dro. S. Faith, stay here this night, they will surely do us no harm; you saw, they speak us fair, give us gold: methinks, they are such a gentle nation, that but for the mountain of mad flesh that claims marriage of me, I could find in my heart to stay here still, and turn witch.

Ant. S. I will not stay to-night for all the town; Therefore away, to get our stuff aboard. [Exeunt.]

ACT. V.

SCENE I. The same. Enter Merchant and ANGELO.

Ang. I am sorry, sir, that I have hinder'd you; But, I protest, he had the chain of me, Though most dishonestly he doth deny it.

Mer. How is the man esteem'd here in the city?

Ang. Of very reverend reputation, sir, Of credit infinite, highly belov'd, Second to none that lives here in the city; His word might bear my wealth at any time.

Mer. Speak softly: yonder, as I think, he walks.

Enter ANTIPHOLUS and DROMIO of Syracuse.

Ang. Tis so; and that self chain about his neck, Which he forswore, most monstrously, to have. Good sir, draw near to me, I'll speak to him. Signior Antipholus, I wonder much

That you would put me to this shame and trouble; And not without some scandal to yourself, With circumstance, and oaths, so to deny This chain, which now you wear so openly: Besides the charge, the shame, imprisonment, You have done wrong to this my honest friend; Who, but for staying on our controversy, Had hoisted sail, and put to sea to-day: This chain you had of me, can you deny it?

Ant. S. I think, I had; I never did deny it.

Mer. Yes, that you did, sir; and forswore it too.

Ant. S. Who heard me to deny it, or forswear it?

Mer. These ears of mine, thou knowest, did hear thee:

Fie on thee, wretch! 'tis a pity, that thou liv'st To walk where any honest men resort.

Ant. S. Thou art a villain to impeach me thus:

I'll prove mine honour and mine honesty Against thee presently, if thou dar'st stand.

Mer. I dare, and do defy thee for a villain.

[They draw.]

Enter ADRIANA, LUCIANA, Courtezans, and others.

Adr. Hold, hurt him not, for God's sake; he is mad;—

Some get within him,² take his sword away:

Bind Dromio too, and bear them to my house.

Dro. S. Run, master, run; for God's sake take a house.³

This is some priory;—In, or we are spoil'd.

[Exeunt ANTIPH. and DRO. to the Priory.]

1 i. e. baggage. Stuff is the genuine old English word for all moveables.

2 i. e. close, grapple with him.

3 i. e. go into a house: we still say that a dog takes the water.

4 'The copy,' says Steevens, 'that is the theme. We still talk of setting copies for boys!' Surely a boy's copy is not a theme? and that word occurs again in the fourth line of this speech. 'Our poet frequently uses copy for pattern,' says Malone. So in Twelfth Night:—

'And leave the world no copy.' I believe Malone's frequently may be reduced to two other instances, one in Henry V. and another in a sonnet. I am persuaded that copy in the present instance neither means theme nor pattern, but copie, plenty, copious source, an old latinism, many times used by Ben Jonson. The word is spelt copie in the folio; and in King Henry V. where

Enter the Abbess.

Abb. Be quiet, people; Wherefore throng you hither?

Adr. To fetch my poor distracted husband, hence: Let us come in, that we may bind him fast, And bear him home for his recovery.

Ang. I knew he was not in his perfect wits.

Mer. I am sorry now, that I did draw on him

Abb. How long hath this possession held the man?

Adr. This week he hath been heavy, sour, sad, And much different from the man he was; But, till this afternoon, his passion Ne'er brake into extremity of rage.

Abb. Hath he not lost much wealth by wreck of sea?

Buried some dear friend? Hath not else his eye

Stray'd his affection in unlawful love?

A sin, prevailing much in youthful men,

Who give their eyes the liberty of gazing.

Which of these sorrows is he subject to?

Adr. To none of these, except it be the last;

Namely, some love, that drew him oft from home.

Abb. You should for that have reprehended him.

Adr. Why, so I did.

Abb. Ay, but not rough enough.

Adr. As roughly, as my modesty would let me.

Abb. Haply, in private.

Adr. And in assemblies too.

Abb. Ay, but not enough.

Adr. It was the copy⁴ of our conference

In bed, he slept not for my urging it;

At board, he fed not for my urging it;

Alone, it was the subject of my theme;

In company, I often glanced it;

Still did I tell him it was vile and bad.

Abb. And therefore came it that the man was mad:

The venom clamours of a jealous woman

Poison more deadly than a mad dog's tooth.

It seems his sleeps were hinder'd by thy railing;

And therefore comes it that his head is light.

Thou say'st his meat was sauc'd with thy upbraidings:

Unquiet meals make ill digestions,

Whereof the raging fire of fever bred;

And what's a fever but a fit of madness?

Thou say'st his sports were hinder'd by thy brawls;

Sweet recreation barr'd, what doth ensue,

But moody and dull melancholy,

(Kinsman to grim and comfortless despair;)

And, at her heels, a huge infectious troop⁵

Of pale distemperatures and foes to life?

In food, in sport, and life-preserving rest

To be disturb'd, would mad as man or beast;

The consequence is then, thy jealous fits

Have scar'd thy husband from the use of wits.

Luc. She never reprehended him but mildly,

When he demean'd himself rough, rude, and wildly.

Why bear you these rebukes, and answer not?

Adr. She did betray me to my own reproof.—

Good people, enter, and lay hold on him.

Abb. No, not a creature enters in my house.

Adr. Then, let your servants bring my husband forth.

Abb. Neither; he took this place for sanctuary,

And it shall privilege him from your hands,

Till I have brought him to his wits again,

Or lose my labour in assaying it.

Adr. I will attend my husband, be his nurse,

Diet his sickness, for it is my office,

it means pattern, example, it is spelt copy. But the sense of the passage here will show that my interpretation is right.

5 I think that there is no doubt that this passage has suffered by incorrect printing; I am not satisfied with it, even with the parenthesis in which the third line is enclosed by Steevens. The second line evidently wants a word of two syllables, and I feel inclined to read the passage thus:—

'Sweet recreation barr'd, what doth ensue,

But moody [madness] and dull melancholy

Kinsmen to grim and comfortless despair;

And at their heels a huge infectious troop!

Heath proposed a similar emendation, but placed moping where I have placed madness.

And will have no attorney¹ but myself;
And therefore let me have him home with me.

Abb. Be patient; for I will not let him stir,
Till I have used the approv'd means I have,
With wholesome syrups, drugs, and holy prayers,
To make of him a formal man again:²
It is a branch and parcel of mine oath,
A charitable duty of my order;
Therefore depart, and leave him here with me.

Adr. I will not hence, and leave my husband here;
And ill it doth besem your holiness,
To separate the husband and the wife.

Abb. Be quiet, and depart, thou shalt not have him.
[Exit Abbess.]

Luc. Complain unto the duke of this indignity.

Adr. Come, go; I will fall prostrate at his feet,
And never rise until my tears and prayers
Have won his grace to come in person hither,
And take perforce my husband from the abbess.

Mer. By this, I think, the dial points at five:
Anon, I am sure, the duke himself in person
Comes this way to the melancholy vale;
The place of death and sorry³ execution,
Behind the ditches of the abbey here.

Ang. Upon what cause?

Mer. To see a reverend Syracusan merchant,
Who put unluckily into this bay
Against the laws and statutes of this town,
Beheaded publicly for his offence.

Ang. See, where they come; we will behold his death.

Luc. Kneel to the duke, before he pass the abbey.

Enter Duke attended; EGGEON bare-headed; with the Headsman and other Officers.

Duke. Yet once again proclaim it publicly,
If any friend will pay the sum for him,
He shall not die, so much we tender him.

Adr. Justice, most sacred duke, against the abbess!

Duke. She is a virtuous and a reverend lady;
It cannot be, that she hath done thee wrong.

Adr. May it please your grace, Antipholus, my husband,—

Whom I made lord of me and all I had,
At your important⁴ letters,—this ill day
A most outrageous fit of madness took him;
That desperately he hurried through the street
(With him his bondman, all as mad as he,)

Doing displeasure to the citizens
By rushing in their houses, bearing thence Rings, jewels, any thing his rage did like.
Once did I get him bound, and sent him home,
Whilst to take order⁵ for the wrongs I went,
That here and there his fury had committed.

Anon, I wot⁶ not by what strong escape,
He broke from those that had the guard of him;
And with his mad attendant and himself,
Each one with ireful passion, with drawn swords,
Met us again, and madly bent on us,
Chas'd us away; till raising of more aid,
We came again to bind them: then they fled
Into this abbey, whither we pursued them:
And here the abbess shuts the gates on us,
And will not suffer us to fetch him out,
Nor send him forth, that we may bear him hence.
Therefore, most gracious duke, with thy command,
Let him be brought forth, and borne hence for help.

Duke. Long since, thy husband served me in my wars;

And I to thee engag'd a prince's word,
When thou didst make him master of thy bed,

To do him all the grace and good I could.—
Go, some of you, knock at the abbey-gate
And bid the lady abbess come to me;
I will determine this, before I stir.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. O mistress, mistress, shift and save yourself!
My master and his man⁷ are both broke loose,
Beaten the maids a-row,⁸ and bound the doctor,
Whose beard they have singed off with brands of fire;

And ever as it blaz'd they threw on him
Great pails of puddled mire to quench the hair:
My master preaches patience to him, and the while
His man with scissiors nicks him⁹ like a fool:
And, sure, unless you send some present help,
Between them they will kill the conjuror.

Adr. Peace, fool, thy master and his man are here;

And that is false, thou dost report to us.

Serv. Mistress, upon my life, I tell you true;
I have not breath'd almost, since I did see it.
He cries for you, and vows, if he can take you,
To scorch your face, and to disfigure you:

[Cry within.]

Hark, hark, I hear him, mistress; fly, begone.

Duke. Come, stand by me, fear nothing: Guard with halberds.

Adr. Ah me, it is my husband! Witness you,
That he is borne about invisible:

Even now we housed him in the abbey here;
And now he's there, past thought of human reason.

Enter ANTIPHOLUS and DROMIO of Ephesus.

Ant. E. Justice, most gracious duke, oh, grant me justice!

Even for the service that long since I did thee,
When I bestrid thee in the wars,¹⁰ and took Deep scars to save thy life; even for the blood
That then I lost for thee, now grant me justice.

Ege. Unless the fear of death doth make me dote,
I see my son Antipholus and Dromio.

Ant. E. Justice, sweet prince, against that woman there.

She whom thou gav'st to me to be my wife;

That hath abused and dishonour'd me,

Even in the strength and height of injury!

Beyond imagination is the wrong,

That she this day hath shameless thrown on me.

Duke. Discover how, and thou shalt find me just.

Ant. E. This day, great duke, she shut the doors upon me,

While she with harlots¹¹ feasted in my house.

Duke. A grievous fault: say, woman, didst thou so?

Adr. No, my good lord;—myself, he, and my sister,

To-day did dine together: So befall my soul,

As this is false he burdens me withal!

Luc. Ne'er may I look on day, nor sleep on night,
But she tells to your highness simple truth!

Ang. O perjur'd woman! They are both forsworn.
In this the madman justly chargeth them.

Ant. E. My liege, I am advis'd¹² what I say;

Neither disturbed with the effect of wine,

Nor heady rash, provoked with raging ire,

Albeit my wrongs might make one wiser mad.

This woman lock'd me out this day from dinner;

That goldsmith there, were he not pack'd with her,

Could witness it, for he was with me then;

Who parted with me to go fetch a chain,

Promising to bring it to the Porcupine,

Choice of Change, 1598. 'Three things used by monks which provoke other men to laugh at their follies. 1. They are shaven and notched on the head like foolies.' Florio explains, 'saccene, a shaven pate, a notted poll, a poll-pate, a gull, a ninie.'
10 This act of friendship is frequently mentioned by Shakspeare.

11 Harlot was a term anciently applied to a rogue or base person among men, as well as to wantons among women. See Todd's Johnson.

12 'I speak with consideration and circumspectly, not rashly and precipitately.'

1 i. e. substitute.

2 i. e. to bring him back to his senses, and the accustomed forms of sober behaviour. In Measure for Measure, 'informal women' is used for just the contrary.

3 i. e. dismal.—'dismolde and sorrie, atra funestus.'

4 i. e. importunate.

5 i. e. to take measures.

6 To wot is to know. Strong escape is an escape effected by strength or violence.

7 Are is here inaccurately put for have.

8 i. e. successively, one after another.

9 The heads of fools were shaved, or their hair cut close, as appears by the following passage in The

Where Balthazar and I did dine together.
Our dinner done, and he not coming thither,
I went to seek him: in the street I met him;
And in his company, that gentleman.
There did this perjur'd goldsmith swear me down,
That I this day of him receiv'd the chain,
Which, God he knows, I saw not: for the which,
He did arrest me with an officer.
I did obey; and sent my peasant home
For certain ducats: he with none return'd.
Then fairly I bespoke the officer,
To go in person with me to my house.
By the way we met
My wife, her sister, and a rabble more
Of vile confederates; along with them
They brought one Pinch; a hungry lean-fac'd villan,
A mere anatomy, a mountebank,
A thread-bare juggler, and a fortune-teller;
A needy, hollow-eyed, sharp-looking wretch,
A living dead man:¹ this pernicious slave,
Forsooth, took on him as a conjurer;
And, gazing in mine eyes, feeling my pulse,
And with no face, as 'twere, outfacing me,
Cries out I was possess'd: then altogether
They fell upon me, bound me, bore me thence,
And in a dark and dankish vault at home
There left me and my man, both bound together;
Till gnawing with my teeth my bonds in sunder,
I gain'd my freedom, and immediately
Ran hither to your grace; whom I beseech
To give me ample satisfaction
For these deep shames and great indignities.

Ang. My lord, in truth, thus far I witness with him;
That he din'd not at home, but was lock'd out.

Duke. But had he such a chain of thee, or no?

Ang. He had, my lord: and when he ran in here,
These people saw the chain about his neck.

Mer. Besides I will be sworn, these ears of mine
Heard you confess, you had the chain of him,
After you first forswore it on the mart,
And, thereupon I drew my sword on you;
And then you fled into this abbey here,
From whence, I think, you are come by miracle.

Ant. E. I never came within these abbey walls,
Nor ever didst thou draw thy sword on me:
I never saw the chain, so help me heaven!
And this is false, you burden me withal.

Duke. Why, what an intricate impeach is this!
I think you all have drunk of Circe's cup.

If here you hous'd him, here he would have been;
If he were mad, he would not plead so coldly:—
You say, he din'd at home; the goldsmith here
Denies that saying:—Sirrah, what say you?

Dro. E. Sir, he din'd with her there, at the Porcupine.

Cour. He did; and from my finger snatch'd that ring.

Ant. E. 'Tis true, my liege, this ring I had of her.

Duke. Saw'st thou him enter at the abbey here?

Cour. As sure, my liege, as I do see your grace.

Duke. Why, this is strange:—Go, call the abbess hither;
I think, you are all mated,² or stark mad.

[Exit an Attendant.]

Æge. Most mighty duke, vouchsafe me speak a word;

Haply I see a friend will save my life,
And pay the sum that may deliver me.

Duke. Speak freely, Syracusan, what thou wilt.

Æge. Is not your name, sir, call'd Antipholus?
And is not your bondman Dromio?

Dro. E. Within this hour, I was his bondman, sir,
But he, I thank him, gnaw'd in two my cords;
Now am I Dromio, and his man, unbound.

1 '—'—'—' but as a living death,
So ded alive of life he drew the breath.'

Sackville's Introduction to the Mirror of Magistrates.
2 Mated is confounded. See note on Macbeth, Act vi. Sc. 1.

3 Deformed for deforming.

4 See note on Act II. Sc. 1.

5 Dromio delights in a quibble, and the word bound has before been the subject of his mirth

Æge. I am sure, you both of you remember me.

Dro. E. Ourselves, we do remember, sir, by you
For lately we were bound as you are now.

You are not Pinch's patient, are you, sir?

Æge. Why look you strange on me? you know me well.

Ant. E. I never saw you in my life, till now.

Æge. Oh! grief hath chang'd me, since you saw me last;

And careful hours, with Time's deformed³ hand,

Have written strange defeatures⁴ in my face:

But tell me yet, dost thou not know my voice?

Ant. E. Neither.

Æge. Dromio, nor thou?

Dro. E. No, trust me, sir, nor I.

Æge. I am sure, thou dost.

Dro. E. Ay, sir? but I am sure, I do not; and whatsoever a man denies, you are now bound to believe him.⁵

Æge. Not know my voice! O, time's extremity!

Hast thou so crack'd and splitted my poor tongue,

In seven short years, that here my only son

Knows not my feeble key of untun'd cares?⁶

Though now this grain'd⁷ face of mine be hid

In sap-consuming winter's drizzled snow,

And all the conduits of my blood froze up;

Yet hath my night of life some memory,

My wasting lamp some fading glimmer left,

My dull deaf ears a little use to hear:

All these old witnesses⁸ (I cannot err.)

Tell me, thou art my son Antipholus.

Ant. E. I never saw my father in my life.

Æge. But seven years since, in Syracusa, boy,

Thou know'st, we parted: but, perhaps, my son,

Thou sham'st to acknowledge me in misery.

Ant. E. The duke and all that know me in the city,

Can witness with me that it is not so;

I ne'er saw Syracusa in my life.

Duke. I tell thee, Syracusan, twenty years

Have I been patron to Antipholus,

During which time he ne'er saw Syracusa:

I see, thy age and dangers make thee dote.

Enter the Abbess, with ANTIPHOLUS Syracusan, and DROMIO Syracusan.

Abb. Most mighty duke, behold a man much wroug'd.

[All gather to see him.]

Adr. I see two husbands, or mine eyes deceive me.

Duke. One of these men is Genius to the other;

And so of these: Which is the natural man,

And which the spirit? Who deciphers them?

Dro. E. I, sir, am Dromio; command him away.

Dro. E. I, sir, am Dromio; pray, let me stay.

Ant. S. Ægeon, art thou not? or else his ghost?

Dro. S. O, my old master! who hath bound him
here.

Abb. Whoever bound him, I will loose his bonds,

And gain a husband by his liberty:

Speak, old Ægeon, if thou be'st the man

That hadst a wife once call'd Æmilia,

That bore thee at a burden two fair sons:

O, if thou be'st the same Ægeon, speak,

And speak unto the same Æmilia!

Æge. If I dream not, thou art Æmilia.⁹

If thou art she, tell me, where is that son

That floated with thee on the fatal raft?

Abb. By men of Epidamnus, he, and I

And the twin Dromio, all were taken up;

But, by and by, rude fishermen of Corinth

By force took Dromio and my son from them,

And me they left with those of Epidamnus:

6 i.e. the weak and discordant tone of my voice, which is changed by grief.

7 Furrowed, lined.

8 'But if my frosty signs and chaps of age,
Grave witnesses of true experience.'

Titus Adronicus, Sc. ult.

9 In the old copy this speech of Ægeon, and the subsequent one of the abbess, follow the speech of the Duke. It is evident that they were transposed by mistake.

What then became of them, I cannot tell :
[, to this fortune that you see me in.

Duke. Why, here begins this morning story right ;
These two Antipholuses, these two so alike,
And these two Dromios, one in semblance,— Besides her urging of her wreck at sea,—
These are the parents to these children,³
Which accidentally are met together.

Antipholus, thou cam'st from Corinth first.

Ant. S. No, sir, not I ; I came from Syracuse.

Duke. Stay, stand apart ; I know not which is which.

Ant. E. I came from Corinth, my most gracious lord.

Dro. E. And I with him.

Ant. E. Brought to this town with that most famous warrior

Duke Menaphon, your most renowned uncle.

Adr. Which of you two did dine with me to-day ?

Ant. S. I, gentle mistress.

Adr. And are not you my husband ?

Ant. E. No, I say nay to that.

Ant. S. And so do I, yet did she call me so ;

And this fair gentlewoman, her sister here,

Did call me brother :—What I told you then,

I hope, I shall have leisure to make good ;

If this be not a dream I see and hear.

Ang. That is the chain, sir, which you had of me.

Ant. S. I think it be, sir ; I deny it not.

Ant. E. And you, sir, for this chain arrested me.

Ang. I think I did, sir ; I deny it not.

Adr. I sent you, money, sir, to be your bail,

By Dromio ; but I think he brought it not.

Dro. E. No, none by me.

Ant. S. This purse of ducats I receiv'd from you,
And Dromio my man did bring them me :

I see, we still did meet each other's man,

And I was ta'en for him, and he for me,

And thereupon these Errors are arose.

Ant. E. These ducats pawn I for my father here.

Duke. It shall not need, thy father hath his life.

Cour. Sir, I must have that diamond from you.

Ant. E. There, take it ; and much thanks for my good cheer.

Abb. Renowned duke, vouchsafe to take the pains
To go with us into the abbey here,

And hear at large discoursed all our fortunes :

And all that are assembled in this place,

That by this sympathized one day's error

Have suffer'd wrong, go, keep us company,

And we shall make full satisfaction.—

Twenty-five years have I but gone in travail
Of you, my sons, and till this present hour ;—

1 'The morning story' is what Ægeon tells the Duke in the first scene of this play.

2 Semblance is here a trisyllable. It appears probable that a line has been omitted here, the import of which may have been :

'These circumstances all concur to prove

These are the parents,' &c.

If it began with the word these as well as the succeeding one, the error would easily happen.

3 Children is here a trisyllable, it is often spelled as it was pronounced then, children.

4 The old copy reads, erroneously, thus :

'Thirty-three years have I but gone in travail
Of you, my sons ; and till this present hour
My heavy burthen are delivered.'

My heavy burden here delivered.⁴

The duke, my husband, and my children both,

And you the calendars of their nativity,⁵

Go to a gossip's feast,⁶ and go with me ;

After so long grief, such naivety !

Duke. With all my heart, I'll gossip at this feast.

[Exeunt Duke, Abbess, Ægeon, Courtezan,
Merchant, Angelo, and Attendants.]

Dro. S. Master, shall I fetch your stuff from ship-board ?

Ant. E. Dromio, what stuff of mine hast thou embarked ?

Dro. S. Your goods, that lay at host, sir, in the Centaur.

Ant. S. He speaks to me ; I am your master, Dromio ;

Come, go with us : we'll look to that anon :
Embrace thy brother there, rejoice with him.

[Exeunt ANT. S. and ANT. E. ADR. and LUC.]

Dro. S. There is a fat friend at your master's house,

That kitchen'd me for you to-day at dinner ;
She now shall be my sister, not my wife.

Dro. E. Methinks you are my glass, and not my brother :

I see by you I am a sweet-faced youth.

Will you walk in to see their gossiping ?

Dro. S. Not I, sir ; you are my elder.

Dro. E. That's a question : how shall we try it :

Dro. S. We will draw cuts for the senior : till then, lead thou first.

Dro. E. Nay ; then thus :

We came into the world, like brother and brother ;
And now let's go hand in hand, not one before another. [Exeunt.]

ON a careful revision of the foregoing scenes, I do not hesitate to pronounce them the composition of two very unequal writers. Shakspeare had undoubtedly a share in them ; but that the entire play was no work of his, is an opinion which (as Benedict says) "fire cannot melt out of me ; I will die in it at the stake." Thus as we are informed by Aulus Gellius, Lib. III. Cap. 3, some plays were absolutely ascribed to Plautus, which in truth had only been (retractate et expolite) retouched and polished by him.

In this comedy we find more intricacy of plot than distinction of character ; and our attention is less forcibly engaged, because we can guess in great measure how the denouement will be brought about. Yet the subject appears to have been reluctantly dismissed, even in this last and unnecessary scene, where the same mistakes are continued, till the power of affording entertainment is entirely lost. STEEVENS.

Theobald corrected it in the following manner :

Twenty-five years have I but gone in travail

Of you, my sons ; nor till this present hour

My heavy burdens are delivered.

Malone, after much argument, gives it thus :

Of you, my sons ; until this present hour

My heavy burden not delivered.

Thirty-three years are an evident error for twenty-five ; this was corrected by Theobald. The reader will choose between the simple emendation which I have made in the text, and those made by Theobald and Malone.

5 i. e. the two Dromios. Antipholus of Syracuse has already called one of them 'the almanack of my true date.' See note on Act I, Sc. 2.

6 Heath thought that we should read, 'and joy with me.' Warburton proposed gaud, but the old reading is probably right.

MACBETH

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

DR. JOHNSON thought it necessary to prefix to this play an apology for Shakspeare's magic;—in which he says, 'A poet who should now make the whole action of his tragedy depend upon enchantment, and produce the chief events by the assistance of supernatural agents, would be censured as transgressing the bounds of probability, be banished from the theatre to the nursery, and condemned to write fairy tales instead of tragedies.' He then proceeds to defend this transgression upon the ground of the credulity of the poet's age; when 'the scenes of enchantment, however they may be now ridiculed, were both by himself and his audience thought awful and affecting.' By whom, or when (always excepting French criticism), these sublime conceptions were in danger of ridicule, he has not told us; and I sadly fear that this superfluous apology arose from the misgivings of the great critic's mind. Schlegel has justly remarked that, 'Whether the age of Shakspeare still believed in witchcraft and ghosts, is a matter of perfect indifference for the justification of the use which, in Hamlet and Macbeth, he has made of preëxisting traditions. No superstition can ever be prevalent and widely diffused through ages and nations without having a foundation in human nature: on this foundation the poet builds; he calls up from their hidden abysses that dread of the unknown, that presage of a dark side of nature, and a world of spirits which philosophy now imagines it has altogether exploded. In this manner he is in some degree both the portrayer and the philosopher of a superstition; that is, not the philosopher who denies and turns into ridicule, but, which is still more difficult, who distinctly exhibits its origin to us in apparently irrational and yet natural opinions.'—In another place the same admirable critic says—'Since The Furies of Æschylus, nothing so grand and terrible has ever been composed: The Witches, it is true, are not divine Eumenides, and are not intended to be so; they are ignoble and vulgar instruments of hell. They discourse with one another like women of the very lowest class; for this was the class to which witches were supposed to belong. When, however, they address Macbeth, their tone assumes more elevation: their predictions have all the obscure brevity, the majestic solemnity, by which oracles have in all times contrived to inspire mortals with reverential awe. We here see that the witches are merely instruments; they are governed by an invisible spirit, or the operation of such great and dreadful events would be above their sphere.' Their agency was necessary; for natural motives alone would have seemed inadequate to effect such a change as takes place in the nature and dispositions of Macbeth. By this means the poet 'has exhibited a more sublime picture to us: an ambitious but noble hero, who yields to a deep laid hellish temptation; and all the crimes to which he is impelled by necessity, to secure the fruits of his first crime, cannot altogether eradicate in him the stamp of native heroism.' He has therefore given a threefold division to the guilt of that crime. The first idea comes from that being whose whole activity is guided by a lust of wickedness. The weird sisters surprise Macbeth in the moment of intoxication after his victory, when his love of glory has been gratified; they cheat his eyes by exhibiting to him as the work of fate what can only in reality be accomplished by his own deed, and gain credence for their words by the immediate fulfilment of the first prediction. The opportunity for murdering the king immediately offers itself; Lady Macbeth conjures him not to let it slip; she urges him on with a fiery eloquence, which has all those sophisms at command that serve to throw a false grandeur over crime. Little more than the mere execution falls to the share of Macbeth; he is driven to it as it were in a state of commotion, in which his mind is bewildered. Repentance immediately follows; nay, even precedes the deed; and the stings of his conscience leave him no rest either night or day. But he is now fairly entangled in the snares of hell; it is truly frightful to behold that Macbeth, who once as a warrior could spurn at death, now that he dreads the prospect of the life to come, clinging with growing anxiety to his earthly existence, the more miserable it becomes, and pitilessly removing out of his way whatever to his dark and suspicious mind seems to threaten danger. However much we may abhor his actions, we cannot altogether refuse to sympathize with the state of his mind; we lament the ruin of so many noble qualities; and, even in his last defence, we are compelled to admire in him the struggle of a brave will with a cowardly conscience.—The poet wishes to show that the conflict of good and evil in this world can only take place by the permission of Providence, which converts the curse that individual mortals draw down on their heads into a blessing to others. Lady Macbeth, who of all the human beings is the most guilty participator in the murder of the king, falls, through the horrors of her conscience, into a state of incurable bodily and mental disease; she dies, unlamented by her husband, with all the symptoms of reprobation. Macbeth is still found worthy of dying the death of a hero on the field of battle. Banquo staves for the ambitious curiosity which prompted him to wish to know his glorious descendants by an early death, as he thereby rouses Macbeth's jealousy; but he preserved his mind pure from the bubbles of the witches; his name is blessed in his race, destined to enjoy for a long succession of ages that royal dignity which Macbeth could only hold during his own life. In the progress of the action, this piece is altogether the reverse of Hamlet: it strides forward with amazing rapidity from the first catastrophe (for Duncan's murder may be called a catastrophe) to the last. Thought, and done! is the general motto; for, as Macbeth says,

'The flighty purpose never is o'took
Unless the deed go with it.'

In every feature we see a vigorous heroic age in the hardy North, which steels every nerve. The precise duration of the action cannot be ascertained,—years, perhaps, according to the story; but we know that to the imagination the most crowded time appears always the shortest. Here we can hardly conceive how so very much can be compressed into so narrow a space; not merely external events—the very innermost recesses of the minds of the persons of the drama are laid open to us. It is as if the drags were taken from the wheels of time, and they rolled along without interruption in their descent. Nothing can equal the power of this picture in the excitation of horror. We need only allude to the circumstance attending the murder of Duncan, the dagger that hovers before the eyes of Macbeth, the vision of Banquo at the feast, the madness of Lady Macbeth; what can we possibly say on the subject that will not rather weaken the impression? Such scenes stand alone, and are to be found only in this poet; otherwise the tragic muse might exchange her mask for the head of Medusa.*

Shakspeare followed the chronicle of Holinshed, and Holinshed borrowed his narration from the chronicles of Scotland, translated by John Bellenden, from the Latin of Hector Boethius, and first published at Edinburgh in 1541.

Malcolm the Second, king of Scotland, had two daughters. The eldest was married to Crynin, the father of Duncan, Thane of the isles, and western parts of Scotland; and on the death of Malcolm without male issue Duncan succeeded to the throne. Malcolm's second daughter was married to Sinel, Thane of Glamis, the father of Macbeth. Duncan, who married the sister of Siward, Earl of Northumberland, was murdered by his cousin german Macbeth, in the castle of Inverness, about the year 1040 or 1045. Macbeth was himself slain by Macduff, according to Boethius in 1061, according to Buchanan in 1057, at which time Edward the Confessor reigned in England.

In the reign of Duncan, Banquo having been plundered by the people of Lochaber of some of the king's revenues, which he had collected, and being dangerously wounded in the affray, the persons concerned in this outrage were summoned to appear at a certain day. But they slew the sergeant at arms who summoned them, and chose one Macdonwald as their captain. Macdonwald speedily collected a considerable body of forces from Ireland and the Western Isles, and in one action gained a victory over the king's army. In this battle Malcolm, a Scottish nobleman (who was lieutenant to Duncan in Lochaber) was slain. Afterwards Macbeth and Banquo were appointed to the command of the army; and Macdonwald, being obliged to take refuge in a castle in Lochaber, first slew his wife and children, and then himself. Macbeth, on entering the castle, finding his dead body, ordered his head to be cut off and carried to the king, at the castle of Bertha, and his body to be hung on a high tree.

At a subsequent period, in the last year of Duncan's reign, Sueno, king of Norway, landed a powerful army in Fife, for the purpose of invading Scotland. Duncan immediately assembled an army to oppose him, and gave the command of two divisions of it to Macbeth and Banquo, putting himself at the head of a third. Sueno was successful in one battle, but in a second was routed; and, after a great slaughter of his troops, he escaped with ten persons only, and fled back to Norway. Though there was an interval of time between the rebellion of Macdonwald and the invasion of Sueno, Shakspeare has woven these two actions together, and immediately after Sueno's defeat the present play commences.

It is remarkable that Buchanan has pointed out Macbeth's history as a subject for the stage. 'Multa hic fabuloso quidam nostrorum affingunt; sed quia theatris aut Milesiis fabulis sunt aptiora quam historiæ, ea omitto.'—Rerum Scot. Hist. Lib. vii.

Milton also enumerates the subject among those he considered well suited for tragedy, but it appears that he would have attempted to preserve the unity of time by placing the relation of the murder of Duncan in the mouth of his ghost.

Macbeth is one of the latest, and unquestionably one of the noblest efforts of Shakspeare's genius. Equally impressive in the closet and on the stage, where to witness its representation has been justly pronounced 'the first of all dramatic enjoyments.' Malone places the date of its composition in 1606, and it has been supposed to convey a dexterous and delicate compliment to James the first, who derived his lineage from Banquo, and first united the threefold sceptre of England, Scotland, and Ireland. At the same time the monarch's prejudices on the subject of demonology were flattered by the choice of the story.

It was once thought that Shakspeare derived some hints for his scenes of incantation from The Witch, a tragicomedy, by John Middleton, which, after lying long in manuscript, was published about thirty years since by Isaac Reed; but Malone* has with considerable ingenuity shown that Middleton's drama was most probably written subsequently to Macbeth.

ACT I.

SCENE I. An open Place. Thunder and Lightning. Enter three Witches.

1 Witch.

WHEN shall we three meet again
In thunder, lightning, or in rain?

2 Witch. When the hurlyburly's done,
When the battle's lost and won.

3 Witch. That will be ere set of sun.

1 Witch. Where the place?

2 Witch. Upon the heath:

3 Witch. There to meet with Macbeth.

1 Witch. I come, Graymalkin!

All. Paddock calls:—Anon.⁴

1 Lady Macbeth's name was Gruach filia Bodhe, according to Lord Hailes. Andrew of Wintown, in his Cronykil, informs us that she was the widow of Duncan; a circumstance with which Shakspeare was of course unacquainted.

2 As the play now stands, in Act iv. Sc. 1, three other witches make their appearance.

3 'When the hurlyburly's done.' In Adagia Scotica, or A Collection of Scotch Proverbs and Proverbial Phrases; collected by R. B.; very useful and delightful. Lond. 12mo. 1668:—

'Little kens the wife that sits by the fire
How the wind blows cold in hurle burle sueyre.'

'i. e. in the tempestuous mountain-top,' says Mr. Todd, in a note on Spenser; to which Mr. Boswell gives his assent, and says, 'this sense seems agreeable to the witch's answer.' But Peacham, in his Garden of Eloquence, 1577, shows that this was not the ancient acceptance of the word among us: 'Onomatopela, when

Fair is foul, and foul is fair:
Hover through the fog and filthy air.

[Witches vanish.]

SCENE II. A Camp near Forres. Alarum within. Enter King DUNCAN, MALCOLM, DONALBAIN, LENOX, with Attendants, meeting a bleeding Soldier.¹

Dun. What bloody man is that? He can report,
As seemeth by his plight, of the revolt
The newest state.

Mal. This is the sergeant,⁶
Who, like a good and hardy soldier, fought
'Gainst my captivity:—Hail, brave friend!
Say to the king the knowledge of the broil,
As thou didst leave it.

we invent, devise, sayne, and make a name imitating the sound of that it signifyeth, as hurlyburly, for an up rore and tumultuous stirre.' So in Baret's Alvearie, 1573:—'But hark yonder: what hurlyburly or noyse is yonde: what sturre ruffling or bruite is that?'—The witches could not mean when the storm was done, but when the tumult of the battle was over; for they are to meet again in lightning, thunder, and rain: their element was a storm.

4 Upton observes, that, to understand this passage, we should suppose one familiar calling with the voice of a cat, and another with the creaking of a toad. A paddock most generally seems to have signified a toad, though it sometimes means a frog. What we now call a toadstool was anciently called a paddock-stool.

5 The first folio reads captain.

6 Sergeants, in ancient times, were not the petty officers now distinguished by that title, but men performing one kind of feudal military service, in rank next to esquires.

Sold. Doubtful it stood;
As two spent swimmers, that do cling together,
And choke their art. The merciless Macdonwald (Worthy to be a rebel; for to that¹
The multiplying villanies of nature
Do swarm upon him), from the western isles
Of Kernes and Gallowglasses is supplied;²
And fortune, on his damned quarry³ smiling,
Show'd like a rebel's whore.⁴ But all's too weak:
For brave Macbeth (well he deserves that name),
Disdaining fortune, with his brandish'd steel,
Which smok'd with bloody execution,
Like valour's minion,
Carv'd out his passage, till he fac'd the slave;
And ne'er shook hands, nor bade farewell to him,
Till he unseam'd him from the nave to the chaps,
And fix'd his head upon our battlements.

Dun. O, valiant cousin! worthy gentleman!
Sold. As whence the sun 'gins his reflection
Shipwrecking storms and direful thunders break;⁵
So from that spring, whence comfort seem'd to come,
Discomfort swells. Mark, king of Scotland, mark:
No sooner justice had, with valour arm'd,
Compell'd these skipping Kernes to trust their heels,
But the Norwegian lord, surveying vantage,
With furbish'd arms, and new supplies of men,
Began a fresh assault.

Dun. Dismay'd not this
Our captains, Macbeth and Banquo?

Sold. Yes;
As sparrows, eagles; or the hare, the lion.
If I say sooth,⁷ I must report, they were
As cannons overcharg'd with double cracks;⁸
So they
Doubly redoubled strokes upon the foe:
Except they meant to bathe in reeking wounds,
Or memorize another Golgotha,⁹
I cannot tell:—
But I am faint, my gashes cry for help.

Dun. So well thy words become thee, as thy wounds;
They smack of honour both:—Go, get him surgeons. [Exit Soldier, attended.]

1 Vide Tyrwhitt's Glossary to Chaucer, v. for; and Pegge's Anecdotes of the English Language, p. 205. For to that means no more than for that, or cause that. The late editions erroneously point this passage, and as erroneously explain it. I follow the punctuation of the first folio.

2 i. e. supplied with armed troops so named. Of and with are indiscriminately used by our ancient writers. Gallowglasses were heavy-armed foot-soldiers of Ireland and the western isles: Kernes were the lighter armed troops.

3 'But fortune on his damned quarry smiling.'—Thus the old copies. It was altered at Johnson's suggestion to quarrel, which is approved and defended by Stevens and Malone. But the old copy needs no alteration. Quarry means the squadron, escadre, or squire body, into which Macdonwald's troops were formed, better to receive the charge; through which Macbeth 'carved out his passage till he faced the slave.'

4 The meaning is, that Fortune, while she smiled on him, deceived him.

5 The old copy reads which.

6 Sir W. D'Avenant's reading of this passage, in his alteration of the play, is a tolerable comment on it:—
'But then this daybreak of our victory
Serv'd but to light us into other dangers,
That spring from whence our hopes did seem to rise.'

Break is not in the first folio.
7 Truth.
8 That is, reports.

9 i. e. make another Golgotha as memorable as the first.
10 'That seems about to speak strange things.'

11 So in King John:—
'Mocking the air with colours idly spread.'

12 By Bellona's bridegroom Shakspeare means Macbeth. Lapp'd in proof is defended by armour of proof.

13 Confronted him with self-comparisons. By him is meant Norway, and by self-comparisons is meant that he gave him as good as he brought, showed that he was his equal.

14 It appears probable, as Stevens suggests, that Suceno was only a marginal reference, which has crept

Enter Rosse.

Who comes here?

Mal. The worthythane of Rosse.

Len. What a haste looks through his eyes! So should he look,

That seems to speak things strange.¹⁰

Rosse. God save the king!

Dun. Whence cam'st thou, worthythane?

Rosse. From Fife, great king.
Where the Norwegian banners flout the sky,¹¹

And fan our people cold.

Norway himself, with terrible numbers,

Assisted by that most disloyal traitor

Thethane of Cawdor, 'gan a dismal conflict:

Till that Bellona's bridegroom,¹² lapp'd in proof

Confronted him with self-comparisons,¹³

Point against point rebellious, arm 'gainst arm,

Curbing his lavish spirit: And, to conclude,

The victory fell on us;—

Dun. Great happiness!

Rosse. That now

Sveno,¹⁴ the Norways' king, craves composition;

Nor would we deign him burial of his men,

Till he disbursed, at Saint Colmes' Inch,¹⁵

Ten thousand dollars to our general use.

Dun. No more than thatthane of Cawdor shall deceive
Our bosom interest:—Go, pronounce his present death,

And with his former title greet Macbeth.

Rosse. I'll see it done.

Dun. What he hath lost, noble Macbeth hath won. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. A Heath. Thunder. Enter the three Witches.

1 Witch. Where hast thou been, sister?

2 Witch. Killing swine.

3 Witch. Sister, where thou?

1 Witch. A sailor's wife had chestnuts in her lap,
And mounch'd, and mounch'd, and mounch'd:—

Give me, quoth I:

*Aroint thee,*¹⁶ witch! the rump-fed ronyon!¹⁷ cries.

Her husband's to Aleppo gone, master of the Tiger:
But in a sieve I'll thither sail,¹⁸ into the text by mistake, and that the line originally stood—

'That now the Norway's king craves composition.'

It was surely not necessary for Rosse to tell Duncan the name of his old enemy, the king of Norway.

15 Colmes' Inch is here a dissyllable. Colmes' Inch, now called Inchcomb, is a small island, lying in the Firth of Edinburgh, with an abbey upon it dedicated to St. Columb. Inch or inse, in Erse, signifies an island.

16 The etymology of this imprecation is yet to seek. Rynt ye, for out with ye! stand off! is still used in Cheshire, where there is also a proverbial saying, 'Rynt ye, witch, quoth Besse Locket to her mother.' Tooke thought it was from roymous, and might signify 'a scab or scale on thee!' Others have derived it from the roican-tree, or witch-hazel, the wood of which was believed to be a powerful charm against witchcraft; and every careful housewife had a churn-staff made of it. This superstition is as old as Pliny's time, who asserts that 'a serpent will rather creep into the fire than over a twig of ash.' The French have a phrase of somewhat similar sound and import—'Arry-avant, away there, ho!'—Mr. Douce thinks that 'aroint thee' will be found to have a Saxon origin.

17 'Rump-fed ronyon,' a scabby or mangy woman, fed on offals; the rumps being formerly part of the emoluments or kitchen fees of the cooks in great houses.

18 In The Discovery of Witchcraft, by Reginald Scott, 1584, he says it was believed that witches 'could sail in an egg-shell, a cockle, or muscle-shell, through and under the tempestuous seas.' And in another pamphlet, 'Declaring the damnable Life of Doctor Fian, a notable Sorcerer, who was buried at Edenborough in Januarie last, 1591,'—'All they together went to sea, each one in a riddle or cive, and went in the same very substantially, with flaggons of wine making merrie, and drinking by the way in the same riddles or cives,' &c.

Sir W. D'Avenant, in his Albavine, 1629, says—

'He sits like a witch sailing in a sieve.'
It was the belief of the times, that though a witch could assume the form of any animal she pleased, the tail would still be wanting.

And, like a rat without a tail,
I'll do, I'll do, and I'll do.

2 Witch. I'll give thee a wind.¹

1 Witch. Thou art kind.

3 Witch. And I another.

1 Witch. I myself have all the other;

And the very ports they blow,
All the quarters that they know
I' the shipman's card.²

I will drain him dry as hay:

Sleep shall, neither night nor day,

Hang upon his pent-house lid;

He shall live a man forbid:³

Weary sev'n-nights, nine times nine,

Shall he dwindle, peak, and pine:⁴

Though his bark cannot be lost,

Yet it shall be tempest-toss'd.⁵

Look what I have.

2 Witch. Show me, show me.

1 Witch. Here I have a pilot's thumb,
Wreck'd, as homeward he did come. [Drum within.]

3 Witch. A drum, a drum;

Macbeth doth come.

All. The weird sisters,⁶ hand in hand,

Posters of the sea and land,

Thus do go about, about;

Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine,

And thrice again, to make up nine:

Peace!—the charm's wound up.

Enter MACBETH and BANQUO.

Macb. So foul and fair a day I have not seen.

Ban. How far is't call'd to Fores?—What are these,

So wither'd, and so wild in their attire;

That look not like the inhabitants o' the earth,

And yet are on't? Live you? or are you aught

That man may question? You seem to understand me,

By each at once her choppy finger laying

Upon her skinny lips:—You should be women,

And yet your beards forbid me to interpret

That you are so.

Macb. Speak, if you can;—What are you?

1 Witch. All hail, Macbeth! hail to thee, thane of Glamis!⁷

2 Witch. All hail, Macbeth! hail to thee, thane of Cawdor!

3 Witch. All hail, Macbeth! that shalt be king hereafter.

Ban. Good sir, why do you start; and seem to fear

Things that do sound so fair?—I' the name of truth,

1 This free gift of a wind is to be considered as an act of sisterly friendship; for witches were supposed to sell them.

2 I. e. the sailor's chart; carte-marine.

3 Forbid, i. e. forespoken, unhappy, charmed or bewitched. The explanation of Theobald and Johnson, 'interdicted or under a curse,' is erroneous. A forbiddin fellow, Scotice, still signifies an unhappy one.

4 This mischief was supposed to be put in execution by means of a waxen figure. Hollinshed, speaking of the witchcraft practised to destroy King Duff, says that they found one of the witches roasting, upon a wooden broach, an image of wax at the fire, resembling in each feature the king's person, &c.—'for as the image did waste afore the fire, so did the bodie of the king break forth in sweat: and as for the words of the enchantment, they served to keepe him still waking from sleepe.' This may serve to explain the foregoing passage:—

'Sleep shall, neither night nor day,
Hang upon his pent-house lid.'

5 In the pamphlet about Dr. Flan, already quoted—'Again it is confessed, that the said christened cat was the cause of the King's majestie's shippe, at his coming forth of Denmarke, had a contrarie vinde to the rest of his shippes then being in his companie.'—'And further the said witch declared, that his majestie had never come safely from the sea, if his faith had not prevailed above their intentions.' To this circumstance, perhaps, Shakespeare's allusion is sufficiently plain.

6 The old copy has weyward, evidently by mistake. Weird, from the Saxon, a witch, Shakespeare found in Hollinshed. Gavin Douglas, in his translation of Virgil, renders the parce by weird sisters.

Are ye fantastical,⁸ or that indeed

Which outwardly ye show? My noble partner

You greet with present grace, and great prediction

Of noble having,⁹ and of royal hope,

That he seems rapt¹⁰ withal; to me you speak not:

If you can look into the seeds of time,

And say, which grain will grow, and which will not;

Speak then to me, who neither beg, nor fear,

Your favours, nor your hate.

1 Witch. Hail!

2 Witch. Hail!

3 Witch. Hail!

1 Witch. Lesser than Macbeth, and greater.

2 Witch. Not so happy, yet much happier.

3 Witch. Thou shalt get kings, though thou be none:

So, all hail, Macbeth, and Banquo!

1 Witch. Banquo, and Macbeth, all hail!

Macb. Stay, you imperfect speakers, tell me more:

By Sinel's¹¹ death, I know, I am thane of Glamis;

But how of Cawdor? the thane of Cawdor lives,

A prosperous gentleman; and to be king

Stands not within the prospect of belief,

No more than to be Cawdor. Say, from whence

You owe this strange intelligence! or why

Upon this blasted heath you stop our way

With such prophetic greeting?—Speak, I charge you.

Ban. The earth hath bubbles, as the water has,
And these are of them:—Whither are they vanishing?

Macb. Into the air: and what seem'd corporal,
Melted

As breath into the wind.—'Would, they had staid!

Ban. Were such things here, as we do speak about?

Or have we eaten of the insane root,¹²

That takes the reason prisoner?

Macb. Your children shall be kings.

Ban. You shall be king.

Macb. And thane of Cawdor too; went it not so?

Ban. To the selfsame tune, and words. Who's here?

Enter ROSSE and ANGUS.

Rosse. The king hath happily receiv'd, Macbeth,

The news of thy success: and when he reads

Thy personal venture in the rebels' fight,

His wonders and his praises do contend,

Which should be thine, or his: Silence'd with that,¹³

In viewing o'er the rest o' the selfsame day,

He finds thee in the stout Norweyan ranks,

Nothing afraid of what thyself didst make,

Strange images of death. As thick as tale,¹⁴

7 The thaneship of Glamis was the ancient inheritance of Macbeth's family. The castle where they lived is still standing, and was lately the magnificent residence of the earl of Strathmore. Gray has given a particular description of it in a Letter to Dr. Wharton.

8 I. e. creatures of fantasy or imagination.

9 Estate, fortune.

10 Rapt is rapturously affected; extra se raptus.

11 'Sinel.' The late Dr. Beattie conjectured that the real name of this family was Sinane, and that Dunsinane, or the hill of Sinane from thence derived its name.

12 The insane root was probably henbane. In Bateman's Commentary on Bartholome de Propriet. Rerum, a book with which Shakespeare was familiar, is the following passage:—'Henbane is called insana, mad, for the use thereof is perillous; for if it be eate or dronke it breedeth madness, or slow lykenesse of sleepe. Therefore this hearb is called commonly milridium, for it taketh away wit and reason.'

13 I. e. admiration of your deeds, and a desire to do them justice by public commendation, contend in his mind for pre-eminence: he is silenced with wonder.

14 I. e. posts arrived as fast as they could be counted.

'Thicke (says Baret), that cometh often and thicks together: creber, frequens, frequent, souvent venant.' And again, 'Crebritas literarum, the often sending, or thicke coming of letters. Thicke breathing, anhelitus creber.' Shakespeare twice uses 'to speak thick' for 'to speak quick.' To tale or tell is to score or number. Rowe, not understanding this passage, altered it to 'as quick as hail.'

Came¹ post with post; and every one did bear
Thy praises in thy kingdom's great defence,
And pour'd them down before him.

Ang. We are sent,
To give thee, from our royal master, thanks;
Only to herald thee into his sight, not pay thee.

Rosse. And, for an earnest of a greater honour,
He bade me, from him, call thee thane of Cawdor:
In which addition, hail, most worthy thane!
For it is thine.

Ban. What, can the devil speak true?

Macb. The thane of Cawdor lives? Why do you dress me
In borrow'd robes?

Ang. Who was the thane, lives yet;
But under heavy judgment bears that life
Which he deserves to lose. Whether he was combin'd

With those of Norway, or did line the rebel
With hidden help and vantage; or that with both
He labour'd in his country's wreck, I know not;
But treasons capital, confess'd, and prov'd,
Have overthrow him.

Macb. Glamis, and thane of Cawdor;
The greatest is behind.—Thanks for your pains.—
Do you not hope your children shall be kings,
When those that gave the thane of Cawdor to me,
Promis'd no less to them?

Ban. That, trusted home,²
Might yet enkindle³ you unto the crown,
Besides the thane of Cawdor. But 'tis strange:
And of oftentimes, to win us to our harm,
The instruments of darkness tell us truths;
Win us with honest trifles, to betray us
In deepest consequence.—
Cousins, a word, I pray you.

Macb. Two truths are told,
As happy prologues to the swelling act⁴
Of the imperial theme.—I thank you, gentlemen.—
This supernatural soliciting⁵
Cannot be ill; cannot be good:—If ill,
Why hath it given me earnest of success,
Commencing in a truth? I am thane of Cawdor:
If good, why do I yield to that suggestion⁶
Whose horrid image doth unfix my hair,
And make my seated⁷ heart knock at my ribs,
Against the use of nature? Present fears
Are less than horrible imaginings:⁸
My thought, whose murder yet is but fantastical,
Shakes so my single⁹ state of man, that function
Is smother'd in surmise;¹⁰ and nothing is,
But what is not.¹¹

Ban. Look, how our partner's rapt.

1 'Came post.' The old copy reads can. Rowe made the emendation.

2 i. e. entirely, thoroughly relied on.

3 Enkindle means 'encourage you to expect the crown.'

4 'As happy prologues to the swelling act.' So in the prologue to King Henry V. :—

'—princes to act,

And monarchs to behold the swelling scene.'

5 i. e. incitement.

6 Suggestion, temptation.

7 Seated, firmly placed, fixed.

8 '—Present fears

Are less than horrible imaginings.'

So in The Tragedie of Cæsus, by Lord Sterline, 1604:

'For as the shadow seems more monstrous still

Than doth the substance whence it hath the being,

So th' apprehension of approaching ill

Seems greater than itself, whilst fears are lying.'

9 By his single state of man, Macbeth means his simple condition of human nature. 'Single soul, for a simple or weak guileless person, was the phraseology of the poet's time. Simplicity and singleness were synonymous.

10 '—that function

Is smother'd in surmise.'

The powers of action are oppressed by conjecture.

11 'But what is not.' Shakspeare has something like this sentiment in The Merchant of Venice :—

'Where every something, being blent together,

Turns to a wild of nothing.'

12 Favour is courtenance, good will, and not pardon,

Macb. If chance will have me king, why, chance may crown me,

Without my stir.

Ban. New honours come upon him Like our strange garments; cleave not to their mould,

But with the aid of use.

Macb. Come what come may;
Time and the hour runs through the roughest day.

Ban. Worthy Macbeth, we stay upon your leisure.

Macb. Give me your favour:¹²—my dull brain was wrought

With things forgotten. Kind gentlemen, your pains,
Are register'd where every day I turn

The leaf to read them.—Let us toward the king.—
Think upon what hath chanc'd: and, at more times,

The interim having weigh'd it,¹³ let us speak
Our free hearts each to other.

Ban. Very gladly.

Macb. Till then, enough.—Come, friends.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. Fores. A Room in the Palace.
Flourish. Enter DUNCAN, MALCOLM, DONAL-BAIN, LENOX, and Attendants.

Dun. Is execution done on Cawdor? Are not
Those in commission yet return'd?

Mal. My liege,
They are not yet come back. But I have spoke
With one that saw him die: who did report,
That very frankly he confess'd his treasons;
Imploir'd your highness' pardon; and set forth
A deep repentance: nothing in his life
Became him, like the leaving it; he died
As one that had been studied in his death,¹⁴
To throw away the dearest thing he ow'd,¹⁵
As 'twere a careless trifle.

Dun. There's no art,
To find the mind's construction in the face:¹⁶
He was a gentleman on whom I built
An absolute trust.—O worthiest cousin!

Enter MACBETH, BANQUO, ROSSE, and ANGUS.

The sin of my ingratitude even now
Was heavy on me: Thou art so far before,
That swiftest wing of recompense is slow
To overtake thee. Would, thou hadst less deserv'd;
That the proportion both of thanks and payment
Might have been mine! only I have left to say,
More is thy due than more than all can pay.¹⁷

Macb. The service and the loyalty I owe,
In doing it, pays itself. Your highness' part
Is to receive our duties: and our duties
Are to your throne and state, children, and servants;
Which do but what they should, by doing every thing

Safe toward your love and honour.¹⁸

as it has been here interpreted. Vide Hamlet, Act v. Sc. 2.

13 'The interim having weigh'd it.' The interim is probably here used adverbially.—'You having weighed it in the interim.'

14 Studied in his death is well instructed in the art of dying. 'The behaviour of the thane of Cawdor corresponds in almost every circumstance with that of the unfortunate earl of Essex, as related by Stowe, p. 793. His asking the queen's forgiveness, his confession, repentance, and concern about behaving with propriety on the scaffold, are minutely described by that historian.' Steevens thinks that an allusion was intended 'to the severity of that justice which deprived the age of one of its greatest ornaments, and Southampton, Shakspeare's patron, of his dearest friend

15 Ow'd, owned, possessed.

16 We cannot construe the disposition of the mind by the lineaments of the face.

17 i. e. I owe thee more than all; nay, more than all which I can say or do will requite.

18 'Safe toward your love and honour.' Sir William Blackstone would read:—

Safe toward you love and honour which he explains thus:—'Our duties are your children, and servants or vassals to your throne and state, who do but what they should, by doing every thing with a saving of their love and honour toward you.' He says that it has reference to the old feudal simple ho-

Dun. Welcome hither :

I have begun to plant thee, and will labour
To make thee full of growing.¹—Noble Banquo,
That hast no less deserv'd, nor must be known
No less to have done so, let me enfold thee,
And hold thee to my heart.

Ban.

There if I grow,

The harvest is your own.

Dun.

My plenteous joys,

Wanton in fulness, seek to hide themselves
In drops of sorrow.²—Sons, kinsmen, thanes,
And you whose places are the nearest, know,
We will establish our estate upon
Our eldest, Malcolm ; whom we name hereafter,
The prince of Cumberland :³ which honour must
Not, unaccompanied, invest him only,
But signs of nobleness, like stars, shall shine
On all deservers.—From hence to Inverness,
And bind us further to you.

Macb. The rest is labour, which is not us'd for you :

I'll be myself the harbinger, and make joyful
The hearing of my wife with your approach ;
So, humbly take my leave.

Dun.

My worthy Cawdor !

Macb. The prince of Cumberland !—That is a step,

On which I must fall down, or else o'erleap,

[Aside.

For in my way it lies. Stars, hide your fires !
Let not light see my black and deep desires :
The eye wink at the hand ! yet let that be,
Which the eye fears, when it is done, to see. [Exit.

Dun. True, worthy Banquo ; he is full so valiant ;⁴

And in his commendations I am fed ;
It is a banquet to me. Let us after him,
Whose care is gone before to bid us welcome :

It is a peerless kinsman.

[Flourish. Execunt.

SCENE V. Inverness. A Room in Macbeth's Castle. Enter LADY MACBETH, reading a Letter.

Lady M. They met me in the day of success ; and I have learned by the perfectest report,⁵ they have more in them than mortal knowledge. When I burned in desire to question them further, they made themselves—air, into which they vanished. Whiles I stood rapt in the wonder of it, came missives⁶ from the king, who all-hailed me, Thane of Cawdor ; by which mage, which when done to a subject was always accompanied with a saving clause—'sauf le foy que j'eo day a nostre seigneur le roy ;' which he thinks awks well with the situation of Macbeth, now beginning to waver in his allegiance. Malone and Steevens seem to favour this explanation : but safe may merely mean respectful, loyal ; like the old French word sauf. Shakespeare has used the old French phrase, sauf votre honneur, several times in King Henry V.

1 l. e. exuberant.

2 'In drops of sorrow.'

—lachrymas non sponte cadentes fudit, gemitusque expressit pectore læto ;
on aliter manifesta potens abscondere mentis
Gaudia, quam lachrymis.' Lucan, lib. ix.

3 Holinshed says, 'Duncan having two sons, &c. he made the elder of them, called Malcolm, prince of Cumberland, as it was thereby to appoint him his successor in his kingdom immediately after his decease. Macbeth sorely troubled herewith, for that he saw by this means his hope sore hindered (where, by the old laws of the realm the ordinance was, that if he that should succeed were not of able age to take the charge upon himself, he that was next of blood unto him should be admitted,) he began to take counsel how he might usurp the kingdom by force, having a just quarrel so to doe (as he took the matter) for that Duncan did what in him lay to defraud him of all manner of title and claime, which he might in time to come pretend, unto the crowne.'

4 'True, worthy Banquo,' &c. We must imagine that while Macbeth was uttering the six preceding lines, Duncan and Banquo had been conferring apart. Macbeth's conduct appears to have been their subject ; and to some encomium supposed to have been bestowed on him by Banquo, the reply of Duncan refers.

5 The perfectest report is the best intelligence.

6 Missives, messengers.

title, before, these weird sisters saluted me, and referred me to the coming on of time, with, Hail, king that shalt be ! This have I thought good to deliver thee, my dearest partner of greatness ; that thou mightest not lose the dues of rejoicing, by being ignorant of what greatness is promised thee. Lay it to thy heart, and farewell.

Glamis thou art, and Cawdor ; and shalt be
What thou art promis'd :—Yet do I fear thy nature.
It is too full o' the milk of human kindness,
To catch the nearest way : Thou would'st be great ;
Art not without ambition ; but without
The illness should attend it. What thou would'st highly,

That would'st thou holily ; would'st not play false,
And yet would'st wrongly win ; thou'dst have, great Glamis,

That which cries, *Thus thou must do, if thou have it :
And that which rather thou dost fear to do,
Than wishest should be undone.*'⁷ Hie thee hither
That I may pour my spirits in thine ear ;⁸
And chastise with the valour of my tongue
All that impedes thee from the golden round,
Which fate and metaphysical⁹ aid doth seem To have thee crown'd withal.—What is your tidings ?

Enter an Attendant.

Attend. The king comes here to-night.

Lady M. Thou'rt mad to say it :
Is not thy master with him ? who, wer't so,
Would have inform'd¹⁰ for preparation.

Attend. So please you, it is true ; our thane is coming :

One of my fellows had the speed of him ;
Who, almost dead for breath, had scarcely more ;
Than would make up his message.

Lady M. Give him tending,
He brings great news. The raven himself is hoarse, [Exit Attendant.

That croaks the fatal entrance of Duncan
Under my battlements. Come, come, you spirits
That tend on mortal¹¹ thoughts, unsex me here ;
And fill me, from the crown to the toe, top-full
Of direst cruelty ! make thick my blood,
Stop up the access and passage to remorse ;
That no compunctious visitings of nature
Shake my fell purpose, nor keep peace between
The effect, and it !¹² Come to my woman's breasts,

7 Thou would'st have that [i. e. the crown] which cries unto thee, 'thou must do thus, if thou would'st have it, and thou must do that which rather,' &c. The difficulty of this passage in Italics seems to have arisen from its not having been considered as all uttered by the object of Macbeth's ambition. Malone is the author of this regulation, and furnished the explanation.

8 'That I may pour my spirits in thine ear.' So in Lord Sterling's Julius Cæsar, 1607 :—

'Thou in my bosom used to pour thy spirit.'

9 'Which fate and metaphysical aid,' &c. ; i. e. supernatural aid. We find metaphysics explained 'things supernatural' in the old dictionaries. 'To have thee crown'd,' is to desire that you should be crown'd.

10 'That tend on mortal thoughts.' Mortal and deadly were synonymous in Shakespeare's time. In another part of this play we have 'the mortal sword,' and 'mortal murders.' We have 'mortal war,' and 'mortal hatred.' In Nashe's Pierce Penilesse is a particular description of these spirits, and of their office. 'The second kind of devils, which he most employeth, are those northern Mariti, called the spirits of revenge, and the authors of massacres, and seedsmen of mischief ; for they have commission to incense men to rapines, sacrilege, theft, murder, wrath, fury, and all manner of cruelties : and they command certain of the southern spirits to wait upon them, as also great Arioch, that is termed the spirit of revenge.'

11 Lady Macbeth's purpose was to be effected by action. 'To keep peace between the effect and purpose,' means 'to delay the execution of her purpose, to prevent its proceeding to effect.' Sir Wm. Davenant's strange alteration of this play sometimes affords a reasonably good commentary upon it. Thus in the present instance :—

—make thick
My blood, stop all passage to remorse ;
That no remorse into mercy may

MARY MACBETH.

Macbeth Act I. Scene V.

And take my milk for gall, you murd'ring ministers,
Wherever in your sightless substances
You wait on nature's mischief! Come, thick night,
And pall¹ thee in the dunest smoke of hell!
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes;
Nor heaven peep through the blanket of the dark,²
To cry, Hold, hold!—Great Glamis! worthy Cawdor!

Enter MACBETH.

Greater than both, by the all-hail hereafter!
Thy letters have transported me beyond
This ignorant present,³ and I feel now
The future in the instant.

Macb. My dearest love,

Duncan comes here to-night.

Lady M. And when goes hence?

Macb. To-morrow,—as he purposes.

Lady M. O, never Shall sun that morrow see!

Your face, my thane, is as a book, where men
May read strange matters:—To beguile the time,
Look like the time; bear welcome in your eye,
Your hand, your tongue: look like the innocent flower,

But be the serpent under it. He that's coming Must be provided for: and you shall put
This night's great business into my despatch;
Which shall to all our nights and days to come
Give solely sovereign sway and masterdom.

Macb. We will speak further.

Lady M. Only look up clear;

To alter favour⁴ ever is to fear:

Leave all the rest to me.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. The same. Before the Castle. Haut-boys. Servants of Macbeth attending. Enter DUNCAN, MALCOLM, DONALBAIN, BANQUO, LENOX, MACDUFF, ROSSE, ANGUS, and Attendants.

Dun. This castle hath a pleasant seat:⁵ the air
Nimble and sweetly recommends itself
Unto our gentle senses.

Ban. This guest of summer,
The temple-haunting martlet, does approve,
By his lov'd mansionry, that the heaven's breath
Smells wooingly here: no jutty, frieze,
Buttress, nor coigne of vantage,⁶ but this bird

Shake his design, nor make it fall before
'Tis ripen'd to effect.

1 To pall, from the Latin pallio, to wrap, to invest, to cover or hide as with a mantle or cloak.

2 Drayton, in his Mortimeriados, 1596, has an expression resembling this:—

'The sullen night in mistie RUGGE is wrapp'd.'
And in his Polyolbion, which was not published till 1612, we again find it:—

'Thick vapours that like ruggs still hang the troubled air.'

On this passage there is a long criticism in the Rambler, No. 163; to which Johnson in his notes refers the reader with much complacency.

3 i. e. beyond the present time, which is, according to the process of nature, ignorant of the future.

4 Favour is countenance.

5 i. e. situation.

6 i. e. convenient corner.

7 'This short dialogue,' says Sir Joshua Reynolds, 'has always appeared to me a striking instance of what in painting is termed repose. The conversation very naturally turns upon the beauty of the castle's situation, and the pleasantness of the air; and Banquo, observing the martlets' nests in every recess of the cornice, remarks, that where those birds most breed and haunt the air is delicate. The subject of this quiet and easy conversation gives that repose so necessary to the mind after the tumultuous bustle of the preceding scenes, and perfectly contrasts the scene of horror that immediately succeeds. It seems as if Shakspeare asked himself, What is a prince likely to say to his attendants on such an occasion? Whereas the modern writers seem, on the contrary, to be always searching for new thoughts, such as would never occur to men in the situation which is represented. This also is frequently the practice of Homer, who, from the midst of battles and horrors relieves and refreshes the mind of the reader, by introducing some quiet rural image or picture of familiar domestic life.'

Hath made his pendant bed, and procreant cradle:
Where they most breed and haunt, I have observ'd,
The air is delicate.'

Enter LADY MACBETH.

Dun. See, 'see! our honour'd hostess!
The love that follows us, sometime is our trouble,
Which still we thank as love. Herein I teach you
How you shall bid God yield⁸ us for your pains,
And thank us for your trouble.

Lady M. All our service,
In every point twice done, and then done double,
Were poor and single business, to contend
Against those honours deep and broad, wherewith
Your majesty loads our house: For those of old,
And the late dignities heap'd up to them,
We rest your hermits.⁹

Dun. Where's the thane of Cawdor?
We cours'd him at the heels, and had a purpose
To be his purveyor: but he rides well:
And his great love, sharp as his spur, hath hold him
To his home before us: Fair and noble hostess,
We are your guest to-night.

Lady M. Your servants ever Have theirs, themselves, and what is theirs, in compt,¹⁰

To make their audit at your highness' pleasure,
Still to return your own.

Dun. Give me your hand
Conduct me to mine host; we love him highly,
And shall continue our graces towards him.
By your leave, hostess. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII. The same. A Room in the Castle. Hautboys and Torches. Enter, and pass over the Stage, a Sewer,¹¹ and divers Servants with Dishes and Service. Then enter MACBETH.

Macb. If it were done, when 'tis done, then 'twere well

It were done quickly: If the assassination
Could trammel up the consequence, and catch,
With his surcease, success; that but this blow
Might be the be-all and the end-all here,
But here, upon this bank and shoal of time,—
We'd jump the life to come.¹²—But, in these cases,
We still have judgment here; that we but teach
Bloody instructions, which, being taught, return
To plague the inventor: This even-handed justice

8 The explanation by Steevens of this obscure passage seems the best which has been offered:—'Marks of respect importunately shown are sometimes troublesome, though we are still bound to be grateful for them, as indications of sincere attachment. If you pray for us on account of the trouble we create in your house, and thank us for the molestations we bring with us, it must be on such a principle. Herein I teach you, that the inconvenience you suffer is the result of our affection; and that you are therefore to pray for us, or thank us only as far as prayers and thanks can be deserved for kindnesses that fatigue, and honours that oppress. You are, in short, to make your acknowledgments for intended respect and love, however irksome our present mode of expressing them may have proved.'—To bid is here used in the Saxon sense of to pray. God yield us, is God reward us.

9 i. e. we as hermits, or beadsmen, shall ever pray for you.

10 In compt, subject to account.

11 A sewer, an officer so called from his placing the dishes on the table. Assecur, French; from asseoir, to place.

12 This passage has been variously explained. I have attempted briefly to express what I conceive to be its meaning:—'There well it were done quickly, if, when 'tis done, it were done (or at an end;) and that no sinister consequences would ensue. If the assassination, at the same time that it puts an end to Duncan's life, could make success certain, and that I might enjoy the crown unmolested, we'd jump the life to come, i. e. hazard or run the risk of what may happen in a future state. To trammel up was to confine or tie up. The legs of horses were trammelled to teach them to amble. There was also 'a trammel-net,' which was 'a long net to take great and small fowl with by night.' Surcease is cessation. 'To surcease or to cease from doing something; supersedeo, Lat.; cesser, Fr.'—Barre,

Commends¹ the ingredients of our poison'd chalice
To our own lips. He's here in double trust :
First, as I am his kinsman and his subject,
Strong both against the deed ; then, as his host,
Who should against his murderer shut the door,
Not bear the knife myself. Besides, this Duncan Hath borne his faculties so meek, hath been
So clear in his great office, that his virtues
Will plead like angels, trumpet-tongued, against
The deep damnation of his taking off :
And pity, like a naked new-born babe,
Striding the blast, or heaven's cherubin, hors'd
Upon the sightless couriers² of the air,
Shall blow the horrid deed in every eye,
That tears shall drown the wind.—I have no spur
To prick the sides of my intent, but only
Vaulting ambition,³ which o'erleaps itself,
And falls on the other—How now, what news ?

Enter LADY MACBETH.

Lady M. He has almost supp'd : Why have you left the chamber ?

Macb. Hath he ask'd for me ?

Lady M. Know you not, he has ?

Macb. We will proceed no further in this business :
He hath honour'd me of late ; and I have bought
Golden opinions from all sorts of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest gloss,
Not cast aside so soon.

Lady M. Was the hope drunk,
Wherein you dress'd yourself ? hath it slept since ?
And wakes it now, to look so green and pale
At what it did so freely ? From this time,
Such I account thy love. Art thou afraid
To be the same in thine own act and valour,
As thou art in desire ? Would'st thou have that
Which thou esteem'st the ornament of life,
And live a coward in thine own esteem ;
Letting I dare not wait upon I would,
Like the poor cat i' the adage ?⁴

Macb. Pr'ythee, peace :
I dare do all that may become a man ;
Who dares do more,⁵ is none.

Lady M. What beast was't then,
That made you break this enterprise to me ?
When you durst do it, then you were a man ;
And, to be more than what you were, you would Be so much more the man. Nor time, nor place,
Did then adhere,⁶ and yet you would make both :
They have made themselves, and that their fitness
now
Does unmake you. I have given suck ; and know
How tender 'tis to love the babe that milks me :

I would, while it was smiling in my face,
Have pluck'd my nipple from his boneless gums,
And dash'd the brains out, had I so sworn, as you
Have done to this.

Macb. If we should fail,—— We fail !
Lady M. But screw your courage to the sticking-place,⁷
And we'll not fail. When Duncan is asleep (Where'to the rather shall his day's hard journey Soundly invite him,) his two chamberlains⁸
Will I with wine and wassel⁹ so convince,¹⁰
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume, and the receipt of reason
A limbeck¹¹ only : When in swinish sleep
Their drenched¹² natures lie, as in a death,
What cannot you and I perform upon
The unguarded Duncan ? what not put upon
His spongy officers ; who shall bear the guilt
Of our great quell ?¹³

Macb. Bring forth men-children only !
For thy undaunted mettle should compose
Nothing but males. Will it not be receiv'd,¹⁴
When we have mark'd with blood those sleepy two
Of his own chamber, and us'd their very daggers,
That they have don't ?
Lady M. Who dares receive it other,
As we shall make our griefs and clamour roar
Upon his death ?
Macb. I am settled, and bend up
Each corporal agent to this terrible feat.
Away, and mock the time with fairest show ;
False face must hide what the false heart doth know.
[Exit.

ACT II.

SCENE I. The same. Court within the Castle.
Enter BANQUO and FLEANCE, and a Servant, with a Torch before them.

Ban. How goes the night, boy ?

Fle. The moon is down : I have not heard the clock.

Ban. And she goes down at twelve.

Fle. I take't, 'tis later, sir.

Ban. Hold, take my sword :—There's husband-ry¹⁵ in heaven,

Their candles are all out.—Take thee that too.
A heavy summons lies like lead upon me,
And yet I would not sleep : Merciful powers !
Restrain in me the cursed thoughts, that nature
Gives way to in repose :¹⁶—Give me my sword ;—

Enter MACBETH, and a Servant with a Torch.
Who's there ?

1 To commend was anciently used in the sense of the Latin commendo, to commit, to address, to direct, to recommend.

2 'The sightless couriers of the air' are what the poet elsewhere calls the viewless winds.

3 So in the tragedy of Cæsar and Pompey, 1607 :—
'Why think you, lords, that 'tis ambition's spur
That pricketh Cæsar to these high attempts ?'

Malone has observed that 'there are two distinct metaphors in this passage. I have no spur to prick the sides of my intent ; I have nothing to stimulate me to the execution of my purpose but ambition, which is apt to overreach itself ; this he expresses by the second image, of a person meaning to vault into his saddle, who, by taking too great a leap, will fall on the other side.'

4 This passage is perhaps sufficiently intelligible ; but as Johnson and Steevens thought otherwise, I must offer a brief explanation.—'Would'st thou have the crown, that which thou esteem'st the ornament of life, and yet live a coward in thine own esteem,' &c. The adage of the cat is among Heywood's Proverbs, 1566 :—
'The cat would eate fishe, and would not wet her fete.'

5 'Who dares do more is none.' The old copy, instead of 'do more,' reads 'no more' : the emendation is Rowe's.

6 'At there, in the same sense as cohere.
'But screw your courage to the sticking-place.' Shakespeare seems to have taken his metaphor from the screwing up the chords of stringed instruments to their proper degree of tension, when the peg remains fast in its sticking-place ; i. e. in the place from which it is not to recede, or go back.

8 The circumstance relative to Macbeth's slaughter of Duncan's chamberlains is copied from Hollinshed's account of King Duff's murder by Dowwald.

9 Wassel is thus explained by Bullokar in his Expositor, 1616 : 'Wassalle, a term usual heretofore for quaffing and carousing ; but more especially signifying a merry cup (ritually composed, deckt and fill'd with country liquor) passing about amongst neighbours, meeting and entertaining one another on the vigil or eve of the new year, and commonly called the wassail-bol.'

10 To convince is to overcome.
11 A limbeck is a vessel through which distilled liquors pass into the recipient. So shall the receipt (i. e. receptacle) of reason be like this empty vessel.

12 I. e. drowned in drink.

13 Quell is murder ; from the Saxon quellan, to kill.

14 I. e. apprehended, understood.

15 Husbandry here means thrift, frugality.

16 It is apparent from what Banquo says afterwards, that he had been solicited in a dream to attempt something in consequence of the prophecy of the witches, that his waking senses were shocked at ; and Shakespeare has here most exquisitely contrasted his character with that of Macbeth. Banquo is praying against being tempted to encourage thoughts of guilt even in his sleep ; while Macbeth is hurrying into temptation, and revolving in his mind every scheme, however flagitious, that may assist him to complete his purpose. The one is unwilling to sleep, lest the same phantoms should assail his resolution again, while the other is depriving himself of rest through impatience to commit the murder.

Macb. A friend.

Ban. What, sir, not yet at rest? The king's a-bed:
He hath been in unusual pleasure, and Sent forth great largess¹ to your officers:²
This diamond he greets your wife withal,
By the name of most kind hostess; and shut up³
In measureless content.

Macb. Being unprepar'd,
Our will became the servant to defect;
Which else should free have wrought.⁴

Ban. All's well.
I dreamt last night of the three weird sisters:
To you they have show'd some truth.

Macb. I think not of them:
Yet, when we can entreat an hour to serve,
Would spend it in some words upon that business,
If you would grant the time.

Ban. At your kind'st leisure.

Macb. If you shall cleave to my consent,⁵—when
'tis,
It shall make honour for you.

Ban. So I lose none,
In seeking to augment it, but still keep
My bosom franchis'd, and allegiance clear,
I shall be counsel'd.

Macb. Good repose, the while!

Ban. Thanks, sir; The like to you! [Exit BAN.]

Macb. Go, bid thy mistress, when my drink is ready,
She strike upon the bell. Get thee to bed.

[Exit Servant.]
Is this a dagger, which I see before me,
The handle toward my hand? Come, let me clutch
thee:—

I have thee not, and yet I see thee still.
Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible
To feeling, as to sight? or art thou but
A dagger of the mind: a false creation,
Proceeding from the heat-oppressed brain?

² The old copy reads offices. Officers of a household was the common term for servants in Shakspeare's time. He has before called the king's chamberlains
'his spongy officers.'

³ Steevens has rightly explained 'to shut up,' by
'to conclude,' and the examples he has adduced are satisfactory; but Mr. Boswell supposed that it meant enclosed, and quoted a passage from Barrow to support his opinion. The authorities of the poet's time are against Mr. Boswell's interpretation.

⁴ Being unprepared, our will (or desire to entertain the king honourably) became the servant to defect (i. e.
was constrained by defective means,) which else should free have wrought (i. e. otherwise our zeal should have been manifest by more liberal entertainments.) Which relates not to the last antecedent, defect, but to will.

⁵ Consent is accord, agreement, a combination for a particular purpose. By 'if you shall cleave to my consent,' Macbeth means, 'if you shall adhere to me (i. e.
agree or accord with my views,) when 'tis, (i. e. when events shall fall out as they are predicted,) it shall make honour for you.' Macbeth mentally refers to the crown which he expected to obtain in consequence of the murder that he was about to commit. We comprehend all that passes in his mind; but Banquo is still in ignorance of it. His reply is only that of a man who determines to combat every possible temptation to do ill; and therefore expresses a resolve that, in spite of future combinations of interest or struggles for power, he will attempt nothing that may obscure his present honours, alarm his conscience, or corrupt loyalty. Macbeth could never mean, while yet the success of his attack on the life of Duncan was uncertain, to afford Banquo the most dark or distant hint of his criminal designs on the crown. Had he acted thus incautiously, Banquo would naturally have become his accuser as soon as the murder had been discovered. Malone proposed to read content instead of consent; but his reasons are far from convincing, and there seems no necessity for change.

⁶ Dudgeon for handle; 'a dudgeon dagger is a dagger whose handle is made of the root of box,' according to Bishop Wilkins in the dictionary subjoined to his Real Character. Dudgeon is the root of box. It has not been remarked that there is a peculiar propriety in giving the word to Macbeth, 'Pugnale alla scossese, being a Scotch or dudgeon haft dagger,' according to Tor-riano.

⁷ Goutts drops; from the French gouttes.

I see thee yet, in form as palpable
As this which now I draw.

Thou marshal'st me the way that I was going;
And such an instrument I was to use.
Mine eyes are made the fools of the other senses,
Or else worth all the rest: I see thee still:
And on thy blade, and dudgeon,⁶ goutts⁷ of blood,
Which was not so before;—There's no such thing:
It is the bloody business, which informs
Thus to mine eyes.—Now o'er the one half world
Nature seems dead,⁸ and wicked dreams abuse
The curtain'd sleeper;⁹ witchcraft celebrates
Pale Hecate's offerings; and wither'd murder,
Alarum'd by his sentinel, the wolf,
Whose howl's his watch, thus with his stealthy pace,
With Tarquin's ravishing strides, towards his design Moves like a ghost.¹⁰—Thou sure and firm-set earth,

Hear not my steps, which way they walk, for fear
Thy very stones prate of my where-about,
And take the present horror from the time,
Which now suits with it.¹¹—Whiles I threat, he lives;

Words to the heat of deeds too cold breath gives.
[A bell rings.]

I go, and it is done; the bell invites me.
Hear it not, Duncan; for it is a knell
That summons thee to heaven, or to hell. [Exit.]

SCENE II. The same. Enter LADY MACBETH.

Lady M. That which hath made them drunk, hath made me bold:

What hath quench'd them, hath given me fire:—
Hark!—Peace!

It was the owl that shriek'd, the fatal bellman,
Which gives the stern'st good-night. He is about it:
The doors are open; and the surfeited grooms
Do mock their charge with snores: I have drugg'd¹ their possets,

⁸ Dryden's well known lines in the Conquest of Mexico are here transcribed, that the reader may observe the contrast between them and this passage of Shakspeare:—

'All things are hush'd as Nature's self lay dead.
The mountains seem to nod their drowsy head,
The little birds in dreams their songs repeat,
And sleeping flow'rs beneath the night dews sweat,
Even lust and envy sleep!'

In the second part of Marston's Antonio and Mellida, 1602, we have the following lines:—

'Tis yet the dead of night, yet all the earth is clutch'd
In the dull leaden hand of snoring sleep:
No breath disturbs the quiet of the air,
No spirit moves upon the breast of earth,
Save howling dogs, night-crows, and screeching owls,
Save meagre ghosts, Piero, and black thoughts
—I am great in blood,

Unequal'd in revenge:—you horrid scouts
That sentinel swart night, give loud applause
From your large palms.'

⁹ The old copy has sleeps. The emendation was proposed by Steevens, and is well worthy of a place in the text; the word now having been formerly admitted to complete the metre.

¹⁰ The old copy reads sides: Pope made the alteration.
Johnson objects to the epithet ravishing strides. But Steevens has shown that a stride was not always an action of violence, impetuosity, or tumult. Thus in The Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. viii.

'With easy steps so soft as foot could stride.'

And in other places we have an easy stride, a leisureable stride, &c. Warburton observes, that the justness of the similitude is not very obvious. But a stanza in Shakspeare's Tarquin and Lucrece will explain it:—

'Now stole upon the time in dead of night,
When heavy sleep had clos'd up mortal eyes;
No comfortable star did lend his light,
No noise but owls' and wolves' dead-boding cries;
Now serves the season that they may surprise
The silly lambs. Pure thoughts are dead and still,
While lust and murder wake to stain and kill.'

¹¹ Macbeth would have nothing break through the universal silence that added such horror to the night, as well suited with the bloody deed he was about to perform. Burke, in his Essay on the Sublime and Beautiful, observes, that 'all general privations are great because they are terrible.'

That death and nature do contend about them,
Whether they live or die.

Macb. [Within.] Who's there?—what, ho!

Lady M. Alack! I am afraid, they have awak'd,
And 'tis not done:—the attempt, and not the deed,
Confounds us:—Hark!—I laid their daggers ready,
He could not miss them.—Had he not resembled
My father as he slept, I had done't.—My husband?

Enter MACBETH.

Macb. I have done the deed:—Didst thou not hear a noise?

Lady M. I heard the owl scream, and the crickets cry.

Did not you speak?

Macb. When?

Lady M. Now.

Macb. As I descended?

Lady M. Ay.

Macb. Hark!—

Who lies i' the second chamber?

Lady M. Donalbain.

Macb. This is a sorry sight.

[Looking on his hands.]

Lady M. A foolish thought, to say a sorry sight.

Macb. There's one did laugh in his sleep, and one cried, murder!

That they did wake each other; I stood and heard them:

But they did say their prayers, and address'd them
Again to sleep.

Lady M. There are two lodg'd together.

Macb. One cried, God bless us! and, Amen, the other;

As¹ they had seen me, with these hangman's hands.
Listening their fear², I could not say, amen,

When they did say, God bless us.

Lady M. Consider it not so deeply.

Macb. But wherefore could not I pronounce, amen?
I had most need of blessing, and amen
Stuck in my throat.

Lady M. These deeds must not be thought
After these ways; so, it will make us mad.

Macb. Methought, I heard a voice cry, Sleep no more!

*Macbeth does murder sleep, the innocent sleep;
Sleep, that knits up the ravell'd sleeve³ of care,
The death of each day's life, sore labour's bath,
Balm of hurt minds, great nature's second course,
Chief nourisher in life's feast;—*

Lady M.—What do you mean?

Macb. Still it cried, Sleep no more! to all the house:

*Glamis hath murder'd sleep; and therefore Cawdor
Shall sleep no more. Macbeth shall sleep no more!*⁴

Lady M. Who was it that thus cried? Why, worthy thane,

You do unbend your noble strength, to think

So brainsickly of things:—Go, get some water,
And wash this filthy witness from your hand.—
Why did you bring these daggers from the place?
They must lie there: Go, carry them; and smear
The sleepy grooms with blood.

Macb. I'll go no more:
I am afraid to think what I have done;
Look on't again, I dare not.

Lady M. Infirm of purpose!
Give me the daggers: The sleeping, and the dead
Are but as pictures: 'tis the eye of childhood,
That fears a painted devil. If he do bleed,
I'll gild the faces of the grooms withal,
For it must seem their guilt.⁵

[Exit. Knocking within.]

Macb. Whence is that knocking?
How is't with me, when every noise appals me?
What hands are here! Ha! they pluck out mine eyes!

Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood?
Clean from my hand? No; this my hand will rather
The multitudinous seas incarnardine,⁶
Making the green—one red.⁷

Re-enter LADY MACBETH.

Lady M. My hands are of your colour; but I shame

To wear a heart so white. [Knock.] I hear a knocking

At the south entry:—retire we to our chamber:

A little water clears us of this deed:

How easy is it then? Your constancy

Hath left you unattended?—[Knocking.] Hark!
more knocking:

Get on your nightgown, lest occasion call us,

And show us to be watchers:—Be not lost

So poorly in your thoughts.

Macb. To know my deed,—'twere best not know myself.¹⁰ [Knock.]

Wake Duncan with thy knocking! I would, thou could'st? [Exit.]

SCENE III. The same. Enter a Porter.

[Knocking within.]

Porter. Here's a knocking, indeed! If a man were porter of hell-gate, he should have old¹¹ turning the key. [Knocking.] Knock, knock, knock:
Who's there, i' the name of Belzebub? Here's a farmer,¹² that hanged himself on the expectation of plenty: Come in time; have napkins¹³ enough about you; here you'll sweat for't. [Knocking.] Knock, knock: Who's there i' the other devil's name?
'Faith, here's an equivocator,¹⁴ that could swear in both the scales against either scale; who committed treason enough for God's sake, yet could not equivocate to heaven: O, come in, equivocator. [Knocking.] Knock, knock, knock; Who's there? 'Faith,

Should flow for ever through these guilty hands,

Yet the sanguinolent stain would extant be.⁷

7 To incarnardine is to stain of a red colour.

8 In the old copy the line stands thus:—

'Making the Green one, Red.'

The punctuation in the text was adopted by Stevens at the suggestion of Murphy. Malone prefers the old punctuation. Stevens has well defended the arrangement of his text, which seems to me to deserve the preference.

9 'Your constancy hath left you unattended.'—Vide note on King Henry V. Act v. Sc. 2.

10 This is an answer to Lady Macbeth's reproof.
'While I have the thoughts of this deed, it were best not know, or be lost to myself.'

11 i. e. frequent

12 'Here's a farmer that hanged himself on the expectation of plenty.' So in Hall's Satires, b. iv.
sat. 6:—

'Each muckworme will be rich with lawless gaine,
Altho' he smother up mowes of seven yeares gaine,
And hang'd himself when corne groves cheap againe.'

13 i. e. handkerchiefs. In the dictionaries of the time sudarium is rendered by 'napkin or handkerchief, wherewith we wipe away the sweat.'

14 i. e. a Jesuit. That order were troublesome to the state, and held in odium in the reigns of Elizabeth and James. They were inventors of the execrable doctrine of equivocation.

1 As for as if.

2 i. e. listening to their fear: the particle omitted.

3 Sleeve is unwrought silk, sometimes also called floss silk. It appears to be the coarse ravell'd part separated by passing through the slale (reed comb) of the weaver's loom; and hence called sleeved or sleided silk. I suspect that sleeveless, which has puzzled the etymologists, is that which cannot be sleeved, sleided, or unravell'd; and therefore useless: thus a sleeveless errand would be a fruitless one.

4 Stevens observes that this triple menace, accommodated to the different titles of Macbeth, is too quaint to be received as the natural ebullition of a guilty mind; but Mr. Boswell thinks that there is no ground for his objection. He thus explains the passage; Glamis hath murder'd sleep; and therefore my lately acquired dignity can afford no comfort to one who suffers the agony of remorse,—Cawdor shall sleep no more; nothing can restore me to that peace of mind which I enjoyed in a comparatively humble state; the once innocent Macbeth shall sleep no more.

5 This quibble too occurs frequently in old plays.
Shakespeare has it in King Henry IV. Part II. Act iv.
Sc. 4:—

'England shall double gild his treble guilt.'

6 Thus in The Insatiate Countess, by Marston, 1613:—

'Although the waves of all the northern sea

here's an English tailor come hither, for stealing out of a French hose: Come in, tailor; here you may roast your goose. [Knocking.] Knock, knock: Never at quiet! What are you?—But this place is too cold for hell. I'll devil-porter it no further: I had thought to have let in some of all professions, that go the primrose way to the everlasting bonfire. [Knocking.] Anon, anon; I pray you, remember the porter. [Opens the gate.]

Enter MACDUFF and LENOX.

Macd. Was it so late, friend, ere you went to bed, That you do lie so late?

Port. Faith, sir we were carousing till the second cock: and drink, sir, is a great provoker of three things.

Macd. What three things does drink especially provoke?

Port. Marry, sir, nose-painting, sleep, and urine. Lechery, sir, it provokes, and unprovokes: it provokes the desire, but it takes away the performance: Therefore, much drink may be said to be an equivocator with lechery: it makes him, and it mars him; it sets him on, and it takes him off; it persuades him, and disheartens him; makes him stand to, and not stand to: in conclusion, equivocates him in a sleep, and, giving him the lie, leaves him.

Macd. I believe, drink gave thee the lie, last night.

Port. That it did, sir, i' the very throat o' me: But I requited him for his lie: and, I think, being too strong for him, though he took up my legs sometime, yet I made a shift to cast him.

Macd. Is thy master stirring?—
Our knocking has awak'd him; here he comes.

Enter MACBETH.

Len. Good-morrow, noble sir!

Macb. Good-morrow, both!

Macd. Is the king stirring, worthy thane?

Macb. Not yet.

Macd. He did command me to call timely on him; I have almost slipp'd the hour.

Macb. I'll bring you to him.

Macd. I know, this is a joyful trouble to you;

But yet, 'tis one.

Macb. The labour, we delight in, physics⁴ pain. This is the door.

Macd. I'll make so bold to call.

For 'tis my limited service.⁵ [Exit MACDUFF.]

Len. Goes the king hence to-day?

Macb. He does:—he did appoint it so.

Len. The night has been unruly; Where we lay, Our chimneys were blown down: and, as they say, Lamentings heard i' the air; strange screams of death;

And prophesying, with accents terrible,
Of dire combustion, and confus'd events,
New hatch'd to the woful time. The obscure bird
Clamour'd the livelong night: some say, the earth
Was feverous, and did shake.

Macb. 'Twas a rough night.

Len. My young remembrance cannot parallel
A fellow to it.

Re-enter MACDUFF.

Macd. O horror! horror! horror! Tongue, nor heart,
Cannot conceive, nor name thee!⁶

Macb. Len. What's the matter?

1 So in Hamlet:—

'Himself the primrose path of dalliance treads,'
And in All's Well that Ends Well:—'The flowery way that leads to the great fire.'

2 i. e. till three o'clock.

3 In for into.

4 i. e. alleviates it.

5 i. e. Appointed service.

6 It has been already observed that Shakspeare uses two negatives, not to make an affirmative, but to deny more strongly.

7 'The repetition, in a woman's ear,

Would murder as it fell.'

So in Hamlet:—

'—He would drown the stage with tears,
And cleave the general ear with horrid speech.'

Macd. Confusion now hath made his masterpiece!
Most sacrilegious murder hath broke ope
The Lord's anointed temple, and stole thence
The life o' the building.

Macb. What is't you say? the life?

Len. Mean you his majesty?

Macd. Approach the chamber, and destroy your sight

With a new Gorgon:—Do not bid me speak;
See and then speak yourselves.—Awake! awake!—

[Exit MACBETH and LENOX.]

Ring the alarum-bell:—Murder! and treason!
Banquo, and Donalbain! Malcolm! awake!
Shake off this drowsy sleep, death's counterfeits,
And look on death itself!—up, up, and see
The great doom's image!—Malcolm! Banquo!
As from your graves rise up, and walk like sprights,
To countenance this horror! [Bell rings.]

Enter LADY MACBETH.

Lady M. What's the business,
That such a hideous trumpet calls to parley
The sleepers of the house? Speak, speak,——

Macd. O, gentle lady,
'Tis not for you to hear what I can speak:
The repetition, in a woman's ear,
Would murder as it fell.'—O Banquo! Banquo!

Enter BANQUO.

Our royal master's murder'd!

Lady M. Woe, alas!

What, in our house?

Ban. Too cruel, any where,——
Dear Duff, I prythee, contradict thyself,
And say, it is not so.

Re-enter MACBETH and LENOX.

Macb. Had I but died an hour before this chance,
I had liv'd a blessed time; for, from this instant,
There's nothing serious in mortality:
All is but toys: renown, and grace, is dead;
The wine of life is drawn, and the mere lees
Is left this vault to brag of.

Enter MALCOLM and DONALBAIN.

Don. What is amiss?

Macb. You are, and do not know it:
The spring, the head, the fountain of your blood
Is stopp'd; the very source of it is stopp'd.

Macd. Your royal father's murder'd.

Mal.

O, by whom?

Len. Those of his chamber, as it seem'd, had don't:

Their hands and faces were all badg'd with blood,
So were their daggers, which unwip'd, we found
Upon their pillows:

They star'd, and were distracted; no man's life
Was to be trusted with them.

Macb. O, yet, I do repent me of my fury,
That I did kill them.

Macd.

Wherefore did you so?

Macb. Who can be wise, amaz'd, temperate, and furious,

Loyal and neutral, in a moment? No man:

The expedition of my violent love

Outran the pauser reason.—Here lay Duncan,

His silver skin lac'd with his golden blood;⁸

And his gash'd stabs look'd like a breach in nature,
For ruin's wasteful entrance: there, the murderers,
Steep'd in the colours of their trade, their daggers

And in The Puritan, 1607:—'The punishments that shall follow you in this world would with horror kill the ear should hear them related.'

8 'His silver skin lac'd with his golden blood.' To gild with blood is a very common phrase in old plays See also King John, Act ii. Sc. 2.—Johnson says, 'it is not improbable that Shakspeare put these forced and unnatural metaphors into the mouth of Macbeth, as a mark of artifice and dissimulation, to show the difference between the studied language of hypocrisy and the natural outcries of sudden passion. This whole speech, so considered, is a remarkable instance of judgment, as it consists of antithesis only.'

Unmannerly breech'd with gore :¹ Who could refrain,
That had a heart to love, and in that heart
Courage, to make his love known?

Lady M. Help me hence, ho!

Macd. Look to the lady.

Mal. Why do we hold our tongues,
That most may claim this argument for ours?

Don. What should be spoken,
Here, where our fate hid in an augre-hole,
May rush, and seize us? Let's away; our tears
Are not yet brew'd.

Mal. Nor our strong sorrow
Upon the foot of motion.

Ban. Look to the lady:—

[LADY MACBETH is carried out.]

And when we have our naked frailties hid,²
That suffer in exposure, let us meet,
And question this most bloody piece of work,
To know it further. Fears and scruples shake us:
In the great hand of God I stand; and, thence,
Against the undivulg'd pretence³ I fight
Of treasonous malice.

Macb. And so do I.

All. So all.

Macb. Let's briefly put on manly readiness,
And meet it⁴ the hall together.

All. Well contented.

[Exeunt all but MAL. and DON.]

Mal. What will you do? Let's not consort with them:

To show an unfelt sorrow, is an office
Which the false man does easy: I'll to England.

Don. To Ireland, I; our separated fortune Shall keep us both the safer: where we are,
There's daggers in men's smiles: the near in blood,
The nearer bloody.⁴

Mal. This murderous shaft that's shot,
Hath not yet lighted;⁵ and our safest way
Is, to avoid the aim. Therefore, to horse;
And let us not be dainty of leave-taking,
But shift away: There's warrant in that theft
Which steals itself, when there's no mercy left.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. Without the Castle. Enter Rosse and an Old Man.

Old M. Threescore and ten I can remember well:
Within the volume of which time, I have seen Hours dreadful, and things strange; but this sore
night

Hath trifled former knowings.

Rosse. Ah, good father,

Thou see'st, the heavens, as troubled with man's act,
Threaten his bloody stage: by the clock, 'tis day,
And yet dark night strangles the travelling lamp:
Is it night's predominance, or the day's shame,
That darkness does the face of earth entomb,
When living light should kiss it?⁶

Old M.

'Tis unnatural,
Even like the deed that's done. On Tuesday last,
A falcon, tow'ring in her pride of place,⁷
Was by a mousing owl hawk'd at, and kill'd.

Rosse. And Duncan's horses (a thing most strange and certain),

Beauteous and swift, the minions of their race,
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out,
Contending 'gainst obedience, as they would make War with mankind.

Old M.

'Tis said, they ate each other.
Rosse. They did so; to the amazement of mine
eyes,

That look'd upon't. Here comes the good Macduff:—

Enter MACDUFF.

How goes the world, sir, now?

Macd.

Why, see you not?
Rosse. Is't known who did this more than bloody deed?

Macd. Those that Macbeth hath slain.

Rosse.

Alas, the day!
What good could they pretend?⁸

Macd.

They were suborn'd:
Malcolm and Donalbain, the king's two sons,
Are stol'n away and fled; which puts upon them
Suspicion of the deed.

Rosse.

'Gainst nature still:
Thrifless ambition, that will ravin up
Thine own life's means!—Then 'tis most like,
The sovereignty will fall upon Macbeth.⁹

Macd. He is already nam'd; and gone to Scone,
To be invested.

Rosse.

Where is Duncan's body?

Macd.

Carried to Colme-kill;¹⁰
The sacred storehouse of his predecessors,
And guardian of their bones.

Rosse.

Will you to Scone?
Macd. No, cousin, I'll to Fife.

Rosse.

Well, I will thither.
Macd. Well, may you see things well done
there;—adieu!—

Lest our old robes sit easier than our new!

Rosse.

Father, farewell.
Old M. God's benison go with you: and with those
That would make good of bad, and friends of foes!
[Exeunt.]

¹ 'Breech'd with gore,' covered with blood to their hills.

² i. e. when we have clothed our half drest bodies, which may take cold from being exposed to the air. It is possible, as Steevens remarks, that in such a cloud of words, the meaning might escape the reader. The Porter had already said that this 'place is too cold for hell,' meaning the court-yard of the castle in which Banquo and the rest now are.

³ Pretence is here put for design or intention. It is so used again in the Winter's Tale:—'The pretence whereof being by circumstance partly laid open.' Thus again in this tragedy:—

'What good could they pretend?'

i. e. intend to themselves. Banquo's meaning is—'In our present state of doubt and uncertainty about this murder, I have nothing to do but to put myself under the direction of God; and, relying on his support, I here declare myself an eternal enemy to this treason, and to all its further designs that have not yet come to light.'

⁴ 'the near in blood,'

'The nearer bloody.'

Meaning that he suspects Macbeth to be the murderer; for he was the nearest in blood to the two princes, being the cousin-german of Duncan.

⁵ The allusion of the unlighted shaft appears to be—the death of the king only could neither insure the crown to Macbeth, nor accomplish any other purpose, while his sons were yet living, who had therefore just reason to apprehend that they should be removed by the same means. Malcolm therefore means to say, 'The shaft has not yet done all its intended mischief; I and my brother are yet to be destroyed before it will light on the ground and do no more harm.'

⁶ 'After the murder of King Duffe,' says Holinshed,
'for the space of six months together there appeared no sunne by daye, nor moon by night in anie part of the realme; but still the sky was covered with continual clouds; and sometimes such outrageous winds arose, with lighteninges and tempests, that the people were in great fear of present destruction.'—It is evident that Shakespeare had this passage in his thoughts. Most of the portents here mentioned are related by Holinshed, as accompanying King Duffe's death: 'there was a sparhawk strangled by an owl,' and 'horses of singular beauty and swiftness did eat their own flesh.'

⁷ 'A falcon tow'ring in her pride of place,' a tech-cal phrase in falconry for soaring to the highest pitch.
Faulcon hautain was the French term for a towering or high flying hawk.

⁸ Pretend, in the sense of the Latin prætendo, to design, or 'lay for a thing before it come,' as the old dictionaries explain it.

⁹ Macbeth, by his birth, stood next in succession to the crown, after the sons of Duncan. King Malcolm, Duncan's predecessor, had two daughters, the eldest of whom was the mother of Duncan, the younger the mother of Macbeth.—Holinshed.

¹⁰ Colme-kill is the famous Iona, one of the western isles mentioned by Holinshed, as the burial place of many ancient kings of Scotland. Colme-kill means the cell or chapel of St. Columbo.

ACT III.

SCENE I. Fores. A Room in the Palace. Enter BANQUO.

Ban. Thou hast it now, King, Cawdor, Glamis, all,
As the weird women promis'd; and, I fear,
Thou play'st most fully for't; yet it was said,
It should not stand in thy posterity:
But that myself should be the root and father
Of many kings. If there come truth from them
(As upon thee, Macbeth, their speeches shine,) Why, by the verities on thee made good,
May they not be my oracles as well,
And set me up in hope? But, hush; no more.

Senet sounded. Enter MACBETH, as King; LADY MACBETH, as Queen; LENOX, ROSSE, Lords, Ladies, and Attendants.

Macb. Here's our chief guest.

Lady M. If he had been forgotten,
It had been as a gap in our great feast,
And all things unbecoming.

Macb. To-night we hold a solemn supper,¹ sir,
And I'll request your presence.

Ban. Let your highness
Command upon me; to the which, my duties
Are with a most indissoluble tie
For ever knit.

Macb. Ride you this afternoon?

Ban. Ay, my good lord.

Macb. We should have else desir'd your good advice

(Which still hath been both grave and prosperous,)
In this day's council; but we'll take to-morrow.
Is't far you ride?

Ban. As far, my lord, as will fill up the time
'Twixt this and supper: go not my horse the better,²
I must become a borrower of the night,
For a dark hour, or twain.

Macb. Fail not our feast.

Ban. My lord, I will not.

Macb. We hear, our bloody cousins are bestow'd
In England, and in Ireland; not confessing
Their cruel paricide, filling their hearers
With strange invention: But of that to-morrow:
When, therewithal, we shall have cause of state,
Craving us jointly. Hie you to horse: Adieu,
Till you return at night. Goes Fleance with you?

Ban. Ay, my good lord; our time does call upon us.

Macb. I wish your horses swift and sure of foot;
And so I do commend³ you to their backs.

Farewell. — [Exit BANQUO.]

Let every man be master of his time
Till seven at night; to make society
The sweeter welcome, we will keep ourself
Till supper-time alone: while then, God be with you.

[Exit LADY MACBETH, Lords, Ladies, &c.]

Sirrah, a word with you: attend those men
Our pleasure?

Atten. They are, my lord, without the palace-gate.

Macb. Bring them before us. — [Exit Atten.]

To be thus is nothing;

But to be safely thus: — Our fears in Banquo
Stick deep; and in his royalty⁴ of nature Reigns that, which would be fear'd: 'Tis much he dares;

And, to⁵ that dauntless temper of his mind,
He hath a wisdom that doth guide his valour
To act in safety. There is none, but he Whose being I do fear: and, under him,
My genius is rebuk'd; as, it is said,
Mark Antony's was by Cæsar. He chid the sisters,
When first they put the name of King upon me,
And bade them speak to him; then, propheticlike,
They hail'd him father to a line of kings:
Upon my head they plac'd a fruitless crown,
And put a barren sceptre in my gripe,
Thence to be wrench'd with an unlineal hand,
No son of mine succeeding. If it be so,
For Banquo's issue have I fil'd⁶ my mind;
For them the gracious Duncan have I murder'd;
Put rancours in the vessel of my peace
Only for them; and mine eternal jewel
Given to the common enemy of man,⁷
To make them kings; the seed of Banquo kings!
Rather than so, come, fate, into the list,
And champion me to the utterance!⁸ — Who's
there? —

Re-enter Attendant, with two Murderers.

Now go to the door, and stay there till we call.

[Exit Attendant.]

Was it not yesterday we spoke together?

1 Mur. It was, so please your highness.

Macb.

Well then, now

Have you considered of my speeches? Know,
That it was he, in the times past, which held you
So under fortune; which, you thought, had been
Our innocent self: this I made good to you
In our last conference, pass'd in probation⁹ with you, How you were borne in hand;¹⁰ how cross'd; in the instruments;

Who wrought with them; and all things else, that might,

To half a soul, and to a notion craz'd,

Say, Thus did Banquo.

1 Mur.

You made it known to us.

Macb. I did so; and went further, which is now
Our point of second meeting. Do you find
Your patience so predominant in your nature,
That you can let this go? Are you so gospell'd¹¹
To pray for that good man, and for his issue,
Whose heavy hand has bow'd you to the grave,
And beggar'd yours for ever?

1 Mur.

We are men, my liege.

Macb. Ay, in the catalogue ye go for men;
As hounds, and greyhounds, mongrels, spaniels, curs, Shoughs,¹² water-rugs, and demi-wolves, are clep'd¹³

All by the name of dogs: the valued file¹⁴

Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle,

The house-keeper, the hunter, every one

According to the gift which bounteous nature

Hath in him clos'd; whereby he does receive

Particular addition,¹⁵ from the bill

That writes them all alike: and so of men.

¹ Let fate, that has foredoomed the exaltation of Banquo's sons, enter the lists against me in defence of its own decrees, I will fight against it to the extremity, whatever be the consequence.

⁹ i. e. 'passed in proving to you.'

¹⁰ To bear in hand is to delude by encouraging hope and holding out fair prospects, without any intention of performance.

¹¹ I. e. 'are you so obedient to the precept of the gospel, which teaches us to pray for those who despitefully use us?'

¹² Shoughs are probably what we now call shocks. Nashe, in his Lenten Stiffe, mentions them, 'a trundle-tail uke or shough or two.'

¹³ Clep'd, called.

¹⁴ The valued file is the descriptive list wherein their value and peculiar qualities are set down; such a list of dogs may be found in Junius's Nomenclator, by Fleming, and may have furnished Shakspeare with the idea.

¹⁵ Particular addition, title, description.

¹ 'A solemn supper.' This was the phrase of Shakspeare's time for a feast or banquet given on a particular occasion, to solemnize any event, as a birth, marriage, coronation, &c. Howel, in a letter to Sir T. Hawke, 1636, says, 'I was invited yesternight to a solemn supper by B. J. [Ben Jonson,] where you were deeply remembered.'

² i. e. 'if my horse does not go well.' Shakspeare often uses the comparative for the positive and superlative.

³ i. e. commit. ⁴ Nobleness.

⁵ 'And to that,' i. e. in addition to.

⁶ For defiled.

⁸ 'To the utterance.' This phrase, which is found in writers who preceded Shakspeare, is borrowed from the French; se battre à l'outrance, to fight desperately or to extremity, even to death. The sense therefore is:—

Now, if you have a station in the file,
Not in the worst rank of manhood, say it;
And I will put that business in your bosoms,
Whose execution takes your enemy off;
Grapples you to the heart and love of us,
Who wear our health but sickly in his life,
Which in his death were perfect.

2 Mur. I am one, my liege,
Whom the vile blows and buffets of the world
Have so incens'd, that I am reckless what
I do, to spite the world.

1 Mur. And I another,
So weary with disasters, tugg'd with fortune
That I would set my life on any chance,
To mend it, or be rid on't.

Macb. Both of you
Know, Banquo was your enemy.

2 Mur. True, my lord.

Macb. So is he mine: and in such bloody distance,¹

That every minute of his being thrusts
Against my near'st of life: And though I could
With bare-fac'd power sweep him from my sight,
And bid my will avouch it; yet I must not,
For certain friends that are both his and mine,
Whose loves I may not drop, but wail his fall
Whom I myself struck down: and thence it is,
That I to your assistance do make love;
Masking the business from the common eye,
For sundry weighty reasons.

2 Mur. We shall, my lord,
Perform what you command us.

1 Mur. Though our lives——

Macb. Your spirits shine through you. Within this hour at most,

I will advise you where to plant yourselves:
Acquaint you with the perfect spy o' the time,²
The moment on't: for't must be done to-night,
And something from the palace; always thought,
That I require a clearness:³ And with him
(To leave no rubs, nor botches, in the work,) I
Fleance his son, that keeps him company,
Whose absence is no less material to me
Than is his father's, must embrace the fate
Of that dark hour. Resolve yourselves apart;
I'll come to you anon.

2 Mur. We are resolv'd my lord.

Macb. I'll call upon you straight; abide within.
It is concluded:——Banquo, thy soul's flight,
If it find heaven, must find it out to-night. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The same. Another Room. Enter
LADY MACBETH, and a Servant.

Lady M. Is Banquo gone from court?

Serv. Ay, madam, but returns again to-night.

Lady M. Say to the king, I would attend his leisure

For a few words.

1 'Bloody distance' is mortal enmity.

2 i. e. the exact time when you may look out or lie in wait for him.

3 '——' always thought

That I require a clearness.

'Always remembering that I must stand clear of suspicion.'

4 Sorriest, most melancholy.

5 The first folio reads peace; the second folio place.

6 Ecstasy, in its general sense, signifies any violent emotion or alienation of the mind. The old dictionaries render it a trance, a dampe, a cramp.

7 Remembrance is here employed as a quadrisyllable.

8 Present him eminence, do him the highest honour.

9 The sense of this passage (though clouded by metaphor, and perhaps by omission) appears to be as follows:—It is a sign that our royalty is unsafe, when it must descend to flattery, and stoop to dissimulation. The present arrangement of the text is by Malone.

10 Ritson has justly observed, that 'Nature's copy' alludes to copyhold tenure, in which the tenant holds an estate for life, having nothing but the copy of the rolls of his lord's court to show for it. A life-hold tenure may well be said to be not eternal. The subsequent speech of Macbeth, in which he says,

'Cancel and tear to pieces that great bond.'

Serv. Madam, I will. [Exit.]

Lady M. Nought's had, all's spent,

Where our desire is got without content:

'Tis safer to be that which we destroy,

Than, by destruction, dwell in doubtful joy.

Enter MACBETH.

How now, my lord? why do you keep alone,
Of sorriest⁴ fancies your companions making?
Using those thoughts, which should indeed have died
With them they think on? Things without remedy
Should be without regard: what's done is done.

Macb. We have scotch'd the snake, not kill'd it;
She'll close, and be herself; whilst our poor malice
Remains in danger of her former tooth.

But let the frame of things disjoint,
Both the worlds suffer,

Ere we will eat our meal in fear, and sleep
In the affliction of these terrible dreams

That shake us nightly: Better be with the dead,
Whom we, to gain our place,⁵ have sent to peace,
Than on the torture of the mind to lie

In restless ecstasy.⁶ Duncan is in his grave;

After life's fitful fever, he sleeps well;

Treason has done his worst; nor steel, nor poison,

Malice domestic, foreign levy, nothing,

Can touch him further!

Lady M. Come on, gentle my lord;
Sleek o'er your rugged looks; be bright and jovial
Among your guests to-night.

Macb. So shall I, love;
And so, I pray, be you: let your remembrance⁷

Apply to Banquo: present him eminence,⁸ both
With eye and tongue: unsafe, the while, that we Must leave our honours in these flattering streams;

And make our faces vizards to our hearts,
Disguising what they are.⁹

Lady M. You must leave this.

Macb. O, full of scorpions is my mind, dear wife!
Thou know'st that Banquo, and his Fleance, lives.

Lady M. But in them nature's copy's¹⁰ not eterne.

Macb. There's comfort yet; they are assailable;
Then be thou jocund: Ere the bat hath flown
His cloister'd flight; ere, to black Hecate's summons,

The shard-borne beetle,¹¹ with his drowsy hums,
Hath rung night's yawning peal, there shall be done
A deed of dreadful note.

Lady M. What's to be done?

Macb. Be innocent of the knowledge, dearest chuck,

Till thou applaud the deed. Come, seeling¹² night,
Skarf up the tender eye of pitiful day;
And, with thy bloody and invisible hand,
Cancel and tear to pieces that great bond
Which keeps me pale!¹³—Light thickens; and the crow

Makes good to the rooky wood:¹⁴ confirms this explanation. Many of Shakespeare's allusions are to legal customs.

11 That is, the beetle borne along the air by its shards or scaly wings. Steevens had the merit of first showing that shard or sherd was the ancient word for a scale or outward covering, a case or sheath; as appears from the following passage cited by him from Gower's Confessio Amantis, b. vi. fol. 139:—

'She sigh, her thought a dragon tho,
Whose *sherd*s shynen as the sonne.'

And again in book v. speaking of a serpent:—
'He was so sherded all about,
It held all edge-tool without.'

12 i. e. blinding: to seel up the eyes of a hawk was to close them by sewing the eyelids together.

13 So in Cymbeline:—
'Cancel his bond of life, dear God, I pray.'

14 By the expression, light thickens, Shakespeare means that it is growing dark. Thus, in Fletcher's Faithful Shepherdess:—

'Fold your flocks up, for the air
'Gins to thicken, and the sun
Already his great course hath run.'

Spenser, in the Shepherd's Calendar, has:—
'—— the welkin thicks apace.'

Notwithstanding Mr. Steevens's ingenious attempts to explain the rooky wood otherwise, it surely means no-

Good things of day begin to droop and drowse;
Whiles night's black agents to their preys do rouse.¹

Thou marvell'st at my words; but hold thee still;
Things, bad begun, make strong themselves by ill:
So, prythee, go with me. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The same. A Park or Lawn, with a Gate leading to the Palace. Enter three Murderers.

1 Mur. But who did bid thee join with us?

3 Mur. Macbeth.

2 Mur. He needs not our mistrust; since he delivers

Our offices, and what we have to do,
To the direction just.

1 Mur. Then stand with us.

The west yet glimmers with some streaks of day:
Now spurs the lated traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn; and near approaches
The subject of our watch.

3 Mur. Hark! I hear horses.

Ban. [within.] Give us a light there, ho!

2 Mur. Then it is he; the rest
That are within the note of expectation.²
Already are i' the court.

1 Mur. His horses go about.

3 Mur. Almost a mile: but he does usually,
So all men do, from hence to the palace gate
Make it their walk.

Enter BANQUO and FLEANCE, a Servant with a Torch preceding them.

2 Mur. A light, a light!

3 Mur. 'Tis he.

1 Mur. Stand to't.

Ban. It will be rain to-night.

1 Mur. Let it come down.

[Assaults BANQUO.]

Ban. O, treachery! Fly, good Fleance, fly, fly, fly;

Thou may'st revenge. O slave!

[Dies. Fleance and Servant escape.³

3 Mur. Who did strike out the light?

1 Mur. Was't not the way?

3 Mur. There's but one down: the son is fled.

2 Mur. We have lost best half of our affair.

1 Mur. Well, let's away, and say how much is done.

SCENE IV. A Room of State in the Palace. A Banquet prepared. Enter MACBETH, LADY MACBETH, ROSSE, LENOX, Lords, and Attendants.

Macb. You know your own degrees, sit down:
at first⁴

And last, the hearty welcome.

Lords. Thanks to your majesty.

Macb. Ourselves will mingle with society,
And play the humble host.

Our hostess keeps her state;⁵ but, in best time,
We will require her welcome.

Lady M. Pronounce it for me, sir, to all our friends;

For my heart speaks, they are welcome.

Enter first Murderer, to the door

Macb. See, they encounter thee with their hearts'
thanks:—

thing more than the wood inhabited by rooks. The poet has shown himself a close observer of nature, in marking the return of these birds to their nest-trees when the day is drawing to a close.

1 See note on King Richard III. Act iv. Sc. 1.

2 i. e. they who are set down in the list of guests, and expected to supper.

3 Fleance, after the assassination of his father, fled into Wales, where, by the daughter of the prince of that country, he had a son named Walter, who afterwards became Lord High Steward of Scotland, and from thence assumed the name of Sir Walter Steward. From him, in a direct line, King James I. was descended; in compliment to whom Shakespeare has chosen to describe

Both sides are even: Here I'll sit i' the midst:
Be large in mirth; anon, we'll drink a measure
The table round.—There's blood upon thy face.

Mur. 'Tis Banquo's, then.

Macb. 'Tis better thee without, than he within.⁶
Is he despatch'd?

Mur. My lord, his throat is cut; that I did for him.

Macb. Thou art the best o' the cut-throats: Yet
he's good,

That did the like for Fleance: if thou didst it,
Thou art the nonpareil.

Mur. Most royal sir,

Fleance is 'scap'd.

Macb. Then comes my fit again: I had else been perfect;

Whole as the marble, founded as the rock;

As broad and general as the casing air:

But now, I am cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd, bound in
To saucy doubts and fears. But Banquo's safe?

Mur. Ay, my good lord: safe in a ditch he bides,
With twenty trenched⁷ gashes on his head;
The least a death to nature.

Macb. Thanks for that:—

There the grown serpent lies; the worm, that's fled,
Hath nature that in time will venom breed,
No teeth for the present.—Get thee gone; to-morrow

We'll hear ourselves again. [Exit Murderer.]

Lady M. My royal lord,

You do not give the cheer: the feast is sold,

That is not often vouch'd while 'tis a making,
'Tis given with welcome: To feed were best at
home;

From thence, the sauce to meat is ceremony;

Meeting were bare without it.

Macb. Sweet remembrancer!—

Now, good digestion wait on appetite,

And health on both!

Len. May it please your highness, sit?

[The Ghost of BANQUO rises, and sits in MACBETH'S place.]

Macb. Here had we now our country's honour roof'd,

Were the grac'd person of our Banquo present;

Who may I rather challenge for unkindness,

Than pity for mischance!⁸

Rosse. His absence, sir,

Lays blame upon his promise. Please it your highness

To grace us with your royal company?

Macb. The table's full.

Len. Here's a place reserv'd, sir?

Macb. Where?

Len. Here, my good lord. What is't that moves
your highness?

Macb. Which of you have done this?

Lords. What, my good lord?

Macb. Thou canst not say, I did it: never shake Thy gory locks at me.

Rosse. Gentlemen, rise; his highness is not well.

Lady M. Sit, worthy friends:—my lord is often
thus,

And hath been from his youth: 'pray you, keep seat;
The fit is momentary; upon a thought⁹

He will again be well: If much you note him,

Banquo, who was equally concerned with Macbeth in the murder of Duncan, as innocent of that crime.

4 'At first and last.' Johnson, with great plausibility, proposes to read, 'To first and last.'

5 'Keeps her state,' continues in her chair of state. A state was a royal chair with a canopy over it.

6 'Tis better thee without than he within,' that is, I am better pleased that the blood of Banquo should be on thy face than in his body. He is put for him.

7 'With twenty trenched gashes on his head.' From the French trancher, to cut.

8 Macbeth betrays himself by an overacted regard for Banquo, of whose absence from the feast he affects to complain, that he may not be suspected of knowing the cause, though at the same time he very unguardedly drops an allusion to that cause. May I seems to imply here a wish, not an assertion.

9 i. e. as speedily as thought can be exerted.

You shall offend him, and extend his passion;¹
Feed, and regard him not.—Are you a man?

Macb. Ay, and a bold one, that dare look on that
Which might appal the devil.

Lady M. O proper stuff!
This is the very painting of your fear:
This is the air-drawn dagger, which, you said,
Led you to Duncan. O, these flaws² and starts (Impostors to³ true fear) would well become
A woman's story at a winter's fire,
Authoriz'd by her grandam. Shame itself!
Why do you make such faces? When all's done,
You look but on a stool.

Macb. Pr'ythee, see there! behold! look! lo!
how say you?—

Why, what care I? If thou canst nod, speak too.—
If charnel-houses, and our graves, must send
Those that we bury, back, our monuments
Shall be the maws of kites.⁴ [Ghost disappears.]

Lady M. What! quite unmann'd in folly?

Macb. If I stand here, I saw him.

Lady M. Fye, for shame!
Macb. Blood hath been shed ere now, i' the olden
time,

Ere human statute purg'd the general weal;
Ay, and since, too, murders have been perform'd
Too terrible for the ear: the times have been,
That, when the brains were out, the man would die,
And there an end: but now, they rise again,
With twenty mortal murders on their crowns,
And push us from our stools: This is more strange
Than such a murder is.

Lady M. My worthy lord,
Your noble friends do lack you.

Macb. I do forget:—
Do not muse⁵ at me, my most worthy friends;
I have a strange infirmity, which is nothing
To those that know me. Come, love and health to all;

Then I'll sit down:—Give me some wine, fill full:
I'll drink to the general joy of the whole table,

Ghost rises.

And to our dear friend Banquo, whom we miss;
'Would, he were here! to all, and him, we thirst,
And all to all.⁶

Lords. Our duties, and the pledge.

Macb. Avaunt! and quit my sight! Let the earth hide thee!

Thy bones are marrowless, thy blood is cold;
Thou hast no speculation⁷ in those eyes
Which thou dost glare with!

Lady M. Think of this, good peers,
But as a thing of custom: 'tis no other;
Only it spoils the pleasure of the time.

1 i. e. prolong his suffering, make his fit longer.

2 Flaue are sudden gusts.

3 'Impostors to true fear.' Warburton's learning serves him not here; his explanation is erroneous. Malone idly suggests that to may be used for of. Mason has hit the meaning, though his way of accounting for it is wrong. It seems strange that none of the commentators should be aware that this was a form of elliptic expression, commonly used even at this day, in the phrase 'this is nothing to them,' i. e. in comparison to them.

4 The same thought occurs in Spenser's Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. viii. :—

'Be not entombed in the raven or the night.'

5 Shakespeare uses to muse for to wonder, to be in amazement.

6 That is, 'we desire to drink' all good wishes to all.

7 'Thou hast no speculation in those eyes.' Bullokar, in his Expositor, 1616, explains 'Speculation, the inward knowledge or beholding of a thing.' Thus, in the 115th Psalm :—'Eyes have they, but see not.'

8 Hyrcan for Hyrcanian was the mode of expression at that time.

9 Pope changed inhabit, the reading of the old copy, to inhibit, and Stevens altered then to thee, so that in the late editions this line runs :—

'If trembling I inhibit thee, protest me
The baby of a girl.'

To inhibit is to forbid, a meaning which will not suit with the context of the passage. The original text is

Macb. What man dare, I dare:

Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear,
The arm'd rhinoceros, or the Hyrcan tiger,¹
Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves
Shall never tremble: Or, be alive again,
And dare me to the desert with thy sword:
If trembling I inhabit² thee, protest me
The baby of a girl. Hence, horrible shadow!

[Ghost disappears.]

Unreal mockery, hence!—Why, so;—being gone,
I am a man again.—'Pray you, sit still.

Lady M. You have displac'd the mirth, broke the good meeting,
With most admir'd disorder.

Macb. Can such things be,
And overcome!³ us like a summer's cloud,
Without our special wonder? You make me strange
Even to the disposition that I owe.⁴
When now I think you can behold such sights,⁵
And keep the natural ruby of your cheeks,
When mine are blanch'd with fear.

Rosse. What sights, my lord?
Lady M. I pray you, speak not; he grows worse and worse;

Question enrages him: at once, good night:—
Stand not upon the order of your going,
But go at once.

Len. Good night, and better health
Attend his majesty!

Lady M. A kind good night to all!
[Exeunt Lords and Attendants.]

Macb. It will have blood; they say, blood will have blood;

Stones have been known to move, and trees to speak;

Augures!⁶ and understood relations have,
By magot-pies, and choughs, and rooks, brought forth

The secret'st man of blood.—What is the night?

Lady M. Almost at odds with morning, which is which.

Macb. How say'st thou,⁷ that Macduff denies his person,

At our great bidding?

Lady M. Did you send to him, sir?

Macb. I hear it by the way; but I will send:
There's not a one of them, but in his house
I keep a servant feed'd. I will, to-morrow,
(And betimes I will,) to the weird sisters:
More shall they speak; for now I am bent to know,
By the worst means, the worst: for mine own good,
All causes shall give way: I am in blood
Stept in so far, that, should I wade no more,
Returning were as tedious as go e'er:

sufficiently plain, and much in Shakespeare's manner.

'Dare me to the desert with thy sword; if then I do not meet thee there; if trembling I stay in my castle, or any habitation; if I then hide my head, or dwell in any place through fear, protest me the baby of a girl.' If it had not been for the meddling of Pope and others, this passage would have hardly required a note.

10 'Overcome us,' pass over us without wonder, as a casual summer's cloud passes unregarded.

11 i. e. possess.

12 'You strike me with amazement, make me scarce know myself, now when I think that you can behold such sights unmoved,' &c.

13 i. e. augures, divinations; formerly spelt augures, as appears by Florio in voce augurio. 'By understood relations, probably, connected circumstances relating to the crime are meant. I am inclined to think that the passage should be pointed thus :—

'Stones have been known to move, and trees to speak Augures; and understood relations have, By magot-pies, and choughs, and rooks, brought forth The secret'st man of blood.'

In all the modern editions we have it erroneously augurs. Magot-pie is the original name of the magpie: stories such as Shakespeare alludes to are to be found in Lupton's Thousand Notable Things, and in Goulart's Admirable Histories.

14 i. e. what say'st thou to this circumstance? Thus, in Macbeth's address to his wife, on the first appearance of Banquo's ghost!—

'Behold! look! lo! how say you?'

Strange things I have in head, that will to hand;
Which must be acted, ere they may be scann'd.¹

Lady M. You lack the season² of all natures, sleep.

Macb. Come, we'll to sleep: My strange and self abuse

Is the initiate fear, that wants hard use:—

We are yet but young in deed.³ [Exeunt.]

SCENE V. The Heath. Thunder. Enter HECATE, meeting the three Witches.

I Witch. Why, how now, Hecate? you look angrily.

Hec. Have I not reason, beldames, as you are,
Saucy, and overbold? How did you dare
To trade and traffic with Macbeth,
In riddles and affairs of death;
And I, the mistress of your charms,
The close contriver of all harms,
Was never call'd to bear my part,
Or show the glory of our art?

And, which is worse, all you have done
Hath been but for a wayward son,
Spiteful, and wrathful; who, as others do,
Loves for his own ends, not for you.
But make amends now: Get you gone,
And at the pit of Acheron

Meet me i' the morning; thither he
Will come to know his destiny.
Your vessels, and your spells, provide,
Your charms, and every thing beside;
I am for the air; this night I'll spend
Unto a dismal and a fatal end.

Great business must be wrought ere noon:
Upon the corner of the moon

There hangs a vaporous drop profound;⁴

I'll catch it ere it come to ground:
And that, distill'd by magic slights,⁶
Shall raise such artificial sprights,
As, by the strength of their illusion,
Shall draw him on to his confusion:

He shall spurn fate, scorn death, and bear
His hopes 'bove wisdom, grace, and fear:
And you all know, security
Is mortal's chiefest enemy.

Song. [Within.] Come away, come away, &c.⁷

Hark, I am call'd; my little spirit, see,
Sits in a foggy cloud, and stays for me. [Exit.]

I Witch. Come, let's make haste; she'll soon be back again. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. Forbes. A Room in the Palace.

Enter LENOX and another Lord.

Len. My former speeches have but hit your thoughts,

Which can interpret further: only, I say,

1 i.e. examined nicely.

2 'You lack the season of all natures, sleep.' Johnson explains this, 'You want sleep, which seasons or gives the relish to all natures.' Indiget somni vite condimenti. So in All's Well that Ends Well: 'Tis the best brine a maiden can season her praise in.' It has, however, been suggested that the meaning is, 'You stand in need of the time or season of sleep which all natures require.' I incline to the last interpretation.

3 The editions previous to Theobald's read:—

'We're but young indeed.'

The initiate fear is the fear that always attends the first initiation into guilt, before the mind becomes callous and insensible by hard use or frequent repetition of it.

4 Shakespeare has been unjustly censured for introducing Hecate among the vulgar witches, and consequently for confounding ancient with modern superstitions. But the poet has elsewhere shown himself well acquainted with the classical connexion which this deity had with witchcraft. Reginald Scot, in his discovery, mentions it as the common opinion of all writers, that witches were supposed to have nightly 'meetings with Herodias and the Pagan gods,' and that 'in the night time they ride abroad with Diana, the goddess of the Pagans,' &c. Their dame or chief leader seems always to have been an old Pagan, as 'the Ladie Sibylla, Minerva, or Diana.'

5 Steevens remarks that Shakespeare's mythological knowledge on this occasion appears to have deserted him; for as Hecate is only one of the three names be-

Things have been strangely borne: The gracious
Duncan

Was pitied of Macbeth:—marry, he was dead:—
And the right-valiant Banquo walk'd too late;
Whom you may say, if it please you, Fleance
kill'd,

For Fleance fled. Men must not walk too late.
Who cannot⁸ want the thought, how monstrous
It was for Malcolm, and Donalbain,
To kill their gracious father? damned fact!
How it did grieve Macbeth! did he not straight,
In pious rage, the two delinquents tear,
That were the slaves of drink, and thralls of sleep?
Was not that nobly done? Ay, and wisely too;
For, 'twould have anger'd any heart alive,
To hear the men deny it. So that, I say,
He has borne all things well: and I do think,
That, had he Duncan's sons under his key,
(As, an't please heaven, he shall not,) they should find

What 'twere to kill a father; so should Fleance.
But, peace!—for from broad words, and 'cause he fail'd

His presence at the tyrant's feast, I hear,
Macduff lives in disgrace: Sir, can you tell
Where he bestows himself?

Lord.

The son of Duncan,

From whom this tyrant holds the due of birth,
Lives in the English court; and is receiv'd
Of the most pious Edward with such grace,
That the malevolence of fortune nothing
Takes from his high respect: Thither Macduff
Is gone to pray the holy king, upon his aid
To wake Northumberland, and warlike Siward:
That, by the help of these, (with Him above
To ratify the work,) we may again
Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights;
Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives;⁹
Do faithful homage, and receive free honours,¹⁰
All which we pine for now: And this report
Hath so exasperate¹¹ the king, that he Prepares for some attempt of war.

Len.

Sent he to Macduff?

Lord. He did: and with an absolute, Sir, not I,
The cloudy messenger turns me his back,
And hums; as who should say, *You'll rue the time
That clogs me with this answer.*

Len.

And that well might

Advise him to a caution, to hold what distance
His wisdom can provide. Some holy angel
Fly to the court of England, and unfold
His message ere he come; that a swift blessing
May soon return to this our suffering country
Under a hand accus'd!¹²

Lord. I'll send my prayers with him! [Exeunt.] longing to the same goddess, she could not properly be employed in one character to catch a drop that fell from her in another. In a Midsummer Night's Dream, however, the poet was sufficiently aware of her threefold capacity:—

—fairies, that do run

By the triple Hecat's team.'

The vaporous drop profound seems to have been meant for the same as the virus lunare of the ancients, being a foam which the moon was supposed to shed on particular herbs, or other objects, when strongly solicited by enchantment.

6 Slights are arts, subtle practices.

7 This song is to be found entire in The Witch, by Middleton.

8 'Who cannot want the thought;' &c. The sense requires 'who can want the thought;' but it is probably a lapse of the poet's pen.

9 'Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives.' The construction is:—'Free our feasts and banquets from bloody knives.'

10 Johnson says, 'Free may be either honours freely bestowed, not purchased by crimes; or honours without slavery, without dread of a tyrant.' I have shown in a note on Twelfth Night, Act ii. Sc. 4. that free meant pure, chaste, consequently unspotted, which may be its meaning here. Free also meant noble. See note on the Second Part of King Henry VI. Act iii. Sc. 1.

11 Exasperate, for exasperated.

12 The construction is, 'to this our country, suffering under a hand accus'd.'

ACT IV.

SCENE I. *A dark Cave. In the middle, a Cauldron boiling. Thunder. Enter the three Witches.*¹

1 Witch. Thrice the brinded cat hath mew'd.

2 Witch. Thrice; and once the hedge-pig whin'd.²

3 Witch. Harper cries:—'Tis time, 'tis time.

1 Witch. Round about the cauldron go;
In the poison'd entrails throw.—
Toad, that under coldest³ stone,
Days and nights hast thirty-one Swelter'd⁴ venom, sleeping got,
Boil thou first i' the charmed pot!

All. Double, double toil and trouble;
Fire, burn; and, cauldron, bubble.

2 Witch. Fillet of a fenny snake,
In the cauldron boil and bake:
Eye of newt, and toe of frog,
Wool of bat, and tongue of dog,
Adder's fork, and blind-worm's⁵ sting,
Lizard's leg, and owlet's wing,
For a charm of powerful trouble,
Like a hell-broth boil and bubble.

All. Double, double toil and trouble;
Fire, burn; and, cauldron, bubble.

3 Witch. Scale of dragon, tooth of wolf;
Witch's mummy; maw and gulf⁶
Of the ravin'd⁷ salt-sea shark;
Root of hemlock, digg'd i' the dark;
Liver of blaspheming Jew;
Gall of goat; and slips of yew,
Sliver'd⁸ in the moon's eclipse;
Nose of Turk, and Tartar's lips;
Finger of birth-strangled babe,
Ditch-deliver'd by a drab,
Make the gruel thick and slab;
Add thereto a tiger's chauldron,
For the ingredients of our cauldron.

All. Double, double toil and trouble;
Fire, burn; and, cauldron, bubble.

2 Witch. Cool it with a baboon's blood,
Then the charm is firm and good.

Enter HECATE, and the other three Witches.

Hee. O, well done! I commend your pains;
And every one shall share i' the gains.
And now about the cauldron sing,
Like elves and fairies in a ring,
Enchanting all that you put in.

SONG.¹⁰

*Black spirits and white,
Red spirits and gray;
Mingle, mingle, mingle,
You that mingle may.*

2 Witch. By the pricking of my thumbs,¹¹
Something wicked this way comes:—
Open, locks, whoever knocks.

Enter MACBETH.

Macb. How now, you secret, black, and midnight hags?

What is't you do?

All. A deed without a name.

Macb. I conjure you, by that which you profess, (Howe'er you come to know it,) answer me:
Though you untie the winds, and let them fight Against the churches; though the yesty¹² waves
Confound and swallow navigation up;
Though bladed corn be lodg'd,¹³ and trees blown
down;

Though castles topple¹⁴ on their warders' heads;
Though palaces, and pyramids, do slope
Their heads to their foundations; though the treasure

Of nature's germins¹⁵ tumble all together,
Even till destruction sicken, answer me
To what I ask you.

1 Witch. Speak.

2 Witch. Demand.

3 Witch. We'll answer.

1 Witch. Say, if thou'dst rather hear it from our mouths,
Or from our masters'?

Macb. Call them, let me see them.

1 Witch. Pour in sow's blood, that hath eaten
Her nine farrow;¹⁶ grease, that's sweaten
From the murderer's gibbet, throw
Into the flame.

All. Come, high, or low;
Thyself, and office, deftly¹⁷ show.

Thunder. An Apparition of an armed Head rises.

Macb. Tell me, thou unknown power,——

1 Witch. He knows thy thought;

Hear his speech, but say thou nought.¹⁸

App. Macbeth! Macbeth! Macbeth! beware
Macduff;

Beware the thane of Fife.—Dismiss me:—
Enough.²⁰ [Descends.]

Macb. Whate'er thou art, for thy good caution,
thanks;

Thou hast harp'd²¹ my fear aright:—But one word
more:—

the entire stanza is found in The Witch, by Middleton, and is there called 'A charme Song about a Vessel.'

11 'By the pricking of my thumbs.' It is a very ancient superstition, that all sudden pains of the body, and other sensations which could not naturally be accounted for, were presages of somewhat that was shortly to happen.

12 l. e. foaming, frothy.

13 l. e. laid flat by wind or rain.

14 Topple, tumble.

15 Germins, seeds which have begun to sprout or germinate.

16 'Pour in sow's blood, that hath eaten

Her nine farrow.'

Shakespeare probably caught this idea from the laws of Kenneth II. king of Scotland:—'If a sow eat hir pigges, let hyr be stoned to death and buried, that no man eat of hyr flesh.'—Holinshed's History of Scot- land, ed. 1577, p. 181.

17 Deftly is adroitly, dexterously.

18 The armed head represents symbolically Macbeth's head cut off and brought to Malcolm by Macduff.
The bloody child is Macduff, untimely ripped from his mother's womb. The child, with a crown on his head and a bough in his hand, is the royal Malcolm, who ordered his soldiers to hew them down a bough, and bear it before them to Dunsinane.

19 Silence was necessary during all incantations.

20 Spirits thus evoked were supposed to be impatient of being questioned.

21 Harp'd, touched on a passion as a harper touches a string.

1 'Enter the three Witches.' Dr. Johnson has called the reader's attention to the 'judgment with which Shakespeare has selected all the circumstances of his infernal ceremonies, and how exactly he has conformed to common opinions and traditions.'

2 'Thrice; and once the hedge-pig whin'd.' The orchn or hedgehog, like the toad, for its solitariness, the ugliness of its appearance, and from a popular belief that it sucked or poisoned the udders of cows, was adopted into the demonologic system; and its shape was sometimes supposed to be assumed by mischievous elves. Hence it was one of the plagues of Caliban in the Tempest.

3 'Coldest stone.' The old copy reads 'cold stone'; the emendation is Stevens's. Mr. Boswell thinks that the alteration was unnecessary.

4 Swell'd. This word is employed to signify that the animal was moistened with its own cold exudations.

5 The blind-worm is the slow-worm.

6 Gulf, the throat.

7 To ravin according to Minshew is to devour, to eat greedily. Ravin'd, therefore, may be glutted with prey. Unless, with Malone, we suppose that Shakespeare used ravin'd for ravenous, the passive participle for the adjective. In Horman's Vulgaria, 1519, occurs 'Thou art a ravenous of delicatels.'

8 Sliver is a common word in the north, where it means to cut a piece or slice.

9 l. e. entrails; a word formerly in common use in books of cookery, in one of which, printed in 1597, is a receipt to make a pudding of a calf's chauldron.

10 'Black spirits and white.' The original edition of this play only contains the two first words of this song;

1 Witch. He will not be commanded: Here's another,
More potent than the first.

Thunder. An Apparition of a bloody Child rises.

App. Macbeth! Macbeth! Macbeth!—
Macb. Had I three ears, I'd hear thee.¹

App. Be bloody, bold,
And resolute: laugh to scorn the power of man,
For none of woman born shall harm Macbeth.²

[Descends.]

Macb. Then live, Macduff; what need I fear of thee?

But yet I'll make assurance double sure,
And take a bond of fate: thou shalt not live;
That I may tell pale-hearted fear, it lies,
And sleep in spite of thunder.—What is this,

Thunder. An Apparition of a Child crowned, with a Tree in his Hand, rises.

That rises like the issue of a king;
And wears upon his baby brow the round
And top of sovereignty?³

All. Listen, but speak not to't.

App. Be lion-mettled, proud; and take no care
Who chafes, who frets, or where conspirers are;
Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be, until
Great Birnam wood to high Dunsinane hill⁴
Shall come against him. [Descends.]

Macb. That will never be;
Who can impress the forest;⁵ bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root? sweet bodements!
good!

Rebellious head,⁶ rise never, till the wood
Of Birnam rise, and our high-plac'd Macbeth
Shall live the lease of nature, pay his breath
To time, and mortal custom.—Yet my heart
Throbs to know one thing: Tell me, (if your art
Can tell so much,) shall Banquo's issue ever Reign in this kingdom?

All. Seek to know no more.

Macb. I will be satisfied: deny me this,
And an eternal curse fall on you! Let me know:—
Why sinks that cauldron? and what noise? is this?

[Hautboys.]

1 Witch. Show! 2 Witch. Show! 3 Witch.
Show!

All. Show his eyes, and grieve his heart;⁸
Come like shadows, so depart.

Eight Kings appear, and pass over the Stage in order; the last with a Glass in his Hand; BAN-quo following.

Macb. Thou art too like the spirit of Banquo;
down!

Thy crown does sear mine eyeballs:—And thy hair,

¹ 'Had I three ears, I'd hear thee.' This singular expression probably means no more than 'I will listen to thee with all attention.'

² 'For none of woman born shall harm Macbeth.' So Holinshed:—'And surely hereupon he had put Macduff to death, but that a certain witch, whom he had in great trust, had told him, that he should never be slain with man borne of anie woman, nor vanquish'd till the wood of Bernane came to the castle of Dunsinane. This prophecy put all fear out of his heart.'

³ The round is that part of a crown which encircles the head: the top is the ornament which rises above it.

⁴ The present accent of Dunsinane is right. In every subsequent instance the accent is misplaced.

⁵ I. e. command it to serve him like a soldier impressed.

⁶ 'Rebellious head.' The old copy reads dead; the emendation is Theobald's.

⁷ Noise in our old poets is often literally synonymous for music.

⁸ 'Show his eyes, and grieve his heart.' 'And the man of thine, whom I shall not cut off from mine altar, shall be to consume thine eyes, and to grieve thine heart.'—1 Samuel, ii. 33.

⁹ I. e. the dissolution of nature. Crack and crash were formerly synonymous.

¹⁰ This method of juggling prophecy is referred to in Measure for Measure, Act ii. Sc. 3:—

'—and like a prophet

Looks in a glass, and shows me future evils.'
In an extract from the Penal Laws against witches, it is

Thou other gold-bound brow, is like the first:—
A third is like the former:—Filthy hags!
Why do you show me this?—A fourth?—Start,
eyes!

What! will the line stretch out to the crack of doom?⁹

Another yet?—A seventh?—I'll see no more:—
And yet the eighth appears, who bears a glass,¹⁰
Which shows me many more; and some I see,
That twofold balls and treble sceptres carry;¹¹
Horrible sight!—Now, I see, 'tis true;
For the blood-bolter'd¹² Banquo smiles upon me,
And points at them for his.—What, is this so?

1 Witch. Ay, sir, all this is so:—But why Stands Macbeth thus amazedly?—
Come, sisters, cheer we up his sprights,¹³
And show the best of our delights;
I'll charm the air to give a sound,
While you perform your antique¹⁴ round:
That this great king may kindly say,
Our duties did his welcome pay.

[Music. The Witches dance, and vanish.]

Macb. Where are they? Gone?—Let this pernicious hour Stand aye accursed in the calendar!—
Come in, without there!

Enter LENOX.

Len. What's your grace's will?

Macb. Saw you the weird sisters?

Len. No, my lord.

Macb. Came they not by you?

Len. No, indeed, my lord.

Macb. Infected be the air whereon they ride;
And damn'd all those that trust them!—I did hear
The galloping of horse: Who was't came by?

Len. 'Tis two or three, my lord, that bring you
word,

Macduff is fled to England.

Macb. Fled to England?

Len. Ay, my good lord.

Macb. Time, thou anticipat'st¹⁵ my dread exploits:

The flighty purpose never is o'ertook,
Unless the deed go with it: From this moment
The very firstlings of my heart shall be
The firstlings of my hand. And even now
To crown my thoughts with acts, be it thought and done:

The castle of Macduff I will surprise;
Seize upon Fife; give to the edge o' the sword
His wife, his babes, and all unfortunate souls
That trace¹⁶ him in his line. No boasting like a fool:

This deed I'll do, before this purpose cool:

said 'they do answer either by voice, or else set before their eyes in glasses, chrysal stones, &c. the pictures or images of the persons or things sought for.'

¹¹ 'That twofold balls and treble sceptres carry.' This was intended as a compliment to James the First: he first united the two islands and the three kingdoms under one head, whose house too was said to be descended from Banquo, who is therefore represented not only as innocent, but as a noble character; whereas, according to history, he was confederate with Macbeth in the murder of Duncan.

¹² In Warwickshire, when a horse, sheep, or other animal, perspires much, and any of the hair or wool, in consequence of such perspiration, or any redundant humour, becomes matted into tufts with grime and sweat, he is said to be boltered; and whenever the blood issues out and coagulates, forming the locks into hard clotted bunches, the head is said to be blood-boltered. When a boy has a broken head, so that his hair is matted together with blood, his head is said to be boltered [pronounced battered]. The word battered is used in this sense by Philemon Holland in his Translation of Pliny's Natural History, 1601, b. xii. c. xvii. p. 370. It is therefore applicable to Banquo, who had 'twenty trencched gashes on his head.'

¹³ I. e. sprights. It should seem that sprights was almost always pronounced sprights or sprites by Shakespeare's contemporaries.

¹⁴ Antique was the old spelling for antic.

¹⁵ I. e. prevent them, by taking away the opportunity

¹⁶ I. e. follow, succeed in it.

But no more sights!--Where are these gentlemen?
Come, bring me where they are. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. Fife. A Room in Macduff's Castle.

Enter LADY MACDUFF, her Son, and Rosse.

L. Macd. What had he done, to make him fly the land?

Rosse. You must have patience, madam.

L. Macd. He had none;
His flight was madness: When our actions do not,
Our fears do make us traitors.¹

Rosse. You know not,
Whether it was his wisdom, or his fear.

L. Macd. Wisdom! to leave his wife, to leave his babes,

His mansion, and his titles, in a place
From whence himself does fly? He loves us not;
He wants the natural touch²:--for the poor wren,
The most diminutive of birds, will fight,
Her young ones in her nest, against the owl.
All is the fear, and nothing is the love;
As little is the wisdom, where the flight
So runs against all reason.

Rosse. My dearest coz',
I pray you, school yourself: But, for your husband,
He is noble, wise, judicious, and best knows
The fits³ of the season.³ I dare not speak much further:

But cruel are the times, when we are traitors,
And do not know ourselves; when we hold rumour
From what we fear, yet know not what we fear;⁴
But float upon a wild and violent sea,
Each way, and move.---I take my leave of you:
Shall not be long but I'll be here again:
Things at the worst will cease, or else climb upward
To what they were before.---My pretty cousin,
Blessing upon you!

L. Macd. Father'd he is, and yet he's fatherless.

Rosse. I am so much a fool, should I stay longer,
It would be my disgrace, and your discomfort:
I take my leave at once. [Exit Rosse.]

L. Macd. Sirrah,⁵ your father's dead;
And what will you do now? How will you live?

Son. As birds do, mother.

L. Macd. What, with worms and flies?

Son. With what I get, I mean; and so do they.

L. Macd. Poor bird! thou'dst never fear the net,
nor lime,

The pit-fall, nor the gin.

Son. Why should I, mother? Poor birds they are not set for.

My father is not dead, for all your saying.

L. Macd. Yes, he is dead; how wilt thou do for a father?

Son. Nay, how will you do for a husband?

L. Macd. Why, I can buy me twenty at any market.

Son. Then you'll buy 'em to sell again.

L. Macd. Thou speak'st with all thy wit; and yet i' faith,

With wit enough for thee.

Son. Was my father a traitor, mother?

L. Macd. Ay, that he was.

Son. What is a traitor?

L. Macd. Why, one that swears and lies.

Son. And be all traitors, that do so?

L. Macd. Every one that does so, is a traitor, and must be hanged.

Son. And must they all be hanged, that swear and lie?

L. Macd. Every one.

Son. Who must hang them?

L. Macd. Why, the honest men.

Son. Then the liars and swearers are fools: for there are liars and swearers enough to beat the honest men, and hang up them.

L. Macd. Now, God help thee, poor monkey!
But how wilt thou do for a father?

Son. If he were dead, you'd weep for him: I, you would not, it were a good sign that I should quickly have a new father.

L. Macd. Poor prattler! how thou talk'st.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Bless you, fair dame! I am not to you known,

Though in your state of honour I am perfect.⁶

I doubt, some danger does approach you nearly:

If you will take a homely man's advice;

Be not found here; hence, with your little ones.

To fright you thus, methinks, I am too savage;

To do worse to you, were fell cruelty,
Which is too high your person. Heaven preserve
you!

I dare abide no longer.

[Exit Messenger.]

L. Macd. Whither should I fly?

I have done no harm. But I remember now

I am in this earthly world; where, to do harm,

Is often laudable; to do good, sometime,

Accounted dangerous folly: Why then, alas!

Do I put up that womanly defence,

To say, I have done no harm?---What are these faces?

Enter Murderers.

Mur. Where is your husband?

L. Macd. I hope, in no place so unsanctified,
Where such as thou may'st find him.

Mur. He's a traitor.

Son. Thou ly'st, thou shag-ear'd⁷ villain.

Mur. What, you egg! [Stabbing him.]

Young fry of treachery!

Son. He has killed me, mother;

Run away, I pray you. [Dies.]

[Exit LADY MACDUFF, crying murder, and pursued by the Murderers.]

SCENE III. England. A Room in the King's Palace. Enter MALCOLM and MACDUFF.⁸

Mal. Let us seek out some desolate shade, and
there

Weep our sad bosoms empty.

Macd. Let us rather

Hold fast the mortal sword; and, like good men,

Bestride our downfall'n birthdom:⁹ Each new morn,

New widows howl; new orphans cry; new sorrows

Strike heaven on the face, that it resounds

As if it felt with Scotland, and yell'd out

Like syllable of dolour.

Mal. What I believe, I'll wail;

What know, believe; and, what I can redress,

As I shall find the time to friend,¹⁰ I will.

What you have spoke, it may be so, perchance.

This tyrant, whose sole name blisters our tongues,

Was once thought honest: you have lov'd him well;

5 Sirrah was not in our author's time a term of reproach, but sometimes used by masters to servants, parents to children, &c.

6 i. e. I am perfectly acquainted with your rank.

7 'Shag-ear'd' villain.' It has been suggested that we should read shag-hair'd, an abusive epithet frequent in our old plays. Hair being formerly spelt heare, the corruption would easily arise.

8 This scene is almost literally taken from Holm-shed's Chronicle, which is in this part an abridgment of the chronicle of Hector Boece, as translated by John Bellenden. From the recent reprints of both the Scottish and English chroniclers, quotations from them become the less necessary; they are now accessible to the reader curious in tracing the poet to his sources of information.

9 Birthdom, for the place of our birth, our native land.

10 i. e. befriend.

1 'Our fears do make us traitors.' Our flight is considered as evidence of our treason.

2 Natural touch, natural affection.

3 The fits of the season should appear to be the violent disorders of the season, its convulsions: as we still say figuratively the temper of the times.

4 'The best I can make of this passage is,' says Stee-vens:--'The times are cruel when our fears induce us to believe, or take for granted, what we hear rumoured or reported abroad; and yet at the same time, as we live under a tyrannical government, where will is substituted for law, we know not what we have to fear, because we know not when we offend.' Or, 'when we are led by our fears to believe every rumour of danger we hear, yet are not conscious to ourselves of any crime for which we should be disturbed with fears.'

He hath not touch'd you yet. I am young; but something
You may deserve¹ of him through me; and wisdom
To offer up a weak, poor, innocent lamb,
To appease an angry god.

Macd. I am not treacherous.

Mal. But Macbeth is.
A good and virtuous nature may recoil,
In an imperial charge.² But I shall crave your pardon;

That which you are, my thoughts cannot transpose:
Angels are bright still, though the brightest fell:
Though all things foul would wear the brows of grace,
Yet grace must still look so.³

Macd. I have lost my hopes.

Mal. Perchance, even there, where I did find my doubts.

Why in that rawness left you wife and child,
(Those precious motives, those strong knots of love,)
Without leave-taking?—I pray you,
Let not my jealousies be your dishonours,
But mine own safeties:—You may be rightly just,
Whatever I shall think.

Macd. Bleed, bleed, poor country!
Great tyranny, say thou thy basis sure,
For goodness dares not check thee!—wear thou thy wrongs;—

The title is affect'd!⁴—Fare thee well, lord:
I would not be the villain that thou think'st
For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,
And the rich East to boot.

Mal. Be not offended:
I speak not as in absolute fear of you.

I think our country sinks beneath the yoke:
It weeps, it bleeds; and each new day a gash
Is added to her wounds: I think, withal,
There would be hands uplifted in my right:
And here, from gracious England, have I offer
Of goodly thousands: But, for all this,
When I shall tread upon the tyrant's head,
Or wear it on my sword, yet my poor country
Shall have more vices than it had before;
More suffer, and more sundry ways than ever,
By him that shall succeed.

Macd. What should he be?

Mal. It is myself I mean: in whom I know
All the particulars of vice so grafted,
That, when they shall be open'd, black Macbeth
Will seem as pure as snow; and the poor state
Esteem him as a lamb, being compar'd
With my confineless harms.⁵

Macd. Not in the places
Of horrid hell, can come a devil more damn'd
In evils, to top Macbeth.

Mal. I grant him bloody,
Luxurious,⁶ avaricious, false, deceitful,
Sudden,⁷ malicious, smacking of every sin
That has a name: But there's no bottom, none,
In my voluptuousness; your wives, your daughters,
Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up

1 'You may deserve of him through me.' The old copy reads discerne. The emendation was made by Theobald. In the subsequent part of the line something is wanted to complete the sense. There is no verb to which wisdom can refer. Stevens conjectured that the line might originally have run thus:—

—but something
You may deserve through me; and wisdom is it
To offer, &c.

2 'A good and virtuous nature may recoil
In an imperial charge.'

A good mind may recede from goodness in the execution of a royal commission.

3 This is not very clear. Johnson has thus attempted to explain it: 'My suspicions cannot injure you, if you be virtuous, by supposing that a traitor may put on your virtuous appearance. I do not say that your virtuous appearance proves you a traitor; for virtue must wear its proper form, though that form be counterfeited by villainy.'

4 To affect is a law term, signifying to assess or reduce to certainty. The meaning therefore may be:—

'The title is confirmed to the usurper.'

My interpretation of the passage is this: 'Bleed, bleed,

The cistern of my lust; and my desire
All continent impediments would o'erbear,
That did oppose my will: Better Macbeth,
Than such a one to reign.

Macd. Boundless intemperance
In nature is a tyranny; it hath been
The untimely emptying of the happy throne,
And fall of many kings. But fear not yet
To take upon you what is yours: you may Convey your pleasures in a spacious plenty,
And yet seem cold, the time you may so hood-wink.
We have willing dames enough: there cannot be
That vulture in you, to devour so many
As will to greatness dedicate themselves,
Finding it so inclin'd.

Mal. With this, there grows,
In my most ill-compos'd affection, such
A staunchless avarice, that, were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands;
Desire his jewels, and this other's house:
And my more-having would be as a sauce
To make me hunger more: that I should forge
Quarrels unjust against the good, and loyal Destroying them for wealth.

Macd. This avarice
Sticks deeper; grows with more pernicious root
Than summer-seeming lust:⁸ and it hath been
The sword of our slain kings: Yet do not fear;
Scotland hath foysons⁹ to fill up your will,
Of your mere own: All these are portable,¹⁰
With other graces weigh'd.

Mal. But I have none: The king-becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, stableness,
Bounty, perseverance, mercy, lowliness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them; but abound
In the division of each several crime,
Acting in many ways. Nay, had I power, I should Pour the sweet milk of concord into hell
Uproar the universal peace, confound
All unity on earth.

Macd. O Scotland! Scotland!

Mal. If such a one be fit to govern, speak:
I am as I have spoken.

Macd. Fit to govern!
No, not to live.—O nation miserable,
With an untitled¹¹ tyrant bloody-sceptred,
When shalt thou see thy wholesome days again?
Since that the truest issue of thy throne
By his own interdiction stands accurs'd,
And does blaspheme his breed?—Thy royal father
Was a most sainted king: the queen, that bore thee,
Often upon her knees than on her feet,
Died every day she lived.¹² Fare thee well!
These evils, thou repeat'st upon thyself,
Have banish'd me from Scotland.—O, my breast,
Thy hope ends here!

Mal. Macduff, this noble passion,
Child of integrity, hath from my soul
Wip'd the black scruples, reconcil'd my thoughts poor country! Great tyranny, lay thou thy basis sure, for goodness dares not check thee! Then addressing Malcolm, Macduff says, 'Wear thou thy wrongs,—the title to thy crown is now confirmed—to the usurper, he would probably have added, but that he interrupts himself with angry impatience, at being suspected of traitorous double-dealing.

5 i. e. immeasurable evils.

6 Luxurious, lascivious.

7 Sudden, passionate.

8 Sir W. Blackstone proposed to read summer-seed- ing, which was adopted by Stevens: but there appears no reason for change. The meaning of the epithet may be,
'just as hot as summer.' In Donne's Poems, Malone has pointed out its opposite—winter-seeming.

9 Foysons, plenty.

10 Portable answers exactly to a phrase now in use.
Such failings may be borne with, or are bearable.

11 'With an untitled tyrant.' Thus in Chaucer's Manciple's Tale:—

'Right so betwix a titileles tiraunt
And an outlawe.'

12 'Died every day she lived.' The expression is derived from the Sacred Writings:—'I protest by you, rejoicing, which I have in Christ Jesus, I die daily'

To thy good truth and honour. Devilish Macbeth
By many of these trains hath sought to win me
Into his power; and modest wisdom plucks me
From over-credulous haste;¹ But God above
Deal between thee and me! for even now
I put myself to thy direction, and Unspoke mine own detraction: here abjure
The taints and blames I laid upon myself,
For strangers to my nature. I am yet
Unknown to woman; never was forsworn;
Scarcely have coveted what was mine own;
At no time broke my faith; would not betray
The devil to his fellow; and delight
No less in truth, than life: my first false speaking
Was this upon myself: What I am truly,
Is thine, and my poor country's to command:
Whither, indeed, before thy here-approach,
Old Siward, with ten thousand warlike men,
All ready at a point, was setting forth:
Now we'll together; And the chance, of goodness,
Be like our warranted quarrel! Why are you silent?

Macd. Such welcome and unwelcome things at once,

'Tis hard to reconcile.

Enter a Doctor.

Mal. Well; more anon.—Comes the king forth,
I pray you?

Doct. Ay, sir: there are a crew of wretched souls,

That stay his cure: their malady convinces²
The great assay of art; but at his touch,
Such sanctity hath heaven given his hand,
They presently amend.

Mal. I thank you, doctor.

Macd. What's the disease he means?

Mal. 'Tis call'd the evil:
A most miraculous work in this good king;
Which often, since my here-remain in England,
I have seen him do. How he solicits heaven,
Himself best knows: but strangely visited people,
All swoln and ulcerous, pitiful to the eye,
The mere despair of surgery, he cures:
Hanging a golden stamp³ about their necks,
Put on with holy prayers: and 'tis spoken,
To the succeeding royalty he leaves
The healing benediction. With this strange virtue,
He hath a heavenly gift of prophecy;
And sundry blessings hang about his throne,
To speak him full of grace.

Enter Rosse.

Macd. See, who comes here?

Mal. My countryman; but yet I know him not.

Macd. My ever-gentle cousin, welcome hither.

Mal. I know him now: Good God, betimes remove

The means that make us strangers!

Rosse. Sir, Amen.

Macd. Stands Scotland where it did?

Rosse. Alas, poor country!

Almost afraid to know itself! It cannot
Be call'd our mother, but our grave: where nothing,

1 Credulous haste, overhasty credulity.

2 I.e. overcomes it. We have before seen this word used in the same Latin sense, Act I. Sc. 7, of this play. 'To convince or convict, to vanquish and overcome. Erinco.'—Bart.

3 A golden stamp, the coin called an angel; the value of which was ten shillings.

4 'To rent' is an ancient verb, which has been long disused,' say the editors: in other words it is the old orthography of the verb to rend.

5 It has been before observed that Shakspeare uses ecstasy for every species of alienation of mind, whether proceeding from sorrow, joy, wonder, or any other exciting cause. Modern is generally used by him in the sense of common. A modern ecstasy is therefore a common grief.

6 Thus in Antony and Cleopatra:—

'We use

To say, the dead are well.'

7 To do off is to do off, to put off.

8 To latch (in the North) signifies the same as to

But who knows nothing, is once seen to smile;
Where sighs, and groans, and shrieks that rent⁴
the air,

Are made, not mark'd; where violent sorrow seems
A modern ecstasy:⁵ the dead man's knell
Is there scarce ask'd, for who; and good men's lives

Expire before the flowers in their caps,
Dying, or ere they sicken.

Macd. O, relation,

Too nice, and yet too true!

Mal. What is the newest grief?

Rosse. That of an hour's age doth hiss the speaker;

Each minute teems a new one.

Macd. How does my wife?

Rosse. Why, well.

Macd. And all my children?

Rosse. Well too.

Macd. The tyrant has not batter'd at their peace?

Rosse. No; they were well at peace, when I did leave them.

Macd. Be not a niggard of your speech; How goes it?

Rosse. When I came hither to transport the tidings,

Which I have heavily borne, there ran a rumour
Of many worthy fellows that were out;
Which was to my belief witness'd the rather,
For that I saw the tyrant's power a-foot:
Now is the time of help! your eye in Scotland
Would create soldiers, make our women fight,
To doff⁶ their dire distresses.

Mal. Be it their comfort,

We are coming thither: gracious England hath
Lent us good Siward, and ten thousand men;

An older, and a better soldier, none

That Christendom gives out.

Rosse. 'Would, I could answer

This comfort with the like! But I have words,
That would be howl'd out in the desert air,
Where hearing should not latch⁷ them.

Macd. What concern they?

The general cause? or is it a fee-grief,⁸
Due to some single breast?

Rosse. No mind, that's honest,
But in it shares some woe; though the main part
Pertains to you alone.

Macd. If it be mine,
Keep it not from me, quickly let me have it.

Rosse. Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,

Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard.

Macd. Humph! I guess at it,

Rosse. Your castle is surpris'd; your wife, and babes,

Savagely slaughter'd: to relate the manner,
Were, on the quarry⁹ of these murder'd deer,
To add the death of you.

Mal. Merciful heaven!

What, man! ne'er pull your hat upon your brows,
Give sorrow words: the grief that does not speak,
Whispers the o'er-fraught heart, and bids it break.¹¹ catch. Thus also Golding, in his translation of the first book of Ovid's Metamorphoses :—

'As though he would, at everie stride, between his teeth his latch.'

9 'Or is it a fee-grief,' a peculiar sorrow, a grief that hath but a single owner.

10 Quarry, the game after it is killed: it is a term used both in hunting and falconry. The old English term querre is used for the square spot wherein the dead game was deposited. Quarry is also used for the game pursued.

11 'Curæ leves loquuntur, ingentes stupent.'
'Those are killing griefs which dare not speak.'

Vittoria Corombona.

'Light sorrows often speake,
When greet, the heart in silence breake.'

Greene's Tragical History of Faerie Belerra.

'Striving to tell his woes, words would not come,
For light cares speak, when mighty griefs are dombe.'

Daniel's Complaint of Rosamond

Macd. My children, too?
Rosse. Wife, children, servants, all
 That could be found.

Macd. And I must be from thence!
Rosse. My wife kill'd too?

Mal. I have said.
Mal. Be comforted:
 Let's make us med'cines of our great revenge,
 To cure this deadly grief.

Macd. He has no children.—All my pretty ones?
 Did you say, all?—O, hell-kite!—All?
 What, all my pretty chickens, and their dam,
 At one fell swoop?¹

Mal. Dispute it like a man.²
Macd. I shall do so;

But I must also feel it as a man:
 I cannot but remember such things were,
 That were most precious to me.—Did heaven look on,

And would not take their part? Sinful Macduff,
 They were all struck for thee! naught that I am,
 Not for their own demerits, but for mine,
 Fell slaughter on their souls: Heaven rest them
 now!

Mal. Be this the whetstone of your sword: let grief

Convert to anger; blunt not the heart, enrage it.

Macd. O, I could play the woman with mine eyes,
 And braggart with my tongue!—But, gentle heavens,

Cut short all intermission:³ front to front,
 Bring thou this fiend of Scotland, and myself;
 Within my sword's length set him; if he 'scape,
 Heaven forgive him too!

Mal. This tune⁴ goes manly.
 Come, go we to the king: our power is ready;
 Our lack is nothing but our leave: Macbeth
 Is ripe for shaking, and the powers above Put on their instruments.⁵ Receive what cheer you may;

The night is long that never finds the day.

[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I. Dunsinane. A Room in the Castle.
Enter a Doctor of Physic, and a Waiting Gentlewoman.

Doct. I have two nights watched with you, but can perceive no truth in your report. When was it she last walked?

Gent. Since his majesty went into the field, I have seen her rise from her bed, throw her nightgown upon her, unlock her closet, take forth paper, fold it, write upon it, read it, afterwards seal it, and again return to bed; yet all this while in a most fast sleep.

Doct. A great perturbation in nature! to receive at once the benefit of sleep, and do the effects of watching.—In this slumbry agitation, besides her walking, and other actual performances, what, at any time, have you heard her say?

Gent. That, sir, which I will not report after her.

Doct. You may, to me; and 'tis most meet you should.

Gent. Neither to you, nor any one; having no witness to confirm my speech.

¹ 'At one fell swoop.' Swoop, from the verb to swoop or sweep, is the descent of a bird of prey on his quarry

² i. e. contend with your present sorrow like a man

³ All intermission, all pause, all intervening time.
⁴ The old copy reads time. The emendation is Rowe's

⁵ i. e. encourage, thrust us their instruments forward against the tyrant.

⁶ 'Ay, but their sense is shut.' The old copy reads 'Ay, but their sense are shut.' Malone has quoted other instances of the same inaccurate grammar, according to modern notions, from Julius Cæsar:—

'The posture of his blows are yet unknown.'
 And from the hundred and twelfth Sonnet of Shakespeare:—

Enter LADY MACBETH, with a Taper.

Lo you, here she comes! This is her very guise; and, upon my life, fast asleep. Observe her;
 stand close.

Doct. How came she by that light?

Gent. Why, it stood by her: she has light by her continually; 'tis her command.

Doct. You see her eyes are open.

Gent. Ay, but their sense is shut.⁶

Doct. What is it she does now? Look, how she rubs her hands.

Gent. It is an accustomed action with her, to seem thus washing her hands; I have known her continue in this a quarter of an hour.

Lady M. Yet here's a spot.

Doct. Hark, she speaks: I will set down what comes from her, to satisfy my remembrance the more strongly.

Lady M. Out, damned spot! out, I say!—One:
 Two: Why, then 'tis time to do't:—Hell is murky!—'Fye, my lord, fye! a soldier, and afeard?
 What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our power to account?—Yet who would have thought the old man to have had so much blood in him?

Doct. Do you mark that?

Lady M. The thane of Fife had a wife: Where is she now?—What, will these hands ne'er be clean?—No more o' that, my lord, no more o' that:
 you mar all with this starting.⁸

Doct. Go to, go to: you have known what you should not.

Gent. She has spoke what she should not, I am sure of that: Heaven knows what she has known.

Lady M. Here's the smell of the blood still: all the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand. Oh! oh! oh!

Doct. What a sigh is there! The heart is sorely charged.

Gent. I would not have such a heart in my bosom, for all the dignity of the whole body.

Doct. Well, well, well,—

Gent. 'Pray God, it be, sir.

Doct. This disease is beyond my practice: Yet
 I have known those which have walked in their sleep, who have died holily in their beds.

Lady M. Wash your hands, put on your nightgown; look not so pale:—I tell you yet again, Banquo's buried; he cannot come out of his grave.

Doct. Even so?

Lady M. To bed, to bed; there's knocking at the gate. Come, come, come, come, give me your hand; What's done, cannot be undone: To bed, to bed, to bed. [Exit LADY MACBETH.]

Doct. Will she go now to bed?

Gent. Directly.

Doct. Foul whisperings are abroad; Unnatural deeds

Do breed unnatural troubles: Infected minds
 To their deaf pillows will discharge their secrets.
 More needs she the divine, than the physician.—
 God, God, forgive us all! Look after her;
 Remove from her the means of all annoyance,
 And still keep eyes upon her:—So, good night:
 My mind she has mated,⁹ and amaz'd my sight:
 I think, but dare not speak.

Gent. Good night, good doctor.
 [Exeunt.]

⁶ 'In so profound abyss I throw all care
 Of others' voices, that my adder's sense
 To crick and to flatterer stopped are.'

⁷ Lady Macbeth, in her dream, imagines herself talking to her husband, who (she supposes) had just said Hell is murky (i. e. hell is a dismal place to go to in consequence of such a deed,) and repeats his words in contempt of his cowardice.—'Hell is murky!—Fye, my lord, fye! a soldier, and afeard?' This explanation is by Steevens, and appears to me very judicious.

⁸ 'You mar all with this starting.' She is here again alluding to the terrors of Macbeth when the Ghost broke in on the festivity of the banquet.

⁹ 'My mind she has mated.' Mated, or amated, from matte, old French, signified to overcome, confound, dismay, or make afraid.

SCENE II. The Country near Dunsinane. Enter, with Drum and Colours, MENTETH, CATHNESS, ANEUS, LENOX, and Soldiers.

Ment. The English power is near, led on by Malcolm,

His uncle Siward,¹ and the good Macduff. Revenges burn in them: for their dear causes Would, to the bleeding, and the grim alarm, Excite the mortified man.²

Ang. Near Birnam wood Shall we well meet them; that way are they coming.

Cath. Who knows, if Donalbain be with his brother?

Len. For certain, sir, he is not: I have a file Of all the gentry; there is Siward's son, And many unrough³ youths, that even now Protest their first of manhood.

Ment. What does the tyrant?

Cath. Great Dunsinane he strongly fortifies: Some say, he's mad; others, that lesser hate him, Do call it valiant fury: but, for certain, He cannot buckle his distemper'd cause Within the belt of rule.

Ang. Now does he feel His secret murders sticking on his hands; Now minutely revolts upbraid his faith-breach; Those he commands, move only in command, Nothing in love: now does he feel his title Hang loose about him, like a giant's robe Upon a dwarfish thief.

Ment. Who then shall blame His pester'd senses to recoil, and start, When all that is within him does condemn Itself, for being there!⁴

Cath. Well, march we on, To give obedience where 'tis truly ow'd: Meet we the medicin⁵ of the sickly weal; And with him pour we, in our country's purge, Each drop of us.

Len. Or so much as it needs, To dew the sovereign flower, and drown the weeds. Make we our march towards Birnam.

[Exeunt, marching.]

SCENE III. Dunsinane. A Room in the Castle. Enter MACBETH, Doctor, and Attendants.

Macb. Bring me no more reports; let them fly all;

Till Birnam wood remove to Dunsinane, I cannot taint with fear. What's the boy Malcolm? Was he not born of woman? The spirits that know All mortal consequence, have pronounc'd me thus: Fear not, Macbeth; no man, that's born of woman, Shall e'er have power upon thee.—Then fly, false thanes,

And mingle with the English epicures:⁶ The mind I sway by, and the heart I bear, Shall never sag⁷ with doubt, nor shake with fear.

1 Duncan had two sons by his wife, who was the daughter of Siward, Earl of Northumberland.—Holinshed.

2 By the mortified man is meant a religious man; one who has mortified his passions, is dead to the world, has abandoned it, and all the affairs of it; an ascetic.

3 'And many unrough youths.' This odd expression means smooth-faced, unbearded.

4 I. e. when all the faculties of the mind are employed in self-condemnation.

5 The medicin, the physician. In the Winter's Tale, Camillo is called by Perdita 'the medicin of our house.'

6 Shakespeare derived this thought from Holinshed:—'The Scottish people before had no knowledge of nor understanding of fine fare or riotous surfeit; yet after they had once tasted the sweet poisoned bait thereof,' &c. 'those superfluities which came into the realm of Scotland with Englishmen.'—Hist. of Scotland, p. 179.

7 To sag, or strag, is to hang down by its own weight, or by an overload.

8—cream-fac'd loon. This word, which signifies a base affect fellow, is now only used in Scotland; it was formerly common in England, but spelt loven, and is justly considered by Horne Tooke as the past participle of to low or abase. Low has the same origin.

Enter a Servant.

The devil damn thee black, thou cream-fac'd loon!⁸ Where gott'st thou that goose look?

Serv. There is ten thousand—

Macb.

Geese, villain?

Serv.

Soldiers, sir.

Macb. Go, prick thy face, and over-red thy fear, Thou lily-liver'd boy. What soldiers, patch?⁹ Death of thy soul! those linen cheeks of thine Are counsellors to fear.¹⁰ What soldiers, whey-face?

Serv. The English force, so please you.

Macb. Take thy face hence.—Seyton!—I am sick at heart,

When I behold—Seyton, I say!—This push Will cheer me ever, or disseat me now. I have liv'd long enough: my way of life Is fall'n into the sear,¹¹ the yellow leaf: And that which should accompany old age, As honour, love, obedience, troops of friends, I must not look to have; but, in their stead, Curses, not loud, but deep, mouth-honour, breath, Which the poor heart would fain deny, but dare not. Seyton!—

Enter SEYTON.

Sey. What is your gracious pleasure?

Macb.

What news more?

Sey. All is confirm'd my lord, which was reported.

Macb. I'll fight, till from my bones my flesh be hack'd.

Give me my armour.

Sey.

'Tis not needed yet.

Macb. I'll put it on.

Send out more horaces, skirr¹² the country round; Hang those that talk of fear.—Give me mine armour.

How does your patient, doctor?

Doct.

Not so sick, my lord,

As she is troubled with thick-coming fancies, That keep her from her rest.

Macb.

Cure her of that.

Canst thou not minister to a mind diseas'd;¹³ Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow; Raze out the written troubles of the brain; And, with some sweet oblivious antidote, Cleanse the stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff, Which weighs upon the heart?

Doct.

Therein the patient

Must minister to himself.

Macb. Throw physic to the dogs, I'll none of it:—

Come, put mine armour on; give me my staff:—Seyton, send out.—Doctor, the thanes fly from me: Come, sir, despatch:—If thou couldst, doctor, cast The water of my land,¹⁴ find her disease, 9 Patch, an appellation of contempt, signifying fool or low wretch.

10 I. e. they infect others who see them with cowardice. In King Henry V. the King says to the conspirators, 'Your cheeks are paper.'

11 Sear is dry, withered. We have the same expression and sentiment in Spenser's Pastorals:—

'Also my lustful leaf is drie and sear.'

For 'way of life' Johnston would read 'May of life,' in which he was followed by Steevens and others. Warburton contended for the original reading, and was followed by Mason. At a subsequent period Steevens acquiesced in the propriety of the old reading, way of life, which he interprets, with his predecessors, course or progress. Malone followed the same tract. The fact is that these ingenious writers have mistaken the phrase, which is neither more nor less than a simple periphrasis for life.

12 I. e. scour the country round.

13 The following very remarkable passage in the Amadigi of Bernardo Tasso, which bears a striking resemblance to the words of Macbeth, was first pointed out in Mr. Weber's edition of Ford:—

'Ma chi puote con erbe, od argoment
Guarir l'infermita del intelletto?'

Cant. xxxvi. St. 37.

14 To cast the water was the empiric phrase for finding out disorders by the inspection of urine.

And purge it to a sound and pristine health,
I would applaud thee to the very echo,
That should applaud again.—Pull't off, I say.—
What rhubarb, senna,¹ or what purgative drug,
Would scour these English hence!—Hearest thou of them?

Doct. Ay, my good lord; your royal preparation
Makes us hear something.

Macb. Bring it after me.—
I will not be afraid of death and bane,
Till Birnam forest come to Dunsinane. [Exit.]

Doct. Were I from Dunsinane away and clear,
Profit again should hardly draw me here. [Exit.]

SCENE IV. *Country near Dunsinane: A Wood
in view. Enter, with Drum and Colours, MALCOLM, Old SIWARD and his Son, MACDUFF, MENTETH, CATHNESS, ANGUS, LENOX, ROSSE, and Soldiers, marching.*

Mal. Cousins, I hope the days are near at hand
That chambers will be safe.

Ment. We doubt it nothing.

Siw. What wood is this before us?

Ment. The wood of Birnam.

Mal. Let every soldier hew him down a bough,²
And bear't before him; thereby shall we shadow
The numbers of our host, and make discovery
Err in report of us.

Sold. It shall be done.

Siw. We learn no other, but the confident tyrant Keeps still in Dunsinane, and will endure
Our setting down before't.

Mal. 'Tis his main hope:
For where there is advantage to be given,³
Both more and less⁴ have given him the revolt;
And none serve with him but constrained things,
Whose hearts are absent too.

Macd. Let our just censures
Attend the true event, and put we on Industrious soldiership.

Siw. The time approaches,
That will with due decision make us know
What we shall say we have, and what we owe.⁵
Thoughts speculative their unsure hopes relate;
But certain issue strokes must arbitrate:⁶
Towards which, advance the war.⁷

[Exeunt, marching.]

SCENE V. Dunsinane. Within the Castle. Enter, with Drums and Colours, MACBETH, SEY-TON, and Soldiers.

Macb. Hang out our banners on the outward walls;
The cry is still, They come: Our castle's strength
Will laugh a siege to scorn: here let them lie,
Till famine and the ague, eat them up:
Were they not forc'd with those that should be ours,
We might have met them dareful, beard to beard,
And beat them backward home. What is that noise? [A cry within, of women.]

1 'What rhubarb, senna.' The old copy reads cyme.
The emendation is Rowe's.

2 A similar incident is recorded by Olaus Magnus, in his Northern History, lib. vii. cap. xx. De Strategemate Hachonis per Frondes.

3 'For where there is advantage to be given.' Dr.
Johnson thought that we should read:—

'—where there is a vantage to be gone.'
i. e. where there is an opportunity to be gone, all ranks desert him. We might perhaps read:—

'—where there is advantage to be gained; and the sense would be nearly similar, with less violence to the text of the old copy.

4 i. e. Greater and less, or high and low, those of all ranks.

5 'What we shall say we have, and what we owe.'
I think, with Mason, that Siward only means to say, in more pompous language, that the time approached which was to decide their fate.

6 Arbitrate, determine.

7 It has been understood that local rhymes were introduced in plays to afford an actor the advantage of a more pointed exit, or to close the scene with additional force. Yet, whatever might be Shakspeare's motive for continuing such a practice, he often seems immediately to repent of it: and in this tragedy, as in other places, has repeatedly counteracted it by hemistichs, which de-

Sey. It is the cry of women, my good lord.

Macb. I have almost forgot the taste of fears:
The time has been, my senses would have cool'd
To hear a night-shriek; and my fell⁸ of hair
Would at a dismal treatise rouse, and stir
As life were in't: I have supp'd full with horrors;
Direness, familiar to my slaughterous thoughts,
Cannot once start me.—Wherefore was that cry?

Sey. The queen, my lord, is dead.

Macb. She should have died hereafter;
There would have been a time for such a word.⁹
To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,
To the last syllable of recorded time;¹⁰
And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death. Out, out, brief candle!
Life's but a walking shadow; a poor player,
That struts and frets his hour upon the stage,
And then is heard no more: it is a tale
Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury, Signifying nothing.—

Enter a Messenger.

Thou com'st to use thy tongue; thy story quickly.

Mess. Gracious my lord,
I shall report that which I say I saw,
But know not how to do it.

Macb. Well, say, sir.

Mess. As I did stand my watch upon the hill,
I look'd toward Birnam, and anon, methought,
The wood began to move.

Macb. Liar and slave!¹¹

Mess. Let me endure your wrath, if't be not so:
Within this three mile may you see it coming;
I say, a moving grove.

Macb. If thou speak'st false,
Upon the next tree shalt thou hang alive,
Till famine cling¹² thee: if thy speech be sooth,
I care not if thou dost for me as much.—
I pall in resolution; and begin
To doubt the equivocation of the fiend,
That lies like truth: *Fear not, till Birnam wood
Do come to Dunsinane*;—and now a wood
Comes toward Dunsinane.—Arm, arm, and out!—
If this, which he avouches, does appear,
There is no flying hence, nor tarrying here.
I'll give to a-weary of the sun,
And wish the estate of the world were now undone.—
Ring the alarm-bell:—Blow, wind! come, wrack!
At least we'll die with harness¹³ on our back.

[Exeunt,]

SCENE VI. The same. A Plain before the Castle. Enter with Drums and Colours, MALCOLM, Old SIWARD, MACDUFF, &c. and their Army, with Boughs.

Mal. Now near enough; your leavy screens throw down,

stroy the effect, and defeat the supposed purpose of the antecedent couplets.

8 '—my fell of hair,' my hairy part, my capillitium.

Fell is skin, properly a sheep's skin with the wool on it.

9 'There would have been a time for such a word.'
Macbeth might mean that there would have been a more convenient time for such a word, for such intelligence.

By a word certainly more than a single one was meant.
10 'The last syllable of recorded time' seems to signify the utmost period fixed in the decrees of heaven for the period of life. The record of futurity is indeed no accurate expression; but as we only know transactions, past or present, the language of men affords no term for the volumes of prescience in which future events may be supposed to be written.

11 [Striking him] says the stage direction in the margin of all the modern editions: but this stage direction is not in the old copies: it was first interpolated by Rowe; and is now omitted on the suggestion of the late
Mr. Kemble. See his Essay on Macbeth and King
Richard III. Lond. 1817, p. 111.

12 To cling, in the northern counties, signifies to shrivel, wither, or dry up. Chung-wood is wood of which the sap is entirely uried or spent. The same idea is well expressed by Pope in his version of the nineteenth Iliad, 166:—

'Chung with dry famine, and with toils declin'd.'

13 Harness, armour.

And show like those you are:—You, worthy uncle, Shall, with my cousin, your right noble son, Lead our first battle: worthy Macduff, and we, Shall take upon us! what else remains to do, According to our order.

Siw. Fare you well.—
Do we but find the tyrant's power to-night,
Let us be beaten, if we cannot fight.

Macd. Make all our trumpets speak; give them all breath,
Those clamorous harbingers of blood and death.
[Exeunt. Alarums continued.]

SCENE VII. The same. Another part of the Plain. Enter MACBETH.

Macb. They have tied me to a stake; I cannot fly,
But, bearlike, I must fight the course.²—What's he,
That was not born of woman? Such a one
Am I to fear, or none.

Enter Young SIWARD.

Yo. Siw. What is thy name?

Macb. Thou'lt be afraid to hear it.

Yo. Siw. No; though thou call'st thyself a botter name
Than any is in hell.

Macb. My name's Macbeth.

Yo. Siw. The devil himself could not pronounce a title
More hateful to mine ear.

Macb. No, nor more fearful.

Yo. Siw. Thou liest, abhorred tyrant; with my sword
I'll prove the lie thou speak'st.

[They fight, and Young Siward is slain.]

Macb. Thou wast born of woman.—
But swords I smile at, weapons laugh to scorn,
Brandish'd by man that's of a woman born. [Exit.]

Alarums. Enter MACDUFF.

Macd. That way the noise is:—Tyrant show thy face:

If thou be'st slain, and with no stroke of mine,
My wife and children's ghosts will haunt me still.
I cannot strike at wretched kernes, whose arms
Are hir'd to bear their staves; either thou, Macbeth,
Or else my sword, with an unbatter'd edge,
I sheathe again undeeded. There thou should'st be;
By this great clatter, one of greatest note,
Seems bruited:³ Let me find him, fortune!
And more I beg not. [Exit. Alarums.]

Enter MALCOLM and Old SIWARD.

Siw. This way, my lord;—the castle's gently
render'd:

The tyrant's people on both sides do fight;
The noble thanes do bravely in the war;
The day almost itself professes yours,
And little is to do.

Mal. We have met with foes
That strike beside us.

Siw. Enter, sir, the castle.

[Exeunt. Alarums.]

Re-enter MACBETH.

Macb. Why should I play the Roman fool, and die⁴

On mine own sword? whiles I see lives the gashes
Do better upon them.

Re-enter MACDUFF

Macd. Turn, hell-hound, turn.

Macb. Of all men else I have avoided thee:
But get thee back, my soul is too much charg'd
With blood of thine already.

Macd. I have no words,
My voice is in my sword;⁵ thou bloodier villain
Than terms can give thee out! [They fight.]

Macb. Thou loost labour:
As easy mayst thou the intrenchant air⁶
With thy keen sword impress, as make me bleed:
Let fall thy blade on vulnerable crests;
I bear a charmed life,⁷ which must not yield
To one of woman born.

Macd. Despair thy charm;
And let the angel, whom thou still hast serv'd,
Tell thee, Macduff was from his mother's womb
Untimely ripp'd.

Macb. Accurs'd be that tongue that tells me so,
For it hath cowl'd my better part of man:
And be these juggling fiends no more believ'd,
That palter⁸ with us in a double sense;
That keep the word of promise to our ear,
And break it to our hope.—I'll not fight with thee.

Macd. Then yield thee, coward,
And live to be the show and gaze o' the time.
We'll have thee, as our rarer monsters are,
Painted upon a pole; and underwrit,
Here may you see the tyrant.

Macb. I'll not yield
To kiss the ground before young Malcolm's feet,
And to be baited with the rabble's curse.
Though Birnam wood be come to Dunsinane,
And thou oppos'd, being of no woman born,
Yet I will try the last: Before my body
I throw my warlike shield; lay on, Macduff;
And damn'd be him that first cries, Hold, enough!
[Exeunt, fighting.]

Retreat. Flourish. Re-enter, with Drum and Colours, MALCOLM, Old SIWARD, ROSSE, LENOX, ANGUS, CATHNESS, MENTETH, and Soldiers.

Mal. I would, the friends we miss were safe ar-riv'd.

Siw. Some must go off; and yet, by these I see,
So great a day as this is cheaply bought.

Mal. Macduff is missing, and your noble son.

Rosse. Your son, my lord, has paid a soldier's debt;

He only liv'd but till he was a man:
The which no sooner had his prowess confirm'd
In the unshrinking station where he fought,
But like a man he died.

Siw. Then he is dead?

Rosse. Ay, and brought off the field: your cause of sorrow

Must not be measur'd by his worth, for then
It hath no end.

Siw. Had he his hurts before?

Rosse. Ay, on the front.

Siw. Why then, God's soldier be he!

Had I as many sons as I have hairs,
I would not wish them to a fairer death:⁹
And so his knell is knoll'd.

1 The first folio reads upon's.

2 'But, bearlike, I must fight the course.' This was a phrase at bear-baiting. 'Also you shall see two ten dog courses at the great bear.'—Antipodes, by Brome.

3 Bruited is reported, noised abroad; from bruit, Fr.

4 'Why should I play the Roman fool, and die.' Alluding probably to the suicide of Cato of Utica.

5 'My voice is in my sword.' Thus Casca, in Julius Caesar:—

'Speak, hands, for me.'

6 'The intrenchant air,' the air which cannot be cut.

7 'I bear a charmed life.' In the days of chivalry, the champion's arms being ceremoniously blessed, each took an oath that he used no charmed weapons. Macbeth, in allusion to this custom, tells Macduff of the security he had in the prediction of the spirit.

8 'That palter with us in a double sense.' That shuffle with ambiguous expressions.

9 To cry hold! was the word of yielding (according to Carew's Survey of Cornwall, p. 74.), that is when one of the combatants cries so. To cry hold! when persons were fighting, was an authoritative way of separating them, according to the old military laws. This is shown by the following passage produced by Mr Tollet: it declares it to be a capital offence 'Whosoever shall strike stroke at his adversary, either in the heat or otherwise, if a third do cry hold, to the intent to part them.'—Bellay's Instructions for the Wars, 1599.

10 'When Siward, the martial Earl of Northumberland, understood that his son, whom he had sent against the Scotchmen, was slain, he demanded whether his wounds were in the fore part or hinder part of his body. When it was answered, "In the fore part," he replied, "I am right glad; neither wish I any other death to me or mine."—Camden's Remains.

Mal. He's worth more sorrow,
And that I'll spend for him.

Siu. He's worth no more;
They say, he parted well, and paid his score:
And so, God be with him!—Here comes newer comfort.

Re-enter MACDUFF, with MACBETH'S Head on a Pole.¹

Macd. Hail, king! for so thou art; Behold, where stands

The usurper's cursed head: the time is free:
I see thee compass'd with thy kingdom's pearl,²
That speak my salutation in their minds;
Whose voices I desire aloud with mine,—
Hail, king of Scotland!

All. Hail, king of Scotland!
[Flourish.]

Mal. We shall not spend a large expense³ of
time,

Before we reckon with your several loves,
And make us even with you: My thanes and kins-
men,

Henceforth be earls, the first that ever Scotland
In such an honour nam'd.⁴ What's more to do,

1 These words, 'on a pole,' Mr. Steevens added to the stage direction from the Chronicle. The stage directions of the players are often incorrect, and sometimes ludicrous.

2 'Thy kingdom's pearl,' thy kingdom's wealth or ornament. Rowe altered this to peer's, without authority.

3 To spend an expense of time is, it is true, an awkward expression, yet it is probably correct; for, in the Comedy of Errors, Act iii. Sc. 1, Antipholus of Ephesus says 'This jest shall cost me some expense.'

Which would be planted newly with the time,—
As calling home our exil'd friends abroad,
That fled the snares of watchful tyranny;
Producing forth the cruel ministers
Of this dead butcher, and his fiendlike queen;
Who, as 'tis thought, by self and violent hands
Took off her life;—this, and what needful else
That calls upon us, by the grace of Grace,
We will perform in measure, time, and place:
So thanks to all at once, and to each one,
Whom we invite to see us crown'd at Scone.
[Flourish. Exeunt.]

THIS play is deservedly celebrated for the propriety of its fictions, and solemnity, grandeur, and variety of its action; but it has no nice discriminations of character: the events are too great to admit the influence of particular dispositions, and the course of the action necessarily determines the conduct of the agents.

The danger of ambition is well described; and I know not whether it may not be said, in defence of some parts which now seem improbable; that in Shakspeare's time it was necessary to warn credulity against vain and illusive predictions.

The passions are directed to their 'true end.' Lady Macbeth is merely detested; and though the courage of Macbeth preserves some esteem, yet every reader rejoices at his fall.

JOHNSON.

4 'Malcolm, immediately after his coronation, called a parliament at Forfar; in the which he rewarded them with lands and livings that had assisted him against Macbeth. Manie of them that were before thanes were at this time made earls; as Fife, Menteith, Atholl, Levenox, Murray, Caithness, Rosse, and Angus.'—Holinshead's History of Scotland, p. 176.

KING JOHN.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

THIS historical play was founded on a former drama, entitled 'The Troublesome Raigne of John, King of England, with the Discoverie of King Richard Cordellion's base Son, vulgarly named the Bastard Faulconbridge: also the Death of King John at Swinstead Abbey. As it was (sundry times) publickly acted by the Queene's Majesties Players in the honourable Citie of London.' This piece, which was in two parts, was 'printed at London for Sampson Clarke, 1591,' without the author's name: was again republished in 1611, with the letters W. Sh. in the title-page; and afterwards, in 1622, with the name of William Shakspeare at length. It may be found by the curious reader among the 'Six Old Plays on which Shakspeare founded,' &c. published by Mr. Steevens and Mr. Nichols some years since.

Shakspeare has followed the old play in the conduct of its plot, and has even adopted some of its lines. The number of quotations from Horace, and similar scraps of learning scattered over this moley piece, ascertain it to have been the work of a scholar. It contains likewise a quantity of rhyming Latin and ballad metre; and, in a scene where the Bastard is represented as plundering a monastery, there are strokes of humour which, from their particular turn, were most evidently produced by another hand than that of Shakspeare. Pope attributes the old play to Shakspeare and Rowley conjointly; but we know not on what foundation. Dr. Farmer thinks there is no doubt that Rowley wrote the old play; and when Shakspeare's play was called for, and could not be procured from the players, a piratical bookseller reprinted the old one under his name.

Though, as Johnson observes, King John is not 'written with the utmost power of Shakspeare,' yet it has parts of preeminent pathos and beauty, and characters highly interesting drawn with great force and truth. The scene between John and Hubert is perhaps one of the most masterly and striking which our poet ever penned. The secret workings of the dark and turbulent soul of the usurper, ever shrinking from the full development of his own bloody purpose, the artful expressions of grateful attachment by which he wins Hubert to do the deed, and the sententious brevity of the close, manifest that consummate skill and wonderful knowledge of human character which are to be found in Shakspeare alone. But what shall we say of that heart-rending scene between Hubert and Arthur? a scene so deeply affecting the soul with terror and pity, that even the sternest bosom must melt into tears; it would perhaps be too overpowering for the feelings, were it not for the 'alleviating influence of the innocence and artless eloquence of the poor child.' His death afterwards, when he throws himself from the prison walls, excites the deepest commiseration for his hapless fate. The maternal grief of Constance, moving the haughty unbending soul of a proud queen and affectionate mother to the very confines of the most hopeless despair, bordering on madness, is no less finely conceived, than sustained by language of the most impassioned and vehement eloquence. How exquisitely beautiful are the following lines:—

'Grief fills the room up of my absent child;
Lies in his bed; walks up and down with me;
Puts on his pretty looks, repeats his words,
Remembers me of all his gracious parts,
Stuffs out his vacant garments with his form;
Then have I reason to be fond of grief.'

Shakspeare has judiciously preserved the character of the Bastard Faulconbridge, which was furnished him by the old play, to alleviate by his comic humour the poignant grief excited by the too painful events of the tragic part of the play. Faulconbridge is a favourite with every one: he is not only a man of wit, but an heroic soldier; and we lean toward him from the first for the good humour he displays in his litigation with his brother respecting the succession to his supposed father:—

'He hath a trick of Cœur de Lion's face,
The very spirit of Plantagenet!'

This bespeaks our favour toward him: his courage, his wit, and his frankness secure it.

Schlegel has remarked that, in this play, 'the political and warlike events are dressed out with solemn pomp, for the very reason that they possess but little true grandeur. The falsehood and selfishness of the monarch are evident in the style of the manifesto; conventional dignity is most indispensable when personal dignity is wanting. Faulconbridge ridicules the secret springs of politics without disapproving them, but frankly confesses that he is endeavouring to make his fortune by similar means, and wishes rather to belong to the deceivers than the deceived.' Our commiseration is a little excited for the fallen and degraded monarch toward the close of the play. The death of the king and his previous suffering are not among the least impressive parts; they carry a pointed moral.

Malone places the date of the composition in 1596.

ACT I.

SCENE I. Northampton. A Room of State in the Palace. Enter KING JOHN, QUEEN ELINOR, PEMBROKE, ESSEX, SALISBURY, and others, with CHATILLON.

King John.

Now, say, Chatillon, what would France with us?
Chat. Thus, after greeting, speaks the king of France,

In my behaviour,¹ to the majesty,

The horror'd majesty of England here.

Eli. A strange beginning;—borrow'd majesty!

K. John. Silence, good mother; hear the embassy.

Chat. Philip of France, in right and true behalf Of thy deceased brother Geoffrey's son, Arthur Plantagenet, lays most lawful claim To this fair island, and the territories; To Ireland, Poitiers, Anjou, Touraine, Maine: Desiring thee to lay aside the sword, Which sways usurpingly these several titles; And put the same into young Arthur's hand, Thy nephew, and right royal sovereign.

K. John. What follows, if we disallow of this?

Chat. The proud control² of fierce and bloody war,

To enforce these rights so forcibly withheld.

K. John. Here have we war for war, and blood for blood,

Controlment for controlment: so answer France.

Chat. Then take my king's defiance from my mouth,

The furthest limit of my embassy.

K. John. Bear mine to him, and so depart in peace:

Be thou as lightning in the eyes of France;

For ere thou canst report I will be there,

The thunder of my cannon shall be heard:

So, hence! Be thou the trumpet of our wrath,

And sullen³ presage of your own decay.—

An honourable conduct let him have:—

Pembroke, look to't; Farewell, Chatillon.

[Exit CHATILLON and PEMBROKE.]

Eli. What now, my son? have I not ever said,

How that ambitious Constance would not cease,

Till she had kindled France, and all the world,

Upon the right and party of her son?

This might have been prevented and made whole,

With very easy arguments of love!

Which now the manage⁴ of two kingdoms must

With fearful bloody issue arbitrate.

K. John. Our strong possession, and our right for us.

Eli. Your strong possession, much more than your right;

Or else it must go wrong with you, and me:

So much my conscience whispers in your ear;

Which none but heaven, and you, and I, shall hear

Enter the Sheriff of Northamptonshire, who whispers ESSEX.

Essex. My liege, here is the strangest controversy,

Come from the country to be judg'd by you,

That e'er I heard: Shall I produce the men?

K. John. Let them approach.— [Exit Sheriff.]
Our abbies, and our priories, shall pay

Re-enter Sheriff, with ROBERT FAULCONBRIDGE, and PHILIP, his bastard Brother.

This expedition's charge.—What men are you?

Bast. Your faithful subject, I, a gentleman,

Born in Northamptonshire; and eldest son,

As I suppose, to Robert Faulconbridge;

A soldier, by the honour-giving hand

Of Cœur-de-lion knighted in the field.

K. John. What art thou?

1 In my behaviour probably means 'In the words and action I am now going to use.'

2 Control here means constraint or compulsion.

3 i. e. gloomy, dismal.

4 i. e. conduct, administration.

5 Shakespeare in adopting the character of Philip Faulconbridge from the old play, proceeded on the following slight hint:—

'Next time a bastard of the king's decess'd,
A hardie wild-head, rough and venturous.'
The character is compounded of two distinct personages. 'Sub illius temporis curriculo Falcastrus de Brentis, Neusteriensis, et apurii ex parte matris, arque Bastardus, qui in villi jumento manticato ad Regis paulo ante clientelam descenderat.' Mathew Paris.—Holinshed says that 'Richard I. had a natural son named Philip, who, in the year following, killed the Viscount de Limoges to revenge the death of his father.' Perhaps the name of Faulconbridge was suggested by the following passage in the continuation of Harding's Chronicle, 1543, fol. 24, 6:—'One Faulconbridge, th' erle of Kent his bastarde, a stoute-hearted man.'

Rob. The son and heir to that same Faulconbridge.

K. John. Is that the elder, and art thou the heir? You came not of one mother then, it seems.

Bast. Most certain of one mother, mighty king, That is well known; and, as I think, one father: But, for the certain knowledge of that truth, I put you o'er to heaven, and to my mother; Of that I doubt, as all men's children may.

Eli. Out on thee, rude man! thou dost shame thy mother,

And wound her honour with this diffidence.

Bast. I, madam? no, I have no reason for it; That is my brother's plea, and none of mine; The which if he can prove, 'a pops me out At least from fair five hundred pound a year; Heaven guard my mother's honour, and my land!

K. John. A good blunt fellow:—Why, being younger born,

Doth he lay claim to thine inheritance?

Bast. I know not why, except to get the land.

But once he slander'd me with bastardy:

But whe'r I be as true begot, or no,

That still I lay upon my mother's head;

But, that I am as well begot, my liege,

(Fair fall the bones that took the pains for me!)

Compare our faces, and be judge yourself.

If old Sir Robert did beget us both,

And were our father, and this son like him;—

O old Sir Robert, father, on my knee

I give heaven thanks, I was not like to thee.

K. John. Why, what a madcap hath heaven lent us here!

Eli. He hath a trick¹ of Cœur-de-lion's face,

The accent of his tongue affecteth him:

Do you not read some tokens of my son

In the large composition of this man?

K. John. Mine eye hath well examined his parts, And finds them perfect Richard.—Sirrah, speak,

What doth move you to claim your brother's land?

Bast. Because he hath a half-face, like my father;

With that half face would he have all my land:

A half-faced groat² five hundred pound a year!

Rob. My gracious liege, when that my father liv'd,

Your brother did employ my father much;—

Bast. Well, sir, by this you cannot get my land;

Your tale must be how he employ'd my mother.

Rob. And once despatch'd him in an embassy

To Germany, there, with the emperor,

To treat of high affairs touching that time:

The advantage of his absence took the king,

And in the mean time sojourn'd at my father's;

Where how he did prevail, I shame to speak:

But truth is truth; large lengths of seas and shores⁴

Between my father and my mother lay

(As I have heard my father speak himself,)

When this same lusty gentleman was got.

Upon his death-bed he by will bequeath'd

His lands to me; and took it, on his death,

That this my mother's son was none of his;

And, if he were, he came into the world

Full fourteen weeks before the course of time.

Then, good my liege, let me have what is mine,

My father's land, as was my father's will.

¹ Whether.

² Shakespeare uses the word trick generally in the sense of 'a peculiar air or cast of countenance or feature.'

³ The poet makes Faulconbridge allude to the silver groats of Henry VII. and Henry VIII. which had on them a half-face or profile. In the reign of John there were no groats at all, the first being coined in the reign of Edward III.

⁴ This is Homeric, and is thus rendered by Chapman in the first Iliad:—

'— hills enow, and farre-resounding seas

Powre out their shades and deepes betweene.'

⁵ i. e. 'this is a decisive argument.'

⁶ Lord of thy presence means possessor of thy own dignified and manly appearance, resembling thy great progenitor.

⁷ Sir Robert his for 'Sir Robert's'; his, according to a mistaken notion formerly received, being the sign of the genitive case.

K. John. Sirrah, your brother in legitimate; Your father's wife did after wedlock bear him:

And, if she did play false, the fault was hers;

Which fault lies on the hazards of all husbands

That marry wives. Tell me, how if my brother,

Who, as you say, took pains to get this son,

Had of your father claim'd this son for his?

In sooth, good friend, your father might have kept

This calf, bred from his cow, from all the world;

In sooth, he might: then, if he were my brother's,

My brother might not claim him; nor your father,

Being none of his, refuse him: This concludes,¹—

My mother's son did get your father's heir;

Your father's heir must have your father's land.

Rob. Shall then my father's will be of no force,

To dispossess that child which is not his?

Bast. Of no more force to dispossess me, sir,

Than was his will to get me, as I think.

Eli. Whether hadst thou rather,—be a Faulcon-

bridge,

And like thy brother, to enjoy thy land;

Or the reputed son of Cœur-de-lion,

Lord of thy presence,² and no land beside?

Bast. Madam, an if my brother had my shape,

And I had his, Sir Robert his,³ like him:

And if my legs were too such riding-rods,

My arms such eel-skins stuff'd; my face so thin,

That in mine ear I durst not stick a rose,

Lest men should say, Look, where three-farthings⁴ goes!

And, to⁵ his shape, were heir to all this land,

'Would, I might never stir from off this place,

I'd give it every foot to have this face;

I would not be sir Noo⁶ in any case.

Eli. I like thee well; Wilt thou forsake thy fortune,

Bequeath thy land to him, and follow me?

I am a soldier, and now bound to France.

Bast. Brother, take you my land, I'll take my chance:

Your face hath got five hundred pounds a year;

Yet sell your face for five pence, and 'tis dear.—

Madam, I'll follow you unto the death.

Eli. Nay, I would have you go before me thither.

Bast. Our country manners give our betters way.

K. John. What is thy name?

Bast. Philip, my liege; so is my name begun;

Philip, good old Sir Robert's wife's eldest son.

K. John. From henceforth bear his name whose form thou bear'st:

Kneel thou down, Philip, but arise⁷ more great:

Arise, Sir Richard, and Plantagenet.⁸

Bast. Brother, by the mother's side, give me your hand;

My father gave me honour, yours gave land:

Now blessed be the hour by night or day,

When I was got, Sir Robert was away.

Eli. The very spirit of Plantagenet!—

I am my grandame, Richard; call me so.

Bast. Madam, by chance, but not by truth:

What though?

Something about, a little from the right,

In at the window, or else o'er the hatch:⁹

Who dares not stir by day, must walk by night;

And have is have, however men do catch:

Near or far off, well won is still well shot;

And I am I, howe'er I was begot.

⁸ Queen Elizabeth coined threepenny, threehalfpenny, and threefarthing pieces; these pieces all had her head on the obverse, and some of them a rose on the reverse. Being of silver, they were extremely thin; and hence the allusion. The roses stuck in the ear, or in a lock near it, were generally of ribbon; but Burton says that it was once the fashion to stick real flowers in the ear. Some gallants had their ears bored and wore their mistresses' silken shoestrings in them.

⁹ To his shape, i. e. in addition to it.

¹⁰ Robert

¹¹ The old copy reads rise.

¹² Plantagenet was not a family name, but a nickname, by which a grandson of Geoffrey, the first Earl of Anjou, was distinguished, from his wearing a broom-

stalk in his bonnet.

¹³ These expressions were common in the time of Shakspeare for being born out of wedlock.

K. John. Go, Faulconbridge; now hast thou thy desire,

A landless knight makes thee a landed squire.—
Come, madam, and come, Richard; we must speed
For France, for France; for it is more than need.

Bast. Brother, adieu; Good fortune come to thee!
For thou wast got i' the way of honesty.

[Exeunt all but the Bastard.]

A foot of honour better than I was;
But many a many foot of land the worse.
Well, now can I make any Joan a lady:—
Good den, Sir Richard,—God-a-mercy, fellow;—
And if his name be George, I'll call him Peter:
For new-made honour doth forget men's names;
'Tis too respectful,¹ and too sociable,
For your conversion.² Now your traveller,³
He and his toothpick at my worship's mess;⁴
And when my knightly stomach is suffic'd,
Why, then I suck my teeth, and catechise
My picked man of countries:⁵—My dear sir
(Thus, leaning on my elbow, I begin,)
I shall beseech you—That is question now;
And then comes answer like an A B C-book:—
O sir, says answer, at your best command;
At your employment; at your service, sir:—
No, sir, says question, I, sweet sir, at yours;
And, so, ere answer knows what question would (Saying in dialogue of compliment;
And talking of the Alps, and Apennines,
The Pyrenean, and the river Po,)
It draws towards supper in conclusion so.
But this is worshipful society,
And fits the mourning spirit, like myself:
For he is but a bastard to the time,
That doth not smack of observation:⁶
(And so am I, whether I smack, or no;)
And not alone in habit and device,
Exterior form, outward accoutrement;
But from the inward motion to deliver
Sweet, sweet, sweet poison for the age's tooth;
Which, though I will not practise to deceive,
Yet, to avoid deceit, I mean to learn;
For it shall strew the footsteps of my rising.—
But who comes in such haste, in riding robes?
What woman-post is this? hath she no husband,
That will take pains to blow a horn before her?⁷

Enter LADY FAULCONBRIDGE and JAMES GURNEY.

O me! it is my mother;—How now, good lady?
What brings you here to court so hastily?

Lady F. Where is that slave, thy brother? where is he,

That holds in chase mine honour up and down?

1 Good evening.

2 Respectful does not here mean respectful, as the commentators have explained it, but considerative, re-gardful.

3 Change of condition.

4 It is said, in All's Well that Ends Well, that 'a traveller is a good thing after dinner.' In that age of newly excited curiosity, one of the entertainments at great tables seems to have been the discourse of a traveller. To use a toothpick seems to have been one of the characteristics of a travelled man who affected foreign fashions.

5 'At my worship's mess' means at that part of the table where I, as a knight, shall be placed. See note on All's Well that Ends Well, Act I. Sc. 2.—'Your worship' was the regular address to a knight or esquire, in Shakespeare's time, as 'your honour' was to a lord.

6 My picked man of countries may be equivalent to my travelled fop: picked generally signified affected, over nice, or curious in dress. Conquiste is explained in the dictionaries exquisitely, pickily: so that our modern exquisite and dandies are of the same race.

7 An ABC or absey-book, as it was then called, is a catechism.

8 I. e. he is accounted but a mean man, in the present age, who does not show by his dress, deportment, and talk, that he has travelled and made observations in foreign countries.

9 Shakespeare probably meant to insinuate that a woman who travels about like a post was likely to horn her husband.

10 Colbrand was a Danish giant, whom Guy of War-

Bast. My brother Robert? old Sir Robert's son? Colbrand the giant,¹⁰ that same mighty man? Is it Sir Robert's son, that you seek so?

Lady F. Sir Robert's son! Ay, thou unvenered boy Sir Robert's son! Why scorn'st thou at Sir Robert? He is Sir Robert's son; and so art thou.

Bast. James Gurney, wilt thou give us leave awhile!

Gur. Good leave, good Philip.
Bast. Philip?—sparrow!¹¹—James, There's toys abroad;¹² anon I'll tell thee more.

[Exit GURNEY.]

Madam, I was not old Sir Robert's son;
Sir Robert might have eat his part in me
Upon Good Friday, and ne'er broke his fast:
Sir Robert could do well; Marry, (to confess!)
Could he get me? Sir Robert could not do it;
We know his handy-work:—Therefore, good mother,
To whom am I beholden for these limbs?
Sir Robert never help to make this leg.

Lady F. Hast thou conspired with thy brother too
That for thine own gain should'st defend mine honour?

What means this scorn, thou most untoward knave?
Bast. Knight, knight, good mother,—Basilisco like!¹³

What! I am dubb'd; I have it on my shoulder.
But, mother, I am not Sir Robert's son;
I have disclaim'd Sir Robert, and my land;
Legitimation, name, and all is gone:
Then, good my mother, let me know my father;
Some proper man, I hope; Who was it, mother?

Lady F. Hast thou denied thyself a Faulconbridge?

Bast. As faithfully as I deny the devil.

Lady F. King Richard Cœur-de-lion was thy father;

By long and vehement suit I was seduc'd
To make room for him in my husband's bed:—
Heaven, lay not my transgression to my charge!
Thou art the issue of my dear offence,
Which was so strongly urg'd, past my defence.

Bast. Now, by this light, were I to get again,
Madam, I would not wish a better father.
Some sins do bear their privilege on earth,
And so doth yours; your fault was not your folly:
Needs must you lay your heart at his dispose,— Subjected tribute to commanding love,—
Against whose fury and unmatched force
The awless lion could not wage the fight,
Nor keep his princely heart from Richard's hand.
He, that perforce robs lions of their hearts,¹⁴
May easily win a woman's. Ay, my mother,
With all my heart I thank thee for my father!

wick discomfited in the presence of King Athelstan. The History of Guy was a popular book in the poet's age. Drayton has described the combat very pompously in his Polyolbion.

11 The Bastard means 'Philip! Do you take me for a sparrow?' The sparrow was called Philip from its note, which was supposed to have some resemblance to that word, 'phip phip the sparrows as they fly.'—Lyly's Mother Bombe.

12 I. e. rumours, idle reports.

13 This is a piece of satire on the stupid old drama of Soliman and Perseda, printed in 1599, which had probably become the butt for stage sarcasm. In this piece there is a bragging cowardly knight called Basilisco. His pretension to valour is so blown and seen through that Piston, a buffoon servant in the play, jumps upon his back, and will not disengage him till he makes Basilisco swear upon his dagger to the contents, and in the terms he dictates; thus:—

Bas. O, I swear, I swear.

Pist. By the contents of this blade,—

Bas. By the contents of this blade,—

Pist. I, the aforesaid Basilisco—

Bas. I, the aforesaid Basilisco,—knight, good fellow, knight.

Pist. Knave, good fellow, knave.

14 Shakespeare alludes to the fabulous history of King Richard I. which says that he derived his appellation of Cœur de Lion from having plucked out a lion's heart, to whose fury he had been exposed by the Duke of Austria for having slain his son with a blow of his fist. The story is related in several of the old chronicles, as well as in the old metrical romance.

Who lives and dares but say, thou didst not well
When I was got, I'll send his soul to hell.
Come, lady, I will show thee to my kin;
And they shall say, when Richard me begot,
If thou hadst said him nay, it had been sin:
Who says it was, he lies; I say, 'twas not.

[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. France. Before the Walls of Angiers.
Enter, on one side, the Archduke of Austria,¹ and Forces; on the other, PHILIP, King of France, and Forces; LEWIS, CONSTANCE, ARTHUR, and Attendants.

Lew. Before Angiers well met, brave Austria.—
Arthur, that great forerunner of thy blood,
Richard, that robb'd the lion of his heart,
And fought the holy wars in Palestine,
By this brave duke came early to his grave:
And, for amends to his posterity,
At our importance,² hither is he come,
To spread his colours, boy, in thy behalf;
And to rebuke the usurpation
Of thy unnatural uncle, English John:
Embrace him, love him, give him welcome hither.
Arth. God shall forgive you Cœur-de-lion's death,
The rather, that you give his offspring life,
Shadowing their right under your wings of war
I give you welcome with a powerless hand,
But with a heart full of unstained love:
Welcome before the gates of Angiers, duke.

Lew. A noble boy! Who would not do thee right?

Aust. Upon thy cheek lay I this zealous kiss,
As seal to this indenture of my love;
That to my home I will no more return,
Till Angiers, and the right thou hast in France,
Together with that pale, that white-fac'd shore,
Whose foot spurns back the ocean's roaring tides,
And coops from other lands her islanders,
Even till that England, hedg'd in with the main,
That water-walled bulwark, still secure
And confident from foreign purposes,
Even till that utmost corner of the west
Salute thee for her king: till then, fair boy,
Will I not think of home, but follow arms.

Const. O, take his mother's thanks, a widow's
thanks,
Till your strong hand shall help to give him strength,
To make a more³ requital to your love.

Aust. The peace of heaven is theirs, that lift their swords

In such a just and charitable war.

K. Phi. Well then, to work; our cannon shall be bent

Against the brows of this resisting town.—
Call for our chiefest men of discipline,
To cull the plots of best advantages:—
We'll lay before this town our royal bones,
Wade to the market-place in Frenchmen's blood,
But we will make it subject to this boy.

Const. Stay for an answer to your embassy,
Lest unadvis'd you stain your swords with blood:
My lord Chatillon may from England bring
That right in peace, which here we urge in war:
And then we shall repent each drop of blood,
That hot rash haste so indirectly shed.

Enter CHATILLON.

K. Phi. A wonder, lady!—lo, upon thy wish,
Our messenger Chatillon is arriv'd.—
What England says, say briefly, gentle lord,
We coldly pause for thee; Chatillon, speak.

Chat. Then turn your forces from this paltry siege,

¹ Leopold Duke of Austria, by whom Richard had been thrown into prison in 1193, died in consequence of a fall from his horse, in 1195, some years before the date of the events upon which this play turns. The cause of the enmity between Richard and the Duke of Austria is variously related by the old chroniclers. Shakespeare has been led into this anachronism by the old play of King John.

And stir them up against a mightier task.
England, impatient of your just demands,
Hath put himself in arms; the adverse winds,
Whose leisure I have staid, have given him time
To land his legions all as soon as I:
His marches are expedient⁴ to this town,
His forces strong, his soldiers confident.
With him along is come the mother-queen,
An Ate,⁵ stirring him to blood and strife:
With her her niece, the Lady Blanch of Spain;
With them a bastard of the king's deceas'd:
And all the unsettled humours of the land,—
Rash, inconsiderate, fiery volunteers,
With ladies' faces, and fierce dragons' spleens,—
Have sold their fortunes at their native homes,
Bearing their birthrights proudly on their backs,
To make a hazard of new fortunes here.
In brief, a braver choice of dauntless spirits,
Than now, the English bottoms have waft⁶ o'er,
Did never float upon the swelling tide,
To do offence and scath⁷ in Christendom.
The interruption of their churlish drums

[Drums beat.]

Cuts off more circumstance; they are at hand,
To parley, or to fight; therefore, prepare.

K. Phi. How much unlook'd for is this expedition!

Aust. By how much unexpected, by so much
We must awake endeavour for defence;
For courage mounteth with occasion:
Let them be welcome then, we are prepar'd.

Enter KING JOHN, ELINOR, BLANCH, the Bastard, PEMBROKE, and Forces.

K. John. Peace be to France: if France in peace permit

Our just and lineal entrance to our own!
If not, bleed France, and peace ascend to heaven!
Whiles we, God's wrathful agent, do correct
Their proud contempt that heat his peace to heaven.

K. Phi. Peace be to England; if that war return
From France to England, there to live in peace!
England we love; and, for that England's sake,
With burden of our armour here we sweat:
This toil of ours should be a work of thine;
But thou from loving England art so far,
That thou hast under-wrought⁸ his lawful king,
Cut off the sequence⁹ of posterity,
Outfaced infant state, and done a rape
Upon the maiden virtue of the crown.
Look here upon thy brother Geoffrey's face:—
These eyes, these brows, were moulded out of his:
This little abstract doth contain that large,
Which died in Geoffrey; and the hand of time
Shall draw this brief¹¹ into as huge a volume.
That Geoffrey was thy elder brother born,
And this his son; England was Geoffrey's right,
And this is Geoffrey's: In the name of God,
How comes it then, that thou art call'd a king,
When living blood doth in these temples beat,
Which owe the crown that thou o'ermasterest?

K. John. From whom hast thou this great commission, France,

To draw my answer from thy articles?

K. Phi. From that supernal¹² judge, that stirs good thoughts

In any breast of strong authority,
To look into the blots and stains of right.
That judge hath made me guardian to this boy:
Under whose warrant, I impeach thy wrong;
And, by whose help, I mean to chastise it.

K. John. Alack, thou dost usurp authority.

K. Phi. Excuse it; it is to beat usurping down.
Eli. Who is it, thou dost call usurper, France?

Const. Let me make answer;—thy usurping son.

2 Importunity.

3 i. e. greater.

4 To mark the best stations to overawe the town.

5 Immediate, expeditious.

6 The Goddess of Revenge.

7 Waft for wafted.

8 Damage, harm, hurt.

9 Undetermined.

10 Succession.

11 A short writing, abstract, or description

12 Celestial.

Eli. Out, insolent! thy bastard shall be king;
That thou mayst be a queen, and check the world!

Const. My bed was ever to thy son as true,
As thine was to thy husband; and this boy
Liker in feature to his father Geoffrey,
Than thou and John in manners; being as like,
As rain to water, or devil to his dam.
My boy a bastard! By my soul, I think,
His father never was so true begot;
It cannot be, an if thou wert his mother.²

Eli. There's a good mother, boy, that blots thy father.

Const. There's a good grandam, boy, that would blot thee.

Aust. Peace!

Bast. Hear the crier.³

Aust. What the devil art thou?

Bast. One that will play the devil, sir, with you,
An 'a may catch your hide and you alone.⁴
You are the hare of whom the proverb goes,
Whose valour plucks dead lions by the beard;⁵
I'll smoke your skin-coat, an I catch you right;
Sirrah, look to't; i' faith, I will, i' faith.

Blanch. O, well did he become that lion's robe,
That did disrobe the lion of that robe!

Bast. It lies as sightly on the back of him,
As great Alcides' shoes⁶ upon an ass:—
But, ass, I'll take that burden from your back;
Or lay on that shall make your shoulders crack.

Aust. What cracker is this same, that deafs our ears

With this abundance of superfluous breath?

K. Phi. Lewis, determine what we shall do straight.

Lew. Women and fools, break off your conference.—

King John, this is the very sum of all,—
England, and Ireland, Anjou, Touraine, Maine,
In right of Arthur do I claim of thee:

Wilt thou resign them, and lay down thy arms?

K. John. My life as soon:—I do defy thee, France.
Arthur of Bretagne, yield thee to my hand;
And, out of my dear love, I'll give thee more
Than e'er the coward hand of France can win:
Submit thee, boy.

Eli. Come to thy grandam, child.

Const. Do, child, go to it! grandam, child;
Give grandam kingdom, and it! grandam will Give it a plum, a cherry, and a fig:
There's a good grandam.

Arth. Good my mother, peace!
I would, that I were low laid in my grave;
I am not worth this coil! that's made for me.

Eli. His mother shames him so, poor boy, he weeps.

Const. Now shame upon you, whe'r^t she does or no!

His grandam's wrongs, and not his mother's shames,
Draw those heaven-moving pearls from his poor eyes,
Which heaven shall take in nature of a fee;

1 'Surely (says Holinshed,) Queen Eleanor, the king's mother, was sore against her nephew Arthur, rather moved thereto by envy conceived against his mother, than upon any just occasion, given in behalfe of the child; for that she saw, if he were king, how his mother Constance would look to beare the most rule within the realme of Englande, till her son should come of lawful age to governe of himselfe. So hard a thing it is to bring women to agree in one minde, their natures commonly being so contrary.'

2 Constance alludes to Elinor's infidelity to her husband, Louis the VIIIth, when they were in the Holy Land; on account of which he was divorced from her. She afterwards, in 1151, married our King Henry II.

3 Alluding to the usual proclamation for silence made by criers in the courts of justice, beginning Oyez, corruptly pronounced O-yes. Austria had just said Peace!

4 Austria, who had killed King Richard Cœur-de-lion, wore, as the spoil of that prince, a lion's hide, which had belonged to him. This was the ground of the Bastard's quarrel.

5 The proverb alluded to is 'Mortuo leoni et lepores insulant.'—Erasmus Adagia.

6 Theobald thought that we should read Alcides' shoes; but Malone has shown that the shoes of Her-

Ay, with these crystal beads heaven shall be brib'd
To do him justice, and revenge on you.

Eli. Thou monstrous slanderer of heaven and earth!

Const. Thou monstrous injurer of heaven and earth;

Call not me slanderer; thou, and thine, usurp
The dominations, royalties, and rights,
Of this oppressed boy: This is thy eldest son's son,
Infortunate in nothing but in thee;
Thy sins are visited in this poor child;
The canon of the law is laid on him,
Being but the second generation
Removed from thy sin-conceiving womb.

K. John. Bedlam, have done.

Const. I have but this to say,—

That he's not only plagued for her sin,
But God hath made her sin and her the plague
On this removed issue, plagu'd for her,
And with her plague, her sin; his injury
Her injury, the beadle to her sin;⁷
All punish'd in the person of this child,
And all for her; a plague upon her!

Eli. Thou unadvised scold, I can produce
A will, that bars the title of thy son.

Const. Ay, who doubts that? a will! a wicked will;

A woman's will; a canker'd grandam's will!

K. Phi. Peace, lady; pause, or be more temperate:

It ill beseems this presence, to cry aim!⁸

To these ill-tuned repetitions.—

Some trumpet summon hither to the walls
These men of Angiers; let us hear them speak,
Whose title they admit, Arthur's or John's.

Trumpets sound. Enter Citizens upon the Walls.

1 Cit. Who is it that hath warn'd us to the walls?

K. Phi. 'Tis France, for England.

K. John. England, for itself:

You men of Angiers, and my loving subjects,—

K. Phi. You loving men of Angiers, Arthur's subjects,

Our trumpet call'd you to this gentle parle.⁹

K. John. For our advantage;—Therefore, hear us first.—

These flags of France, that are advanced here.

Before the eye and prospect of your town,

Have hither march'd to your endamagement:

The cannons have their bowels full of wrath;

And ready mounted are they, to spit forth

Their iron indignation 'gainst your walls:

All preparation for a bloody siege,

And merciless proceeding by these French,

Confront your city's eyes, your winking gates;

And, but for our approach, those sleeping stones,

That as a waist do girdle you about,

By the compulsion of their ordnance

By this time from their fixed beds of lime

Had been disshabited, and wide havoc made

For bloody power to rush upon your peace.

cules were very frequently introduced in the old comedies on much the same occasions. Theobald supposed that the shoes must be placed on the back of the ass, instead of upon his hoofs, and therefore proposed his alteration.

7 Bustle.

8 Whether.

9 The key to this obscure passage is contained in the last speech of Constance, where she alludes to the denunciation of the second commandment of 'visiting the iniquities of the parents upon the children unto the third and fourth generation.' Young Arthur is here represented as not only suffering from the guilt of his grandmother, but also by her in person, she being made the very instrument of his sufferings. So that he is plagued on her account, and with her plague, which is her sin, i.e. (taking by a common figure the cause for the consequence) the penalty entailed upon it. His injury, or the evil he suffers, her sin brings upon him, and her injury or the evils she inflicts he suffers from her, as the beadle to her sin, or executioner of the punishment annexed to it.

11 Conference

But, on the sight of us, your lawful king,—
Who painfully, with much expedient march,
Have brought a countercheck before your gates,
To save unscratch'd your city's threaten'd cheeks,—
Behold, the French, amaz'd, vouchsafe a parle :
And now, instead of bullets wrapp'd in fire,
To make a shaking fever in your walls,
They shoot but calm words, folded up in smoke,
To make a faithless error in your ears :
Which trust accordingly, kind citizens,
And let us in, your king ; whose labour'd spirits,
Forewearied¹ in this action of swift speed,
Crave harbourage within your city walls.

K. Phi. When I have said, make answer to us both.

Lo, in this right hand, whose protection
Is most divinely vow'd upon the right
Of him it holds, stands young Plantagenet ;
Son to the elder brother of this man,
And king o'er him, and all that he enjoys :
For this down-trodden equity, we tread
In warlike march these greens before your town,
Being no further enemy to you,
Than the constraint of hospitable zeal,
In the relief of this oppressed child,
Religiously provokes. Be pleased then
To pay that duty, which you truly owe,
To him that owes² it ; namely, this young prince :
And then our arms, like to a muzzled bear,
Save in aspect, have all offence seal'd up ;
Our cannons' malice vainly shall be spent
Against the invulnerable clouds of heaven ;
And, with a blessed and unwev'd retire,
With unhack'd swords, and helmets all unbruised,
We will bear home that lusty blood again,
Which here we came to spout against your town,
And leave your children, wives, and you, in peace.
But if you fondly pass our proffer'd offer,
'Tis not the roundure³ of your old-fac'd walls
Can hide you from our messengers of war ;
Though all these English, and their discipline,
Were harbour'd in their rude circumference.
Then, tell us, shall your city call us lord,
In that behalf which we have challeng'd it ?
Or shall we give the signal to our rage,
And stalk in blood to our possession ?

1 Cit. In brief, we are the king of England's subjects ;

For him, and in his right, we hold this town.

K. John. Acknowledge then the king, and let me in.

1 Cit. That can we not : but he that proves the king,
To him will we prove loyal ; till that time,
Have we ramm'd up our gates against the world.

K. John. Doth not the crown of England prove the king ?

And, if not that, I bring you witnesses,
Twice fifteen thousand hearts of England's breed,—

Bast. Bastards, and else.

K. John. To verify our title with their lives.

K. Phi. As many, and as well born bloods as those,—

Bast. Some bastards too.

K. Phi. Stand in his face, to contradict his claim.

1 Cit. Till you compound whose right is worthiest,
We, for the worthiest, hold the right from both.

K. John. Their God forgive the sin of all those souls,

That to their everlasting residence,
Before the dew of evening fall, shall fleet,
In dreadful trial of our kingdom's king !

K. Phi. Amen, Amen !—Mount, chevaliers ! to arms !

Bast. St. George,—that swing'd the dragon, and e'er since,
Sits on his horseback at mine hostess' door,
Teach us some fence ;—Sirrah, were I at home,
At your den, sirrah [To Austria], with your lioness,
I'd set an ox-head to your lion's hide,⁴
And make a monster of you.

Aust. Peace ; no more.

Bast. O, tremble ; for you hear the lion roar.

K. John. Up higher to the plain ; where we'll set forth,

In best appointment, all our regiments.

Bast. Speed then, to take advantage of the field.

K. Phi. It shall be so ;—[To Lewis] and at the other hill

Command the rest to stand.—God, and our right !
[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The same. Alarums and Excursions ; then a Retreat. Enter a French Herald, with trumpets to the gates.

F. Her. 'You men of Angiers, open wide your gates,

And let young Arthur, Duke of Bretagne, in ;
Who, by the hand of France, this day hath made
Much work for tears in many an English mother,
Whose sons lie scattered on the bleeding ground !
Many a widow's husband grovelling lies,
Coldly embracing the discolour'd earth ;
And victory, with little loss, doth play
Upon the dancing banners of the French ;
Who are at hand, triumphantly display'd,
To enter conquerors, and to proclaim
Arthur of Bretagne, England's king, and yours.

Enter an English Herald, with trumpets.

E. Her. Rejoice, you men of Angiers, ring your bells ;

King John, your king and England's doth approach,
Commander of this hot malicious day !
Their armours, that march'd hence so silver-bright,
Hither return all gilt with Frenchmen's blood ;⁵
There stuck no plume in any English crest,
That is removed by a staff of France ;
Our colours do return in those same hands
That did display them when we first march'd forth ;
And, like a jolly troop of huntsmen,⁶ come
Our lusty English, all with purpled hands,
Dyed in the dying slaughter of their foes :
Open your gates, and give the victors way.

Cit. Heralds, from off our towers we might behold,

From first to last, the onset and retire
Of both your armies ; whose equality
By our best eyes cannot be censured !⁷
Blood hath bought blood, and blows have answer'd blows ;

Strength match'd with strength, and power confronted power :

Both are alike ; and both alike we like.

One must prove greatest ; while they weigh so even,
We hold our town for neither ; yet for both.

*Enter, at one side, KING JOHN, with his Power ;
ELINOR, BLANCH, and the Bastard ; at the other,
KING PHILIP, LEWIS, AUSTRIA, and Forces.*

K. John. France, hast thou yet more blood to cast away ?

Say, shall the current of our right run⁸ on ?
Whose passage, vex'd with thy impediment,
Shall leave his native channel, and o'erswell
With course disturb'd even thy confining shores ;
Unless thou let his silver water keep
A peaceful progress to the ocean.

— Here lay Duncan,
His silver skin laced with his golden blood.⁹

⁷ It was anciently one of the savage practices of the chase for all to stain their hands in the blood of the deer as a trophy.

⁸ Estimated, judged, determined. Shakspeare should have written, 'whose superiority, or whose inequality cannot be censured.'

⁹ The first folio reads room : the change was made in the second folio.

³ Roundure, from rondeur, Fr. ; circle.

⁴ So in the old play of King John :—

'But let the frolic Frenchman take no scorn
If Philip fronts him with an English horn.'

⁵ Johnson observes 'This speech is very poetical and smooth, and, except the conceit of the widow's husband embracing the earth, is just and beautiful.'

⁶ Shakspeare has used this image in Macbeth, Act. ii. Sc. 3 :—

K. Phi. England, thou hast not sav'd one drop of blood,

In this hot trial, more than we of France ;
Rather, lost more : And by this hand I swear,
That sways the earth this climate overlooks,—
Before we will lay down our just-borne arms,
We'll put thee down, 'gainst whom these arms we bear,

Or add a royal number to the dead ;
Gracing the scroll, that tells of this war's loss,
With slaughter coupled to the name of kings.

Bast. Ha, majesty ! how high thy glory towers,
When the rich blood of kings is set on fire !
O, now doth death line his dead chaps with steel ;
The swords of soldiers are his teeth, his fangs ;
And now he feasts, mousing¹ the flesh of men,
In undetermin'd differences of kings.—

Why stand these royal fronts amazed thus ?
Cry, havoc, kings ! back to the stained field,
You equal potents,² fiery-kindled spirits !
Then let confusion of one part confirm
The other's peace ; till then, blows, blood, and death !

K. John. Whose party do the townsmen yet admit ?

K. Phi. Speak, citizens, for England ; who's your king ?

1 Cit. The king of England, when we know the king.

K. Phi. Know him in us, that here hold up his right.

K. John. In us, that are our own great deputy,
And bear possession of our person here ;
Lord of our presence, Angiers, and of you.

1 Cit. A greater power than we, denies all this ;
And, till it be undoubted, we do lock
Our former scruple in our strong-barr'd gates :
King'd of our fears ;³ until our fears, resolv'd,
Be by some certain king purg'd and depos'd.

Bast. By heaven, these scroyles⁴ of Angiers flout you, kings ;

And stand securely on their battlements,
As in a theatre, whence they gape and point
At your industrious scenes and acts of death.

Your royal presences be rul'd by me ;
Do like the mutines⁵ of Jerusalem,
Be friends a while, and both conjointly bend
Your sharpest deeds of malice on this town :
By east and west let France and England mount
Their battering cannon, charged to the mouths ;
Till their soul-fearing⁶ clamours have brawl'd down

The flinty ribs of this contemptuous city :

I'd play incessantly upon these jades,
Even till unfenced desolation

Leave them as naked as the vulgar air.
That done, disserve your united strength,
And part your mingled colours once again ;

Turn face to face, and bloody point to point :
Then, in a moment, fortune shall cull forth
Out of one side her happy minion ;

To whom in favour she shall give the day,

And kiss him with a glorious victory.
How like you this wild counsel, mighty states ?

Smacks it not something of the policy ?

K. John. Now, by the sky that hangs above our heads,

¹ Mr. Pope changed this to mounting, and was followed by subsequent editors. 'Mousing,' says Malone, 'is marmocking and devouring eagerly, as a cat devours a mouse.' 'Whilst Troy was swilling sack and sugar, and mousing fat venison, the mad Greekes made bonfires of their houses.'—The Wonderful Year, by Decker, 1603.—Shakspeare often uses familiar terms in his most serious speeches ; and Malone has adduced other instances in this play : but in this very speech 'his dead chaps' is surely not more elevated than mousing.

² Potentates.

³ The old copy reads 'Kings of our fear, &c.' The emendation is Mr. Tyrwhitt's. 'Kings'd of our fears,' i. e. our fears being our kings or rulers. It is manifest that the reading of the old copy is corrupt, and that it must have been so worded, that their fears should be styled their kings or masters, and not they kings or

I like it well ;—France, shall we knit our powers,
And lay this Angiers even with the ground ;
Then, after, fight who shall be king of it ?

Bast. An if thou hast the mettle of a king—
Being wrong'd, as we are, by this peevish town,—
Turn thou the mouth of thy artillery,
As we will ours, against these saucy walls :
And when that we have dash'd them to the ground—
Why, then defy each other ; and, pell-mell,
Make work upon ourselves, for heaven, or hell.

K. Phi. Let it be so :—Say, where will you assault ?

K. John. We from the west will send destruction
Into this city's bosom.

Aust. I from the north.

K. Phi. Our thunder from the south,
Shall rain their drift of bullets on this town.

Bast. O prudent discipline ! From north to south,
Austria and France shoot in each other's mouth :'
[Aside.

I'll stir them to't :—Come, away, away !

1 Cit. Hear us, great kings ! vouchsafe a while to stay,

And I shall show you peace, and fair-fac'd league ;
Win you this city without stroke or wound ;
Rescue those breathing lives to die in beds,
That here come sacrifices for the field ;
Persever not, but hear me, mighty kings.

K. John. Speak on, with favour ; we are bent to hear.

1 Cit. That daughter therè of Spain, the lady Blanch,⁷

Is near to England ; Look upon the years

Of Lewis the Dauphin, and that lovely maid :

If lusty love should go in quest of beauty,

Where should he find it fairer than in Blanch ?

If zealous⁸ love should go in search of virtue,

Where should he find it purer than in Blanch ?

If love ambitious sought a match of birth,

Whose veins bound richer blood than Lady Blanch ?

Such as she is, in beauty, virtue, birth,

Is the young Dauphin every way complete :

If not complete, O say, he is not she ;

And she again wants nothing, to name want,

If want it be not, that she is not he :

He is the half part of a blessed man,

Left to be finished by such a she ;

And she a fair divided excellence,

Whose fullness of perfection lies in him.

O, two such silver currents, when they join,

Do glorify the banks that bound them in :

And two such shores to two such streams made one,

Two such controuling bounds shall you be, kings,

To these two princes, if you marry them.

This union shall do more than battery can,

To our fast-closed gates : for, at this match,

With swifter spleen⁹ than powder can enforce,

The mouth of passage shall we fling wide open,

And give you entrance ; but, without this match,

The sea enraged is not half so deaf,

Lions more confident, mountains and rocks

More free from motion ; no, not death himself

In mortal fury half so peremptory,

As we to keep this city.

Bast. Here's a stay,¹¹

That shakes the rotten carcass of old death

masters of their fears, because in the next line mention is made of these fears being depos'd.

⁴ Escrouelles, Fr. scabby fellows.

⁵ The mutines are the mutineers, the seditious.

⁶ i. e. soul-appalling ; from the verb to fear, to make afraid.

⁷ The poet has made Faulconbridge forget that he had made a similar mistake.

⁸ The Lady Blanch was daughter to Alphonso, the ninth king of Castile, and was niece to King John by his sister Eleanor.

⁹ Zealous for pious.

¹⁰ Spleen is used by Shakspeare for any violent hurry or tumultuous speed. In a Midsummer Night's Dream he applies spleen to the lightning.

¹¹ A stay here seems to mean a supporter of a cause 'Here's an extraordinary partisan or maintainer that shakes,' &c. Barct translates columen vel firmamen

Out of his rags! Here's a large mouth, indeed,
That spits forth death, and mountains, rocks, and seas;

Talks as familiarly of roaring lions
As maids of thirteen do of puppy-dogs!
What cannoneer begot this lusty blood?
He speaks plain cannon, fire, and smoke, and bounce:

He gives the bastinado with his tongue;
Our ears are cudgel'd; not a word of his,
But buffets better than a fist of France:
Zounds! I was never so bethump'd with words,
Since I first call'd my brother's father, dad.

Eli. Son, list to this conjunction, make this match;

Give with our niece a dowry large enough:
For by this knot thou shalt so surely tie
Thy now unsur'd assurance to the crown,
That yon green boy shall have no sun to ripe
The bloom that promiseth a mighty fruit.
I see a yielding in the looks of France;
Mark, how they whisper: urge them, while their souls

Are capable of this ambition:
Lest zeal, now melted by the windy breath
Of soft petitions, pity, and remorse,
Cool and congeal again to what it was.

1 Cit. Why answer not the double majesties
This friendly treaty of our threaten'd town?

K. Phi. Speak England first, that hath been forward first

To speak unto this city: What say you?

K. John. If that the Dauphin there, thy princely son,

Can in this book of beauty read,¹ I love,
Her dowry shall weigh equal with a queen:
For Anjou, and fair Touraine, Maine, Poitiers,
And all that we upon this side the sea
(Except this city now by us besieg'd)
Find liable to our crown and dignity,
Shall gild her bridal bed; and make her rich
In titles, honours, and promotions,
As she in beauty, education, blood,
Holds hand with any princess of the world.

K. Phi. What say'st thou, boy? look in the lady's face.

Lev. I do, my lord, and in her eye I find
A wonder, or a wondrous miracle,
The shadow of myself form'd in her eye;
Which, being but the shadow of your son,
Becomes a sun, and makes your son a shadow;
I do protest, I never lov'd myself,
Till now infixed I beheld myself
Drawn in the flattering table² of her eye.

(Whispers with BLANCH.
Bast. Drawn in the flattering table of her eye!—
Hang'd in the frowning wrinkle of her brow!—
And quarter'd in her heart?—he doth espie
Himself love's traitor: This is pity now,
That hang'd, and drawn, and quarter'd, there should
be,

In such a love, so vile a lout as he.
Blanch. My uncle's will, in this respect, is mine:
If he see aught in you, that makes him like,
That any thing he sees, which moves his liking,
I can with ease translate it to my will;

Or, if you will, (to speak more properly,)
I will enforce it easily to my love.

Further I will not flatter you, my lord,
That all I see in you is worthy love,
Than this,—that nothing do I see in you; (Though churlish thoughts themselves should be your judge,)

That I can find should merit any hate.

K. John. What say these young ones? What say you, my niece?

Blanch. That she is bound in honour still to do
What you in wisdom shall vouchsafe to say.

K. John. Speak, then, prince Dauphin; can you love this lady?

Lev. Nay, ask me if I can refrain from love;

For I do love her most unfeign'dly.

K. John. Then do I give Volquessen,³ Touraine, Maine,

Poitiers, and Anjou, these five provinces,
With her to thee; and this addition more,
Full thirty thousand marks of English coin.—
Philip of France, if thou be pleas'd withal,
Command thy son and daughter to join hands.

K. Phi. It likes us well;—Young princes, close your hands.⁴

Aust. And your lips, too; for I am well assur'd
That I did so, when I was first assur'd.⁵

K. Phi. Now, citizens of Angiers, ope your gates,
Let in that amity which you have made;

For, at Saint Mary's chapel, presently,
The rites of marriage shall be solemniz'd.—
Is not the Lady Constance in this troop?—
I know, she is not; for this match, made up,
Her presence would have interrupted much:—
Where is she and her son? tell me, who knows.

Lev. She is sad and passionate⁶ at your highness' tent.

K. Phi. And, by my faith, this league, that we have made,

Will give her sadness very little cure.—
Brother of England, how may we content
This widow lady? In her right we came;
Which we, God knows, have turn'd another way,
To our own vantage.⁷

K. John. We will heal up all;
For we'll create young Arthur duke of Bretagne,
And earl of Richmond; and this rich fair town
We make him lord of.—Call the Lady Constance;
Some speedy messenger bid her repair
To our solemnity:—I trust we shall,
If not fill up the measure of her will,
Yet in some measure satisfy her so,
That we shall stop her exclamation.
Go we, as well as haste will suffer us,
To this unlook'd for, unprepared pomp.

(Exeunt all but the Bastard.—The Citizens retire from the Walls.)

Bast. Mad world! mad kings! mad composition!
John, to stop Arthur's title in the whole,
Hath willingly departed⁸ with a part:
And France (whose armour conscience buckled on;
Whom zeal and charity brought to the field,
As God's own soldier, rounded⁹ in the ear
With that same purpose-changer, that sly devil;
That broker, that still breaks the pate of faith;
That daily break-vow; he that wins of all,

tum reipublica by 'the stay, the chiefe mainteyner and succour of,' &c. It has been proposed to read, 'Here's a say,' i. e. a speech; and it must be confessed that it would agree well with the tenor of the subsequent part of Faulconbridge's speech.

'Her face the book of praises,' &c.

² The table is the plain surface on which any thing is depicted or written. Tablette, Fr. Our ancestors called their memorandum-books a pair of writing tables.
Vide Baretti's Alvearie, 1575, Letter T. No. 2.

³ This is the ancient name for the country now called the Vexin, in Latin Pagus Velocassinus. That part of it called the Norman Vexin was in dispute between Philip and John. This and the subsequent line (except the words 'do I give') are taken from the old play.

⁴ See Winter's Tale, Act i. Sc. 2.

⁵ Affianced, contracted.

⁶ Passionate here means agitated, perturbed, a prey to mournful sensations, not moved or disposed to anger.
Thus in the old play, entitled, The true Tragedie of Richard Duke of York, 1600:—

'—Tell me, good madam,

'Why is your grace so passionate of late?'

⁷ Advantage.

⁸ To part and depart were formerly synonymous.
So in Cooper's Dictionary, v. 'communico, to communicate or depart a thing I have with another.'

⁹ To round or roven in the ear is to whisper; from the Saxon runian, susurrare. The word and its etymology is fully illustrated by Casaubon, in his Treatise de Ling. Saxonica, and in a Letter by Sir H. Spelman, published in Wormius, Literatura Runicæ, Hafnise, 1651, p. 4.

Of kings, of beggars, old men, young men, maids,—
Who having no external thing to lose
But the word maid,—cheats the poor maid of that;
That smooth-faced gentleman, tickling commodity:—

Commodity, the bias of the world;
The world, who of itself is peised well,
Made to run even, upon even ground;
Till this advantage, this vile drawing bias,
This sway of motion, this commodity,
Makes it take head from all indifferency,
From all direction, purpose, course, intent:
And this same bias, this commodity,
This bawd, this broker, this all-changing word,
Clapp'd on the outward eye of fickle France,
Hath drawn him from his own determin'd aid,
From a resolv'd and honourable war,
To a most base and vile-concluded peace.—
And why rail I on this commodity?
But for because he hath not wou'd me yet:
Not that I have the power to clutch¹ my hand,
When his fair angels² would salute my palm:
But for³ my hand, as unattempted yet,
Like a poor beggar, railleth on the rich.
Well, whiles I am a beggar, I will rail,
And say,—there is no sin, but to be rich;
And being rich, my virtue then shall be,
To say,—there is no vice, but beggary:
Since kings break faith upon commodity,
Gain, be my lord! for I will worship thee!

[Exit.]

ACT III.

SCENE I. The same. The French King's Tent.Enter CONSTANCE, ARTHUR, and SALISBURY.

Const. Gone to be married! gone to swear a peace!
False blood to false blood join'd! Gone to be friends!
Shall Lewis have Blanch? and Blanch those provinces?

It is not so; thou hast misspoke, misheard;
Be well advis'd, tell o'er thy tale again:
It cannot be; thou dost but say, 'tis so:
I trust, I may not trust thee; for thy word
Is but the vain breath of a common man;
Believe me, I do not believe thee, man;
I have a king's oath to the contrary.
Thou shalt be punish'd for thus frightening me,
For I am sick, and capable⁴ of fears.
Oppress'd with wrongs, and therefore full of fears;
A widow, husbandless, subject to fears;
A woman, naturally born to fears;
And though thou now confess, thou didst but jest,
With my vex'd spirits I cannot take a truce,
But they will quake and tremble all this day.
What dost thou mean by shaking of thy head?
Why dost thou look so sadly on my son?
What means that hand upon that breast of thine?
Why holds thine eye that lamentable rheum,
Like a proud river peering⁵ o'er his bounds?
Be these sad signs confirmers of thy words?
Then speak again; not all thy former tale,
But this one word, whether thy tale be true.

Sal. As true, as, I believe, you think them false,
That give you cause to prove my saying true.

Const. O, if thou teach me to believe this sorrow,

Teach thou this sorrow how to make me die;
And let belief and life encounter so,
As doth the fury of two desperate men,
Which, in the very meeting, fall, and die.—
Lewis marry Blanch! O, boy, then where art thou?
France friend with England! what becomes of me?—
Fellow, be gone; I cannot brook thy sight;
This news hath made thee a most ugly man.

Sal. What other harm have I, good lady, done,
But spoke the harm that is by others done?

Const. Which harm within itself so heinous is,
As it makes harmful all that speak of it.

Arth. I do beseech you, madam, be content.

Const. If thou, that bidd'st me be content, wert grim,

Ugly, and sland'rous to thy mother's womb,
Full of unpleasing blots, and sightless⁶ stains,
Lame, foolish, crooked, swart,⁷ prodigious,
Patch'd with foul moles, and eye-offending marks,
I would not care, I then would be content;
For then I should not love thee; no, nor thou
Become thy great birth, nor deserve a crown.
But thou art fair; and at thy birth, dear boy!
Nature and fortune join'd to make thee great:
Of nature's gifts thou may'st with lilies boast,
And with the half-blown rose: but fortune, O!
She is corrupted, chang'd, and won from thee;
She adulterates hourly with thine uncle John;
And with her golden hand hath pluck'd on France
To tread down fair respect of sovereignty,
And made his majesty the bawd to theirs.
France is a bawd to fortune, and King John;
That strumpet fortune, that usurping John:—
Tell me, thou fellow, is not France forsworn?
Envenom him with words; or get thee gone,
And leave those woes alone, which I alone
Am bound to under-bear.

Sal. Pardon me, madam,
I may not go without you to the kings.

Const. Thou may'st, thou shalt, I will not go with thee:

I will instruct my sorrows to be proud;
For grief is proud, and makes his owner stout.¹⁰
To me, and to the state of my great grief,
Let kings assemble; for my grief's so great,
That no supporter but the huge firm earth
Can hold it up: here I and sorrow sit;
Here is my throne, bid kings come bow to it.

[She throws herself on the ground.]

Enter KING JOHN, KING PHILIP, LEWIS, BLANCH, ELINOR, Bastard, AUSTRIA, and Attendants.

K. Phi. 'Tis true, fair daughter; and this blessed day,

Ever in France shall be kept festival:
To solemnize this day, the glorious sun
Stays in his course, and plays the alchemist;
Turning, with splendour of his precious eye,
The meagre cloddy earth to glittering gold:
The yearly course, that brings this day about,
Shall never see it but a holiday.

Const. A wicked day, and not a holiday!—

[Rising]
What hath this day deserv'd? what hath it done;
That it in golden letters should be set
Among the high titles,¹¹ in the calendar?
Nay, rather, turn this day out of the week;¹²
This day of shame, oppression, perjury:

ground. The present division, which was made by Theobald, is certainly right.

⁶ Capable is susceptible.

⁷ This seems to have been limited by Marston, in his Insatiate Countess, 1603:—

'Then how much more in me, whose youthful veins,
Like a proud river, overflow their bounds.'

⁸ Unightly.

⁹ Swart is dark, dusky. Prodigious is portentous so deformed as to be taken for a foretoken of evil.

¹⁰ The old copy reads, 'makes its owner stoop.' The emendation is Sir T. Haumer's.

¹¹ Solemn seasons, times to be observed above others.
¹² In allusion to Job iii. 3.—'Let the day perish,' &c.; and v. 6, 'Let it not be joined to the days of the year, let it not come into the number of the months.'

¹ Commodity is interest, advantage. So Baret:—
'What fruite or commoditie had he by this his friendship?' Alvarie, Letter C. 867. The construction of this passage, though harsh to modern ears, is—'Commodity, he that wins of all,—he that cheats the poor maid of that only external thing she has to lose, namely the word maid, i. e. her chastity.'

Henderson has adduced a passage from Cupid's Whirligig, 1607, which happily illustrates the word bias in this passage:—

'O, the world is like a byas bowle, and it runs
All on the rich men's sides.'

² Clapp. ³ Coin. ⁴ I. e. but canave.

⁵ In the old copy, the Second Act extends to the end of the speech of Lady Constance, in the next scene, at the conclusion of which she throws herself on the

Or, if it must stand still, let wives with child
Pray, that their burdens may not fall this day,
Lest that their hopes prodigiously be cross'd;¹
But² on this day, let seamen fear no wreck;
No bargains break, that are not this day made:
This day, all things begun come to ill end;
Yea, faith itself to hollow falsehood change!

K. Phi. By heaven, lady, you shall have no cause
To curse the fair proceedings of this day:
Have I not pawn'd to you my majesty?

Const. You have beguil'd me with a counterfeit,³ Resembling majesty; which, being touch'd, and tried,

Proves valueless: You are forsworn, forsworn;
You came in arms to spill mine enemies' blood,
But now in arms you strengthen it with yours:
The grappling vigour and rough frown of war
Is cold in amity and painted peace,
And our oppression hath made up this league:—
Arm, arm, you heavens, against these perjur'd kings!

A widow cries; be husband to me, heavens!
Let not the hours of this ungodly day

Wear out the day in peace; but, ere sunset,
Set armed discord 'twixt these perjur'd kings!
Hear me, O, hear me!

Aust. Lady Constance, peace.

Const. War! war! no peace! peace is to me a war.

O Lymoges! O Austria!⁴ thou dost shame
That bloody spoil: Thou slave, thou wretch, thou coward,

Thou little valiant, great in villany!
Thou ever strong upon the stronger side!
Thou fortune's champion, that dost never fight
But when her humorous ladyship is by

To teach thee safety! thou art perjur'd, too,
And sooth'st up greatness. What a fool art thou,
A ramping fool; to brag, and stamp, and swear,
Upon my party! thou cold-blooded slave,

Hast thou not spoke like thunder on my side?
Been sworn my soldier? bidding me depend
Upon thy stars, thy fortune, and thy strength?

And dost thou now fall over to my foes?
Thou wear a lion's hide! doff it for shame,
And hang a calf's-skin on those recreant limbs.⁵

Aust. O, that a man should speak those words to me!

Bast. And hang a calf's-skin on those recreant limbs.

Aust. Thou dar'st not say so, villain, for thy life.

Bast. And hang a calf's-skin on those recreant limbs.⁶

K. John. We like not this; thou dost forget thyself.

Enter PANDULPH.

K. Phi. Here comes the holy legate of the pope.

Pand. Hail, you anointed deputies of heaven:—

1 i. e. be disappointed by the production of a prodigy, a monster.

2 But for unless; its exceptive sense of be out. In the ancient almanacs the days supposed to be favourable or unfavourable to bargains are distinguished, among a number of particulars of the like importance.

3 i. e. a false coin; a representation of the king being usually impressed on his coin. A counterfeit formerly signified also a portrait. The word seems to be here used equivocally.

4 Shakspeare, in the person of Austria, has conjoined the two well known enemies of Richard Cœur-de-lion. Leopold, duke of Austria, threw him into prison in a former expedition (in 1193); but the castle of Chaluz, before which he fell (in 1199), belonged to Vidomar, viscount of Limoges. The archer who pierced his shoulder with an arrow (of which wound he died) was Bertrand de Gourdon. Austria in the old play is called Lymoges, the Austrian duke. Holinshed says, 'The same year Philip, bastard sonne to King Richard, to whom his father had given the castell and honour of Coniacke, killed the viscount of Lymoges in revenge of his father's death,' &c.

5 Sir John Hawkins thought that there was here a sarcastic intention of calling Austria a fool; he says that a calf-skin coat was anciently the dress of a fool. It is more probable, as Ritson observes, that she means

To thee, King John, my holy errand is.

I Pandulph, of fair Milan cardinal,
And from Pope Innocent the legate here,
Do, in his name, religiously demand,
Why thou against the church, our holy mother,
So wilfully dost spurn; and, force perforce,
Keep Stephen Langton, chosen archbishop
Of Canterbury, from that holy see?

This, in our 'foresaid holy father's name,
Pope Innocent, I do demand of thee.

K. John. What earthly name to interrogatories,⁷
Can task the free breath of a sacred king?

Thou canst not, cardinal, devise a name
So slight, unworthy, and ridiculous,
To charge me to an answer, as the pope.
Tell him this tale; and from the mouth of England,
Add thus much more,—That no Italian priest

Shall tithe or toll in our dominions;
But as we under heaven are supreme head,

So under him, that great supremacy,
Where we do reign, we will alone uphold,
Without the assistance of a mortal hand:

So tell the pope: all reverence set apart,
To him and his usurp'd authority.

K. Phi. Brother of England, you blaspheme in this.

K. John. Though you, and all the kings of Christendom,

Are led so grossly by this meddling priest,
Dreading the curse that money may buy out,

And, by the merit of vile gold, dross, dust,
Purchase corrupted pardon of a man,

Who, in that sale, sells pardon from himself:

Though you, and all the rest, so grossly led,
This juggling witchcraft with revenue cherish;

Yet I, alone, alone do me oppose
Against the pope, and count his friends my foes.

Pand. Then, by the lawful power that I have,
Thou shalt stand curs'd, and excommunicate:

And blessed shall he be, that doth revolt
From his allegiance to an heretic;

And meritorious shall that hand be call'd,
Canonized, and worship'd as a saint,

That takes away by any secret course
Thy hateful life.

Const. O, lawful let it be,
That I have room with Rome to curse a while!

Good father cardinal, cry thou, amen,
To my keen curses; for, without my wrong,
There is no tongue hath power to curse him right.

Pand. There's law and warrant, lady, for my curse.

Const. And for mine too; when law can do no right,

Let it be lawful, that law bar no wrong:
Law cannot give my child his kingdom here;

For he that holds his kingdom, holds the law:
Therefore, since law itself is perfect wrong, to call him a coward; she tells him that a calf's-skin would suit his recreant limbs better than a lion's. A calf-hearted fellow is still used for a dastardly person.

6 Pope inserted the following lines from the old play here, which he thought necessary 'to explain the ground of the Bastard's quarrel with Austria:—

'Aust. Methinks that Richard's pride, and Richard's fall,

Should be a precedent to fright you all.

Faulc. What words are these? How do my sinews shake!

My father's foe clad in my father's spoil;
How doth Alecto whisper in my ears,

Delay not, Richard, kill the villain straight;
Disrobe him of the matchless monument,

Thy father's triumph o'er the savages!—
Now by his soul I swear, my father's soul,

Twice will I not review the morning's rise,
Till I have torn that trophy from thy back,

And split thy heart for wearing it so long.

7 What earthly name subjoined to interrogatories, can force a king to speak and answer them? The old copy reads earthly. The emendation was Pope's. It has also task instead of task in the next line, which was substituted by Theobald. Johnson observes that this must have been a very captivating scene at the time of our struggles with popery

How can the law forbid my tongue to curse?

Pand. Philip of France, on peril of a curse,
Let go the hand of that arch-heretic;
And raise the power of France upon his head,
Unless he do submit himself to Rome.

Eli. Look'st thou pale, France? do not let go thy hand.

Const. Look to that, devil! lest that France repent,
And, by disjoining hands, hell lose a soul.

Aust. King Philip, listen to the cardinal.

Bast. And hang a calf's-skin on his recreant limbs.

Aust. Well, ruffian, I must pocket up these wrongs, Because——

Bast. Your breeches best may carry them.¹

K. John. Philip, what say'st thou to the cardinal?

Const. What should he say, but as the cardinal?

Lew. Bethink you, father; for the difference
Is, purchase of a heavy curse from Rome,
Or the light loss of England for a friend:
Forgo the easier.

Blanch. That's the curse of Rome,

Const. O Lewis, stand fast; the devil tempts thee here,

In likeness of a new untrimmed² bride.

Blanch. The Lady Constance speaks not from her faith,

But from her need.

Const. O, if thou grant my need,
Which only lives but by the death of faith,
That need must needs infer this principle,——
That faith would live again by death of need;
O, then, tread down my need, and faith mounts up;
Keep my need up, and faith is trodden down.

K. John. The king is mov'd, and answers not to this.

Const. O, be remov'd from him, and answer well,

Aust. Do so, King Philip; hang no more in doubt.

Bast. Hang nothing but a calf's-skin, most sweet loot.

K. Phi. I am perplex'd, and know not what to say.

Pand. What canst thou say, but will perplex thee more,

If thou stand excommunicate, and curs'd?

K. Phi. Good reverend father, make my person yours,

And tell me how you would bestow yourself.
This royal hand and mine are newly knit;
And the conjunction of our inward souls
Married in league, coupled and link'd together
With all religious strength and sacred vows;
The latest breath that gave the sound of words,
Was deep-sworn faith, peace, amity, true love,
Between our kingdoms, and our royal selves;
And even before this truce, but new before,—
No longer than we well could wash our hands,
To clasp this royal bargain up of peace,
Heaven knows, they were besmear'd and overstain'd
With slaughter's pencil; where revenge did paint
The fearful difference of incensed kings:—
And shall these hands, so lately purg'd of blood,
So newly join'd in love, so strong in both,³
Unyoke this seizure, and this kind regret?⁴
Play fast and loose with faith? so jest with heaven,
Make such unconstant children of ourselves,
As now again to snatch our palm from palm:
Unswear faith sworn; and on the marriage bed
Of smiling peace to march a bloody host,
And make a riot on the gentle brow
Of true sincerity? O holy sir,
My reverend father, let it not be so:
Out of your grace, devise, ordain, impose

1 This may be a proverbial sarcasm; but the allusion is now lost.

2 Trim is dress. Comptus virgineus is explained by the dictionaries, 'The attire of maidens, or maidenly trimming.' An untrimmed bridle may therefore mean a bride undressed or disencumbered of the forbidding forms of dress.

3 I. e. so strong both in hatred and love; in deeds of amity or deeds of blood.

4 A regret is an exchange of salutation.

Some gentle order; and then we shall be bless'd
To do your pleasure, and continue friends.

Pand. All form is formless, order orderless,
Save what is opposite to England's love.
Therefore, to arms! be champion of our church!
Or let the church, our mother, breathe her curse,
A mother's curse, on her revolting son.
France, thou may'st hold a serpent by the tongue,
A cased⁵ lion by the mortal paw,
A fasting tiger safer by the tooth,
Than keep in peace that hand which thou dost hold.

K. Phi. I may disjoin my hand, but not my faith.

Pand. So mak'st thou faith an enemy to faith;

And, like a civil war, sett'st oath to oath,
Thy tongue against thy tongue. O, let thy vow
First made to heaven, first be to heaven perform'd;
That is to be the champion of our church!

What since thou swor'st, is sworn against thyself,
And may not be performed by thyself:

For that, which thou hast sworn to do amiss,
Is not amiss when it is truly done;⁶

But thou hast sworn, where doing tends to ill,
The truth is then most done not doing it:

The better act of purposes mistook
Is, to mistake again: though indirect,

Yet indirection thereby grows direct,
And falsehood falsehood cures; as fire cools fire,

Within the scorched veins of one new burn'd.
It is religion, that doth make vows kept;

But thou hast sworn against religion;
By what thou swear'st, against the thing thou

swear'st;
And mak'st an oath the surety for thy truth

Against an oath: The truth thou art unsure
To swear, swear only not to be forsworn;⁷

Else, what a mockery should it be to swear?
But thou dost swear only to be forsworn;

And most forsworn, to keep what thou dost swear
Therefore, thy latter vows, against thy first:

Is in thyself rebellion to thyself:
And better conquest never canst thou make,

Than arm thy constant and thy nobler parts
Against those giddy loose suggestions:

Upon which better part our prayers come in,
If thou vouchsafe them: but, if not, then know,

The peril of our curses light on thee;
So heavy, as thou shalt not shake them off;

But, in despair, die under their black weight.
Aust. Rebellion, flat rebellion!

Bast. Will't not be?
Will not a calf-skin stop that mouth of thine?

Lew. Father, to arms!

Blanch. Upon thy wedding day!

Against the blood that thou hast married?
What, shall our feast be kept with slaughter'd men?

Shall braying trumpets, and loud churlish drums,—
Clamours of hell,—be measures to our pomp?

O husband, hear me!—ah, alack! how new
Is husband in my mouth? even for that name,

Which till this time my tongue did ne'er pronounce,
Upon my knee I beg, go not to arms

Against mine uncle.
Const. O, upon my knee,

Made virtuous with kneeling, I do pray to thee,
Thou virtuous Dauphin, alter not the doom

Forethought by heaven.
Blanch. Now shall I see thy love; What motive may

Be stronger with thee than the name of wife?

Const. That which upholdeth him that thee upholds,

His honour: O, thine honour, Lewis, thine honour!

5 A cased lion is a lion irritated by confinement.

6 'Where doing tends to ill,' where an intended act is criminal, the truth is most done by not doing the act. The criminal act therefore, which thou hast sworn to do, is not amiss, will not be imputed to you as a crime, if it be done truly, in the sense I have now affixed to truth; that is, if you do not do it.

7 By what thou swear'st, &c. 'In swearing by religion against religion, thou hast sworn by what thou swear'st; i. e. in that which thou hast sworn, against the thing thou swear'st by; i. e. religion.'

Leu. I muse, your majesty doth seem so cold,
When such profound respects do pull you on.

Pand. I will denounce a curse upon his head.

K. Phi. Thou shalt not need:—England, I'll fall from thee.

Const. O fair return of banish'd majesty!

Eli. O foul revolt of French inconstancy!

K. John. France, thou shalt rue this hour within this hour.

Bast. Old time the clock-setter, that bald sexton
time,

Is it as he will? well, then, France shall rue.

Blanch. The sun's o'ercast with blood: Fair day, adieu!

Which is the side that I must go withal?

I am with both: each army hath a hand;

And in their rage, I having hold of both,
They whirl asunder, and dismember me.

Husband, I cannot pray that thou may'st win;

Uncle, I needs must pray that thou may'st lose;

Father, I may now wish the fortune thine;

Grandam, I will not wish thy wishes thrive:

Whoever wins, on that side shall I lose;

Assured loss, before the match be play'd.

Leu. Lady, with me; with me thy fortune lies.

Blanch. There where my fortune lives, there my life dies.

K. John. Cousin, go draw our puissance together,— [Exit Bastard.]

France, I am burn'd up with inflaming wrath;

A rage, whose heat hath this condition,

That nothing can allay, nothing but blood,

The blood, and dearest valued blood, of France.

K. Phi. Thy rage shall burn thee up, and thou shalt turn

To ashes, ere our blood shall quench that fire:

Look to thyself, thou art in jeopardy.

K. John. No more than he that threatens.—To arms
let's hie! [Exit.]

SCENE II. The same. Plains near Angiers.
Alarums; Excursions. Enter the Bastard, with AUSTRIA'S Head.

Bast. Now, by my life, this day grows wondrous hot;

Some airy devil¹ hovers in the sky,
And pours down mischief. Austria's head, lie there,
While Philip breathes.

Enter KING JOHN, ARTHUR, and HUBERT.

K. John. Hubert, keep this boy:—Philip,² make up:
My mother is assailed in our tent,
And ta'en, I fear.

Bast. My lord, I rescu'd her;

Her highness is in safety, fear you not:

But on, my liege: for very little pains
Will bring this labour to a happy end. [Exit.]

SCENE III. The same. Alarums; Excursions;
Retreat. Enter KING JOHN, ELINOR, ARTHUR,
the Bastard, HUBERT, and LORDS.

K. John. So shall it be; your grace shall stay behind, [To ELINOR.]

So strongly guarded.—Cousin, look not sad:

[To ARTHUR.]

Thy grandam loves thee, and thy uncle will
As dear be to thee as thy father was.

Arth. O, this will make my mother die with grief.

K. John. Cousin, [To the Bastard,] away for England; haste before:

And, ere our coming, see thou shake the bags

Of hoarding abbots: angels³ imprisoned

Set thou at liberty; the fat ribs of peace

Must by the hungry now be fed upon:

Use our commission in his utmost force.

Bast. Bell, book, and candle⁴ shall not drive me back;

When gold and silver beckons me to come on.

I leave your highness:—Grandam, I will pray
(If ever I remember to be holy)

For your fair safety: so I kiss your hand.

Eli. Farewell, my gentle cousin.

K. John. Coz, farewell. [Exit Bastard.]

Eli. Come hither, little kinsman; hark, a word.

[She takes ARTHUR aside.]

K. John. Come hither, Hubert. O my gentle
Hubert,

We owe thee much; within this wall of flesh

There is a soul counts thee her creditor,

And with advantage means to pay thy love:

And, my good friend, thy voluntary oath

Lives in this bosom, dearly cherished.

Give me thy hand. I had a thing to say,—

But I will fit it with some better time.

By heaven, Hubert, I am almost asham'd

To say what good respect I have of thee.

Hub. I am much bounden to your majesty.

K. John. Good friend, thou hast no cause to say so yet:

But thou shalt have; and creep time ne'er so slow,

Yet it shall come, for me to do thee good.

I had a thing to say,—But let it go:

The sun is in the heaven, and the proud day,

Attended with the pleasures of the world,

Is all too wanton, and too full of gawds,⁵

To give me audience:—If the midnight bell

Did, with his iron tongue and brazen mouth,

Sound one unto⁶ the drowsy race of night;

If this same were a churchyard where we stand,

And thou possessed with a thousand wrongs;

Or if that surly spirit, melancholy,

Had bak'd thy blood, and made it heavy, thick,

(Which, else, runs tickling up and down the veins,

Making that idiot, laughter, keep men's eyes,

And strain their cheeks to idle merriment,

A passion hateful to my purposes;)

Or if that thou could'st see me without eyes,

Hear me without thine ears, and make reply

Without a tongue, using conceit⁷ alone,

Without eyes, ears, and harmful sound of words;

Then, in despite of brooded⁸ watchful day,

I would into thy bosom pour my thoughts:

But ah, I will not:—Yet, I love thee well;

And, by my troth, I think, thou lov'st me well.

Hub. So well, that what you bid me undertake,

Though that my death were adjunct to my act,

By heaven, I'd do't.

1 There is a minute description of numerous devils or spirits, and their different functions, in Nash's Pierce Penniless his Supplication, 1592, where we find the following passage:—'The spirits of the aire will mixe themselves with thunder and lightning, and so infect the clyme where they raise any tempest, that suddenly great mortalitie shall ensue to the inhabitants. The spirits of fire have their mansions under the regions of the moone.'

2 Here the king, who had knighted him by the name of Sir Richard, calls him by his former name. Shakspeare has followed the old plays, and the best authenticated history. The queen mother, whom King John had made regent in Anjou, was in possession of the town of Mirabeau, in that province. On the approach of the French army, with Arthur at their head, she sent letters to King John to come to her relief, which he immediately did. As he advanced to the town he encountered the army that lay before it, routed them, and took Arthur prisoner. The queen in the mean while remained in perfect security in the castle of Mirabeau.

3 Gold coin of that name.

4 It appears from Johnson's Ecclesiastical Laws, that sentence of excommunication was to be 'explained in order in English, with bells tolling and candles lighted, that it may cause the greater dread; for laymen have greater regard to this solemnity than to the effect of such sentences.'

5 Showy ornaments.

6 The old copy reads into, the emendation is Theobald's.

7 Conception.

8 Pope proposed to read brood-eyed, instead of brooded. The alteration, it must be confessed, is elegant, but unnecessary. The allusion is to the vigilance of animals while brooding, or with a brood of young ones under their protection. Brooded may be used for brooding, as delighted for delighting, and discontented for discontenting, in other places of these plays. To sit on brood, or abroad, is the old term applied to birds during the period of incubation. All the metaphorical uses of the verb to brood are common to the Latin incubo.

K. John. Do not I know, thou would'st?
Good Hubert, Hubert, Hubert, throw thine eye
On you young boy: I'll tell thee what, my friend,
He is a very serpent in my way;
And, wheresoe'er this foot of mine doth tread,
He lies before me: Dost thou understand me?
Thou art his keeper.

Hub. And I will keep him so,
That he shall not offend your majesty.

K. John. Death.

Hub. My lord?

K. John. A grave.

Hub. He shall not live.

K. John. Enough.

I could be merry now: Hubert, I love thee;
Well, I'll not say what I intend for thee;
Remember.—Madam, fare you well:
I'll send those powers o'er to your majesty.

Elk. My blessing go with thee!

K. John. For England, cousin:
Hubert shall be your man, attend on you
With all true duty.—On toward Calais, ho!¹

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. The same. The French King's Tent.

Enter KING PHILIP, LEWIS, PANDULPH, and Attendants.

K. Phi. So, by a roaring tempest on the flood,
A whole armado² of convicted³ sail
Is scatter'd and disjoin'd from fellowship.

Pand. Courage and comfort! all shall yet go well.

K. Phi. What can go well, when we have run so ill?

Are we not beaten? Is not Angiers lost?
Arthur ta'en prisoner? divers dear friends slain?
And bloody England into England gone,
O'erbearing interruption, spite of France?

Lew. What he hath won, that hath he fortified:
So hot a speed with such advice dispos'd,
Such temperato order in so fierce a cause,⁴
Doth want example; Who hath read, or heard,
Of any kindred action like to this?

K. Phi. Well could I bear that England had this praise,

So we could find some pattern of our shame.

Enter CONSTANCE.

Look, who comes here! a grave unto a soul;
Holding the eternal spirit, against her will,
In the vile prison of afflicted breath:—⁵
I prythee, lady, go away with me.

Const. Lo, now! now see the issue of your peace!

K. Phi. Patience, good lady! comfort, gentle Constance!

Const. No, I defy⁶ all counsel, all redress,
But that which ends all counsel, true redress,
Death, death:—O amiable lovely death!
Thou odoriferous stench! sound rottenness!
Arise forth from the couch of lasting night,
Thou hate and terror to prosperity,
And I will kiss thy detestable bones;
And put my eyeballs in thy vaulty brows;
And ring these fingers with thy household worms;
And stop this gap of breath⁷ with fulsome dust,

And be a carrion monster like thyself:
Come, grin on me; and I will think thou smil'st.
And buss thee as thy wife! Misery's love,
O, come to me!

K. Phi. O fair affliction, peace.

Const. No, no, I will not, having breath to cry:—
O, that my tongue were in the thunder's mouth!
Then with a passion would I shake the world;
And rouse from sleep that fell anatomy,
Which cannot bear a lady's feeble voice,
Which scorns a modern⁸ invocation.

Pand. Lady, you utter madness, and not sorrow.

Const. Thou art not holy to belie me so;

I am not mad: this hair I tear is mine;

My name is Constance: I was Geoffrey's wife;

Young Arthur is my son, and he is lost:

I am not mad:—I would to heaven, I were!

For then, 'tis like I should forget myself:

O, if I could, what grief should I forget!—

Preach some philosophy to make me mad,

And thou shalt be canoniz'd, cardinal;

For, being not mad, but sensible of grief,

My reasonable part produces reason

How I may be deliver'd of these woes,

And teaches me to kill or hang myself;

If I were mad, I should forget my son;

Or madly think, a babe of clouts were he:

I am not mad; too well, too well I feel

The different plague of each calamity.

K. Phi. Bind up those tresses; O, what love I note

In the fair multitude of those her hairs!

Where but by chance a silver drop hath fallen,

Even to that drop ten thousand wiry friends

Do glew themselves in sociable grief;

Like true, inseparable, faithful loves,

Sticking together in calamity.

Const. To England, if you will.⁹

K. Phi. Bind up your hairs.

Const. Yes, that I will; and wherefore will I do it?

I tore them from their bonds; and cried aloud,

O that these hands could so redeem my son

As they have given these hairs their liberty!

But now I envy at their liberty,

And will again commit them to their bonds,

Because my poor child is a prisoner.—

And, father cardinal, I have heard you say,

That we shall see and know our friends in heaven:

If that be true, I shall see my boy again;

For, since the birth of Cain, the first male child,

To him that did but yesterday expire,¹⁰

There was not such a gracious¹¹ creature born,

But now will canker sorrow eat my bud,

And chase the native beauty from his cheek,

And he will look as hollow as a ghost;

As dim and meagre as an ague's fit;

And so he'll die; and, rising so again,

When I shall meet him in the court of heaven

I shall not know him: therefore never, never

Must I behold my pretty Arthur more.

Pand. You hold too heinous a respect of grief.

Const. He talks to me, that never had a son.¹²

K. Phi. You are as fond of grief, as of your child.

Const. Grief fills the room up of my absent child,¹³

5 '—the vile prison of afflicted breath' is the body; the same vile prison in which the breath is confined.

6 To defy formerly signified to refuse, to reject.

7 I do defy thy commiseration.—Romeo and Juliet.

8 I. e. common.

9 Probably Constance in despair means to apostrophize the absent King John:—'Take my son to England if you will.'

10 To expire Shakespeare uses for to breathe.

11 Gracious is used by Shakespeare often in the sense of beautiful, comely, graceful. Florio, in his Italian Dictionary, shows that this was no uncommon signification; he explains gratioso, graceful, gracious, also comely, fine, well-favoured, gentle.

12 To the same purpose Macduff observes:—

'He has no children.'

13 'Perfrukur lachrymis, et amat pro conjuge luctum.'

Lucan, l. ix.

1 King John, after he had taken Arthur prisoner, sent him to the town of Falaise, in Normandy, under the care of Hubert, his chamberlain, from whence he was afterwards removed to Rouen, and delivered to the custody of Robert de Veypont. Here he was secretly put to death. 'This is one of those scenes (says Steevens) to which may be promised a lasting commendation. Art could add little to its perfection; no change in dramatic taste can injure it; and time itself can subtract nothing from its beauties.'

2 Armado is a fleet of war; the word is adopted from the Spanish, and the recent defeat of the Spanish armada had made it familiar.

3 Convicted is vanquished, overcome. To convince and convict were synonymous.

4 A fierce cause is a cause conducted with precipitation. Fierce wretchedness in Timon of Athens is hastily, sudden misery.

Lies in his bed, walks up and down with me;
 Puts on his pretty looks, repeats his words,
 Remembers me of all his gracious parts,
 Stuffs out his vacant garments with his form;
 Then, have I reason to be fond of grief.
 Fare you well: had you such a loss as I,
 I could give better comfort than you do.—
 I will not keep this form upon my head,

[Tearing off her head-dress.]

When there is such disorder in my wit.
 O lord, my boy, my Arthur, my fair son!
 My life, my joy, my food, my all the world!
 My widow-comfort, and my sorrow's cure! [Exit.]
K. Phi. I fear some outrage, and I'll follow her. [Exit.]

Lew. There's nothing in this world can make me joy;

Life is as tedious as a twice-told tale,¹
 Vexing the dull ear of a drowsy man;
 And bitter shame hath spoil'd the sweet world's²
 taste,

That it yields nought, but shame, and bitterness.

Pand. Before the curing of a strong disease,
 Even in the instant of repair and health,
 The fit is strongest; evils, that take leave,
 On their departure most of all show evil:
 What have you lost by losing of this day?

Lew. All days of glory, joy, and happiness.

Pand. If you had won it, certainly, you had.
 No, no: when fortune means to men most good,
 She looks upon them with a threatening eye.
 'Tis strange, to think how much King John hath lost
 In this which he accounts so clearly won:

Are not you griev'd, that Arthur is his prisoner?

Lew. As heartily, as he is glad he hath him.

Pand. Your mind is all as youthful as your blood.

Now hear me speak, with a prophetic spirit;
 For even the breath of what I mean to speak
 Shall blow each dust, each straw, each little rub,
 Out of the path which shall directly lead
 Thy foot to England's throne; and, therefore, mark.
 John hath seiz'd Arthur; and it cannot be,
 That, whiles warm life plays in that infant's veins,
 The misplac'd John should entertain an hour,
 One minute, nay, one quiet breath of rest:
 A sceptre, snatch'd with an unruly hand,
 Must be as boisterously maintain'd as gain'd:
 And he, that stands upon a slippery place,
 Makes nice of no vile hold to stay him up:
 That John may stand, then Arthur needs must fall;
 So be it, for it cannot be but so.

Lew. But what shall I gain by young Arthur's fall?

Pand. You, in the right of Lady Blanch your wife,

May then make all the claim that Arthur did.

Lew. And lose it, life and all, as Arthur did.

Pand. How green are you, and fresh in this old world!

John lays you plots;³ the time conspires with you:

For he, that steeps his safety in true blood,

Shall find but bloody safety, and untrue.

This act, so evilly born, shall cool the hearts

Of all his people, and freeze up their zeal;

That none so small advantage shall step forth,

1 'For when thou art angry, all our days are gone, we bring our years to an end, as it were a tale that is told.' Psalm xc.

2 The old copy reads words. The alteration was made by Pope. Malone thinks that it is unnecessary; and that by the sweet word, life is meant. Steevens prefers Pope's emendation, which is countenanced by Hamlet's

'How weary, stale, flat, and unprofitable

Seem to me all the uses of this world!'

3 'John lays you plots.' A similar phrase occurs in the First Part of King Henry VI. —

'He writes me here.'

4 The old copy reads scope. The emendation is Pope's. Shakspeare finely calls a monstrous birth an escape of nature, as if it were produced while she was busy elsewhere, or intent upon some other thing.

5 Hurly is tumult.

6 The image is taken from the manner in which birds

To check his reign, but they will cherish it:

No natural exhalation in the sky,

No scape⁴ of nature, no distemper'd day,

No common wind, no custom'd event,

But they will pluck away his natural cause,

And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs,

Abortives, presages, and tongues of heaven,

Plainly denouncing vengeance upon John.

Lew. May be, he will not touch young Arthur's life,

But hold himself safe in his prisonment.

Pand. O, sir, when he shall hear of your approach,

If that young Arthur be not gone already,

Even at that news he dies: and then the hearts

Of all his people shall revolt from him,

And kiss the lips of unacquainted change;

And pick strong matter of revolt, and wrath,

Out of the bloody fingers' ends of John.

Methinks, I see this hurly⁵ all on foot;

And, O, what better-matter breeds for you,

Than I have nam'd!—The bastard Faulconbridge

Is now in England, ransacking the church,

Offending charity: If but a dozen French

Were there in arms, they would be as a call⁶

To train ten thousand English to their side;

Or, as a little snow,⁷ tumbled about,

Anon becomes a mountain. O noble Dauphin,

Go with me to the king: 'Tis wonderful,

What may be wrought out of their discontent:

Now that their souls are topfull of offence,

For England go; I will whet on the king.

Lew. Strong reasons make strong⁸ actions: Let us go;

If you say, ay, the king will not say, no. [Exeunt]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. Northampton.⁹ A Room in the Castle,
Enter HUBERT and two Attendants.

Hub. Heat me these irons hot: and, look thou stand

Within the arras:¹⁰ when I strike my foot

Upon the bosom of the ground, rush forth!

And bind the boy, which you shall find with me,

Fast to the chair: be heedful: hence, and watch.

1 Attendant. I hope, your warrant will bear out the deed.

Hub. Uncleanly scruples! Fear not you: look to't.— [Exeunt Attendants.]

Young lad, come forth; I have to say with you.

Enter ARTHUR.

Arth. Good morrow, Hubert.

Hub. Good morrow, little prince.

Arth. As little prince (having so great a title

To be more prince,) as may be.—You are sad.

Hub. Indeed, I have been merrier.

Arth. Mercy on me!

Methinks nobody should be sad but I:

Yet, I remember, when I was in France,

Young gentlemen would be as sad as night,

Only for wantonness.¹¹ By my christendom,¹² are sometimes caught; one being placed for the purpose of drawing others to the net by his note or call.

7 Bacon, in his History of Henry VII. speaking of Simnel's march, observes that their snowball did not gather as it went.

8 The first folio reads strange; the second folio strong.

9 There is no circumstance, either in the original play or in this of Shakspeare, to point out the particular castle in which Arthur is supposed to be confined. The castle of Northampton has been mentioned merely because, in the first act, King John seems to have been in that town. It has already been stated that Arthur was in fact confined at Falaise, and afterwards at Rouen, where he was put to death.

10 Tapestry.

11 This is a satirical glance at the fashionable affectation of his time by Shakspeare: which Lyly also ridicules in his Midas:—'Now every base companion, being in his muble-fables, says he is melancholy.' Again: 'Melancholy is the crest of courtiers, and now every base companion says he is melancholy.'

12 i. e. by my baptism. The use of this word for

So I were out of prison, and kept sheep,
I should be as merry as the day is long;
And so I would be here, but that I doubt
My uncle practises more harm to me:
He is afraid of me, and I of him:

Is it my fault that I was Geoffrey's son?
No, indeed, 'tis not; And I would to heaven,
I were your son, so you would love me, Hubert.

Hub. If I talk to him, with his innocent prate
He will awake my mercy, which lies dead:
Therefore I will be sudden, and despatch. [Aside.]

Arth. Are you sick, Hubert? you look pale to-day:
In sooth, I would you were a little sick;
That I might sit all night, and watch with you:
I warrant, I love you more than you do me.

Hub. His words do take possession of my bosom.—

Read here, young Arthur. [Showing a paper.]
How now, foolish rheum! [Aside.]

Turning spiteous torture out of door!
I must be brief, lest resolution drop
Out at mine eyes, in tender womanish tears.—
Can you not read it? is it not fair writ?

Arth. Too fairly, Hubert, for so foul effect:
Must you with hot irons burn out both mine eyes?
Hub. Young boy, I must.

Arth. And will you?

Hub. And I will.

Arth. Have you the heart? When your head did but ache,

I knit my handkerchief about your brows
(The best I had, a princess wrought it me,)
And I did never ask it you again:
And with my hand at midnight held your head;
And, like the watchful minutes to the hour,
Still and anon cheer'd up the heavy time;
Saying, What lack you? and, Where lies your
grief?

Or, What good love may I perform for you?
Many a poor man's son would have lain still,
And ne'er have spoke a loving word to you;
But you at your sick service had a prince.
Nay, you may think my love was crafty love,
And call it cunning; Do, an if you will:
If heaven be pleas'd that you must use me ill,
Why, then you must.—Will you put out mine eyes?
These eyes, that never did, nor never shall,
So much as frown on you?

Hub. I have sworn to do it;
And with hot irons must I burn them out.

Arth. Ah, none, but in this iron age, would do it!
The iron of itself, though heat' red-hot,
Approaching near these eyes, would drink my tears,
And quench his fiery indignation
Even in the matter of mine innocence:
Nay, after that, consume away in rust,
But for containing fire to harm mine eye.
Are you more stubborn-hard than hammer'd iron?
An if an angel should have come to me,
And told me, Hubert should put out mine eyes,
I would not have believ'd him; no tongue, but Hubert's.

Hub. Come forth. [Stamps.]

Re-enter Attendants, with Cords, Irons, &c.

Do as I bid you do.

Arth. O, save me, Hubert, save me; my eyes are out,

Even with the fierce looks of these bloody men.

Hub. Give me the iron I say, and bind him here.
Arth. Alas! what need you be so boist'rousrough?

I will not struggle, I will stand stone-still.
For heaven's sake, Hubert, let me not be bound!
Nay, hear me, Hubert! drive these men away, christening or baptism is not peculiar to Shakespeare; it was common in his time. Hearne has published a Pronome from a MS. of Henry the Seventh's time, in the glossary to Robert of Gloucester in a note on the word midwinter, by which it appears that it was the ancient orthography. The childer ryzt schape & chrystyn-dome. It is also used by Lyly, Fanshawe, Harington, and Fairfax.

And I will sit as quiet as a lamb:

I will not stir, nor wince, nor speak a word;
Nor look upon the iron angrily:
Thrust but these men away, and I'll forgive you,
Whatever torment you do put me to.

Hub. Go, stand within; let me alone with him.
I Attendant. I am best pleas'd to be from such a deed. [Exeunt Attendants.]

Arth. Alas! I then have chid away my friend;
He hath a stern look, but a gentle heart;—
Let him come back, that his compassion may Give life to yours.

Hub. Come, boy, prepare yourself.

Arth. Is there no remedy?

Hub. None, but to lose your eyes.

Arth. O heaven!—that there were but a mote in yours,

A grain, a dust, a gnat, a wand'ring hair,
Any annoyance in that precious sense!
Then, feeling what small things are boist'rous there,
Your vile intent must needs seem horrible.

Hub. Is this your promise? go to, hold your tongue.

Arth. Hubert, the utterance of a brace of tongues
Must needs want pleading for a pair of eyes;
Let me not hold my tongue; let me not, Hubert!
Or, Hubert, if you will, cut out my tongue,²
So I may keep mine eyes: O, spare mine eyes,
Though to no use, but still to look on you!
Lo, by my troth, the instrument is cold,
And would not harm me.

Hub. I can heat it, boy.

Arth. No, in good sooth; the fire is dead with grief,

Being create for comfort, to be us'd
In undeserv'd extremes:³ See else yourself;
There is no malice in this burning coal;
The breath of heaven hath blown his spirit out,
And strew'd repentant ashes on his head.

Hub. But with my breath I can revive it, boy.

Arth. And if you do, you will but make it bluish,
And glow with shame of your proceedings, Hubert:
Nay, it, perchance, will sparkle in your eyes;
And, like a dog that is compell'd to fight,
Snatch at his master that doth tarre⁴ him on.
All things, that you should use to do me wrong,
Deny their office: only you do lack
That mercy, which fierce fire, and iron, extends,
Creatures of note for mercy-lacking uses.

Hub. Well, see to live; I will not touch thine eyes
For all the treasure that thine uncle owes:⁵
Yet am I sworn, and I did purpose, boy,
With this same very iron to burn them out.

Arth. O, now you look like Hubert! all this while
You were disguis'd.

Hub. Peace: no more. Adieu:
Your uncle must not know but you are dead:
I'll fill these dogged spies with false reports.

And, pretty child, sleep doubtless, and secure,
That Hubert, for the wealth of all the world,
Will not offend thee.

Arth. O heaven!—I thank you, Hubert.
Hub. Silence; no more: Go closely⁶ in with me;
Much danger do I undergo for thee. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The same. A Room of State in the Palace. Enter KING JOHN, crowned; PEMBROKE, SALISBURY, and other Lords. The King takes his State.

K. John. Here once again we sit, once again
crown'd,
And look'd upon, I hope, with cheerful eyes.

1 The participle heat, though now obsolete, was in use in Shakespeare's time. 'He commanded that they should heat the furnace one seven times more than it was wont to be heat.'—Daniel, iii. 19.

2 'This is according to nature,' says Johnson. 'We imagine no evil so great as that which is near us.'

3 'The fire being created, not to hurt, but to comfort, is dead with grief for finding itself used in acts of cruelty, which, being innocent, I have not deserved.'

4 i. e. stimulate. set him on.

5 Owns.

6 i. e. secretly, privately.

Pem. This once again, but that your highness pleas'd,

Was once superfluous :¹ you were crown'd before,
And that high royalty was ne'er pluck'd off ;
The faiths of men ne'er stained with revolt ;
Fresh expectation troubled not the land,
With any long'd-for change, or better state.

Sal. Therefore, to be possess'd with double pomp,
To guard² a title that was rich before,
To gild refined gold, to paint the lily,
To throw a perfume on the violet,
To smooth the ice, or add another hue
Unto the rainbow, or with taper-light
To seek the beautiful eye of heaven to garnish,
Is wasteful, and ridiculous excess.

Pem. But that your royal pleasure must be done,
This act is as an ancient tale new told ;³
And, in the last repeating, troublesome,
Being urged at a time unseasonable.

Sal. In this, the antique and well-noted face
Of plain old form is much disfigured :
And, like a shifted wind unto a sail,
It makes the course of thoughts to fetch about :
Startles and frights consideration ;
Makes sound opinion sick, and truth suspected,
For putting on so new a fashion'd robe.

Pem. When workmen strive to do better than well,

They do confound their skill in covetousness :⁴
And, oftentimes, excusing of a fault,
Doth make the fault the worse by the excuse ;
As patches, set upon a little breach,
Discredit more in hiding of the fault,⁵
Than did the fault before it was so patch'd.

Sal. To this effect, before you were new-crown'd,
We breath'd our counsel : but it pleas'd your highness

To overbear it ; and we are all well pleas'd ;
Since all and every part of what we would,⁶
Doth make a stand at what your highness will.

K. John. Some reasons of this double coronation
I have possess'd you with, and think them strong ;
And more, more strong (when lesser is my fear,)
I shall induce you with : Mean time, but ask
What you would have reform'd, that is not well ;
And well shall you perceive, how willingly
I will both hear and grant you your requests.

Pem. Then I (as one that am the tongue of these,
To sound⁷ the purposes of all their hearts,)
Both for myself and them (but, chief of all,
Your safety, for the which myself and them
Bend their best studies), heartily request
The enfranchisement⁸ of Arthur ; whose restraint
Doth move the murmuring lips of discontent
To break into this dangerous argument,—
If, what in rest you have, in right you hold,
Why then your fears (which, as they say, attend
The steps of wrong), should move you to mew up⁹
Your tender kinsman, and to choke his days
With barbarous ignorance, and deny his youth
The rich advantage of good exercise ?¹⁰
That the time's enemies may not have this
To grace occasions, let it be our suit,
That you have bid us ask his liberty ;
Which for our goods we do no further ask,

1 i. e. this one time more, was one time more than enough. It should be remembered that King John was now crowned for the fourth time.

2 To guard is to ornament.

3 Shakespeare has here repeated an idea which he had first put into the mouth of the Dauphin ;—

'Life is as tedious as a twice-told tale,
Vexing the dull ear of a drowsy man.'

4 i. e. not by their avarice, but in an eager desire of excelling.

5 Fault means blemish.

6 Since the whole and each particular part of our wishes, &c.

7 To declare, to publish the purposes of all, &c

8 Releasement.

9 The construction of this passage is 'If you have a good title to what you have now in rest (i. e. quiet), why then is it that your fears should move you ?' &c.

Than whereupon our weal, on you depending,
Counts it your weal, he have his liberty.

K. John. Let it be so ; I do commit his youth

Enter HUBERT.

To your direction.—Hubert, what news with you ?

Pem. This is the man should do the bloody deed ;
He show'd his warrant to a friend of mine :

The image of a wicked heinous fault
Lives in his eye, that close aspect of his
Does show the mood of a much troubled breast ;
And I do fearfully believe, 'tis done,
What we so fear'd he had a charge to do.

Sal. The colour of the king doth come and go,
Between his purpose and his conscience,¹¹
Like heralds 'twixt two dreadful battles set :
His passion is so ripe it needs must break.

Pem. And when it breaks, I fear, will issue thence
The foul corruption of a sweet child's death.

K. John. We cannot hold mortality's strong hand :—

Good lords, although my will to give is living,
The suit which you demand is gone and dead :
He tells us, Arthur is deceas'd to-night.

Sal. Indeed, we fear'd his sickness was past cure.

Pem. Indeed, we heard how near his death he was,
Before the child himself felt he was sick :
This must be answer'd, either here, or hence.

K. John. Why do you bend such solemn brows on me ?

Think you, I bear the shears of destiny ?
Have I commandment on the pulse of life ?

Sal. It is apparent foul-play ; and 'tis shame,
That greatness should so grossly offer it :
So thrive it in your game ! and so farewell.

Pem. Stay yet, Lord Salisbury ; I'll go with thee,
And find the inheritance of this poor child,
His little kingdom of a forced grave.

That blood, which ow'd¹² the breadth of all this isle,
Three foot of it doth hold ; Bad world the while !
This must not be thus borne : this will break out
To all our sorrows, and ere long, I doubt.

[Exeunt Lords.]

K. John. They burn in indignation ; I repent ;
There is no sure foundation set on blood ;
No certain life achiev'd by others' death —

Enter a Messenger.

A fearful eye thou hast ; Where is that blood,
That I have seen inhabit in those cheeks ?
So foul a sky clears not without a storm :
Pour down thy weather :—How goes all in France ?

Mess. From France to England.¹³—Never such a power

For any foreign preparation,
Was levied in the body of a land !
The copy of your speed is learn'd by them ;
For, when you should be told they do prepare,
The tidings come that they are all arriv'd.

K. John. O, where hath our intelligence been drunk ?

Where hath it slept ?¹⁴ Where is my mother's care ?
That such an army could be drawn in France,
And she not hear of it ?

Mess. My liege, her ear
Is stopp'd with dust ; the first of April, died

10 In the middle ages, the whole education of princes and noble youths consisted in martial exercises, &c. Mental improvement might have been had in a prison as well as any where else.

11 The purpose of the king, to which Salisbury alludes, is that of putting Arthur to death, which he considers as not yet accomplished, and therefore supposes that there might be still a conflict in the king's mind.—

'Between his purpose and his conscience.'

12 i. e. 'ow'd the breadth of all this isle.' The two last variorum editions erroneously read 'breath for breadth,' which is found in the old copy.

13 The king asks how all goes in France ; the messenger catches the word goes, and answers, that whatever is in France goes now into England.

14 So in Macbeth :—

'—Was the hope drunk
Wherein you drest yourself? hath it slept since ?'

Your noble mother ; And, as I hear, my lord,
The Lady Constance in a frenzy died
Three days before : but this from rumour's tongue
I idly heard ; if true, or false, I know not.

K. John. Withhold thy speed, dreadful occasion !
O, make a league with me, till I have pleas'd
My discontented peers !—What ! mother dead ?
How wildly then walks my estate in France !—
Under whose conduct came those powers of France,
That thou for truth giv'st out, are landed here ?
Mess. Under the Dauphin.

Enter the Bastard and PETER of POMFRET.

K. John. Thou hast made me giddy
With these ill tidings.—Now, what says the world
To your proceedings ? do not seek to stuff
My head with more ill news, for it is full.

Bast. But if you be afraid to hear the worst,
Then let the worst, unheard, fall on your head.

K. John. Bear with me, cousin ; for I was amaz'd¹

Under the tide ; but now I breathe again
Aloft the flood ; and can give audience
To any tongue, speak it of what it will.

Bast. How I have sped among the clergymen,
The sums I have collected shall express.
But, as I travelled hither through the land,
I find the people strangely fantasied ;
Possess'd with rumours, full of idle dreams ;
Not knowing what they fear, but full of fear :
And here's a prophet,² that I brought with me
From forth the streets of Pomfret, whom I found
With many hundreds treading on his heels ;
To whom he sung, in rude harsh sounding rhymes,
That, ere the next Ascension-day at noon,
Your highness should deliver up your crown.

K. John. Thou idle dreamer, wherefore didst thou so ?

Peter. Foreknowing that the truth will fall out so.

K. John. Hubert, away with him ; imprison him ;
And on that day at noon, whereon, he says,
I shall yield up my crown, let him be hang'd :
Deliver him to safety,³ and return,
For I must use thee.—O my gentle cousin,

[Exit HUBERT, with PETER.]

Hear'st thou the news abroad, who are arriv'd ?
Bast. The French, my lord ; men's mouths are full of it :

Besides, I met Lord Bigot, and Lord Salisbury
(With eyes as red as new-enkindled fire),
And others more, going to seek the grave
Of Arthur, who, they say, is kill'd to-night
On your suggestion.

K. John. Gentle kinsman, go,
And thrust thyself into their companies :
I have a way to win their loves again ;
Bring them before me.

Bast. I will seek them out.

K. John. Nay, but make haste ; the better foot before.—

O, let me have no subject enemies,
When adverse foreigners affright my towns
With dreadful pomp of stout invasion !—
Be Mercury, set feathers to thy heels ;
And fly, like thought, from them to me again.

Bast. The spirit of the time shall teach me speed.
[Exit.]

1 i. e. how ill my affairs go in France.

2 Astonied, stunned, confounded, are the ancient synonyms of amazed, obstupefiesco.

3 This man was a hermit in great repute with the common people. Notwithstanding the event is said to have fallen out as he prophesied, the poor fellow was inhumanly dragged at horses' tails through the streets of Warham, and, together with his son, who appears to have been even more innocent than his father, hanged afterwards upon a gibbet. Holinshed, in anno 1213.—
Speed says that Peter the hermit was snubbed by the pope's legate, the French king, and the barons for this purpose.

4 i. e. to safe custody.

5 This may be compared with a spirited passage in Edward III. Capel's Provisions, p. 75:—

'Our men, with open mouths and staring eyes,
Look on each other, as they did attend.

K. John. Spoke like a spritful noble gentleman.—

Go after him ; for he, perhaps, shall need
Some messenger betwixt me and the peers ;
And be thou he.

Mess. With all my heart, my liege.
[Exit.]

K. John. My mother dead !

Re-enter HUBERT.

Hub. My lord, they say, five moons were seen to-night :

Four fixed ; and the fifth did whirl about

The other four, in wondrous manner.

K. John. Five moons ?

Hub. Old men, and beldams, in the streets
Do prophesy upon it dangerously :

Young Arthur's death is common in their mouths ;
And when they talk of him, they shake their heads,
And whisper one another in the ear ;

And he, that speaks, doth gripe the hearer's wrist ;
Whilst he, that hears, makes fearful action,
With wrinkled brows, with nods, with rolling eyes,⁴

I saw a smith stand with his hammer thus,
The whilst his iron did on the anvil cool,
With open mouth swallowing a tailor's news ;

Who, with his shears and measure in his hand,
Standing on slippers (which his nimble haste
Had falsely thrust upon contrary feet),⁵

Told of a thousand warlike French,
That were embattailed and rank'd in Kent:
Another lean unwash'd artificer

Cuts off his tale, and talks of Arthur's death.

K. John. Why seek'st thou to possess me with these fears ?

Why urgest thou so oft young Arthur's death ?
Thy hand hath murder'd him ; I had a mighty cause
To wish him dead, but thou hadst none to kill him.

Hub. Had none, my lord ! why, did you not provoke me ?

K. John. It is the curse of kings to be attended
By slaves, that take their humours for a warrant
To break within the bloody house of life :

And, on the winking of authority,
To understand a law ; to know the meaning
Of dangerous majesty, when, perchance, it frowns
More upon humour than advis'd respect.⁶

Hub. Here is your hand and seal for what I did.

K. John. O, when the last account 'twixt heaven and earth

Is to be made, then shall this hand and seal
Witness against us to damnation !

How oft the sight of means to do ill deeds,
Make deeds ill done ! Hadest not thou been by,

A fellow by the hand of nature mark'd,
Quoted,⁷ and sign'd, to do a deed of shame,

This murder had not come into my mind :

But, taking note of thy abhor'd aspect,
Finding thee fit for bloody villany,

Apt, liable, to be employ'd in danger,
I faintly broke with thee of Arthur's death ;

And thou, to be endeared to a king,
Made it no conscience to destroy a prince.

Hub. My lord,—

K. John. Hadst thou but shook thy head, or made a pause,⁸

Each other's words, and yet no creature speaks ;
A tongue-tied fear hath made a midnight hour,
And speeches sleep through all the waking region.⁹

6 This passage, which called forth the antiquarian knowledge of so many learned commentators, is now, from the return of the fashion of right and left shoes, become intelligible without a note.

7 Deliberate consideration.

8 To quote is to note or mark.

9 There are many touches of nature in this conference of John with Hubert. A man engaged in wickedness would keep the profit to himself, and transfer the guilt to his accomplice. These reproaches vented against Hubert are not words of art or policy, but the eruptions of a mind swelling with consciousness of a crime, and desirous of discharging its misery on another. This account of the timidity of guilt is drawn, ab ipsa recessibus mentis, from the intimate knowledge of mankind ;
particularly that line in which he says, that to have bid

When I spake darkly what I purposed;
Or turn'd an eye of doubt upon my face,
And bid me tell my tale in express words;
Deep shame had struck me dumb, made me break off,
And those thy fears might have wrought fears in me:
But thou didst understand me by my signs,
And didst in signs again parley with sin;
Yea, without stop, didst let thy heart consent,
And, consequently, thy rude hand to act
The deed, which both our tongues held vile to name.—

Out of my sight, and never see me more!
My nobles leave me; and my state is brav'd,
Even at my gates, with ranks of foreign powers;
Nay, in the body of this fleshly land,
This kingdom, this confine of blood and breath,
Hostility and civil tumult reigns
Between my conscience, and my cousin's death.

Hub. Arm you against your other enemies,
I'll make a peace between your soul and you.
Young Arthur is alive: This hand of mine
Is yet a maiden and an innocent hand,
Not painted with the crimson spots of blood.
Within this bosom never enter'd yet
The dreadful motion of a murder's thought,
And you have slander'd nature in my form;
Which, howsoever rude exteriorly,
Is yet the cover of a fairer mind
Than to be butcher of an innocent child.

K. John. Doth Arthur live? O, haste thee to the peers,

Throw this report on their incensed rage,
And make them tame to their obedience!
Forgive the comment that my passion made
Upon thy feature; for my rage was blind,
And foul imaginary eyes of blood
Presented thee more hideous than thou art.
O, answer not; but to my closet bring
The angry lords, with all expedient haste:
I conjure thee but slowly; run more fast.³

SCENE III. The same. Before the Castle. Enter ARTHUR, on the Walls.

Arth. The wall is high; and yet will I leap down!⁴

Good ground, be pitiful, and hurt me not!—
There's few, or none, do know me; if they did,
This ship-boy's semblance hath disguis'd me quite.
I am afraid; and yet I'll venture it.
If I get down, and do not break my limbs,
I'll find a thousand shifts to get away:
As good to die, and go, as die, and stay.

[Leaps down.

O me! my uncle's spirit is in these stones—
Heaven take my soul, and England keep my bones!

[Dies.

Enter PEMBROKE, SALISBURY, and BIGOT.

Sal. Lords, I will meet him at Saint Edmund's Bury;

It is our safety, and we must embrace

This gentle offer of the perilous time.

Pem. Who brought that letter from the cardinal?

him tell his tale in express words would have struck him dumb: nothing is more certain than that bad men use all the arts of fallacy upon themselves, palliate their actions to their own minds by gentle terms, and hide themselves from their own detection in ambiguities and subtleties.—Johnson.

1 The old copy reads 'As bid me,' &c. Malone made the correction, in which I concur; though as frequently is used for that, which. See Julius Cæsar, Act. i. Sc. 2.

2 Expeditious.

3 The old play of The Troublesome Raigne of King John is divided into two parts; the first of which concludes with the king's despatch of Hubert on this message; the second begins with Enter Arthur, &c. as in the following scene.

4 Shakspeare has followed the old play. In what manner Arthur was deprived of his life is not ascertained. Matthew Paris relating the event, uses the word evanuit; and it appears to have been conducted with impenetrable secrecy. The French historians say that

Sal. The Count Melun, a noble lord of France, Whose private with me,⁵ of the Dauphin's love, Is much more general than these lines import.

Big. To-morrow morning let us meet him then.
Sal. Or, rather then set forward: for 'twill be Two long days' journey, lords, or e'er⁶ we meet.

Enter the Bastard.

Bast. Once more to-day well met, distemper'd lords!

The king, by me, requests your presence straight.

Sal. The king hath disposess'd himself of us; We will not line his thin bestained cloak With our pure honours, nor attend the foot That leaves the print of blood where'er it walks: Return, and tell him so; we know the worst.

Bast. Whate'er you think, good words, I think were best.

Sal. Our griefs, and not our manners, reason⁸ now.

Bast. But there is little reason in your grief;

Therefore, 'twere reason, you had manners now.

Pem. Sir, sir, impatience hath its privilege.

Bast. 'Tis true: to hurt his master, no man else.

Sal. This is the prison: What is he lies here?

[Seeing ARTHUR

Pem. O death, made proud with pure and princely beauty!

The earth had not a hole to hide this deed.

Sal. Murder, as hating what himself hath done, Doth lay it open, to urge on revenge.

Big. Or, when he doom'd this beauty to a grave, Found it too precious-princely for a grave.

Sal. Sir Richard, what think you? Have you beheld,

Or have you read, or heard? or could you think?

Or do you almost think, although you see, That you do see? could thought, without this object,

Form such another? This is the very top, The height, the crest, or crest unto the crest, Of murder's arms: this is the bloodiest shame, The wildest savagry, the vilest stroke, That ever wall-ey'd wrath, or staring rage, Presented to the tears of soft remorse.⁹

Pem. All murders past do stand excus'd in this: And this, so sole, and so unmatchable, Shall give a holiness, a purity, To the yet unbegotten sins of time,¹⁰ And prove a deadly bloodshed but a jest, Exemplary by this heinous spectacle.

Bast. It is a damned and a bloody work; The graceless action of a heavy hand, If that it be the work of any hand.

Sal. If that it be the work of any hand?—

We had a kind of light, what would ensue:

It is the shameful work of Hubert's hand;

The practice, and the purpose, of the king:—

From whose obedience I forbid my soul,

Kneeling before this ruin of sweet life,

And breathing to his breathless excellence

The incense of a vow, a holy vow;

Never to taste the pleasures of the world,

Never to be infected with delight,

Nor conversant with ease and idleness,

John, coming in a boat during the night to the castle of Rouen, where the young prince was confined, stabbed him while supplicating for mercy, fastened a stone to the body, and threw it into the Seine, in order to give some colour to a report, which he caused to be spread, that the prince, attempting to escape out of a window, fell into the river, and was drowned.

5 Private account.

6 The use of or for ere, before, is at least as old as Chaucer's time. Ere ever, or ever, or ere, is, in modern English, sooner than at any time; before ever: and this is the sense in which Shakspeare and our elder writers constantly use the phrase.

7 i. e. ruffled, out of humour.

8 To reason, in Shakspeare, is not so often to argue as to talk.

9 Pity.

10 The old copy reads sin of times. The emendation is Pope's.

'Till I have set a glory to this head,¹
By giving it the worship of revenge.

Pem. Big. Our souls religiously confirm thy words.

Enter HUBERT.

Hub. Lords, I am hot with haste in seeking you:
Arthur doth live; the king hath sent for you.

Sal. O, he is bold, and blushes not at death:—
Avant, thou hateful villain, get thee gone!

Hub. I am no villain.

Sal. Must I rob the law?

[Drawing his sword.]

Bast. Your sword is bright, sir; put it up again.²

Sal. Not till I sheath it in a murderer's skin.

Hub. Stand back, Lord Salisbury, stand back, I say;

By heaven, I think my sword's as sharp as yours:
I would not have you, lord, forget yourself,
Nor tempt the danger of my true³ defence;
Lest I, by marking of your rage, forget
Your worth, your greatness, and nobility.

Big. Out, dunghill! dar'st thou brave a nobleman?

Hub. Not for my life: but yet I dare defend
My innocent life against an emperor.

Sal. Thou art a murderer.

Hub. Do not prove me so;⁴
Yet I am none: Whose tongue soe'er speaks false,
Not truly speaks; who speaks not truly, lies.

Pem. Cut him to pieces.

Bast. Keep the peace, I say.

Sal. Stand by, or I shall gall you, Faulconbridge.

Bast. Thou wert better gall the devil, Salisbury:
If thou but frown on me, or stir thy foot,
Or teach thy hasty spleen to do me shame,
I'll strike thee dead. Put up thy sword betime;
Or I'll so maul you and your toasting-iron,
That you shall think the devil is come from hell.

Big. What wilt thou do, renowned Faulconbridge?

Second a villain, and a murderer?

Hub. Lord Bigot, I am none.

Big. Who kill'd this prince?

Hub. 'Tis not an hour since I left him well:
I honour'd him, I lov'd him; and will weep
My date of life out, for his sweet life's loss.

Sal. Trust not those cunning waters of his eyes,
For villany is not without such rheum;
And he, long traded in it, makes it seem
Like rivers of remorse⁵ and innocence.
Away, with me, all you, whose souls abhor
The uncleanly savours of a slaughter-house,
For I am stifled with this smell of sin.

Big. Away, toward Bury, to the Dauphin there!

Pem. There, tell the king, he may inquire us out.
[Exeunt Lords.]

Bast. Here's a good world!—Knew you of this fair work?

Beyond the infinite and boundless reach
Of mercy, if thou didst this deed of death,
Art thou damn'd, Hubert.

Hub. Do but hear me, sir.

Bast. Ha! I'll tell thee what;

Thou art damn'd as black—nay, nothing is so black;
Thou art more deep damn'd than prince Lucifer:⁶
There is not yet so ugly a fiend of hell
As thou shalt be, if thou didst kill this child.

Hub. Upon my soul,——

Bast. If thou didst but consent

To this most cruel act, do but despair,
And, if thou want'st a cord, the smallest thread
That ever spider twisted from her womb,
Will serve to strangle thee; a rush will be
A beam to hang thee on; or would'st thou drown
thyself,

Put but a little water in a spoon,

And it shall be as all the ocean,

Enough to stifle such a villain up.——

I do suspect thee very grievously.

Hub. If I in act, consent, or sin of thought
Be guilty of the stealing that sweet breath
Which was embowd in this beautiful clay,
Let hell want pains enough to torture me!
I left him well.

Bast. Go, bear him in thine arms.—

I am amaz'd,⁷ methinks; and lose my way

Among the thorns and dangers of this world.—

How easy dost thou take all England up!

From forth this morsel of dead royalty,

The life, the right, and truth of all this realm

Is fled to heaven: and England now is left

To tug and scramble, and to part by the teeth

The unwoven interest⁸ of proud-swelling state.

Now, for the bare-pick'd bone of majesty,

Doth dogged war bristle his angry crest,

And snarl in the gentle eyes of peace:

Now powers from home, and discontents at home,

Meet in one line; and vast confusion waits

(As doth a raven on a sick-fall'n beast.)

The imminent decay of wrested pomp.

Now happy he, whose cloak and cincture⁹ can

Hold out this tempest. Bear away that child,

And follow me with speed; I'll to the king:

A thousand businesses are brief in hand,

And heaven itself doth frown upon the land.

[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I. The same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter KING JOHN, PANDULF, with the Crown, and Attendants.

K. John. Thus have I yielded up into your hand
The circle of my glory.

Pand.

Take again

[Giving JOHN the Crown.]

From this my hand, as holding of the pope,
Your sovereign greatness and authority.

K. John. Now keep your holy word: go meet the French;

And from his holiness use all your power

To stop their marches, 'fore we are inflam'd.

Our discontented counties¹⁰ do revolt;

Our people quarrel with obedience;

Swearing allegiance, and the love of soul,

To stranger blood, to foreign royalty.

this passage, which he explains—'Do not make me a murderer, by compelling me to kill you; I am hitherto not a murderer.' By 'Do not prove me so,' Hubert means 'do not provoke me, or try my patience so.' This was a common acceptance of the word. 'To assay, to prove, to try, to tempt one to do evil.' Bart. in v. Prove.

5 Pity.

6 So in the old play:—

'Hell, Hubert, trust me, all the plagues of hell

Hangs on performance of this damned deed;

This seal, the warrant of the body's bliss,

Ensareth Satan chieftain of thy soul.'

7 I. e. confounded.

8 I. e. the interest which is not at this moment legally possessed by any one. On the death of Arthur, the right to the crown devolved to his sister Eleanor.

9 Girdle.

10 Counties here most probably mean, not the divisions of the kingdom, but the lords and nobility in general.

1 The old copy reads, "'Till I have set a glory to this hand.' This is a copy of the vows made in the ages of superstition and chivalry. Pope thought that we should read 'a glory to this head,' pointing to the head of the dead prince, and using worship in its common acceptance. A glory is a circle of rays, such as is represented surrounding the heads of saints and other holy persons. The solemn confirmation of the other lords seems to require this sense. Gray, the poet (says Dr. Farmer,) was much pleased with this correction. The old reading has been explained, 'till I have famed and renowned my own hand by giving it the honour of revenge for so foul a deed.'

2 So in Othello—'Keep up your bright swords; for the dew will rust them.' Both Faulconbridge and Othello speak contemptuously. 'You have shown that your sword is bright, and now you may put it up again; you shall not use it.'

3 Honest defence, defence in a good cause.

4 Dr. Johnson has, I think, mistaken the sense of

This inundation of mistemper'd humour
Rests by you only to be qualified.
Then pause not ; for the present time's so sick,
That present medicine must be minister'd,
Or overthrow incurable ensues.

Pand. It was my breath that blew this tempest up,
Upon your stubborn usage of the pope :
But, since you are a gentle convertite,¹
My tongue shall hush again this storm of war,
And make fair weather in your blustering land.
On this Ascension-day, remember well,
Upon your oath of service to the pope,
Go I to make the French lay down their arms.

[Exit.

K. John. Is this Ascension-day ? Did not the prophet

Say, that, before Ascension-day at noon,
My crown I should give off ? Even so I have :
I did suppose, it should be on constraint ;
But, heaven be thank'd, it is but voluntary.

Enter the Bastard.

Bast. All Kent hath yielded ; nothing there holds out,

But Dover castle : London hath receiv'd,
Like a kind host, the Dauphin and his powers :
Your nobles will not hear you, but are gone
To offer service to your enemy ;
And wild amazement hurries up and down
The little number of your doubtful friends.

K. John. Would not my lords return to me again,
After they heard young Arthur was alive ?

Bast. They found him dead, and cast into the streets ;

An empty casket, where the jewel of life,²
By some damn'd hand was robb'd and ta'en away.

K. John. That villain Hubert told me, he did live.

Bast. So, on my soul, he did, for aught he knew.
But wherefore do you droop ? why look you sad ?

Be great in act, as you have been in thought ;
Let not the world see fear, and sad distrust,
Govern the motion of a kingly eye :
Be stirring as the time ; be fire with fire ;
Threaten the threat'ner, and outface the brow
Of bragging horror : so shall inferior eyes,
That borrow their behaviours from the great,
Grow great by your example, and put on
The dauntless spirit of resolution.³

Away ; and glister like the god of war,
When he intendeth to become the field :⁴
Show boldness, and aspiring confidence.
What, shall they seek the lion in his den,
And fright him there ? and make him tremble there ?
O, let it not be said !—Forge,⁵ and run
To meet displeasure further from the doors ;
And grapple with him, ere he come so nigh.

K. John. The legate of the pope hath been with
me,

And I have made a happy peace with him ;
And he hath promised to dismiss the powers
Led by the Dauphin.

¹ Convert.

² Dryden has transferred this image to a speech of Antony, in All for Love :—

'An empty circle, since the jewel's gone.'

³ So in King Richard II. :—

'A jewel in a ten times barr'd up chest,
Is a bold spirit in a loyal breast.'

⁴ So in Macbeth :—

'Let's briefly put on manly readiness,
And meet it' the hall together.'

⁵ Thus in Hamlet :—

— such a sight as this Becomes the field.'

⁵ Forge here seems to mean to range abroad ; which Dr. Johnson says is its original sense : but four- rage, the French source of it, is formed from the low Latin foderagium, food : the sense of ranging therefore appears to be secondary.

⁶ We have the same image in Macbeth :—

'Where the Norwegian banners flout the sky,
And fan our people cold.'

From these two passages Gray formed the first lines of his 'Bard.'

⁷ I. e. I know that our party is able to cope with one Bast. O inglorious league !

Shall we, upon the footing of our land,
Send fair-play orders, and make compromise,
Insinuation, parley, and base truce,
To arms invasive ? shall a beardless boy,
A cocker'd silken wanton brave our fields,
And flesh his spirit in a warlike soil,
Mocking the air with colours idly spread,⁶
And find no check ? Let us, my liege, to arms :
Perchance, the cardinal cannot make your peace ;
Or if he do, let it at least be said,
They saw we had a purpose of defence.

K. John. Have thou the ordering of this present time.

Bast. Away then, with good courage ; yet, I know,

Our party may well meet a prouder foe.⁷ [Exit.

SCENE II. A Plain, near St. Edmund's-Bury.

Enter, in arms, LEWIS, SALISBURY, MELUN, PEMBROKE, BIGOT, and Soldiers.

Lew. My Lord Melun, let this be copied out,
And keep it safe for our remembrance :
Return the precedent⁸ to these lords again ;
That having our fair order written down,
Both they, and we, perusing o'er these notes,
May know wherefore we took the sacrament,
And keep our faiths firm and inviolable.

Sal. Upon our sides it never shall be broken
And, noble Dauphin, albeit we swear
A voluntary zeal, and unurg'd faith,
To your proceedings ; yet, believe me, prince,
I am not glad that such a sore of time
Should seek a plaster by contemn'd revolt,
And heal the inveterate canker of one wound,
By making many : O, it grieves my soul,
That I must draw this metal from my side
To be a widow-maker ; O and there.
Where honourable rescue and defence ;
Cries out upon the name of Salisbury :
But such is the infection of the time,
That, for the health and physic of our right,
We cannot deal but with the very hand
Of stern injustice and confused wrong.—
And is't not pity, O my grieved friends !
That we, the sons and children of this isle,
Were born to see so sad an hour as this ;
Wherein we step after a stranger⁹ march
Upon her gentle bosom, and fill up
Her enemies' ranks (I must withdraw and weep Upon the spot¹⁰ of this enforced cause,)
To grace the gentry of a land remote,
And follow unacquainted colours here ?
What, here ?—O nation, that thou could'st remove !
That Neptune's arms, who clippeth¹¹ thee about,
Would bear thee from the knowledge of thyself,
And grapple¹² thee unto a Pagan shore ;
Where these two Christian armies might combine
The blood of malice in a vein of league,
And not to-spend it¹³ so unneighbourly !

yet prouder, and more confident of its strength than theirs.

⁸ I. e. the rough draught of the original treaty. In King Richard II. the scrivener employed to engross the indictment of Lord Hastings says, 'It took him eleven hours to write it, and that the precedent was full as long a doing.'

⁹ Shakespeare often uses stranger as an adjective.
See the last scene :—

'Swearing allegiance and the love of soul
To stranger blood, to foreign royalty.'

¹⁰ I. e. the stain.

¹¹ To clip is to embrace ; not yet obsolete in the northern counties.

¹² The old copy reads cripple. The emendation was made by Pope. The poet alludes to the wars carried on by the Christian princes in the Holy Land against the Saracens, where the united armies of France and England might have laid their animosities aside and fought in the cause of Christ, instead of fighting against brethren and countrymen.

¹³ Shakespeare here employs a phraseology used before in the Merry Wives of Windsor :—

'And, fairy-like, to pinch the unclean knight.'

Lew. A noble temper dost thou show in this;
And great affections, wrestling in thy bosom,
Do make an earthquake of nobility.
O, what a noble combat hast thou fought,
Between compulsion and a brave respect!¹
Let me wipe off this honourable dew,
That silvery doth progress on thy cheeks:
My heart hath melted at a lady's tears,
Being an ordinary inundation;
But this effusion of such manly drops,
This shower, blown up by tempest of the soul,²
Startles mine eyes, and makes me more amaz'd
Than had I seen the vaulty top of heaven
Figur'd quite o'er with burning meteors.
Lift up thy brow, renowned Salisbury,
And with a great heart heave away this storm:
Commend these waters to those baby eyes,
That never saw the giant world enrag'd;
Nor met with fortune other than at feasts,
Full warm of blood, of mirth, of gossiping.
Come, come; for thou shalt thrust thy hand as deep
Into the purse of rich prosperity,
As Lewis himself:—so, nobles, shall you all,
That knit your sinews to the strength of mine.

Enter PANDULPH, attended.

And even there, methinks, an angel spake:³
Look, where the holy legate comes apace,
To give us warrant from the hand of heaven;
And on our actions set the name of right,
With holy breath.

Pand. Hail, noble prince of France!
The next is this,—King John hath reconcil'd Himself to Rome; his spirit is come in,
That so stood out against the holy church,
The great metropolis and see of Rome:
Therefore thy threat'ning colours now wind up,
And tame the savage spirit of wild war;
That, like a lion foster'd up at hand,
It may lie gently at the foot of peace,
And be no further harmful than in show.

Lew. Your grace shall pardon me, I will not back;
I am too high-born to be propertied,⁴
To be a secondary at control,
Or useful serving-man, and instrument,
To any sovereign state throughout the world.
Your breath first kindled the dead coal of wars,
Between this chastis'd kingdom and myself,
And brought in matter that should feed this fire;
And now 'tis far too huge to be blown out
With that same weak wind which enkindled it.
You taught me how to know the face of right,
Acquainted me with interest to this land,
Yea, thrust this enterprise into my heart;
And come you now to tell me, John hath made
His peace with Rome? What is that peace to me?
I, by the honour of my marriage-bed,
After young Arthur, claim this land for mine;
And, now it is half-conquer'd, must I back,
Because that John hath made his peace with Rome?
Am I Rome's slave? What penny hath Rome borne,
What men provided, what munition sent,
To underprop this action? is't not I,
That undergo this charge? who else but I,
And such as to my claim are liable,
Sweat in this business, and maintain this war?

1 This compulsion was the necessity of a reformation in the state; which according to Salisbury's opinion (who in his preceding speech calls it an enforced cause) could only be procured by foreign arms; and the brave respect was the love of country.

2 'This windy tempest till it blow up rain'

Hold back his sorrow's tide.—Rape of Lucrece.

3 In what I have now said an angel spake: for see, the holy legate approaches to give a warrant from heaven, and the name of right, to our cause.

4 Appropriated.

5 This was the phraseology of the time:—

'He hath more worthy interest to the state,
'Than thou the shadow of succession.'

King Henry IV. Part II.

6 I. e. passed along the banks of the river. Thus in the old play:—

— from the hollow holes of Thamesis
Echo apace replied, Vive le roi!

Have I not heard these islanders shout out,
Vive le roi! as I have bank'd their towns?⁷
Have I not here the best cards for the game,
To win this easy match play'd for a crown?
And shall I now give o'er the yielded set?
No, no, on my soul, it never shall be said.

Pand. You look but on the outside of this work.

Lew. Outside or inside, I will not return
Till my attempt so much be glorified
As to my ample hope was promised
Before I drew this gallant head of war,⁸
And cull'd these fiery spirits from the world,
To outlook conquest, and to win renown
Even in the jaws of danger and of death.—

[Trumpet sounds.]

What lusty trumpet thus doth summon us?

Enter the Bastard, attended.

Bast. According to the fair play of the world,
Let me have audience; I am sent to speak;—
My holy lord of Milan, from the king
I come to learn how you have dealt for him;
And, as you answer, I do know the scope
And warrant limited unto my tongue.

Pand. The Dauphin is too wilful-opposite,
And will not temporize with my entreaties;
He flatly says, he'll not lay down his arms.

Bast. By all the blood that ever fury breath'd,
The youth says well:—Now hear our English king:
For thus his royalty doth speak in me.

He is prepar'd; and unreason too, he should:
This apish and unmannerly approach,
This harness'd masque, and unadvised revel,
This unhair'd sauciness, and boyish troops,
The king doth smile at; and is well prepar'd
To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy arms,
From out the circle of his territories.
That band, which had the strength, even at your door,
To cudgel you, and make you take the hatch;⁹
To dive, like buckets, in concealed wells;
To crouch in litter of your stable planks;
To lie, like pawns, lock'd up in chests and trunks,
To hug with swine; to seek sweet safety out
In vaults and prisons; and to thrill, and shake,
Even at the crying of your nation's crow,¹⁰
Thinking his voice an armed Englishman:—
Shall that victorious hand be feeble here,
That in your chambers gave you chastisement?
No: Know, the gallant monarch is in arms;
And like an eagle o'er his airy towers,¹¹
To souse annoyance that comes near his nest.—
And you degenerate, you ingrate revolts,
You bloody Neroes, ripping up the wound
Of your dear mother England, blush for shame:
For your own ladies, and pale-visag'd maids,
Like Amazons, come tripping after drums;
Their trimbles into armed gauntlets change,
Their needs to lances, and their gentle hearts
To fierce and bloody inclination.

Lew. There end thy brave,¹² and turn thy face in peace:

We grant, thou canst outscold us: fare thee well;
We hold our time too precious to be spent
With such a brabblor.

Pand. Give me leave to speak.

Bast. No, I will speak.

From thence along the wanton rolling glade
To Troynovant, your fair metropolis.¹³
We still say to coast and to flank; and to bank has no less propriety, though not reconciled to us by modern usage.

7 I. e. assembled it, drew it out of the field.

8 Face down, bear down by a show of magnanimity
So before:—

— outface the brow
Of bragging horror.

9 The old copies read unheard: the emendation is Theobald's. It should be remarked that hair was often spelt hear.

10 To take, for to leap. Hunters still say to take a hedge or gate, meaning to leap over them. Baret has
'to take horse, to leap on horseback.'

11 I. e. the crowing of a cock; Gallus being both a cock and a Frenchman.

12 Nest

13 Needles.

14 Boast

Lew. We will attend to neither:—
Strike up the drums; and let the tongue of war
Plead for our interest; and our being here.

Bas. Indeed, your drums, being beaten, will cry
out;

And so shall you, being beaten: Do but start
An echo with the clamour of thy drum,
And even at hand a drum is ready braced,
That shall reverberate all as loud as thine;
Sound but another, and another shall,
As loud as thine, rattle the welkin's ear,
And mock the deep-mouth'd thunder: for at hand
(Not trusting to this halting legate here, Whom he hath us'd rather for sport than need,)
Is warlike John; and in his forehead sits
A bare-ribb'd death, whose office is this day
To feast upon whole thousands of the French.

Lew. Strike up our drums, to find this danger out.

Bas. And thou shalt find it, Dauphin, do not doubt. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The same. A Field of Battle.
Alarums. Enter KING JOHN and HUBERT.

K. John. How goes the day with us? O, tell me,
Hubert.

Hub. Badly, I fear: How fares your majesty?

K. John. This fever, that hath troubled me so long,
Lies heavy on me: O, my heart is sick!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, your valiant kinsman, Faulcon-
bridge,

Desires your majesty to leave the field;
And send him word by me, which way you go.

K. John. Tell him, toward Swinstead, to the abbey there.

Mess. Be of good comfort; for the great supply,¹
That was expected by the Dauphin here,
Are wreck'd three nights ago on Goodwin Sands.
This news was brought to Richard² but even now:
The French fight coldly, and retire themselves.

K. John. Ah me! this tyrant fever burms me up,
And will not let me welcome this good news.—
Set on toward Swinstead: to my litter straight;
Weakness possesses me, and I am faint. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. The same. Another part of the same.
Enter SALISBURY, PEMBROKE, BIGOT, and others.

Sal. I did not think the king so stor'd with friends.

Pem. Up once again; put spirit in the French;
If they miscarry, we miscarry too.

Sal. That misbegotten devil, Faulconbridge,
In spite of spite, alone upholds the day.

Pem. They say, King John, sore sick, hath left the field.

Enter MELUN wounded, and led by Soldiers.

Mel. Lead me to the revolts of England here.

Sal. When we were happy, we had other names.

Pem. It is the Count Melun.

Sal. Wounded to death.

Mel. Fly, noble English, you are bought and sold;³
Unthread the rude eye of rebellion,
And welcome home again discarded faith.

Seek out King John, and fall before his foot:

For, if the French be lords of this loud day,
He⁴ means to recompense the pains you take,
By cutting off your heads: Thus hath he sworn,
And I with him, and many more with me,
Upon the altar of Saint Edmund's Bury;

¹ Supply is here used as a noun of multitude, as it is again in scene v.

² The king had not long since called him by his original name of Philip, but the messenger could not take the same liberty.

³ A proverbial expression intimating treachery.

⁴ The Frenchman, i. e. Lewis means, &c.

⁵ i. e. dissolveth.

⁶ Rankness, as applied to a river, here signifies exuberant, ready to overflow; as applied to the actions of the speaker and his party it signifies wanton wildness. Petulantia.

⁷ Rain added to a river that is rank
Perforce will force it overflow the bank.

Even on that altar, where we swore to you
Dear amity and everlasting love.

Sal. May this be possible? may this be true?

Mel. Have I not hideous death within my view,
Retaining but a quantity of life;

Which bleeds away, even as a form of wax
Resolveth⁷ from his figure 'gainst the fire?

What in the world should make me now deceive,

Since I must lose the use of all deceit?

Why should I then be false; since it is true

That I must die here, and live hence by truth?

I say again, if Lewis do win the day,

He is forsworn, if e'er those eyes of yours

Behold another day break in the east:

But even this night,—whose black contagious breath

Already smokes about the burning crest

Of the old, feeble, and day-weari'd sun,—

Even this ill night, your breathing shall expire;

Paying the fine of rated treachery,

Even with a treacherous fine of all your lives,

If Lewis by your assistance win the day.

Commend me to one Hubert, with your king;

The love of him,—and this respect besides,

For that my grandsire was an Englishman,

Awakes my conscience to confess all this.

In lieu whereof, I pray you, bear me hence

From forth the noise and rumour of the field;

Where I may think the remnant of my thoughts

In peace, and part this body and my soul

With contemplation and devout desires.

Sal. We do believe thee,—And beshrew my soul

But I do love the favour and the form

Of this most fair occasion, by the which

We will untread the steps of damned flight;

And, like a bated and retired flood,

Leaving our rankness⁸ and irregular course,

Stoop low within those bounds we have o'erlook'd,

And calmly run on in obedience,

Even to our ocean, to our great King John.—

My arm shall give thee help to bear thee hence;

For I do see the cruel pangs of death

Right⁷ in thine eye.—Away, my friends! New flight!

And happy newness,⁸ that intends old right.
[Exeunt, leading off MELUN.]

SCENE V. The same. The French Camp. Enter
LEWIS and his Train.

Lew. The sun of heaven, methought, was loath to set;

But stay'd, and made the western welkin blush,

When the English measur'd backward their own ground,

In faint retire: O, bravely came we off,

When with a volley of our needless shot;

After such bloody toil, we bid good night;

And wound our tott'ring⁹ colours clearly up.

Last in the field, and almost lords of it!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Where is my prince, the Dauphin?

Lew. Here:—What news?

Mess. The Count Melun is slain; the English
lords,

By his persuasion, are again fallen off:

And your supply, which you have wish'd so long,

Are cast away, and sunk, on Goodwin Sands.

Lew. Ah, foul shrewd news!—Beshrew thy very heart!

I did not think to be so sad to-night,

As this hath made me.—Who was he, that said,

King John did fly, an hour or two before

The stumbling night did part our weary powers?

⁷ Immediate.

⁸ Innovation.

⁹ Tott'ring colours is the reading of the old copy, which was unnecessarily altered to tatter'd by Johnson, who is followed by the subsequent editors. To totter, in old language, was to waver, to shake with a tremulous motion as colours would do in the wind. It is obvious that tatter'd cannot be the right word, for how could their tatter'd colours be clearly wound up? 'To tottre' (says Baret,) nutare, vacillare, see shake and wagge.' The colours were waving in the wind during the battle, and were wound up at the close of it.

Mess. Whoever spoke it, it is true, my lord.

Lew. Well; keep good quarter,¹ and good care to-night;

The day shall not be up so soon as I,
To try the fair adventure of to-morrow. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. An open Place in the neighbourhood of Swinstead-Abbey. Enter the Bastard and HERBERT, meeting.

Hub. Who's there? speak, ho! speak quickly, or I shoot.

Bast. A friend:—What art thou?

Hub. Of the part of England.

Bast. Whither dost thou go?

Hub. What's that to thee? Why may not I demand Of thine affairs, as well as thou of mine?

Bast. Hubert, I think.

Hub. Thou hast a perfect² thought: I will, upon all hazards, well believe, Thou art my friend, that know'st my tongue so well: Who art thou?

Bast. Who thou wilt: an if thou please, Thou may'st befriend me so much, as to think I come one way of the Plantagenets.

Hub. Unkind remembrance! thou, and eyeless night,³

Have done me shame:—Brave soldier, pardon me, That any accent, breaking from thy tongue, Should 'scape the true acquaintance of mine ear.

Bast. Come, come; sans compliment, what news abroad?

Hub. Why, here walk I, in the black brow of night, To find you out.

Bast. Brief, then; and what's the news?

Hub. O, my sweet sir, news fitting to the night, Black, fearful, comfortless, and horrible.

Bast. Show me the very wound of this ill news; I am no woman, I'll not swoon at it.

Hub. The king, I fear, is poison'd by a monk:⁴ I left him almost speechless, and broke out To acquaint you with this evil; that you might The better arm you to the sudden time, Than if you had at leisure⁵ known of this.

Bast. How did he take it? who did taste to him?

Hub. A monk, I tell you; a resolved villain, Whose bowels suddenly burst out: the king Yet speaks, and, peradventure, may recover.

Bast. Who didst thou leave to tend his majesty?

Hub. Why, know you not? the lords are all come back,

And brought prince Henry in their company; At whose request the king hath pardon'd them, And they are all about his majesty.

Bast. Withhold thine indignation, mighty heaven, And tempt us not to bear above our power!— I'll tell thee, Hubert, half my power this night, Passing these flats, are taken by the tide, These Lincoln washes have devoured them;

Myself, well mounted, hardly have escap'd.

Away, before! conduct me to the king; I doubt, he will be dead, or ere I come. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII. The Orchard of Swinstead-Abbey. Enter PRINCE HENRY, SALISBURY, and BIGOT.

P. Hen. It is too late; the life of all his blood Is touch'd corruptibly; and his pure brain (Which some suppose the soul's frail dwelling-house,)

Doth, by the idle comments that it makes, Foretell the ending of mortality.

Enter PEMBROKE.

Pem. His highness yet doth speak: and holds belief,

That, being brought into the open air, It would allay the burning quality Of that fell poison which assaileth him.

P. Hen. Let him be brought into the orchard here. Doth he still rage? [Exit BIGOT.] Pem. He is more patient Than when you left him; even now he sung.

P. Hen. O vanity of sickness! fierce extremes, In their continuance, will not feel themselves. Death, having prey'd upon the outward parts, Leaves them insensible;⁶ and his siege is now Against the mind, the which he pricks and wounds With many legions of strange fantasies; Which, in their throng and press to that last hold, Confound themselves. 'Tis strange, that death should sing.—

I am the cygnet to this pale faint swan, Who chants a doleful hymn to his own death; And, from the organ-pipe of frailty, sings His soul and body to their lasting rest.

Sal. Be of good comfort, prince; for you are born To set a form upon that indigest Which he hath left so shapeless and so rude.⁷

Re-enter BIGOT and Attendants, who bring in KING JOHN in a Chair.

K. John. Ay, marry, now, my soul hath elbow room;

It would not out at windows, nor at doors.

There is so hot a summer in my bosom, That all my bowels crumble up to dust: I am a scribbled form, drawn with a pen Upon a parchment; and against this fire Do I shrink up.

P. Hen. How fares your majesty?

K. John. Poison'd,—ill fare;—dead, forsook cast off;

And none of you will bid the winter come, To thrust his icy fingers in my marrow;⁸ Nor let my kingdom's rivers take their course Through my burn'd bosom; nor entreat the north To make his bleak winds kiss my parched lips, And comfort me with cold:—I do not ask you much, the variorum editions for his argument, and Steevens's vein of pleasant irony upon it.

⁹ A description of Chaos, almost in the very words of Ovid:—

Quem dixere Chaos rudis indigestaque moles.—Met. i. Which Chaos high a huge rude heap:— No sunne as yet with lightsome beames the shapeless world did view. Golding's Translation.

¹⁰ This scene has been imitated by Beaumont and Fletcher, in A Wife for a Month, Act iv. Decker, in the Gull's Hornbook, has the same thought:—'the morning waxing cold thrust his frosty fingers into thy bosom.' Perhaps Shakspeare was acquainted with the following passages in two of Marlowe's plays, which must both have been written previous to King John, for Marlowe died in 1593:—

'O I am dull, and the cold hand of sleep Hath thrust his icy fingers in my breast, And made a frost within me.'—Lupe's Dominion.
'O poor Zabina, O my queen, my queen, Fetch me some water for my burning breast, To cool and comfort me with longer date.' Tamburlaine, 1591.

The corresponding passage in the old play runs thus:—
'Philip, some drink. O for the frozen Alps To tumble on, and cool this inward heat— That rageth as a furnace seven-folk.'

¹ I. e. keep in your allotted posts or stations.

² I. e. a well informed one.

³ The old copy reads 'endless night.' The emendation was made by Theobald.

⁴ Not one of the historians who wrote within sixty years of the event mentions this improbable story. The tale is, that a monk, to revenge himself on the king for a saying at which he took offence, poisoned a cup of ale, and having brought it to his majesty, drank some of it himself, to induce the king to taste it, and soon afterwards expired. Thomas Wylkes is the first who mentions it in his Chronicle as a report. According to the best accounts John died at Newark, of a fever.

⁵ I. e. less speedy, after some delay.

⁶ Prince Henry was only nine years old when his father died.

⁷ Continuance here means continuity. Bacon uses it in that sense also. So Baret, 'If the disease be of any continuance, if it be an old and settled disease.' I should not have thought this passage needed elucidation, had not Malone proposed to read 'in thy continuance.'

⁸ The old copy reads invisibile. Sir T. Hanmer proposed the reading admitted into the text. Malone has endeavoured to elaborate a meaning out of the old reading but without success. I must refer the reader to

I beg cold comfort: and you are so strait,¹
And so ingrateful, you deny me that.

P. Hen. O, that there were some virtue in my tears,

That might relieve you!

K. John. The salt in them is hot.—
Within me is a hell; and there the poison
Is, as a fiend, confin'd to tyrannize
On unreprieveable condemned blood.

Enter the Bastard.

Bast. O, I am scalded with my violent emotion,
And spleen of speed to see your majesty.

K. John. O cousin, thou art come to set mine eye
The tackle of my heart is crack'd and burn'd;
And all the shrouds, wherewith my life should sail,
Are turned to one thread, one little hair:
My heart hath one poor string to stay it by,
Which holds but till thy news be uttered:
And then all this thou seest, is but a cloud,
And module² of confounded royalty.

Bast. The Dauphin is preparing hitherward:
Where, heaven he knows, how we shall answer him:
For, in a night, the best part of my power,
As I upon advantage did remove,
Were in the washes, all unwarily,
Devoured by the unexpected flood.³ [The King dies.]

Sal. You breathe these dead news in as dead an ear.—

My liege! my lord!—But now a king,—now thus.

P. Hen. Even so must I run on, and even so stop.
What surety of the world, what hope, what stay,
When this was now a king, and now is clay!

Bast. Art thou gone so? I do but stay behind,
To do the office for thee of revenge;
And then my soul shall wait on thee to heaven,
As it on earth hath been thy servant still.—

Now, now, you stars, that move in your right spheres,
Where be your powers? Show now your mended faiths;

And instantly return with me again,
To push destruction and perpetual shame
Out of the weak door of our fainting land:
Straight let us seek, or straight we shall be sought;
The Dauphin rages at our very heels.

Sal. It seems, you know not then so much as we:
The cardinal Pandolph is within at rest,

² Module and model were only different modes of spelling the same word. Model signified not an archetype, after which something was to be formed, but the thing formed after an archetype, a copy. Bullokar, in his Expositor, 1616, explains 'model, the platform, or form of any thing.'

³ This untoward accident really happened to King John himself. As he passed from Lynn to Lincolnshire he lost by an inundation all his treasure, carriages, baggage, and regalia.

⁴ In crastino S. Lucae Johannes Rex Angliæ in castro de Newark obiit, et sepultus est in ecclesia Wigornien.

Who half an hour since came from the dauphin;
And brings from him such offers of our peace
As we with honour and respect may take,
With purpose presently to leave this war.

Bast. He will the rather do it, when he sees Ourselves well sinewed to our defence.

Sal. Nay, it is in a manner done already;
For many carriages he hath despatch'd
To the seaside, and put his cause and quarrel
To the disposing of the cardinal:

With whom yourself, myself, and other lords,
If you think meet, this afternoon will post
To consummate this business happily.

Bast. Let it be so:—And you, my noble prince,
With other princes that may best be spared,
Shall wait upon your father's funeral.

P. Hen. At Worcester must his body be interred:⁴

For so he will'd it.

Bast. Thither shall it then.

And happily may your sweet self put on
The lineal state and glory of the land!
To whom, with all submission, on my knee,
I do bequeath my faithful services
And true subjection everlastingly.

Sal. And the like tender of our love we make,
To rest without a spot for evermore.

P. Hen. I have a kind soul, that would give you thanks,

And knows not how to do it, but with tears.

Bast. O, let us pay the time but needful woe,
Since it hath been beforehand with our griefs.—
This England never did (nor never shall)
Lie at the proud foot of a conqueror,
But when it first did help to wound itself.
Now these her princes are come home again,
Come the three corners of the world in arms,
And we shall shock them: Nought shall make us rue,
If England to itself do rest but true.⁶ [Exeunt.]

THE tragedy of King John, though not written with the utmost power of Shakspeare, is varied with a very pleasing interchange of incidents and characters. The lady's grief is very affecting; and the character of the Bastard contains that mixture of greatness and levity which this author delighted to exhibit. JOHNSON.

niensi inter corpora S. Oswaldi et sancti [Wolstani] Chronic. sive Annal. Prioratus de Dunstable, edit. a T. Hearne, t. i. p. 173. A stone coffin, containing the body of King John, was discovered in the cathedral church of Worcester, July 17, 1797.

⁵ 'As previously we have found sufficient cause for lamentation, let us not waste the time in superfluous sorrow.'

⁶ This sentiment may have been borrowed from the following passage in the old play:—

'Let England live but true within herself,
And all the world can never wrong her state.'

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF KING RICHARD THE SECOND.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

IN the construction of this play Shakspeare has followed Holinshed, his usual historical authority, some passages of the Chronicle he has transplanted into the drama with very little alteration.

It has been suspected that there was an old play on the subject of King Richard II. which the poet might have seen. Sir Gillie Merrick, who was concerned in the harebrained business of the Earl of Essex, is accused of having procured to be played before the conspirators 'the play of the deposing of Richard the Second; when it was told him by one of the players that the play was old, and they should have loss in playing it, because few would come to it, there was forty shillings extraordinary given to play, and so thereupon played it was? It seems probable, from a passage in the State Trials, quoted by Mr. Tyrwhitt, that this old play bore the title of King Henry IV., and not King Richard II., and it could not be Shakspeare's King Henry IV., as that commences a year after the death of King Richard. 'It may seem strange says Malone) that this old play should have been represented after Shakspeare's drama on the same subject had been printed: the reason undoubtedly was, that in the old play the deposing of King Richard II. made a part of the exhibition: but in the first edition of Shakspeare's play, one hundred and fifty-four lines, describing a kind of trial of the king, and his actual deposition in parliament, were omitted: nor was it probably represented on the stage. Merrick, Cuffe, and the rest of Essex's train, naturally preferred the play in which his deposition was represented, their plot not aiming at the life of the queen. It is, I know, commonly thought that the parliament scene, as it is called, which was first printed in the 4to of 1608, was an addition made by Shakspeare to this play after its first representation: but it seems to me more probable that it was written with the rest, and suppressed in the printed copy of 1597, from the fear of offending Elizabeth; against whom the Pope had published a bull in the preceding year, exhorting her subjects to take up arms against her. In 1599 Hayward published his History of the first year of King Henry IV. which is in fact nothing more than a history of the deposing of King Richard II. The displeasure which that book excited at court sufficiently accounts for the omitted lines not being inserted in the copy of this play, which was published in 1602.* Hayward was heavily censured in the Star Chamber, and committed to prison. In 1603, when James was quietly and firmly settled on the throne, and the fear of internal commotion, or foreign invasion, no longer subsisted, neither the author, the managers of the theatre, nor the bookseller, could entertain any apprehension of giving offence to the sovereign; the rejected scene was therefore restored without scruple, and from some playhouse copy probably found its way to the press.†

Malone places the date of its composition in 1593; Mr. Chalmers in 1596. The play was first entered on the stationers' books by Andrew Wise, August 29, 1597; and there were four quarto editions published during the life of Shakspeare, viz. in 1597, 1598, 1608, and 1615.

This play may be considered the first link in the chain of Shakspeare's historical dramas, which Schlegel thinks the poet designed to form one great whole, 'as it were an historical heroic poem, of which the separate plays constitute the rhapsodies.'

In King Richard the Second the poet exhibits to us a noble kingly nature, at first obscured by levity and the errors of unbridled youth, and afterwards purified by misfortune, and rendered more highly splendid and illustrious. When he has lost the love and reverence of his subjects, and is on the point of losing also his throne, he then feels with painful inspiration the elevated vocation of the kingly dignity, and its prerogatives over personal merit and changeable institutions. When the earthly crown has fallen from off his head, he first appears as a king whose innate nobility no humiliation can annihilate. This is felt by a poor groom: he is shocked that his master's favourite horse should have carried the proud Bolingbroke at his coronation: he visits the captive king in his prison, and shames the desertion of the great. The political history of the deposition is represented with extraordinary knowledge of the world; —the ebb of fortune on the one hand, and the swelling tide on the other, which carries every thing along with it; while Bolingbroke acts as a king, and his adherents behave towards him as if he really were so, he still continues to give out that he comes with an armed band, merely for the sake of demanding his birthright and the removal of abuses. The usurpation has been long completed before the word is pronounced, and the thing publicly avowed. John of Gaunt is a model of chivalrous truth: he stands there like a pillar of the olden time which he had outlived.‡

This drama abounds in passages of eminent poetical beauty; among which every reader will recollect the pathetic description of Richard's entrance into London with Bolingbroke, of which Dryden said that 'he knew nothing comparable to it in any other language;' John of Gaunt's praise of England,

'Dear for her reputation through the world;' and Mowbray's complaint at being banished for life.

King Richard.

OLD¹ John of Gaunt, time-honour'd Lancaster,
Hast thou, according to thy oath and band,²
Brought hither Henry Hereford³ thy bold son;
Here to make good the boisterous late appeal,
Which then our leisure would not let us hear,

I 'Old John of Gaunt, time-honour'd Lancaster.' Our ancestors, in their estimate of old age, appear to have reckoned somewhat differently from us, and to have considered men as old whom we should now esteem as middle-aged. With them, every man that had passed fifty seems to have been accounted an old man. John of Gaunt, at the period when the commencement of this play is laid (1398), was only fifty-eight years old: he died in 1399, aged fifty-nine. This may have arisen from its being customary in former times to enter life at

Against the Duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray?

Gaunt. I have, my liege.

K. Rich. Tell me, moreover, hast thou sounded him,

If he appeal the duke on ancient malice;

Or worthily as a good subject should,

On some known ground of treachery in him?

Gaunt. As near as I could sift him on that argument,—

On some apparent danger seen in him,
Aim'd at your highness; no inveterate malice.

an earlier period than we do now. Those who married at fifteen, had at fifty been masters of a house and family for thirty-five years.

2 When these public challenges were accepted, each combatant found a pledge for his appearance at the time and place appointed. Band and bond were formerly synonymous.

3 In the old play, and in Harding's Chronicle, Bolingbroke's title is written Hereford and Harford. This was the pronunciation of our poet's time, and he therefore uses this word as a dissyllable.

K. Rich. Then call them to our presence, face to face,
And frowning brow to brow, ourselves will hear
The accuser, and the accused, freely speak :—
[Exeunt some Attendants.]
High stomach'd are they both, and full of ire,
In rage deaf as the sea, hasty as fire.

Re-enter Attendants, with BOLINGBROKE¹ and NORFOLK.

Boling. May many years of happy days befall
My gracious sovereign, my most loving liege!

Nor. Each day still better other's happiness;
Until the heavens, envying earth's good hap,
Add an immortal title to your crown!

K. Rich. We thank you both: yet one but flatters us,

As well appeareth by the cause you come:²
Namely, to appeal each other of high treason.—
Cousin of Hereford, what dost thou object
Against the Duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray?

Boling. First, (heaven be the record of my speech!)

In the devotion of a subject's love,
Tendering the precious safety of my prince,
And free from other misbegotten hate,
Come I appellant to this princely presence.—
Now, Thomas Mowbray, do I turn to thee,
And mark my greeting well; for what I speak,
My body shall make good upon this earth,
Or my divine soul answer it in heaven.
Thou art a traitor, and a miscreant;
Too good to be so, and too bad to live:
Since, the more fair and crystal is the sky,
The uglier seem the clouds that in it fly.
Once more, the more to aggravate the note,
With a foul traitor's name stuff I thy throat;
And wish (so please my sovereign), ere I move,
What my tongue speaks, my right-drawn sword³ may prove.

Nor. Let not my cold words here accuse my zeal:

'Tis not the trial of a woman's war,
The bitter clamour of two eager tongues,
Can arbitrate this cause betwixt us twain:
The blood is hot that must be cool'd for this:
Yet can I not of such tame patience boast,
As to be hush'd, and nought at all to say:
First, the fair reverence of your highness curbs me
From giving reins and spurs to my free speech;
Which else would post, until it had return'd
These terms of treason doubled down his throat.
Setting aside his high blood's royalty,
And let him be no kinsman to my liege,
I do defy him, and I spit at him;
Call him—a slanderous coward, and a villain:
Which to maintain, I would allow him odds;
And meet him, were I tied to run a-foot
Even to the frozen ridges of the Alps,
Or any other ground inhabitable⁴
Where ever Englishman durst set his foot.
Mean time, let this defend my loyalty,—
By all my hopes, most falsely doth he lie.

Boling. Pale trembling coward, there I throw my
gage,

Disclaiming here the kindred of the king;
And lay aside my high blood's royalty,
Which fear, not reverence, makes thee to except:

1 Drayton asserts that Henry Plantagenet, the eldest son of John of Gaunt, was not distinguished by the name of Bolingbroke till after he had assumed the crown. He is called earl of Hereford by the old historians, and was surnamed Bolingbroke from having been born at the town of that name in Lincolnshire, about 1366.

2 i. e. 'by the cause you come on.' The suppression of the preposition has been shown to have been frequent with Shakespeare.

3 My right-drawn sword is my sword drawn in a right or just cause.

4 i. e. uninhabitable.

5 To inherit, in the language of Shakspeare, is to possess.

6 Lewd formerly signified knaveish, ungacious, naughty, idle, beside its now general acceptation.

If guilty dread hath left thee so much strength,
As to take up mine honour's pawn, then stoop;
By that, and all the rites of knighthood else,
Will I make good against thee, arm to arm,
What I have spoke, or thou canst worst devise.

Nor. I take it up; and, by that sword I swear,
Which gently lay'd my knighthood on my shoulder,
I'll answer thee in any fair degree,
Or chivalrous design of knightly trial;
And, when I mount, alive may I not light,
If I be a traitor, or unjustly fight!

K. Rich. What doth our cousin lay to Mowbray's charge?

It must be great, that can inherit⁵ us
So much as of a thought of ill in him.

Boling. Look, what I speak my life shall prove it true;—

That Mowbray hath receiv'd eight thousand nobles,
In name of lendings for your highness' soldiers;
The which he hath detain'd for lewd⁶ employments,
Like a false traitor, and injurious villain.
Besides I say, and will in battle prove,—
Or here, or elsewhere, to the furthest verge
That ever was survey'd by English eye,—
That all the treasons for these eighteen years
Complotted and contrived in this land,
Fetch from false Mowbray their first head and spring.

Further I say,—and further will maintain
Upon his bad life, to make all this good,—
That he did plot the Duke of Gloster's death;⁷
Suggest⁸ his soon-believing adversaries;
And, consequently, like a traitor coward,
Slue'd out his innocent soul through streams of blood:

Which blood, like sacrificing Abel's, cries,
Even from the tongueless caverns of the earth,
To me for justice, and rough chastisement;
And by the glorious worth of my descent,
This arm shall do it, or this life be spent.

K. Rich. How high a pitch his resolution soars!—
Thomas of Norfolk, what say'st thou to this?

Nor. O, let my sovereign turn away his face,
And bid his ears a little while be deaf,
Till I have told this slander of his blood,⁹
How God, and good men, hate so foul a liar.

K. Rich. Mowbray, impartial are our eyes, and ears:

Were he my brother, nay, my kingdom's heir
(As he is but my father's brother's son),
Now by my sceptre's awe I make a vow,
Such neighbour nearness to our sacred blood
Should nothing privilege him, nor partialize
The unstooping firmness of my upright soul;
He is our subject, Mowbray, so art thou;
Free speech, and fearless, I to thee allow.

Nor. Then, Bolingbroke, as low as to thy heart,
Through the false passage of thy throat, thou liest!
Three parts of that receipt I had for Calais,
Disbur's'd I duly to his highness' soldiers:
The other part reserv'd I by consent;
For that my sovereign liege was in my debt,
Upon remainder of a dear account,
Since last I went to France to fetch his queen:¹⁰
Now swallow down that lie.—For Gloster's death,—

I slew him not; but to my own disgrace,
Neglected my sworn duty in that case.—

7 Thomas of Woodstock, the youngest son of Edward III. who was murdered at Calais in 1397. See Froissart, chap. cxxvi.

8 I. e. prompt them, set them on by injurious hints.

9 Reproach to his ancestry.

10 The duke of Norfolk was joined in commission with Edward Earl of Rutland (the Aumerle of this play) to go to France in the year 1395, to demand in marriage Isabel, eldest daughter of Charles VI. then between seven and eight years of age. Richard was married to his young consort in November 1396, at Calais; his first wife, Anne, daughter of Charles IV. emperor of Germany, died at Shene on Whit Sunday, 1394. His marriage with Isabella was merely political, it was accompanied with an agreement for a truce between France and England for thirty years.

For you, my noble lord of Lancaster,
The honourable father to my foe,
Once did I lay in ambush for your life,
A trespass that doth vex my grieved soul :
But, ere I last receiv'd the sacrament,
I did confess it : and exactly begg'd
Your grace's pardon, and, I hope, I had it.
This is my fault : As for the rest appeal'd,¹
It issues from the rancour of a villain,
A recreant and most degenerate traitor :
Which in myself I boldly will defend ;
And interchangeably hurl down my gage
Upon this overweening² traitor's foot,
To prove myself a loyal gentleman
Even in the best blood chamber'd in his bosom :
In haste whereof, most heartily I pray
Your highness to assign our trial day.

K. Rich. Wrath-kindled gentlemen, be rul'd by me :

Let's purge this choler without letting blood :
This we prescribe, though no physician ;³
Deep malice makes too deep incision :
Forget, forgive ; conclude, and be agreed ;
Our doctors say, this is no time to bleed.—
Good uncle, let this end where it begun :
We'll calm the duke of Norfolk, you your son.

Gaunt. To be a make-peace shall become my age :

Throw down, my son, the duke of Norfolk's gage.

K. Rich. And, Norfolk, throw down his.

Gaunt. When, Harry ? when ?⁴
Obedience bids, I should not bid again.

K. Rich. Norfolk, throw down ; we bid ; there is no boot.⁵

Nor. Myself I throw, dread sovereign, at thy foot :

My life thou shalt command, but not my shame :
The one my duty owes ; but my fair name
(Despite of death, that lives upon my grave,)⁶
To dark dishonour's use thou shalt not have.
I am disgrac'd, impeach'd, and baffled⁷ here ;
Pierc'd to the soul with slander's venom'd spear ;
The which no balm can cure, but his heart-blood
Which breath'd this poison.

K. Rich. Rage must be withstood :
Give me his gage :—Lions make leopards⁸ tame.

Nor. Yea, but not change their spots : take but my shame,

And I resign my gage. My dear, dear lord,
The purest treasure mortal times afford,
Is—spotless reputation ; that away,
Men are but gilded loam, or painted clay.
A jewel in a ten times barr'd⁹ up chest
Is—a bold spirit in a loyal breast.
Mine honour is my life ; both grow in one ;
Take honour from me, and my life is done :
Then, dear my liege, mine honour let me try ;
In that I live, and for that will I die.

K. Rich. Cousin, throw down your gage ; do you begin.

Boling. O, God defend my soul from such foul sin !

Shall I seem crest-fallen in my father's sight ?
Or with pale beggar-fear impeach my height
Before this out-dar'd dastard ! Ere my tongue

Shall wound mine honour with such feeble wrong,
Or sound so base a parle, my teeth shall tear
The slavish motive of recanting fear ;
And spit it bleeding in his high disgrace,
Where shame doth harbour, even in Mowbray's face.

[Exit GAUNT.
K. Rich. We were not born to sue, but to command :

Which since we cannot do to make you friends,
Be ready, as your lives shall answer it,
At Coventry, upon Saint Lambert's day ;
There shall your swords and lances arbitrate
The swelling difference of your settled hate ;
Since we cannot atone¹⁰ you, we shall see
Justice design¹¹ the victor's chivalry.—
Lord Marshal, command our officers at arms
Be ready to direct these home alarms. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. *The same. A Room in the Duke of Lancaster's Palace. Enter GAUNT, and Duch-ess of Gloster.*¹²

Gaunt. Alas ! the part¹³ I had in Gloster's blood
Doth more solicit me, than your exclams,
To stir against the butchers of his life.
But since correction lieth in those hands,
Which made the fault that we cannot correct,
Put we our quarrel to the will of heaven ;
Who when he sees¹⁴ the hours ripe on earth,
Will rain hot vengeance on offenders' heads.

Duch. Finds brotherhood in thee no sharper spur ?
Hath love in thy old blood no living fire ?
Edward's seven sons, whereof thyself art one,
Were as seven phials of his sacred blood,
Or seven fair branches springing from one root :
Some of those seven are dried by nature's course,
Some of those branches by the destinies cut :
But Thomas, my dear lord, my life, my Gloster,—
One phial full of Edward's sacred blood,
One flourishing branch of his most royal root,—
Is crack'd, and all the precious liquor spilt ;
Is hack'd down, and his summer leaves all faded,
By envy's hand, and murder's bloody axe.
Ah, Gaunt ! his blood was thine ; that bed, that womb,

That mettle, that self-mould, that fashion'd thee,
Made him a man ; and though thou liv'st, and breath'st,

Yet art thou slain in him : thou dost consent¹⁵
In some large measure to thy father's death,
In that thou seest thy wretched brother die,
Who was the model of thy father's life.
Call it not patience, Gaunt, it is despair :
In suffering thus thy brother to be slaughter'd,
Thou show'st the naked pathway to thy life,
Teaching stern murder how to butcher thee :
That which in mean men we entitle—patience,
Is pale cold cowardice in noble breasts.

What shall I say ? to safeguard thine own life,
The best way is—to 'venge my Gloster's death.

Gaunt. Heaven's is the quarrel ; for heaven's substitute,

His deputy anointed in his sight,
Hath caus'd his death ; the which if wrongfully,
Let heaven revenge ; for I may never lift
An angry arm against his minister.

¹⁰ i. e. make them friends, 'to make agreement or atonement, to reconcile them to each other.'

¹¹ To design is to mark out, to show by a token. It is the sense of the Latin designo. I may here take occasion to remark that Shakspeare's learning appears to me to have been underrated ; it is almost always evident in his choice of expressive terms derived from the Latin, and used in their original sense. The propriety of this expression here will be obvious, when we recollect that designator was 'a marshal, a master of the play or prize, who appointed every one his place, and adjudged the victory.'

¹² The duchess of Gloster was Eleanor Bohun, widow of Duke Thomas, son of Edward III.

¹³ i. e. my relationship of consanguinity to Gloster.

¹⁴ The old copy erroneously reads 'who when they see.'

¹⁵ i. e. assent ; consent is often used by the poet for accord, agreement.

¹ Charged.

² Arrogant.

³ Pope thought that some of the rhyming verses in this play were not from the hand of Shakspeare.

⁴ This abrupt elliptical exclamation of impatience is again used in the Taming of a Shrew :—'Why when, I say ! Nay, good sweet Kate, be merry.' It appears to be equivalent to 'when will such a thing be done ?'

⁵ 'There is no boot,' or it booteth not, is as much as to say 'there is no help,' resistance would be vain, or profitless.

⁶ i. e. my name that lives on my grave in despite of death.

⁷ Baffled in this place signifies 'abused, reviled, reproached in base terms,' which was the ancient signification of the word, as well as to deceive or circumvent.

⁸ There is an allusion here to the crest of Norfolk, which was a golden leopard.

⁹ The old copies have 'his spots.' The alteration was made by Pope.

Duch. Where then, alas! may I complain myself?¹

Gaunt. To heaven, the widow's champion and defence.

Duch. Why then, I will. Farewell, old Gaunt. Thou go'st to Coventry, there to behold Our cousin Hereford and fell Mowbray fight: O, sit my husband's wrongs on Hereford's spear, That it may enter butcher Mowbray's breast! Or, if misfortune miss the first career, Be Mowbray's sins so heavy in his bosom, That they may break his foaming courser's back, And throw the rider headlong in the lists, A catiff recreant to my cousin Hereford! Farewell, old Gaunt; thy sometime brother's wife, With her companion grief must end her life.

Gaunt. Sister, farewell: I must to Coventry: As much good stay with thee, as go with me!

Duch. Yet one word more;—Grief boundeth where it falls,

Not with the empty hollowness, but weight: I take my leave before I have begun; For sorrow ends not when it seemeth done. Commend me to my brother, Edmund York, Lo, this is all:—Nay, yet depart not so: Though this be all, do not so quickly go; I shall remember more. Bid him—O, what?— With all good speed at Plashy² visit me. Alack, and what shall good old York there see, But empty lodgings and unfurnish'd walls,³ Unpeopled offices, untrodden stones? And what cheer there for welcome, but my groans? Therefore commend me; let him not come there, To seek out sorrow that dwells every where: Desolate, desolate, will I hence, and die; The last leave of thee takes my weeping eye.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. Gosford Green, near Coventry. *Lists set out, and a Throne. Herald, &c. attending. Enter the Lord Marshal, and AUMERLE.*⁴

Mar. My lord Aumerle, is Harry Hereford arm'd?

Aum. Yea, at all points: and longs to enter in.

Mar. That of Norfolk, sprightly and bold, Stays but the summons of the appellant's trumpet.

Aum. Why then, the champions are prepar'd, and stay

For nothing but his majesty's approach.

Flourish of Trumpets. Enter KING RICHARD, who takes his seat on his Throne; GAUNT, and several Noblemen, who take their places. A Trumpet is sounded, and answered by another Trumpet within. Then enter NORFOLK in armour, preceded by a Herald.

K. Rich. Marshal, demand of yonder champion The cause of his arrival here in arms: Ask him his name; and orderly proceed To swear him in the justice of his cause.

Mar. In God's name, and the king's, say who thou art,

And why thou com'st, thus knightly clad in arms?

1 To complain is commonly a verb neuter; but it is here used as a verb active. It is a literal translation of the old French phrase, me complaindre; and is not peculiar to Shakespeare.

2 Her house in Essex.

3 In our ancient castles the naked stone walls were only covered with tapestry or arras, hung upon tenter-hooks, from which it was easily taken down on every removal of the family. (See the Preface to the Northumberland Household Book, by Dr. Percy.) The offices of our old English mansions were the rooms designed for keeping the various stores of provisions, bread, wine, ale, &c. and for culinary purposes. They were always situate within the house, on the ground-floor (for there were no subterraneous rooms till about the middle of the reign of Charles I.), and nearly adjoining each other. When dinner had been set on the board by the sewers, the proper officers attended in each of these offices. Sometimes, on occasions of great festivity, these offices were all thrown open, and unlimited licence given to all comers to eat and drink at their pleasure. The duchess therefore laments that, in

Against what man thou com'st, and what thy quarrel?

Speak truly, on thy knighthood; and thy oath; As so defend thee heaven, and thy valour!

Nor. My name is Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk;⁵

Who hither come engaged by my oath, (Which heaven defend a knight should violate!) Both to defend my loyalty and truth, To God, my king, and my⁶ succeeding issue, Against the duke of Hereford that appeals me; And, by the grace of God, and this mine arm, To prove him, in defending of myself, A traitor to my God, my king, and me: And, as I truly fight, defend me heaven

[He takes his seat.]

Trumpet sounds. Enter BOLINGBROKE, in armour; preceded by a Herald.

K. Rich. Marshal, ask yonder knight in arms, Both who he is, and why he cometh hither Thus plated in habiliments of war; And formally according to our law Depose him in the justice of his cause.

Mar. What is thy name? and wherefore com'st thou hither,

Before king Richard, in his royal lists? Against whom comest thou; and what's thy quarrel? Speak like a true knight, so defend thee heaven!

Boling. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby, Am I; who ready here do stand in arms, To prove, by heaven's grace, and my body's valour, In lists, on Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk, That he's a traitor, foul and dangerous, To God of heaven, King Richard, and to me; And, as I truly fight, defend me heaven!

Mar. On pain of death, no person be so bold, Or daring-hardy, as to touch the lists; Except the marshal, and such officers Appointed to direct these fair designs.

Boling. Lord marshal, let me kiss my sovereign's hand,

And bow my knee before his majesty: For Mowbray, and myself, are like two men That vow a long and weary pilgrimage; Then let us take a ceremonious leave, And loving farewell, of our several friends.

Mar. The appellant in all duty greets your highness,

And craves to kiss your hand and take his leave.

K. Rich. We will descend, and fold him in our arms.

Cousin of Hereford, as thy cause is right, So be thy fortune in this royal fight! Farewell, my blood; which if to-day thou shed Lament we may, but not revenge thee dead.

Boling. O, let no noble eye profane a tear For me, if I be gored with Mowbray's spear; As confident, as is the falcon's flight Against a bird, do I with Mowbray fight. My loving lord [To Lord Marshal,] I take my leave of you;—

Of you, my noble cousin, Lord Aumerle;— Not sick, although I have to do with death; consequence of the murder of her husband, all the hospitality of plenty is at an end; 'the walls are unfurnished, the lodging rooms empty, and the offices unpeopled. All is solitude and silence; her groans are the only cheer that her guests can expect.'

4 The Duke of Norfolk was Earl Marshal of England; but being himself one of the combatants, the Duke of Surry, (Thomas Holland) officiated. Shakespeare has made a slight mistake by introducing that nobleman as a distinct person from the marshal in the present drama. Edward duke of Aumerle (so created by his cousin-german Richard II. in 1397, was the eldest son of Edward duke of York, fifth son of Edward III.) officiated as high constable at the lists of Coventry. He was killed at the battle of Agincourt, in 1415.

5 The duke of Hereford, being the appellant, entered the lists first, according to the historians.

6 'His succeeding issue' is the reading of the first folio: the quartos all read my.

But lusty, young, and cheerly drawing breath.—
Lo, as at English feasts, so I regret
The daintiest last, to make the end most sweet:
O thou, the earthly author of my blood,—

[To GAUNT.]

Whose youthful spirit, in me regenerate,
Doth with a twofold vigour lift me up
To reach at victory above my head,—
Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers;
And with thy blessings steel my lance's point,
That it may enter Mowbray's waxen coat,
And furbish new the name of John of Gaunt,
Even in the lusty 'haviour of his son.

Gaunt. Heaven in thy good cause make thee prosperous!

Be swift like lightning in the execution;
And let thy blows, doubly redoubled,
Fall like amazing thunder on the casque
Of thy adverse pernicious enemy:

Rouse up thy youthful blood, be valiant and live.

Boling. Mine innocency, and Saint George to thrive!

[He takes his seat.]

Nor. [Rising.] However heaven, or fortune, cast
my lot,

There lives or dies, true to King Richard's throne,
A loyal, just, and upright gentleman:

Never did captive with a freer heart

Cast off his chains of bondage, and embrace

His golden uncontrol'd enfranchisement,

More than my dancing soul doth celebrate

This feast of battle with mine adversary.—

Most mighty liege,—and my companion peers,—

Take from my mouth the wish of happy years:

As gentle and as jocund as to jest,¹

Go I to fight; Truth hath a quiet breast.

K. Rich. Farewell, my lord: securely I espy

Virtue with valour couched in thine eye.—

Order the trial, marshal, and begin.

[The King and the Lords return to their seats.]

Mar. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,

Receive thy lance; and God defend the right!

Boling. [Rising.] Strong as a tower in hope, I cry—amen.

Mar. Go bear this lance [To an Officer] to Thomas duke of Norfolk.

1 Her. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,

Stands here for God, his sovereign, and himself,

On pain to be found false and recreant,

To prove the duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray,

A traitor to his God, his king, and him,

And dares him to set forward to the fight.

2 Her. Hero standeth Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk,

On pain to be found false and recreant,

Both to defend himself, and to approve

Henry of Hereford, Lancaster, and Derby,

To God, his sovereign, and to him, disloyal;

Courageously, and with a free desire,

Attending but the signal to begin.

Mar. Sound, trumpets; and set forward, combatants, [A Charge sounded.]

Stay, the king hath thrown his warder² down.

K. Rich. Let them lay by their helmets and their spears,

And both return back to their chairs again:
Withdraw with us:—and let the trumpets sound,
While we return these dukes what we decree.—

[A long Flourish.]

Draw near, [To the Combatants.]

And list, what with our council we have done.

For that our kingdom's earth should not be soil'd

With that dear blood which it hath fostered;

And for our eyes do hate the dire aspect

Of civil³ wounds plough'd up with neighbours'

swords;

[And for we think the eagle-winged pride

Of sky-aspiring and ambitious thoughts,

With rival-hating envy, set you on

To wake our peace, which in our country's cradle

Draws the sweet infant breath of gentle sleep;—]

Which so rous'd up with boisterous untun'd drums,

With harsh resounding trumpets' dreadful bray,

And grating shock of wrathful iron arms,

Might from our quiet confines fright fair peace,

And make us wade even in our kindred's blood;—

Therefore, we banish you our territories:—

You, cousin Hereford, upon pain of death,

Till twice five summers have enrich'd our fields,

Shall not regret our fair dominions,

But tread the stranger paths of banishment.

Boling. Your will be done: This must my comfort be,——

That sun, that warms you here, shall shine on me;

And those his golden beams, to you here lent,

Shall point on me, and gild my banishment.

K. Rich. Norfolk, for thee remains a heavier doom,

Which I with some unwillingness pronounce:

The fly-slow⁴ hours shall not determinate

The dateless limit of thy dear exile;—

The hopeless word⁵ of—never to return

Breathe I against thee, upon pain of life.

Nor. A heavy sentence, my most sovereign liege,

And all unlook'd for from your highness' mouth:

A dearer merit;⁶ not so deep a main

As to be cast forth in the common air,

Have I deserved at your highness' hand.

The language I have learn'd these forty years,

My native English, now I must forego:

And now my tongue's use is to me no more,

Than an unstringed viol or a harp:

Or like a cunning instrument cas'd up,

Or, being open, put into his hands

That knows no touch to tune the harmony.

Within my mouth you have engao'd⁷ my tongue,

Doubly portcullis'd, with my teeth, and lips;

And dull, unfeeling, barren ignorance

Is made my gaoler to attend on me.

I am too old to fawn upon a nurse,

Too far in years to be a pupil now;

What is thy sentence then, but speechless death,

Which robs my tongue from breathing native breath?

K. Rich. It boots thee not to be compassionate;⁸

After our sentence plaining comes too late.

Nor. Then thus I turn me from my country's light,

To dwell in solemn shades of endless night.

[Retiring.]

which, in the present instance, he has rejected:—

¹ 'All fly-slow things with circumspect eyes.'

² Word, for sentence; any short phrase was called a word. Thus Ascham, in a Letter to Queen Elizabeth,

'Saying that one unpleasaunte word in that Patent, called "During pleasure," turned me after to great displeasure.'—Concise Papers.

³ As Shakspeare used merit, in this place, in the sense of reward, he frequently uses the word meed, which properly signifies reward, to express merit.

⁴ Compassionate is apparently here used in the sense of complaining, plaintive; but no other instance of the word in this sense has occurred to the commentators. May it not be an error of the press, for 'so pas-

1 To jest in old languages sometimes signified to play a part in a masque.

2 A warder was a kind of truncheon or staff carried by persons who presided at these single combats; the throwing down of which seems to have been a solemn act of prohibition to stay proceedings. A different movement of the warder had an opposite effect. In Drayton's Battle of Agincourt, Erpingham is represented throwing it up as a signal for a charge.

3 Capel's copy of the quarto edition of this play reads 'Of cruel wounds,' &c. Malone's copy of the same edition, and all the other editions, read 'Of civil wounds,' &c.

4 The five lines in brackets are omitted in the folio.

5 The old copies read 'fly-slow hours.' Pope reads
'fly-slow hours,' which has been admitted into the text, and conveys an image highly beautiful and just. It is however remarkable that Pope, in the fourth book of his Essay on Man, v. 226, has employed the epithet

K. Rich. Return again, and take an oath with thee.

Lay on our royal sword your banish'd hands;
Swear by the duty that you owe to heaven
(Our part therein we banish with yourselves,)
To keep the oath that we administer:—
You never shall (so help you truth and heaven!)
Embrace each other's love in banishment;
Nor never look upon each other's face;
Nor never write, regret, nor reconcile
This lowering tempest of your home-bred hate;
Nor never by advised¹ purpose meet,
To plot, contrive, or complot any ill,
'Gainst us, our state, our subjects, or our land.

Boling. I swear.

Nor. And I, to keep all this.

Boling. Norfolk, so far as to mine enemy;²—
By this time, had the king permitted us,
One of our souls had wander'd in the air,
Banish'd this frail sepulchre of our flesh,
As now our flesh is banish'd from this land:
Confess thy treasons, ere thou fly the realm;
Since thou hast far to go, bear not along
The clogging burden of a guilty soul.

Nor. No, Bolingbroke; if ever I were traitor,
My name be blotted from the book of life,
And I from heaven banish'd, as from hence!
But what thou art, heaven, thou, and I do know;
And all too soon, I fear, the king shall rue.—
Farewell, my liege:—Now no way can I stray;
Saw back to England, all the world's my way.

[*Exit.*³

K. Rich. Uncle, even in the glasses of thine eyes
I see thy grieved heart: thy sad aspect
Hath from the number of his banish'd years
Pluck'd four away;—Six frozen winters spent, Return [To Boling.] with welcome home from banishment.

Boling. How long a time lies in one little word!
Four lagging winters, and four wanton springs,
End in a word; Such is the breath of kings.

Gaunt. I thank my liege, that, in regard of me,
He shortens four years of my son's exile:
But little vantage shall I reap thereby;
For, ere the six years, that he hath to spend,
Can change their moons, and bring their times about,

My oil-dried lamp, and time-bewasted light,
Shall be extinct with age, and endless night;
My inch of taper will be burnt and done,
And blindfold death not let me see my son.

K. Rich. Why, uncle, thou hast many years to live.

Gaunt. But not a minute, king, that thou canst give:

Shorten my days thou canst with sullen sorrow,
And pluck nights from me, but not lend a morrow:⁴
Thou canst help time to furrow me with age,
But stop no wrinkle in his pilgrimage;
Thy word is current with him for my death;
But, dead, thy kingdom cannot buy my breath.

K. Rich. Thy son is banish'd upon good advice,⁵ Whereto thy tongue a party⁶ verdict gave;
Why at our justice seem'st thou then to lower?

Gaunt. Things sweet to taste, prove in digestion sour.

You urg'd me as a judge; but I had rather,
You would have bid me argue like a father:—
O, had it been a stranger, not my child,
To smooth his fault I should have been more mild:⁷
A partial slander⁸ sought I to avoid,
And in the sentence my own life destroy'd.
Alas, I look'd, when some of you should say
I was too strict, to make mine own away;
But you gave leave to my unwilling tongue,
Against my will, to do myself this wrong.

K. Rich. Cousin, farewell;—and, uncle, bid him so;

Six years we banish him, and he shall go.

[Flourish. Exit K. Rich. and Train.

Aum. Cousin, farewell; what presence must not know,

From where you do remain, let paper show.

Mar. My lord, no leave take I: for I will ride,
As far as land will let me, by your side.

Gaunt. O, to what purpose dost thou hoard thy words,

That thou return'st no greeting to thy friends?

Boling. I have too few to take my leave of you,
When the tongue's office should be prodigal
To breathe the abundant dour of the heart.

Gaunt. Thy grief is but thy absence for a time.

Boling. Joy absent, grief is present for that time.

Gaunt. What is six winters? they are quickly gone.

Boling. To men in joy; but grief makes one hour ten.

Gaunt. Call it a travel that thou tak'st for pleasure.

Boling. My heart will sigh, when I miscall it so,
Which finds it an enforced pilgrimage.

Gaunt. The sullen passage of thy weary steps
Esteem a foil, wherein thou art to set
The precious jewel of thy home-return.

Boling. Nay, rather, every tedious stride I make⁹

Will but remember me, what a deal of world
I wander from the jewels that I love.

Must I not serve a long apprenticeship
To foreign passages; and in the end,
Having my freedom, boast of nothing else,
But that I was a journeyman to grief?

Gaunt. All places that the eye of heaven¹⁰ visits,
Are to a wise man ports and happy havens
Teach thy necessity to reason thus;
There is no virtue like necessity.

Think not the king did banish thee;
But thou the king:¹¹ Woe doth the heavier sit,
Where it perceives it is but faintly borne.

Go, say—I sent thee forth to purchase honour,
And not—the king exil'd thee: or suppose,
Devouring pestilence hangs in our air,
And thou art flying to a fresher clime.

Look, what thy soul holds dear, imagine it
To lie that way thou go'st, not whence thou com'st:
Suppose the singing birds, musicians;
The grass whereon thou tread'st, the presence
strew'd;¹²

The flowers, fair ladies; and thy steps, no more
Than a delightful measure, or a dance:
For gnarling sorrow hath less power to bite
The man that mocks at it, and sets it light.

² The first folio reads 'So fare.' This line seems to be addressed by way of caution to Mowbray, lest he should think that Bolingbroke was about to conciliate him.

³ The duke of Norfolk went to Venice, 'where for thought and melancholy he deceased.'—Holinshed.

⁴ It is a matter of very melancholy consideration, that all human advantages confer more power of doing evil than good.

⁵ Consideration.

⁶ Had a part or share in it.

⁷ This couplet is wanting in the folio.

⁸ I. e. the reproach of partiality.

⁹ This speech and that which follows are not in the folio.

¹⁰ I. e. the sun.

¹¹ Shakespeare probably remembered Euphues' exhortation to Bottonio to take his exile patiently. 'Nature hath given to man a country no more than she hath a house, or lands, or livings. Socrates would neither call himself an Athenian, neither a Grecian, but a citizen of the world. Plato would never accept him banished, that had the sunne, fire, ayre, water, and earth, that he had before; where he felt the winter's blast, and the summer's blaze; where the same sunne and same moone shined; whereby he noted that every place was a country to a wise man, and all parts a palace to a quiet mind.'—When it was cast in Diogenes' teeth, that the Sinoponetes had banished him from Pontus; Yea, said he, I them of Diogenes.'

¹² We have other allusions to the practice of strewing rushes over the floor of the presence chamber in Shakespeare.

Boling. O, who can hold a fire in his hand,
By thinking on the frosty Caucasus?
Or cloy 'he hungry edge of appetite,
By bare imagination of a feast?
Or wallow naked in December snow,
By thinking on fantastic summer's heat?
O, no! the apprehension of the good,
Gives but the greater feeling to the worse:
Fell sorrow's tooth doth never rankle more,
Than when it bites, but lanceth not the sore.

Gaunt. Come, come, my son, I'll bring thee on thy way:

Had I thy youth, and cause, I would not stay.

Boling. Then, England's ground, farewell; sweet soil, adieu;

My mother, and my nurse, that bears me yet!

Where'er I wander, boast of this I can,—

Though banish'd, yet a trueborn Englishman.²

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. The same. A Room in the King's Castle. Enter KING RICHARD, BAGOT, and GREEN; AUMERLE following.

K. Rich. We did observe.³—Cousin Aumerle, How far brought you high Hereford on his way?

Aum. I brought high Hereford, if you call him so, But to the next highway, and there I left him.

K. Rich. And say, what store of parting tears were shed?

Aum. 'Faith, none by⁴ me: except the north-east wind,

Which then blew bitterly against our faces, Awak'd the sleeping rheum; and so, by chance, Did grace our hollow parting with a tear.

K. Rich. What said our cousin, when you parted with him?

Aum. Farewell:

And, for my heart disdain'd that my tongue Should so profane the word, that taught me craft To counterfeit oppression of such grief, That words seemed buried in my sorrow's grave. Marry, would the word farewell have lengthen'd hours,

And added years to his short banishment, He should have had a volume of farewells; But, since it would not, he had none of me.

K. Rich. He is our cousin, cousin; but 'tis doubt, When time shall call him home from banishment, Whether our kinsman come to see his friends.

Ourselves, and Bushy,⁵ Bagot here, and Green, Observ'd his courtship to the common people:—

How he did seem to dive into their hearts,

With humble and familiar courtesy;

What reverence he did throw away on slaves;

Wooing poor craftsmen, with the craft of smiles,

And patient underbearing of his fortune,

As 'twere, to banish their affects with him.

Off goes his bonnet to an oyster-wench;

A brace of draymen bid—God speed him well,

And had the tribute of his supple knee,⁶

With—Thanks, my countrymen, my loving friends;

1 There is a passage resembling this in the fifth book of Cicero's Tusculan Questions, which were translated and published by John Dolman, in 1561. There is also something which might serve for a hint in Euphues.

2 Dr. Johnson thought that the First Act should end here.

3 The king here addressed Green and Bagot, who, we may suppose, had been talking to him of Bolingbroke's 'courtship to the common people,' at the time of his departure. 'Yes,' says Richard, 'we did observe it.'

4 The first folio and the quarto of 1597 read 'Faith, none for me.' The emendation was made in the folio, 1632.

5 The earlier quarto copies read, 'Ourselves and Bushy,' and no more. The folio:

'Ourselves, and Bushy here, Bagot, and Greene.'

In the quarto, the stage-direction says, 'Enter the King, with Bushie,' &c.; but in the folio, 'Enter the King, Aumerle,' &c. because it was observed that Bushy comes in afterward. On this account we have adopted a transposition made in the quarto of 1634.

As were our England in reversion his,
And he our subjects' next degree in hope.⁷

Green. Well, he is gone; and with him go these thoughts.

Now for the rebels, which stand out in Ireland Expedient⁸ manage must be made, my liege; Ere further leisure yield them further means For their advantage, and your highness' loss.

K. Rich. We will ourselves in person to this war

And, for⁹ our coffers—with too great a court,

And liberal largess—are grown somewhat light,

We are enforc'd to farm our royal realm;

The revenue whereof shall furnish us

For our affairs in hand: If that come short,

Our substitutes at home shall have blank charters;

Whereto, when they shall know what men are rich,

They shall subscribe them for large sums of gold,

And send them after to supply our wants;

For we will make for Ireland presently.

Enter BUSHY.

Bushy, what news?

Bushy. Old John of Gaunt is grievous sick, my lord;

Suddenly taken; and hath sent post-haste,

To entreat your majesty to visit him.

K. Rich. Where lies he?

Bushy. At Ely-house.

K. Rich. Now put it, heaven, in his physician's mind,

To help him to his grave immediately!

The lining of his coffers shall make coats

To deck our soldiers for these Irish wars.—

Come, gentlemen, let's all go visit him:

'Pray God, we may make haste, and come too late.

[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. London. A Room in Ely-house.

GAUNT on a Couch; the DUKE OF YORK,¹⁰ and others standing by him.

Gaunt. Will the king come? that I may breathe my last

In wholesome counsel to his unstaid youth.

York. Vex not yourself, nor strive not with your breath;

For all in vain comes counsel to his ear.

Gaunt. O, but they say, the tongues of dying men

Enforce attention, like deep harmony:

Where words are scarce, they are seldom spent in vain.

For they breathe truth, that breathe their words in pain.

He, that no more must say, is listen'd more

Than they whom youth and ease have taught to glose;¹¹

More are men's ends mark'd, than their lives before:

The setting sun, and music at the close,¹²

As the last taste of sweets, is sweetest last;

Writ in remembrance, more than things long past:

6 To illustrate this, it should be remembered that courtesying (the act of reverence now confined to women) was anciently practised by men.

7 'Spes altera Rome.'—Virg.

8 Shakespeare often uses expedient for expeditions, but here its ordinary signification of fit, proper, will suit the context equally well.

9 i. e. cause.

10 Edmund duke of York was the fifth son of Edward III. and was born, in 1441, at Langley, near St. Albans. Herts; from whence he had his surname. 'He was of an indolent disposition, a lover of pleasure, and averse to business; easily prevailed upon to lie still and consult his own quiet, and never acting with spirit upon any occasion.'—Louth's William of Wykeham, p. 205.

11 To insinuate, to lie, to flatter.

12 'This I suppose to be a musical term,' says Steevens. So in Lingua, 1607:—

'I dare engage my ears the close will jar.' Surely this is a supererogatory conclusion. Shakespeare evidently means no more than that music is sweetest in the close, or when the last sweet sounds rest on the ear.

Though Richard my life's counsel would not hear,
My death's sad tale may yet undeaf his ear.

York. No; it is stopp'd with other flattering sounds,

As, praises of his state: then, there are found
Lascivious metres; to whose venom sound
The open ear of youth doth always listen:
Report of fashions in proud Italy;¹
Whose manners still our tardy apish nation
Limps after, in base imitation,
Where doth the world thrust forth a vanity,
(So it be new, there's no respect how vile,)
That is not quickly buzz'd into his ears?
Then all too late comes counsel to be heard,
Where will doth mutiny with wit's regard.²
Direct not him, whose way himself will choose;
³'Tis breath thou lack'st, and that breath wilt thou lose.

Gaunt. Methinks, I am a prophet new inspir'd;
And thus, expiring, do foretell of him:
His rash⁴ fierce blaze of riot cannot last;
For violent fires soon burn out themselves:
Small showers last long, but sudden storms are short;

He tires betimes, that spurs too fast betimes;
With eager feeding, food doth choke the feeder:
Light vanity, insatiate cormorant,
Consuming means, soon preys upon itself.
This royal throne of kings, this sceptred isle,
This earth of majesty, this seat of Mars,
This other Eden, demi-paradise;
This fortress, built by nature for herself,
Against infection,⁴ and the hand of war;
This happy breed of men, this little world;
This precious stone set in the silver sea,
Which serves it in the office of a wall,
Or as a moat defensive to a house,
Against the envy of less happier lands;
This blessed plot, this earth, this realm, this England,
This nurse, this teeming womb of royal kings,
Fear'd by their breed,⁵ and famous by their birth,
Renowned for their deeds as far from home,
(For Christian service, and true chivalry,)
As is the sepulchre in stubborn Jewry,
Of the world's ransom, blessed Mary's son:
This land of such dear souls, this dear dear land,
Dear for her reputation through the world,
Is now leas'd out, (I die pronouncing it,)
Like to a tenement, or pelting⁶ farm:
England, bound in with the triumphant sea,
Whose rocky shore beats back the envious siege
Of watery Neptune, is now bound in with shame,
With inky blots, and rotten parchment bonds;
That England, that was wont to conquer others,
Hath made a shameful conquest of itself:
O, would the scandal vanish with my life,
How happy then were my ensuing death!

*Enter KING RICHARD, and Queen;*⁷ *AUMERLE, BUSHY, GREEN, BAGOT, ROSS,*⁸ *and WILLOUGHBY.*⁹

York. The king is come: deal mildly with his youth;
For young hot colts, being rag'd,¹⁰ do rage the more.

lighted ear. But Steevens's soul, like that of his great coadjutor, does not seem to have been attuned to harmony. The context might, however, have shown him how superfluous his supposition was; and I have to apologize for diverting the attention of the reader from this beautiful passage for a moment.

1 The poet has charged the times of King Richard II. with a folly not perhaps known then, but very frequent in his own time, and much lamented by the wisest of our ancestors.

2 Where the will rebels against the notices of the understanding.

3 i. e. hasty, violent.

4 Johnson raised a doubt whether we should not read invasion here. Farmer and Malone, upon the authority of a misprint in Allot's England's Parnassus, where this passage is quoted, 'Against intension,' &c. propose to read infection, a word of their own coinage. Malone's long note proves nothing: he thinks that we could not Queen. How fares our noble uncle, Lancaster?

K. Rich. What comfort, man? How is't with aged Gaunt?

Gaunt. O, how that name befits my composition!
Old Gaunt, indeed; and gaunt¹¹ in being old:
Within me grief hath kept a tedious fast;
And who abstains from meat, that is not gaunt?
For sleeping England long time have I watch'd;
Watching breeds leanness, leanness is all gaunt:
The pleasure, that some fathers feed upon,
Is my strict fast, I mean—my children's looks;
And, therein fasting, hast thou made me gaunt:
Gaunt am I for the grave, gaunt as a grave,
Whose hollow womb inhabits nought but bones.

K. Rich. Can sick men play so nicely with their names?

Gaunt. No, misery makes sport to mock itself:
Since thou dost seek to kill my name in me,
I mock my name, great king, to flatter thee.

K. Rich. Should dying men flatter with those that live?

Gaunt. No, no; men living flatter those that die.

K. Rich. Thou, now a dying, say'st—thou flatter'st me.

Gaunt. O, no; thou diest, though I the sicker be.

K. Rich. I am in health, I breathe, and see thee ill.

Gaunt. Now, He that made me, knows I see thee ill;

Ill in myself to see, and in thee seeing ill.
Thy deathbed is no less than thy land,
Wherein thou liest in reputation sick:
And thou, too careless patient as thou art,
Commit'st thy anointed body to the cure
Of those physicians that first wounded thee:
A thousand flatterers sit within thy crown,
Whose compass is no bigger than thy head;
And yet, incaged in so small a verge,
The waste is no whit lesser than thy land;
O, had thy grandsire, with a prophetic eye,
Seen how his son's son should destroy his sons,
From forth thy reach he would have laid thy shame,
Deposing thee before thou wert possess'd,
Which art possess'd¹² now to depose thyself.
Why, cousin, wert thou regent of the world,
It were a shame to let this land by lease:
But, for thy world, enjoying but this land,
Is it not more than shame, to shame it so!
Landlord of England art thou now, not king.
Thy state of law is bondsman to the law;¹³
And thou—

K. Rich. —a lunatic lean-witted fool,
Presuming on an ague's privilege,

ceive no other infection from abroad than the plague; but it is evident that the poet may allude to the infection of vicious manners and customs. It is true that infestation was in use for 'a troubling, molesting, or disturbing;' but as all the old copies read infection, there seems to be no sufficient reason for disturbing the text.

5 i. e. by reason of their breed. The quarto of 1599 reads thus:—

'Fear'd by their breed, and famous for their birth.'

6 'In this 22d yeare of King Richard, the common fame ranne that the king had letten to farne the realme unto Sir William Scrope, earle of Wiltshire, and then treasurer of England, to Syr John Bushey, Sir John Bagot, and Sir Henry Greene, Knights.'—Fabian. Pelting is paltry, pitiful, petty.

7 Shakespeare has deviated from historical truth in the introduction of Richard's queen as a woman; for Anne, his first wife, was dead before the period at which the commencement of the play is laid; and Isabella, his second wife, was a child at the time of his death.

8 i. e. William Lord Ross, of Hamlake, afterwards lord treasurer to Henry IV.

9 William Lord Willoughby, of Eresby.

10 Ritson proposes to read:—

'—being rein'd, do rage the more.'

11 Meagre, thin.

12 Mad.

13 'Thy legal state, that rank in the state and these large desmesnes, which the constitution allotted thee, are now bondslave to the law; being subject to the same legal restrictions as every ordinary pelting farm that has been let on lease.'

Dar'st with thy frozen admonition
Make pale our cheek; chasing the royal blood,
With fury, from his native residence.
Now by my seat's right royal majesty,
Wert thou not brother to great Edward's son,
This tongue that runs so roundly in thy head,
Should run thy head from thy unreverent shoulders.

Gaunt. O, spare me not, my brother Edward's son,

For that I was his father Edward's son;
That blood already, like the pelican,
Hast thou tapp'd out, and drunkenly carous'd:
My brother Gloster, plain well-meaning soul,
(Whom fair befall in heaven 'mongst happy souls!)
May be a precedent and witness good,
That thou respect'st not spilling Edward's blood:
Join with the present sickness that I have,
And thy unkindness be like crooked age,
To crop at once a too-long wither'd flower.
Live in thy shame, but die not shame with thee!—
These words hereafter thy tormentors be—
Convey me to my bed, then to my grave:
Love they¹ to live, that love and honour have.

[Exit, borne out by his Attendants.

K. Rich. And let them die, that age and sullens have;

For both hast thou, and both become the grave.

York. 'Beseech your majesty, impute his words
To wayward sickness and age in him:
He loves you, on my life, and holds you dear
As Harry duke of Hereford, were he here.

K. Rich. Right; you say true: as Hereford's love, so his:

As theirs, so mine; and all be as it is.

Enter NORTHUMBERLAND.

North. My liege, old Gaunt commends him to your majesty.

K. Rich. What says he?

North. Nay, nothing; all is said:

His tongue is now a stringless instrument;
Words, life, and all, old Lancaster hath spent.

York. Be York the next that must be hankrupt so!
Though death be poor, it ends a mortal woe.

K. Rich. The ripest fruit first falls, and so doth he;
His time is spent, our pilgrimage must be:²

So much for that.—Now for our Irish wars:
We must supplant those rough rug-headed kernes;³

Which live like venom, where no venom else,
But only they, hath privilege to live.⁴

And for these great affairs do ask some charge,
Towards our assistance, we do seize to us

The plate, coin, revenues, and moveables,
Whereof our uncle Gaunt did stand possess'd.

York. How long shall I be patient? Ah, how long
Shall tender duty make me suffer wrong?

Not Gloster's death, nor Hereford's banishment,
Not Gaunt's rebukes, nor England's private wrongs,
Nor the prevention of poor Bolingbroke

About his marriage,⁵ nor my own disgrace,
Have ever made me sour my patient cheek,

Or bend one wrinkle on my sovereign's face.—
I am the last of noble Edward's sons,

Of whom thy father, prince of Wales, was first;
In war, was never lion rag'd more fierce;

In peace was never gentle lamb more mild,
Than was that young and princely gentleman:

His face thou hast, for even so look'd he,
Accomplish'd with the number of thy hours;⁶

But, when he frown'd, it was against the French,
And not against his friends: his noble hand

Did win what he did spend, and spent not that

Which his triumphant father's hand had won:

His hands were guilty of no kindred's blood,
But bloody with the enemies of his kin.

O, Richard! York is too far gone with grief,
Or else he never would compare between.

K. Rich. Why, uncle, what's the matter?

York.

O, my liege,
Pardon me, if you please; if not, I, pleas'd

Not to be pardon'd, am content withal.

Seek you to seize, and gripe into your hands,

The royalties and rights of banish'd Hereford?

Is not Gaunt dead? and doth not Hereford live?

Was not Gaunt just? and is not Harry true?

Did not the one deserve to have an heir?

Is not his heir a well-deserving son?

Take Hereford's rights away, and take from time

His charters, and his customary rights;

Let not to-morrow then ensue to-day;

Be not thyself, for how art thou a king,

But by fair sequence and succession?

Now, afore God (God forbid, I say true!)

If you do wrongfully seize Hereford's rights,

Call in the letters patents that he hath

By his attorneys-general to sue

His livery,⁷ and deny his offer'd homage,

You pluck a thousand dangers on your head,

You lose a thousand well-disposed hearts,

And prick my tender patience to those thoughts

Which honour and allegiance cannot think.

K. Rich. Think what you will; we seize into our hands

His plate, his goods, his money, and his lands.

York. I'll not be by the while; My liege, farewell:

What will ensue hereof, there's none can tell;

But by bad courses may be understood,

That their events can never fall out good. [Exit.

K. Rich. Go, Bushy, to the earl of Wiltshire straight;

Bid him repair to us to Ely-house,

To see this business: To-morrow next

We will for Ireland; and 'tis time, I trow;

And we create, in absence of myself,

Our uncle York lord governor of England,

For he is just, and always lov'd us well.—

Come on, our queen: to-morrow must we part;

Be merry, for our time of stay is short. [Flourish

[Exeunt, King, Queen, Bushy, Aumerle

GREEN, and BAGOT.

North. Well, lords, the duke of Lancaster is dead

Ross. And living too; for now his son is duke.

Will. Barely in title, not in revenue.

North. Richly in both, if justice had her right.

Ross. My heart is great; but it must break with silence,

Ere't be disburden'd with a liberal tongue.

North. Nay, speak thy mind; and let him ne'er speak more,

That speaks thy words again, to do thee harm!

Will. Tends that thou would'st speak, to the duke of Hereford?

If it be so, out with it boldly, man;

Quick is mine ear to hear of good towards him

Ross. No good at all, that I can do for him;

Unless you call it good to pity him,

Bereft and gelded of his patrimony.

North. Now, afore heaven, 'tis shame, such wrongs are borne,

In him a royal prince, and many more

Of noble blood in this declining land.

The king is not himself, but basely led

1 i. e. let them love to live, &c.

2 That is, 'our pilgrimage is yet to come.'

3 Kernes were Irish peasantry, serving as light-armed foot soldiers. Shakespeare makes York say, in the second part of King Henry VI. that Cade, when in Ireland, used to disguise himself as a shag-haired crafty kerne.

4 The kerne is an ordinary foot soldier, according to Stanithurst; kerne (highyren) signifieth a shower of hell, because they are taken for no better than rake-hells, or the devil's black-garde.—Description of Ireland, ch. 8, fol. 28.

5 Alluding to the idea that no venomous reptiles live in Ireland.

5 When the duke of Hereford went into France, after his banishment, he was honourably entertained at that court, and would have obtained in marriage the only daughter of the duke of Berry, uncle to the French king, had not Richard prevented the match.

6 i. e. when he was of thy age.

7 On the death of every person who held by knight's service, his heir, if under age, became a ward of the king's; but if of age, he had a right to sue out a writ of ouster le main, i. e. livery, that the king's hand might be taken off, and the land delivered to him. To deny his offer'd homage was to refuse to admit the homage by which he was to hold his lands.

8 Free.

By flatterers; and what they will inform,
Merely in hate 'gainst any of us all,
That will the king severely prosecute
'Gainst us, our lives, our children, and our heirs.

Ross. The commons hath he pill'd with grievous taxes,

And quite lost their hearts: the nobles hath he fin'd
For ancient quarrels, and quite lost their hearts.

Willo. And daily new exactions are devis'd;
As blanks,² benevolences, and I wot not what:
But what, o' God's name, doth become of this?

North. Wars have not wasted it, for warr'd he hath not,

But basely yielded upon compromise
That which his ancestors achiev'd with blows:
More hath he spent in peace, than they in wars.

Ross. The earl of Wiltshire hath the realm in farm.

Willo. The king's grown bankrupt, like a broken man.

North. Reproach, and dissolution, hangeth over him.

Ross. He hath not money for these Irish wars,
His burdensome taxations notwithstanding,
But by the robbing of the banish'd duke.

North. His noble kinsman; most degenerate king!

But, lords, we hear this fearful tempest sing,³
Yet seek no shelter to avoid the storm:

We see the wind sit sore upon our sails,
And yet we strike not, but securely perish.⁴

Ross. We see the very wreck that we must suffer;
And unavoids is the danger now,
For suffering so the causes of our wreck.

North. Not so; even through the hollow eyes of death,

I spy life peering; but I dare not say
How near the tidings of our comfort is.

Willo. Nay, let us share thy thoughts, as thou dost ours.

Ross. Be confident to speak, Northumberland:
We three are but thyself; and, speaking so,
Thy words are but as thoughts; therefore, be bold.

North. Then thus:—I have from Port le Blanc, a bay

In Brittany, receiv'd intelligence,
That Harry Hereford, Reignold Lord Cobham,
[The son of Richard earl of Arundel],⁵

That late broke from the duke of Exeter,
His brother, archbishop late of Canterbury,
Sir Thomas Erpingham, Sir John Ramston,
Sir John Norbery, Sir Robert Waterton, and Francis Quaint,—

All these well furnish'd by the duke of Bretagne,
With eight tall⁶ ships, three thousand men of war,
Are making hither with all due expedience,⁷
And shortly mean to touch our northern shore:
Perhaps, they had ere this; but that they stay
The first departing of the king for Ireland.
If then we shall shake off our slavish yoke,

1 Pillaged.

2 Stow records that Richard II. 'compelled all the religious, gentlemen, and commons, to set their seals to blanks, to the end he might, if it pleased him, oppress them severally, or all at once; some of the commons paid him 1000 marks, some 1000 pounds,' &c.

3 So in the Tempest:—

—another storm brewing, I hear it sing in the wind.

4 'And yet we strike not our sails, but perish by too great confidence in our security:' this is another Latinism. Securely is used in the sense of securus.

5 The line in brackets, which was necessary to complete the sense, has been supplied upon the authority of Holinshed. Something of a similar import must have been omitted by accident in the old copies.

6 Stout.

7 Expedition.

8 When the wing feathers of a hawk were dropped or forced out by any accident, it was usual to supply as many as were deficient. This operation was called 'to imp a hawk.' It is often used metaphorically, as in this instance. The word is said to come from the Saxon impan, to graft, or inoculate.

9 Gilding.

10 It has been shown in a former note that perspective

Imp⁸ out our drooping country's broken wing,
Redeem from broking pawn the blemish'd crown,
Wipe off the dust that hides our sceptre's gilt,⁹
And make high majesty look like itself,
Away, with me, in post to Ravenspurge:
But if you faint, as fearing to do so,
Stay, and be secret, and myself will go.

Ross. To horse, to horse! urge doubts to them that fear.

Willo. Hold out my horse, and I will first be there. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter QUEEN, BUSHY, and BAGOT.

Bushy. Madam, your majesty is too much sad:
You promis'd, when you parted with the king,
To lay aside life-harming heaviness,
And entertain a cheerful disposition.

Queen. To please the king, I did; to please myself,

I cannot do it; yet I know no cause

Why I should welcome such a guest as grief,
Save bidding farewell to so sweet a guest

As my sweet Richard: Yet, again, methinks,
Some unborn sorrow, ripe in fortune's womb,
Is coming towards me; and my inward soul
With nothing trembles: at something it grieves,
More than with parting from my lord the king.

Bushy. Each substance of a grief hath twenty shadows,

Which show like grief itself, but are not so:
For sorrow's eye, glazed with blinding tears,
Divides one thing entire to many objects;
Like perspectives,¹⁰ which, rightly gaz'd upon,
Show nothing but confusion; ey'd awry,
Distinguish form: so your sweet majesty
Looking awry upon your lord's departure,
Finds shapes of grief, more than himself, to wail;
Which, look'd on as it is, is nought but shadows
Of what it is not. Then, thrice-gracious queen,
More than your lord's departure weep not; more's not seen:

Or if it be, 'tis with false sorrow's eye,
Which, for things true, weeps things imaginary.

Queen. It may be so; but yet my inward soul
Persuades me, it is otherwise: Howe'er it be,
I cannot but be sad; so heavy sad,
As,—though, in thinking, on no thought I think,¹¹—
Makes me with heavy nothing faint and shrink.

Bushy. 'Tis nothing but conceit,¹² my gracious lady.

Queen. 'Tis nothing less: conceit is still deriv'd
From some fore-father grief; mine is not so;
For nothing hath begot my something grief;
Or something hath the nothing that I grieve:
'Tis in reversion that I do possess;
But what it is, that is not yet known; what I cannot name; 'tis nameless woe, I wot.

meant optical glasses, to assist the sight in any way. Mr. Henley says that 'the perspectives here mentioned were round crystal glasses, the convex surface of which was cut into faces like those of the rose-diamond: the concave left uniformly smooth; which if placed as here represented, would exhibit the different appearances described by the poet.' But it may have reference to that kind of optical delusion called anamorphosis, which is a perspective projection of a picture, so that at one point of view it shall appear a confused mass, or different to what it really is, in another, an exact and regular representation. Sometimes it is made to appear confused to the naked eye, and regular when viewed in a glass or mirror of a certain form. 'A picture of a chancellor of France, presented to the common beholder a multitude of little faces; but if one did look at it through a perspective, there appeared only the single portraiture of the chancellor.'—Humane Industry, 1651.

11 The old copies have 'on thinking,' which is an evident error: we should read, 'As though in thinking;' i. e. 'though musing, I have no idea of calamity.' The involuntary and unaccountable depression of the mind which every one has sometimes felt, is here very forcibly described.

12 Fanciful conception.

Enter GREEN.

Green. God save your majesty!—and well met, gentlemen:—

I hope, the king is not yet shipp'd for Ireland.

Queen. Why hop'st thou so? 'tis better hope, he is; For his designs crave haste, his haste good hope; Then wherefore dost thou hope, he is not shipp'd?

Green. That he, our hope, might have retir'd his power,¹

And driven into despair an enemy's hope,
Who strongly hath set footing in this land:
The banish'd Bolingbroke repeals himself,
And with uplifted arms is safe arriv'd
At Ravensburg.

Queen. Now, God in heaven forbid!

Green. O, madam, 'tis too true: and that is worse,—

The Lord Northumberland, his young son Henry Percy,

The lords of Ross, Beaumont, and Willoughby,
With all their powerful friends, are fled to him.

Bushy. Why have you not proclaim'd Northumberland,

And all the rest of the revolted faction, traitors?

Green. We have: whereon the earl of Worcester Hath broke his staff, resign'd his stewardship,
And all the household servants fled with him
To Bolingbroke.

Queen. So, Green, thou art the midwife to my woe,

And Bolingbroke my sorrow's dismal heir:²
Now hath my soul brought forth her prodigy;
And I, a gasping new-deliver'd mother,
Have woe to woe, sorrow to sorrow join'd.

Bushy. Despair not, madam.

Queen. Who shall hinder me?

I will despair, and be at enmity
With cozening hope; he is a flatterer,
A parasite, a keeper-back of death,
Who gently would dissolve the bands of life,
Which false hope lingers in extremity.

Enter YORK.

Green. Here comes the duke of York.

Queen. With signs of war about his aged neck;
O, full of careful business are his looks!—
Uncle,

For heaven's sake, speak comfortable words.

York. Should I do so, I should belie my thoughts:
Comfort's in heaven; and we are on the earth,
Where nothing lives but crosses, care, and grief.
Your husband he is gone to save far off,
Whilst others come to make him lose at home:
Here am I left to underprop his land;
Who, weak with age, cannot support myself:—
Now comes the sick hour that his surfeit made;
Now shall he try his friends that flatter'd him.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. My lord, your son was gone before I came.

York. He was?—Why, so!—go all which way it will!—

The nobles they are fled, the commons they are cold,

And will, I fear, revolt on Hereford's side.—
Sirrah, get thee to Plashy, to my sister Gloster;
Bid her send me presently a thousand pound:—
Hold, take my ring.

Serv. My lord, I had forgot to tell your lordship:
To-day, as I came by, I called there;
But I shall grieve you to report the rest.

York. What is it, knave?

1 Retir'd, i. e. drawn it back; a French sense.

2 The first quarto, 1597, reads:—

'And all the rest of the revolted faction, traitors?'

The folio, and the quarto of 1598 and 1609:—

'And the rest of the revolting faction, traitors?'

3 The queen had said before, that 'some unborn sorrow, ripe in fortune's womb, was coming toward her.' She talks afterward of her unknown griefs 'being begotten'; she calls Green 'the midwife of her woe'; and then means to say in the same metaphorical style, that the arrival of Bolingbroke was the dismal offspring that her foreboding sorrow was big of; which she expresses Serv. An hour before I came, the duchess died.

York. God for his mercy! what a tide of woes
Comes rushing on this woeful land at once!
I know not what to do:—I would to God
(So my untruth⁴ had not provok'd him to it,)
The king had cut off my head with my brother's.⁵—
What, are there no posts despatch'd for Ireland?
How shall we do for money for these wars?
Come, sister,⁶—cousin, I would say: pray, pardon me.—

Go, fellow [To the Servant.] get thee home, provide some carts,

And bring away the armour that is there.—

[Exit Servant.]

Gentlemen, will you go muster men? if I know

How, or which way, to order these affairs,
Thus disorderly thrust into my hands,
Never believe me. Both are my kinsmen;
The one's my sovereign, whom both my oath
And duty bids defend; the other again,
Is my kinsman, whom the king hath wrong'd;
Whom conscience and my kindred bids to right.
Well, somewhat we must do.—Come, cousin, I'll Dispose of you:—Gentlemen, go, muster up your
men,

And meet me presently at Berkley-castle.

I should to Plashy too;—

But time will not permit:—All is uneven,

And every thing is left at six and seven.

[Exit YORK and QUEEN.]

Bushy. The wind sits fair for news to go to Ireland,
But none returns. For us to levy power,
Proportionable to the enemy,
Is all impossible.

Green. Besides, our nearness to the king in love,
Is near the hate of those love not the king.

Bagot. And that's the wavering commons: for their love

Lies in their purses; and whoso empties them,
By so much fills their hearts with deadly hate.

Bushy. Wherein the king stands generally condemn'd.

Bagot. If judgment lie in them, then so do we,
Because we ever have been near the king.

Green. Well, I'll for refuge straight to Bristol Castle;

The earl of Wiltshire is already there.

Bushy. Thither will I with you: for little office
Will the hateful commons perform for us;
Except like curs to tear us all to pieces.—
Will you go along with us?

Bagot. No; I'll to Ireland to his majesty.

Farewell: if heart's presages be not vain,
We three here part, that ne'er shall meet again.

Bushy. That as York thrives to beat back Bolingbroke.

Green. Alas, poor duke! the task he undertakes
Is—numb'ring sands, and drinking oceans dry;
Where one on his side fights, thousands will fly.

Bushy. Farewell at once; for once, for all, and ever.

Green. Well, we may meet again.

Bagot. I fear me, never.
[Exit.]

SCENE III. The Wilds in Glostershire. Enter BOLINGBROKE and NORTHUMBERLAND, with Forces.

Boling. How far is it, my lord, to Berkley now?

North. Believe me, noble lord,

I am a stranger here in Glostershire.

These high wild hills, and rough uneven ways, by calling him her 'sorrow's dismal heir,' and explains more fully in the following line:—

'Now hath my soul brought forth her prodigy.'

4 Disloyalty, treachery.

5 Not one of York's brothers had his head cut off, either by the king or any one else. Gloster, to whose death he probably alludes, was smothered between two beds at Calais.

6 This is one of Shakspeare's touches of nature. York is talking to the queen, his cousin, but the recent death of his sister is uppermost in his mind.

Draw out our miles, and make them wearisome :
 And yet your fair discourse hath been as sugar,
 Making the hard way sweet and delectable.
 But, I bethink me, what a weary way
 From Ravenspurge to Cotswold, will be found
 In Ross and Willoughby, wanting your company :
 Which, I protest, hath very much beguil'd
 The tediousness and process of my travel :
 But theirs is sweeten'd with the hope to have
 The present benefit which I possess :
 And hope to joy,¹ is little less in joy,
 Than hope enjoy'd : by this the weary lords
 Shall make their way seem short ; as mine hath done
 By sight of what I have, your noble company.
Boling. Of much less value is my company,
 Than your good words. But who comes here ?

Enter HARRY PERCY.

North. It is my son, young Harry Percy,
 Sent from my brother Worcester, whencesoever.—
 Harry, how fares your uncle ?

Percy. I had thought, my lord, to have learn'd his health of you.

North. Why, is he not with the queen ?

Percy. No, my good lord ; he hath forsook the court,
 Broken his staff of office, and dispers'd
 The household of the king.

North. What was his reason ?
 He was not so resolv'd, when last we spake together.

Percy. Because your lordship was proclaimed traitor.

But he, my lord, is gone to Ravenspurge,
 To offer service to the duke of Hereford ;
 And sent me o'er by Berkley, to discover
 What power the duke of York had levied there ;
 Then with direction to repair to Ravenspurge.

North. Have you forgot the duke of Hereford, boy ?

Percy. No, my good lord ; for that is not forgot,
 Which ne'er I did remember : to my knowledge,
 I never in my life did look on him.

North. Then learn to know him now ; this is the duke.

Percy. My gracious lord, I tender you my service,
 Such as it is, being tender, raw, and young ;
 Which elder days shall ripen and confirm
 To more approved service and desert.

Boling. I thank thee, gentle Percy ; and be sure,
 I count myself in nothing else so happy,
 As in a soul rememb'ring my good friends ;
 And, as my fortune ripens with thy love,
 It shall be still thy true love's recompense :
 My heart this covenant makes, my hand thus seals it.

North. How far is it to Berkley ? And what stir Keeps good old York there, with his men of war ?

Percy. There stands the castle, by yon tuft of trees,

Mann'd with three hundred men, as I have heard :
 And in it are the lords of York, Berkley, and Seymour ;

None else of name, and noble estimate.

Enter Ross and WILLOUGHBY.

North. Here come the lords of Ross and Willoughby,

Bloody with spurring, fiery-red with haste.

Boling. Welcome, my lords : I wot your love pursues

A banish'd traitor : all my treasury
 Is yet but unfelt thanks, which, more enrich'd,
 Shall be your love and labour's recompense.

Ross. Your presence makes us rich, most noble
 lord.

Will. And far surmounts our labour to attain it.

Boling. Evermore thanks, the exchequer of the poor ;

Which, till my infant fortune comes to years,
 Stands for my bounty. But who comes here ?

Enter BERKLEY.

North. It is my lord of Berkley, as I guess.

Berk. My lord of Hereford, my message is to you

Boling. My lord, my answer is—to Lancaster ;²
 And I am come to seek that name in England :

And I must find that title in your tongue,
 Before I make reply to aught you say.

Berk. Mistake me not, my lord ; 'tis not my meaning,

To raze one title of your honour out :³—

To you, my lord, I come (what lord you will,)

From the most gracious regent of this land,

The duke of York ; to know, what pricks you on

To take advantage of the absent time,⁴

And fright our native peace with self-born arms.

Enter YORK, attended.

Boling. I shall not need transport my words by
 you ;

Here comes his grace in person.—My noble uncle !
 [Kneels.]

York. Show me thy humble heart, and not thy knee,

Whose duty is deceivable and false.

Boling. My gracious uncle !—

York. Tut, tut !

Grace me no grace, nor uncle me no uncle :⁵

I am no traitor's uncle ; and that word—grace,

In an ungracious mouth, is but profane.

Why have those banish'd and forbidden legs

Dar'd once to touch a dust of England's ground ?

But then more why ;—Why have they dar'd to

So many miles upon her peaceful bosom ;

Frighting her pale-fac'd villages with war,

And ostentation of despised⁶ arms ?

Com'st thou because the anointed king is hence ?

Why, foolish boy, the king is left behind,

And in my loyal bosom lies his power.

Were I but now the lord of such hot youth,

As when brave Gaunt, thy father, and myself,

Rescued the Black Prince, that young Mars of men,

From forth the ranks of many thousand French ;

O, then, how quickly should this arm of mine,

Now prisoner to the palsy, chastise thee,

And minister correction to thy fault !

Boling. My gracious uncle, let me know my fault ;

On what condition stands it, and wherein ?

York. Even in condition of the worst degree,—

In gross rebellion, and detested treason :

Thou art a banish'd man, and here art come,

Before the expiration of thy time,

In braving arms against thy sovereign.

Boling. As I was banish'd, I was banish'd Herc-ford ;

But as I come, I come for Lancaster,

⁵ In Romeo and Juliet we have the same kind of phraseology :—

'Thank me no thankings, nor proud me no prouds.'

⁶ Perhaps Shakspeare here uses despised for hate or hateful arms ? Sir Thomas Hanmer changed it to despited, but the old copies all agree in reading despised. Shakspeare uses the word again in a singular sense in Othello, Act I. Sc. 1, where Brabantio exclaims upon the loss of his daughter :—

'—what's to come of my despised time

Is nought but bitterness.'

It has been suggested that 'despised' is used to denote the general contempt in which the British held the French forces. The duke of Bretagne furnished Bolingbroke with three thousand French soldiers.'

¹ To joy is here used as a verb ; it is equivalent with to rejoice. 'To joy, to clap hands, to rejoice.' Baret. Shakspeare very frequently uses it in this sense.

² 'Your message, you say, is to my lord of Hereford. My answer is, it is not to him, it is to the Duke of Lancaster.'

³ 'How the names of them which for capital crimes against majesty were erased out of the publicke records, tables, and registers, or forbidden to be borne by their posteritie, when their memory was damned, I could show at large.'—Camden's Remaines, 1605, p. 136.

⁴ Time of the king's absence.

And, noble uncle, I beseech your grace,
Look on my wrongs with an indifferent¹ eye:
You are my father, for, methinks, in you
I see old Gaunt alive; O, then, my father!
Will you permit that I shall stand condemn'd
A wand'ring vagabond; my rights and royalties
Pluck'd from my arms perforce, and given away
To upstart unthrifths? Wherefore was I born?
If that my cousin king be king of England,
It must be granted, I am duke of Lancaster.
You have a son, Aumerle, my noble kinsman;
Had you first died, and he been thus trod down,
He should have found his uncle Gaunt a father,
To rouse his wrongs,² and chase them to the bay.
I am denied to sue my livery³ here,
And yet my letters patent give me leave:
My father's goods are all distraint'd, and sold;
And these, and all, are all amiss employ'd.
What would you have me do? I am a subject,
And challenge law: Attornies are denied me;
And therefore personally I lay my claim
To my inheritance of free descent.

North. The noble duke hath been too much abus'd.

Ross. It stands your grace upon⁴ to do him right.

Willu. Base men by his endowments are made great.

York. My lords of England, let me tell you this,—
I have had feeling of my cousin's wrongs,
And labour'd all I could to do him right:
But in this kind to come, in braving arms,
Be his own carver, and cut out his way,
To find out right with wrong,—it may not be;
And you, that do abet him in this kind,
Cherish rebellion, and are rebels all.

North. The noble duke hath sworn, his coming is
But for his own: and, for the right of that,
We all have strongly sworn to give him aid;
And let him ne'er see joy, that breaks that oath.

York. Well, well, I see the issue of these arms;
I cannot mend it, I must needs confess,
Because my power is weak, and all ill left:
But, if I could,—by him that gave me life!—
I would attach you all, and make you stoop
Unto the sovereign mercy of the king;
But, since I cannot, be it known to you,
I do remain as neuter. So, fare you well;—
Unless you please to enter in the castle,
And there repose you for this night.

Boling. An offer, uncle, that we will accept.
But we must win your grace, to go with us
To Bristol Castle; which, they say, is held
By Bushy, Bagot, and their complices,
The caterpillars of the commonwealth,
Which I have sworn to weed, and pluck away.

York. It may be, I will go with you:—but yet
I'll pause;

For I am loath to break our country's laws.
Nor friends, nor foes, to me welcome you are:
Things past redress, are now with me past care.⁵

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.⁶ A Camp in Wales. Enter SALIS-BURY,⁷ and a Captain.

Cap. My lord of Salisbury, we have staid ten days,

1 Indifferent is impartial. The instances of this use of the word among the poet's contemporaries are very numerous.

2 Wrongs is probably here used for wrongers.

3 See the former scene, p. 412, n. 7.

4 Stevens explains the phrase, 'It stands your grace upon,' to mean, 'it is your interest; it is matter of consequence to you.' But hear Baret, 'The heyre is bound; the heyre ought, or it is the heyre's part to defend; it standeth him upon;' or is in his charge. In-cumbit defensio mortis heredi. The phrase is therefore equivalent to it is incumbent upon your grace.

5 — Things without remedy

Should be without regard.

Macbeth.

6 Johnson thought this scene had been by some accident transposed, and that it should stand as the second scene in the third act.

7 John Montacute, earl of Salisbury.

And hardly kept our countrymen together,
And yet we hear no tidings from the king;
Therefore we will disperse ourselves: farewell.

Sal. Stay yet another day, thou trusty Welsh-
man:

The king reposeth all his confidence
In thee.

Cap. 'Tis thought, the king is dead: we will not stay.

The bay-trees in our country are all wither'd,⁸
And meteors fright the fixed stars of heaven;
The pale-fac'd moon looks bloody on the earth,
And lean-look'd prophets whisper fearful change;
Rich men look sad, and ruffians dance and leap,—
The one in fear to lose what they enjoy,
The other, to enjoy by rage and war:
These signs forerun the death or fall of kings.—
Farewell; our countrymen are gone and fled,
As well assur'd, Richard their king is dead. [Exit.]

Sal. Ah, Richard! with the eyes of heavy mind,
I see thy glory, like a shooting star,
Fall to the base earth from the firmament!
Thy sun sets weeping in the lowly west,
Witnessing storms to come, woe, and unrest:
Thy friends are fled, to wait upon thy foes:
And crossly to thy good all fortune goes. [Exit.]

ACT III.

SCENE I. Bolingbroke's Camp at Bristol. Enter BOLINGBROKE, YORK, NORTHUMBERLAND, PERCY, WILLOUGHBY, ROSS: Officers behind with BUSHY and GREEN, prisoners.

Boling. Bring forth these men.—
Bushy and Green, I will not vex your souls
(Since presently your souls must part your bodies,)
With too much urging your pernicious lives,
For 'twere no charity: yet, to wash your blood
From off my hands, here, in the view of men,
I will unfold some causes of your deaths.
You have misled a prince, a royal king,
A happy gentleman in blood and lineaments,
By you unhappied and disfigur'd clean.⁹
You have, in manner, with your sinful hours,
Made a divorce betwixt his queen and him;
Broke the possession of a royal bed,¹⁰
And stain'd the beauty of a fair queen's cheeks
With tears drawn from her eyes by your foul wrongs.
Myself—a prince, by fortune of my birth,
Near to the king in blood; and near in love,
Till you did make him misinterpret me,—
Have stoop'd my neck under your injuries,
And sigh'd my English breath in foreign clouds,
Eating the bitter bread of banishment:
Whilst you have fed upon my signories,
Dispark'd¹¹ my parks, and fell'd my forest woods;
From my own windows torn my household coat,
Raz'd out my impress,¹² leaving me no sign,—

8 This enumeration of prodigies is in the highest degree poetical and striking. The poet received the hint from Holinshed: 'In this year, in a manner throughout all the realm of Englande, old baie trees withered, &c.' This, as it appears from T. Lupton's Syxt Booke of Notable Things, bl. 4to. was esteemed a bad omen. 'Neither falling sickness, neither devyll, wylf infest or hurt one in that place whereas a bay tree is.' The Romanaynes call it the plant of the good angel, &c.' See also Evelyn's Sylva, 4to. 1776, p. 396.

9 i. e. quite, completely.

10 There seems to be no authority for this. Isabel, Richard's second queen, was but nine years old at this period; his first queen, Anne, died in 1392, and he was very fond of her.

11 To dispark signifies to divest a park of its name and character, by destroying the enclosures, and the vert (or whatever bears green leaves, whether wood or underwood,) and the beasts of the chassa therein; laying it open.

12 The impress was a device, or motto. Ferne, in his Blazon of Gentry, 1593, observes that 'the arms, &c. of traitors and rebels may be defaced and removed wheresoever they are fixed or set.' For the punishment of a base knight see Spenser's Faerie Queen, b. v. c. iii. st. 37.

Save men's opinions, and my living blood,—
To show the world I am a gentleman,
This, and much more, much more than twice all
this,
Condemns you to the death:—See them deliver'd over

To execution and the hand of death.

Bushy. More welcome is the stroke of death to me,
Than Bolingbroke to England.—Lords, farewell.

Green. My comfort is,—that heaven will take our souls,

And plague injustice with the pains of hell.

Boling. My Lord Northumberland, see them despatch'd.

[Exeunt NORTHUMBERLAND, and others, with Prisoners.]

Uncle, you say, the queen is at your house ;

For heaven's sake, fairly let her be entreated :

Tell her, I send to her my kind commend's ;¹

Take special care my greetings be deliver'd.

York. A gentleman of mine I have despatch'd

With letters of your love to her at large.

Boling. Thanks, gentle uncle.—Come, lords, away :

To fight with Glendower and his complices ;

Awile to work, and, after, holiday. [Exeunt.]²

SCENE II. The Coast of Wales. A Castle in view. Flourish: Drums and Trumpets. Enter KING RICHARD, Bishop of Carlisle, AUMERLE, and Soldiers.

K. Rich. Barkloughly Castle call you³ this at hand ?

Aum. Yea, my lord : How brooks your grace the air,

After your late tossing on the breaking seas ?

K. Rich. Needs must I like it well ; I weep for joy,

To stand upon my kingdom once again.—

Dear earth, I do salute thee with my hand,

Though rebels wound thee with their horses' hoofs :

As a long parted mother with her child

Plays fondly with her tears, and smiles, in meeting ;

So, weeping, smiling, greet I thee, my earth,

And do thee favour with my royal hands.

Feed not thy sovereign's foe, my gentle earth,

Nor with thy sweets comfort his ravenous sense :

But let thy spiders, that suck up thy venom,

And heavy-gaited toads, lie in their way ;

Doing annoyance to the treacherous feet,

Which with usurping steps do trample thee.

Yield stinging nettles to mine enemies :

And when they from thy bosom pluck a flower,

Guard it, I pray thee, with a lurking adder ;

Whose double tongue may with a mortal touch

Throw death upon thy sovereign's enemies.—

Mock not my senseless conjuration, lords ;

This earth shall have a feeling, and these stones

Prove armed soldiers, ere her native king

Shall falter under foul rebellious arms.

Bishop. Fear not, my lord ; that Power, that made you king,

Hath power to keep you king, in spite of all.

The means that heaven yields must be embrac'd,

And not neglected ; else, if heaven would,

And we will not, heaven's offer we refuse ;

The proffer'd means of succour and redress.

Aum. He means, my lord, that we are too remiss ;

Whilst Bolingbroke, through our security,

Grows strong and great, in substance, and in friends.

1 Commendations.
2 Johnson says, 'here may be properly inserted the last scene of the second act.'

3 The quarto of 1597 reads they.

4 The old copies read 'that lights,' &c. The alteration was made by Johnson.

5 'It is not easy (says Steevens) to point out an image more striking and beautiful than this, in any poet, ancient or modern.'

6 Here is the doctrine of the divine right of kings, and of the passive obedience of subjects, expressed in the strongest terms. Johnson observes that it has been the fashion to impute the original of every tenet which we

K. Rich. Discomfortable cousin I know'st thou
not,

That when the searching eye of heaven is hid
Behind the globe, and⁴ lights the lower world,
Then thieves and robbers range abroad unseen,
In murders, and in outrage, bloody here ;

But when, from under this terrestrial ball,

He fires the proud tops of the eastern pines,⁵

And darts his light through every guilty hole,

Then murders, treasons, and detested sins,

The cloak of night being pluck'd from off their backs,

Stand bare and naked, trembling at themselves ?

So when this thief, this traitor, Bolingbroke,—

Who all this while hath revell'd in the night,

Whilst we were wand'ring with the antipodes,

Shall see us rising in our throne the east,

His treasons will sit blushing in his face,

Not able to endure the sight of day ;

But, self-affrighted, tremble at his sin.

Not all the water in the rough rude sea

Can wash the balm from an anointed king ;

The breath of worldly men cannot depose

The deputy elected by the Lord :⁶

For every man that Bolingbroke hath press'd,

To lift shrewd steel against our golden crown,

God for his Richard hath in heavenly pay

A glorious angel : then, if angels fight,

Weak men must fall ; for heaven still guards the right.

Enter SALISBURY.

Welcome, my lord ; How far off lies your power ?⁷

Sal. Nor near, nor further off, my gracious lord,

Than this weak arm : Discomfort guides my tongue,

And bids me speak of nothing but despair.

One day too late, I fear, my noble lord,

Hath clouded all thy happy days on earth :

O, call back yesterday, bid time return,

And thou shalt have twelve thousand fighting men !

To-day, to-day, unhappy day, too late,

O'erthrows thy joys, friends, fortune, and thy state ;

For all the Welshmen, hearing thou wert dead,

Are gone to Bolingbroke, dispers'd, and fled.

Aum. Comfort, my liege : why looks your grace so pale ?

K. Rich. But now, the blood of twenty thousand
men

Did triumph in my face, and they are fled ;

And, till so much blood thither come again,

Have I not reason to look pale and dead ?

All souls that will be safe, fly from my side ;

For time hath set a blot upon my pride.

Aum. Comfort, my liege : remember who you are.

K. Rich. I had forgot myself : Am I not king ? :

Awake thou sluggard⁸ majesty ! thou sleep'st.

Is not the king's name forty thousand names ?⁹

Arm, arm, my name ! a puny subject strikes

At thy great glory.—Look not to the ground,

Ye favourites of a king : Are we not high ?

High be our thoughts : I know, my uncle York

Hath power enough to serve our turn. But who Comes here ?

Enter SCROOP.

Scroop. More health and happiness betide my liege,

Than can my care-tun'd tongue deliver him.

K. Rich. Mine ear is open, and my heart pre-par'd :¹⁰

have been taught to think false or foolish to the reign of King James I. But this doctrine was never carried forther In any country, than in this island, while the house of Tudor sat on the throne.

7 Force.

8 The first quarto reads 'coward majesty.'

9 So in King Richard III.—

' Besides, the king's name is a tower of strength.'

10 'k seems to be the design of the poet to raise Richard to esteem in his fall, and consequently to interest the reader in his favour. He gives him only passive fortitude, the virtue of a confessor, rather than of a king
In his prosperity we saw him imperious and oppressive ;
but in his distress he is wise, patient, and pious.'— Johnson.

The worst is worldly loss, thou canst unfold.
 Say, is my kingdom lost? why, 'twas my care!
 And what loss is it, to be rid of care?
 Strives Bolingbroke to be as great as we?
 Greater he shall not be; if he serve God,
 We'll serve him too, and be his fellow so:
 Revolt our subjects? that we cannot mend;
 They break their faith to God, as well as us:
 Cry woe, destruction, ruin, loss, decay:
 The worst is—death, and death will have his day.

Scroop. Glad am I, that your highness is so arm'd

To bear the tidings of calamity
 Like an unseasonable stormy day,
 Which makes the silver rivers drown their shores,
 As if the world were all dissolv'd to tears;
 So high above his limits swells the rage
 Of Bolingbroke, covering your fearful land
 With hard bright steel, and hearts harder than steel.
 White-beards have arm'd their thin and hairless scalps

Against the majesty; and boys, with women's voices,

Strive to speak big, and clap their female joints
 In stiff unwieldy arms against thy crown:
 The very beadsmen learn to bend their bows
 Of double-fatal yew¹ against thy state;
 Yea, distaff-women manage rusty bills
 Against thy seat: both young and old rebel,
 And all goes worse than I have power to tell.

K. Rich. Too well, too well, thou tell'st a tale
 so ill:

Where is the earl of Wiltshire? where is Bagot?²
 What is become of Bushy? where is Green?
 That they have let the dangerous enemy
 Measure our confines with such peaceful steps?
 If we prevail, their heads shall pay for it.
 I warrant, they have made peace with Bolingbroke.

Scroop. Peace have they made with him, indeed, my lord.

K. Rich. O villains, vipers, damn'd without redemption!

Dogs, easily won to fawn on any man!
 Snakes, in my heart-blood warm'd, that sting my heart!

Three Judases, each one thrice worse than Judas!
 Would they make peace? terrible hell make war
 Upon their spotted souls for this offence!

Scroop. Sweet love, I see, changing his property,
 Turns to the sourest and most deadly hate;
 Again curse their souls; their peace is made
 With heads, and not with hands: those whom you
 curse,

Have felt the worst of death's destroying wound,
 And lie full low, grav'd³ in the hollow ground.

Aum. Is Bushy, Green, and the earl of Wiltshire dead?

Scroop. Yea, all of them at Bristol lost their heads.

Aum. Where is the duke, my father, with his power?

K. Rich. No matter where; of comfort no man
 speak:

Let's talk of graves, of worms, and epitaphs;
 Make dust our paper, and with rainy eyes
 Write sorrow on the bosom of the earth.

¹ Yew is called double-fatal, because of the poisonous quality of the leaves, and on account of the wood being used for instruments of death. From some ancient statutes it appears that every Englishman, while archery was practised, was obliged to keep in his house either a bow of yew or some other wood. It has been supposed that yewes were anciently planted in church-yards not only to defend the church from the wind, but on account of their use in making bows; while their poisonous quality was kept from doing mischief to the cattle, in that sacred enclosure.

² The mention of Bagot here is a lapse of the poet or the king; but perhaps it may have been intended to mark more strongly the perturbation of the king's mind, by making him inquire at first for Bagot, whose loyalty, on further recollection, might show him the impropriety of the question.

³ i. e. buried. The verb is not peculiar to Shakespeare.

Let's choose executors, and talk of wills:
 And yet not so,—for what can we bequeath,
 Save our deposed bodies to the ground?
 Our lands, our lives, and all are Bolingbroke's,
 And nothing can we call our own, but death;
 And that small model⁴ of the barren earth,
 Which serves as paste and cover to our bones.
 For heaven's sake, let us sit upon the ground,
 And tell sad stories of the death of kings:—
 How some have been depos'd, some slain in war;
 Some haunted by the ghosts they have depos'd;
 Some poison'd by their wives, some sleeping kill'd;
 All murder'd:—For within the hollow crown,
 That rounds the mortal temples of a king,
 Keeps death his court: and there the antick sits,⁵ Scoffing his state, and grinning at his pomp;
 Allowing him a breath, a little scene
 To monarchise, be fear'd, and kill with looks;
 Infusing him with self and vain conceit,—
 As if this flesh, which walls about our life,
 Were brass impregnable; and humour'd thus,
 Comes at the last, and with a little pin
 Bores through his castle wall, and—farewell, king!
 Cover your heads, and mock not flesh and blood
 With solemn reverence; throw away respect,
 Tradition,⁶ form, and ceremonious duty,
 For you have but mistook me all this while:
 I live with bread like you, feel want, taste grief,
 Need friends:—Subjected thus,
 How can you say to me—I am a king?

Car. My lord, wise men ne'er wail their present woes,

But presently prevent the ways to wail.

To fear the foe, since fear oppresseth strength,
 Gives, in your weakness, strength unto your foe,
 And so your follies fight against yourself.
 Fear, and be slain; no worse can come, to fight:
 And fight and die, is death destroying death;
 Where fearing dying, pays death servile breath.

Aum. My father hath a power, inquire of him;
 And learn to make a body of a limb.

K. Rich. Thou chid'st me well:—Proud Boling-broke, I come

To change blows with thee for our day of doom.

This age-fit of fear is over-blown;

An easy task it is, to win our own.—

Say, Scroop, where lies our uncle with his power?
 Speak sweetly, man, although thy looks be sour.

Scroop. Men judge by the complexion of the sky
 The state and inclination of the day:

So may you by my dull and heavy eye,

My tongue hath but a heavier tale to say.

I play the torturer, by small and small,

To lengthen out the worst that must be spoken:—

Your uncle York hath join'd with Bolingbroke;

And all your northern castles yielded up,

And all your southern gentlemen in arms

Upon his party.

K. Rich. Thou hast said enough.—

Beshrew thee, cousin, which didst lead me forth

[To Aumerle.]

Of that sweet way I was in to despair!

What say you now? What comfort have we now?

By heaven, I'll hate him everlastingly,

That bids me be of comfort any more.⁷

Go, to Flint Castle; there I'll pine away;

⁴ A small model, or module, for they were the same in Shakespeare's time, seems to mean in this place a small portion or quantity. It is a Latinism, from modulus, the measure or quantity of a thing.

⁵ It is not impossible that Shakespeare borrowed this idea from that most exquisite emblematic book of engravings on wood, the Dance of Death, or Imagines Mortis, attributed to Holbein. See the seventh print.

⁶ Tradition here seems to mean traditional practices, i. e. established or customary homage.

⁷ That is, to die fighting is to return the evil that we suffer, to destroy the destroyers.

⁸ This sentiment is drawn from nature. Nothing is more offensive to a mind convinced that its distress is without remedy, and preparing to submit quietly to irresistible calamity, than these petty and conjectured comforts, which unskilful officiousness thinks a virtue to administer.

A king, woe's slave, shall kingly woe obey.
That power I have, discharge; and let them go
To ear¹ the land that hath some hope to grow,
For I have none:—Let no man speak again
To alter this, for counsel is but vain.

Aum. My liege, one word.

K. Rich. He does me double wrong,
That wounds me with the flatteries of his tongue.
Discharge my followers, let them hence:—Away,
From Richard's night, to Bolingbroke's fair day.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. Wales. A Plain before Flint Castle. Enter, with Drum and Colours, BOLINGBROKE and Forces; YORK, NORTHUMBERLAND, and others.

Boling. So that by this intelligence we learn,
The Welshmen are dispers'd; and Salisbury
Is gone to meet the king, who lately landed,
With some few private friends, upon this coast.

North. The news is very fair and good, my lord;
Richard not far from hence, hath hid his head.

York. It would beseem the lord Northumberland,
To say—King Richard:—Alack the heavy day,
When such a sacred king should hide his head!

North. Your grace mistakes me;² only to be brief,

Left I his title out.

York. The time hath been,
Would you have been so brief with him, he would Have been so brief with you, to shorten you
For taking so the head, your whole head's length.

Boling. Mistake not, uncle, further than you should.

York. Take not, good cousin, further than you should,

Least you mistake: The heavens are o'er your head.

Boling. I know it, uncle; and oppose not Myself against their will.—But who comes here?

[Enter PERCY.]

Well,³ Harry; what, will not this castle yield?

Percy. The castle royally is mann'd, my lord,
Against thy entrance.

Boling. Royally!

Why, it contains no king?

Percy. Yes, my good lord,

It doth contain a king: King Richard lies

Within the limits of yon lime and stone:

And with him are the Lord Aumerle, Lord Salisbury,

Sir Stephen Scroop; besides a clergyman
Of holy reverence; who, I cannot learn.

North. Belike, it is the bishop of Carlisle.

Boling. Noble lord,⁴ [To NORTH.]

Go to the rude ribs of that ancient castle;

Through brazen trumpet send the breath of parle
Into his ruin'd ears, and thus deliver:

Harry Bolingbroke

On both his knees doth kiss King Richard's hand;

And sends allegiance, and true faith of heart,

To his most royal person: hither come

Even at his feet to lay my arms and power;

Provided that, my banishment repeal'd,

And lands restor'd again, be freely granted:

If not, I'll use the advantage of my power,

And lay the summer's dust with showers of blood,

Rain'd from the wounds of slaughter'd Englishmen:

The which, how far off from the mind of Bolingbroke

It is, such crimson tempest should bedrench

The fresh green lap of fair King Richard's land,

My stooping duty tenderly shall show.

Go, signify as much; while here we march
Upon the grassy carpet of this plain.—

[NORTHUMBERLAND advances to the Castle, with a Trumpet.]

Let's march without the noise of threat'ning drum,

That from the castle's totter'd battlements

Our fair appointments may be well perus'd.

Methinks, King Richard and myself should meet

With no less terror than the elements

Of fire and water, when their thund'ring shock

At meeting tears the cloudy cheeks of heaven.

Be he the fire, I'll be the yielding water:

The rage be his, while on the earth I rain

My waters; on the earth, and not on him.

March on, and mark King Richard how he looks.

A Parley sounded, and answered by another Trumpet within. Flourish. Enter on the walls KING

RICHARD, the Bishop of Carlisle, AUMERLE, SCROOP, and SALISBURY.

York. See, see, King Richard doth himself appear,

As doth the blushing discontented sun

From out the fiery portal of the east;

When he perceives the envious clouds are bent

To dim his glory, and to stain the track

Of his bright passage to the occident.

Yet looks he like a king; behold, his eye,

As bright as is the eagle's, lightens forth

Controlling majesty; Alack, alack, for woe,

That any harm should stain so fair a show!

K. Rich. We are amaz'd; and thus long have we stood

To watch the fearful bending of thy knee,

[To NORTHUMBERLAND.]

Because we thought ourself thy lawful king:

And if we be, how dare thy joints forget

To pay their awful duty to our presence?

If we be not, show us the hand of God

That hath dismiss'd us from our stewardship;

For well we know, no hand of blood and bone

Can gripe the sacred handle of our sceptre,

Unless he do profane, steal, or usurp.

And though you think, that all, as you have done,

Have torn their souls, by turning them from us,

And we are barren, and bereft of friends;—

Yet know,—my master, God omnipotent,

Is must'ring in his clouds, on our behalf,

Armies of pestilence; and they shall strike

Your children yet unborn, and unbegot,

That lift your vassal hands against my head,

And threat the glory of my precious crown.

Tell Bolingbroke (for yond⁵, methinks, he is,)

That every stride he makes upon my land,

Is dangerous treason: He is come to ope

The purple testament⁶ of bleeding war;

But ere the crown he looks for live in peace,

Ten thousand bloody crowns of mothers' sons

Shall ill become the flower of England's face;⁷

Change the complexion of her maid-pale peace

To scarlet indignation, and bedew

Her pastures' grass with faithful English blood.

North. The king of heaven forbid, our lord the king

Should so with civil and uncivil arms

Be rush'd upon! Thy thrice-noble cousin,

Harry Bolingbroke, doth humbly kiss thy hand:

And by the honourable tomb he swears,

That stands upon thy royal grandsire's bones;

And by the royalties of both your bloods,

Currents that spring from one most gracious head;

And by the buried hand of warlike Gaunt;

And by the worth and honour of himself,

6 The six first lines of this speech are erroneously given to Bolingbroke in the old copies.

7 Shakespeare uses the word testament in its legal sense. Bolingbroke is come to open the testament of war, that he may peruse what is decreed there in his favour. Purple is an epithet referring to the future effusion of blood.

8 i.e. England's flowery face, the flowery surface of England's soil.

1 To ear the land is to till it, to plough it.

2 The word me, which is wanting in the old copies, was supplied by Hamner.

3 The old copy reads, 'Welcome, Harry:' the emendation is Hamner's.

4 Shakespeare frequently, in his addresses to persons, begins with an hemistich; and sometimes blends short prosaic sentences with his metrical dialogues.

5 Totter'd, the reading of the two first quartos, is here probably used for tottering, according to the frequent usage of our poet. The other copies read tatter'd

Comprising all that may be sworn or said,—
His coming hither hath no further scope,
Than for his lineal royalties, and to beg
Enfranchisement immediate on his knees:
Which on the royal party granted once,
His glittering arms he will commend¹ to rust,
His barbed steeds to stables, and his heart
To faithful service of your majesty.
This swears he, as he is a prince, is just;
And, as I am a gentleman, I credit him.

K. Rich. Northumberland, say,—thus the king returns;
His noble cousin is right welcome hither;
And all the number of his fair demands
Shall be accomplish'd without contradiction:
With all the gracious utterance thou hast,
Speak to his gentle hearing kind commands.—
We do debase ourself, cousin, do we not,

[To Aumerle.
To look so poorly, and to speak so fair?
Shall we call back Northumberland, and send Defiance to the traitor, and so die?

Aum. No, good my lord; let's fight with gentle words,
Till time lend friends, and friends their helpful
swords.

K. Rich. O God! O God! that e'er this tongue of mine,

That laid the sentence of dread banishment
On you proud man, should take it off again
With words of sooth!² O, that I were as great
As is my grief, or lesser than my name!
Or that I could forget what I have been!
Or not remember what I must be now!
Swell'st thou, proud heart? I'll give thee scope to beat,

Since foes have scope to beat both thee and me.
Aum. Northumberland comes back from Boling-broke.

K. Rich. What must the king do now? Must he submit?

The king shall do it. Must he be depos'd?
The king shall be contented: Must he lose
The name of king? O God's name, let it go;
I'll give my jewels, for a set of beads;
My gorgeous palace, for a hermitage;
My gay apparel,³ for an alms-man's gown;
My figur'd goblets, for a dish of wood;
My sceptre, for a palmer's walking-staff;
My subjects, for a pair of carved saints;
And my large kingdom for a little grave,
A little, little grave, an obscure grave:—
Or I'll be buried in the king's highway,
Some way of common trade,⁴ where subjects' feet
May hourly trample on their sovereign's head:
For on my heart they tread, now whilst I live;
And, buried once, why not upon my head?—
Aumerle, thou weep'st; My tender-hearted cousin!—

We'll make foul weather with despised tears;
Our sighs, and they, shall lodge the summer corn,
And make a dearth in this revolting land.
Or shall we play the wantons with our woes,
And make some pretty match with shedding tears?
As thus:—To drop them still upon one place,
Till they have fretted us a pair of graves

² Sooth is sweet, as well as true. In this place sooth means sweetness or softness. Thus to soothe still means to calm and sweeten the mind.

³ Richard's expense in regard to dress was very extraordinary. 'He had one coat which he caused to be made for him of gold and stone, valued at 3000 marks.'—Hollinshed.

⁴ 'Some way of common trade' is some way of frequent resort, a common course; as, at present, 'a road of much traffic,' i. e. frequent resort.

⁵ A bow.

⁶ It should be remembered that the affirmative particle ay was formerly written and sounded I, which rhymed well with die.

⁷ Lower

⁸ That is the lower court of the castle; basse court. Fr. Thus in Cavendish's Life of Wolsey:—'My lord

Within the earth; and, therein laid,—There lies Two kinsmen, digg'd their graves with weeping eyes? Would not this ill do well?—Well, well, I see I talk but idly, and you mock at me.—Most mighty prince, my Lord Northumberland, What says King Bolingbroke? will his majesty Give Richard leave to live till Richard die? You make a leg,⁵ and Bolingbroke says—ay.⁶

North. My lord, in the base⁷ court he doth attend To speak with you; may't please you to come down?

K. Rich. Down, down, I come; like glistering Phaeton, Wanting the manage of unruly jades.

[NORTH. retires to BOLING.
In the base court? Base court,⁸ where kings grow base,

To come at traitors' calls, and do them grace.
In the base court? Come down? Down, court! down, king!

For night-owls shriek, where mounting larks should sing. [Exeunt from above.

Boling. What says his majesty?
North. Sorrow and grief of heart Makes him speak fondly,⁹ like a frantic man: Yet he is come.

Enter KING RICHARD, and his Attendants, below.

Boling. Stand all apart,
And show fair duty to his majesty.—
My gracious lord,— [Kneeling.

K. Rich. Fair cousin, you debase your princely knee,

To make the base earth proud with kissing it:—
Me rather had, my heart might feel your love,
Than my unpleas'd eye see your courtesy.
Up, cousin, up; your heart is up, I know, Thus high at least [touching his own head], although your knee be low.

Boling. My gracious lord, I come but for mine own.

K. Rich. Your own is yours, and I am yours, and all.

Boling. So far be mine, my most redoubted lord,
As my true service shall deserve your love.

K. Rich. Well you deserve:—They well deserve to have,

That know the strong'st and surest way to get.—
Uncle, give me your hand: nay, dry your eyes;
Tears show their love, but want their remedies.—
Cousin, I am too young to be your father;
Though you are old enough to be my heir
What you will have, I'll give, and willing too;
For do we must, what force will have us do.—
Set on towards London:—Cousin, is it so?

Boling. Yea, my good lord.

K. Rich. Then I must not say, no!¹⁰
[Flourish. Exeunt.

SCENE IV. Langley. Duke of York's Garden.
Enter the Queen, and two Ladies.

Queen. What sport shall we devise here in this garden,

To drive away the heavy thought of care?
1 Lady. Madam, we'll play at bowls.

Queen. 'Twill make me think,
The world is full of rubs, and that my fortune
Runs 'gainst the bias.¹¹

1 Lady. Madam, we will dance.

being advertised that the duke was coming, even at hand, he caused all his gentlemen to wait upon him down through the hall into the base court.—Edition 1833, p. 211.

⁹ Foolishly.

¹⁰ 'The duke, with a sharpe high voyce bade bring forth the king's horses; and then two little nagges, not worth forty franks, were brought forth: the king was set on one, and the earle of Salisbury on the other; and thus the duke brought the king from Flint to Chester, where he was delivered to the duke of Gloucester's sounne (that loved him but little, for he had put their father to death,) who led him straight to the castle.'—Stowe (p. 521. edit. 1603.) from a manuscript account written by a person who was present.

¹¹ The bias was a weight inserted in one side of a bowl, which gave it a particular inclination in bowling

Queen. My legs can keep no measure in delight,
When my poor heart no measure keeps in grief;
Therefore, no dancing, girl; some other sport.

1 Lady. Madam, we'll tell tales.

Queen. Of sorrow, or of joy?¹

1 Lady. Of either, madam.

Queen. Of neither, girl:

For if of joy, being altogether wanting,
It doth remember me the more of sorrow;
Or if of grief, being altogether had,
It adds more sorrow to my want of joy:
For what I have, I need not to repeat;
And what I want, it boots² not to complain.³

1 Lady. Madam, I'll sing.

Queen. 'Tis well, that thou hast cause;
But thou should'st please me better, would'st thou weep.

1 Lady. I could weep, madam, would it do you good.

Queen. And I could weep,⁴ would weeping do me good,

And never borrow any tear of thee.

But stay, here come the gardeners:

Let's step into the shadow of these trees.—

Enter a Gardener, and two Servants.

My wretchedness unto a row of pines,
They'll talk of state; for every one doth so
Against a change: Woe is forerun with woe.⁵

[Queen and Ladies retire.]

Gard. Go, bind thou up yon' dangling apricocks,
Which, like unruly children, make their sire
Stoop with oppression of their prodigal weight:
Give some suppittance to the bending twigs.—
Go thou, and, like an executioner,
Cut off the heads of too fast growing sprays,
That look too lofty in our commonwealth:
All must be even in our government.—

You thus employ'd, I will go root away
The noisome weeds, that without profit suck
The soil's fertility from wholesome flowers.

1 Serv. Why should we, in the compass of a pale,
Keep law, and form, and due proportion,
Showing, as in a model, our firm estate?
When our sea-walled garden, the whole land,
Is full of weeds; her fairest flowers chok'd up,
Her fruit-trees all unprun'd, her hedges ruin'd,
Her knots⁶ disorder'd, and her wholesome herbs
Swarming with caterpillars?

Gard. Hold thy peace:—
He that hath suffer'd this disorder'd spring,
Hath now himself met with the fall of leaf:
The weeds, that his broad-spreading leaves did shelter,

That seem'd in eating him to hold him up,
Are pluck'd up, root and all, by Bolingbroke;
I mean, the earl of Wiltshire, Bushy, Green.

1 Serv. What, are they dead?

Gard. They are; and Bolingbroke
Hath seiz'd the wasteful king.—Oh! what pity is it,
That he had not so trimm'd and dress'd his land,
As we this garden! We' at time of year
Do wound the bark, the skin of our fruit trees;
Lest, being over-prond with sap and blood,
With too much riches it confound itself:
Had he done so to great and growing men,
They might have liv'd to bear, and he to taste
Their fruits of duty. All superfluous branches
We lop away, that bearing boughs may live:
Had he done so, himself had borne the crown,
Which waste of idle hours hath quite thrown down.

1 All the old copies read 'of sorrow or of grief.' Pope made the necessary alteration.

2 Profits. 3 See note on Act i. Sc. 2.

4 The old copies read 'and I could sing.' The emendation is Pope's.

5 The poet, according to the common doctrine of prognostication, supposes dejection to forerun calamity, and a kingdom to be filled with rumours of sorrow when any great disaster is impending.

6 Knots are figures planted in box, the lines of which frequently intersected each other in the old fashion of gardening.

7 We is not in the old copy. It was added by Malone.

1 Serv. What, think you then, the king shall be depos'd?

Gard. Depress'd he is already; and depos'd,
'Tis doubt,⁸ he will be: Letters came last night
To a dear friend of the good duke of York's,
That tell black tidings.

Queen. O, I am press'd to death,
Through want of speaking!—Thou, old Adam's likeness, [Coming from her concealment.

Set to dress this garden, how dares
Thy harsh rude tongue sound this displeasing news?
What Eve, what serpent hath suggested thee
To make a second fall of cursed man?

Why dost thou say, King Richard is depos'd?
Dar'st thou, thou little better thing than earth,
Divine his downfall? Say, where, when, and how,
Cam'st thou by these ill tidings? speak, thou wretch.

Gard. Pardon me, madam: little joy have I,
To breathe this news; yet, what I say is true.
King Richard, he is in the mighty hold
Of Bolingbroke: their fortunes both are weigh'd:
In your lord's scale is nothing but himself,
And some few vanities that make him light;
But in the balance of great Bolingbroke,
Besides himself, are all the English peers,
And with that odds he weighs King Richard down.
Post you to London, and you'll find it so;
I speak no more than every one doth know.

Queen. Nimble mischance, that art so light of foot,
Doth not thy embassy belong to me,
And am I last that knows it? O, thou think'st
To serve me last, that I may longest keep Thy sorrow in my breast.—Come, ladies, go,
To meet at London London's king in woe.—
What, was I born to this! that my sad look
Should grace the triumph of great Bolingbroke?
Gardener, for telling me this news of woe,
I would, the plants thou graft'st, may never grow.

[Exeunt Queen and Ladies.]

Gard. Poor queen! so that thy state might be no worse,

I would, my skill were subject to thy curse.—
Here did she drop⁹ a tear; here, in this place,
I'll set a bank of rue, sour herb of grace:
Rue, even for ruth, here shortly shall be seen,
In the remembrance of a weeping queen. [Exeunt]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. London. Westminster Hall.¹⁰ The Lords spiritual on the right side of the Throne; the Lords temporal on the left; the Commons below.
Enter BOLINGBROKE, AUMERLE, SURREY,¹¹ NORTHUMBERLAND, PERCY, FITZWATER, another Lord, Bishop of Carlisle, Abbot of Westminster, and Attendants. Officers behind, with BAGOT.

Boling. Call forth Bagot:—
Now, Bagot, freely speak thy mind;
What thou dost know of noble Gloster's death;
Who wrought it with the king, and who perform'd
The bloody office of his timeless¹² end.

Bagot. Then set before my face the Lord Aumerle.

Boling. Cousin, stand forth, and look upon that man.

Bagot. My Lord Aumerle, I know, your daring tongue

8 This uncommon phraseology has already occurred in the present play:—

⁹ He is our cousin, cousin; but 'tis doubt
When time shall call him home,' &c.

9 The quarto of 1597 reads fall. The quarto of 1598 and the folio read drop.

10 The rebuilding of Westminster Hall, which Richard had begun in 1397, being finished in 1399, the first meeting of parliament in the new edifice was for the purpose of deposing him.

11 Thomas Holland, earl of Kent, brother to John Holland, earl of Exeter, was created duke of Surrey in 1397. He was half brother to the king, by his mother Joan, who married Edward the Black Prince after the death of her second husband Thomas Lord Holland.

12 i. e. untimely.

Scorns to unsay what once it hath deliver'd.
In that dead time when Gloster's death was plotted,
I heard you say,—*Is not my arm of length,
That reacheth from the restful English court
As far as Calais, to my uncle's head?*
Amongst much other talk, that very time,
I heard you say, that you had rather refuse
The offer of a hundred thousand crowns,
Than Bolingbroke's return to England;
Adding withal, how blest this land would be,
In this your cousin's death.

Aum. Princes, and noble lords,
What answer shall I make to this base man?
Shall I so much dishonour my fair stars,¹
On equal terms to give him chastisement?
Either I must, or have mine honour soil'd
With the attainer of my slanderous lips.—
There is my gage, the manual seal of death,
That marks thee out for hell; I say, thou liest,
And will maintain what thou hast said, is false,
In thy heart-blood, though being all too base,
To stain the temper of my knightly sword.

Boling. Bagot, forbear, thou shalt not take it up.

Aum. Excepting one, I would he were the best
In all this presence, that hath mov'd me so.

Fitz. If that thy valour stand on sympathies,²
There is my gage, Aumerle, in gage to thine:
By that fair sun that shows me where thou stand'st,
I heard thee say, and vauntingly thou spak'st it,
That thou wert cause of noble Gloster's death.
If thou deny'st it, twenty times thou liest;
And I will turn thy falsehood to thy heart,
Where it was forged, with my rapier's point.

Aum. Thou dar'st not, coward, live to see that day.

Fitz. Now, by my soul, I would it were this hour.
Aum. Fitzwater, thou art damn'd to hell for this.

Percy. Aumerle, thou liest; his honour is as true,
In this appeal, as thou art all unjust:

And, that thou art so, there I throw my gage,
To prove it on thee to the extremest point
Of mortal breathing; seize it, if thou dar'st.

Aum. And if I do not, may my hands rot off,
And never brandish more revengeful steel
Over the glittering helmet of my foe!

Lord. I task the earth to the like, forsworn Aumerle;

And spur thee on with full as many lies
As may be holla'd in thy treacherous ear
From sun to sun:³ there is my honour's pawn;
Engage it to the trial, if thou dar'st.

Aum. Who sets me else? by heaven, I'll throw at all:

I have a thousand spirits in one breast,⁴
To answer twenty thousand such as you.

Surrey. My Lord Fitzwater, I do remember well
The very time Aumerle and you did talk.

Fitz. 'Tis very true: you were in presence then;
And you can witness with me, this is true.

Surrey. As false, by heaven, as heaven itself is true.

Fitz. Surrey, thou liest.

Surrey. Dishonourable boy!
That lie shall lie so heavy on my sword,

That it shall render vengeance and revenge
Till thou the lie-giver, and that lie, do lie
In earth as quiet as thy father's scull:
In proof whereof, there is my honour's pawn;
Engage it to the trial, if thou dar'st.

Fitz. How fondly dost thou spur a forward horse!
If I dare eat, or drink, or breathe, or live,
I dare meet Surrey in a wilderness,⁵
And spit upon him, whilst I say, he lies,
And lies, and lies: there is my bond of faith,
To tie thee to my strong correction.—
As I intend to thrive in this new world,⁶ Aumerle is guilty of my true appeal:
Besides, I heard the banish'd Norfolk say,
That thou, Aumerle, didst send two of thy men
To execute the noble duke at Calais.

Aum. Some honest Christian trust me with a
gage.

That Norfolk lies: here do I throw down this,⁷
If he may be repeal'd to try his honour.

Boling. These differences shall all rest under gage,
Till Norfolk be repeal'd: repeal'd he shall be,
And, though mine enemy, restor'd again
To all his land and signories; when he's return'd,
Against Aumerle we will enforce his trial.

Car. That honourable day shall ne'er be seen.—
Many a time hath banish'd Norfolk fought
For Jesu Christ; in glorious Christian field
Streaming the ensign of the Christian cross,
Against black pagans, Turks, and Saracens:
And, toil'd with works of war, retir'd himself
To Italy; and there, at Venice, gave
His body to that pleasant country's earth,⁸
And his pure soul unto his captain Christ,
Under whose colours he had fought so long.

Boling. Why, bishop, is Norfolk dead?

Car. As sure as I live, my lord.

Boling. Sweet peace conduct his sweet soul to the bosom

Of good old Abraham!—Lords appellants,
Your differences shall all rest under gage,
Till we assign you to your days of trial.

Enter YORK, attended.

York. Great duke of Lancaster, I come to thee
From plume-pluck'd Richard; who with willing soul
Adopts thee heir, and his high sceptre yields
To the possession of thy royal hand:
Ascend his throne, descending now from him,—
And long live Henry, of that name the fourth!

Boling. In God's name, I'll ascend the regal throne.⁹

Car. Marry, God forbid!—

Worst in this royal presence, may I speak,
Yet best becoming me to speak the truth,
'Would God, that any in this noble presence
Were enough noble to be upright judge
Of noble Richard; then true nobless¹⁰ would Learn him forbearance from so foul a wrong.
What subject can give sentence on his king?
And who sits here, that is not Richard's subject?
Thieves are not judg'd, but they are by to hear,
Although apparent guilt be seen in them;
And shall the figure of God's majesty,¹¹

6 I e. in this world, where I have just begun to be an actor. Surrey has just called him boy.

7 Holinshed says that on this occasion he threw down a hood that he had borrowed.

8 This is not historically true. The duke of Norfolk's death did not take place till after Richard's murder.

9 Hume gives the words that Henry actually spoke on this occasion, which he copied from Knyghton, and accompanies them by a very ingenious commentary.—Hist. of Eng. 4to ed. vol. ix. p. 50.

10 I e. nobleness; a word now obsolete, but common in Shakespeare's time.

11 This speech, which contains in the most expressive terms the doctrine of passive obedience, is founded upon Holinshed's account. The sentiments would not in the reign of Elizabeth or James have been regarded as novel or unconstitutional. It is observable that usurpers are as ready to avail themselves of divine right as lawful sovereigns; to dwell upon the sacredness of their persons, and the sanctity of their charac-

1 The birth is supposed to be influenced by stars; therefore the poet, with his allowed licence, takes stars for birth. We learn from Pliny's Nat. Hist. that the vulgar error assigned the brightest and fairest stars to the rich and great:—Sidera singulis attributa nobis, et clara divitibus, minora pauperibus. &c. lib. i. c. viii.

2 This is a translated sense much harsher than that of stars, explained in the preceding note. Fitzwater throws down his gage as a pledge of battle, and tells Aumerle that if he stands upon sympathies, that is upon equality of blood, the combat is now offered him by a man of rank not inferior to his own. Sympathy is an affection incident at once to two subjects. This community of affection implies a likeness or equality of nature; and hence the poet transferred the term to equality of blood.

3 I e. from sunrise to sunset.

4 'A thousand hearts are great within my bosom.'

King Richard III.

5 I dare meet him where no help can be had by me against him

His captain, steward, deputy elect,
Anointed, crowned, planted many years,
Be judg'd by subject and inferior breath,
And he himself not present? O, forbid¹ it, God,
That, in a Christian climate, souls refin'd
Should show so heinous, black, obscene a deed!
I speak to subjects, and a subject speaks,
Stirr'd up by heaven, thus boldly for his king.
My lord of Hereford here, whom you call king,
Is a foul traitor to proud Hereford's king:
And if you crown him, let me prophecy,—
The blood of English shall manure the ground,
And future ages groan for this foul act;
Peace shall go sleep with Turks and infidels,
And, in this seat of peace, tumultuous wars
Shall kin with kin, and kind with kind confound:
Disorder, horror, fear, and mutiny
Shall here inhabit, and this land be call'd
The field of Golgotha, and dead men's skulls.
O, if you rear² this house against this house,
It will the wofullest division prove,
That ever fell upon this cursed earth:
Prevent, resist it, let it not be so,
Lest child's child's children³ cry against you—woe!

North. Well have you argu'd, sir; and, for your pains,
Of capital treason we arrest you here:—
My lord of Westminster, be it your charge
To keep him safely till his day of trial.—
May't please you, lords, to grant the commons' suit.⁴

Boling. Fetch hither Richard, that in common view
He may surrender; and we shall proceed
Without suspicion.

York. I will be his conduct.⁵ [Exit.]

Boling. Lords, you that are here under our arrest,

Procure your sureties for your days of answer:—
Little are we beholden to your love, [To CAR.]
And little look'd for at your helping hands.

Re-enter YORK, with KING RICHARD, and Officers bearing the Crown, &c.

K. Rich. Alack, why am I sent for to a king,
Before I have shook off the regal thoughts
Wherewith I reign'd? I hardly yet have learn'd
To insinuate, flatter, bow, and bend my knee:⁶—
Give sorrow leave a while to tutor me
To this submission. Yet I well remember
The favours⁷ of these men: Were they not mine?
Did they not sometime cry, all hail! to me?
So Judas did to Christ: but he, in twelve,
Found truth in all but one; I, in twelve thousand,
none.

God save the king!—Will no man say, amen?
Am I both priest and clerk? well then, amen.
God save the king! although I be not he:
And yet, amen, if heaven do think him me.—
To do what service am I sent for hither?

York. To do that office, of thine own good will,
Which tired majesty did make thee offer,—
The resignation of thy state and crown
To Henry Bolingbroke.

K. Rich. Give me the crown;—Here, cousin, seize the crown;
On this side, my hand; and on that side, yours.
Now is this golden crown like a deep well,

That owes⁸ two buckets filling one another;
The emptier ever dancing in the air,
The other down, unseen, and full of water:
That bucket down, and full of tears am I,
Drinking my griefs, whilst you mount up on high.

Boling. I thought, you had been willing to resign.

K. Rich. My crown, I am; but still my griefs are mine:

You may my glories and my state depose,
But not my griefs; still am I king of those.

Boling. Part of your cares you give me with your crown.

K. Rich. Your cares set up, do not pluck my cares down.

My care is—loss of care, by old care done;⁹
Your care is—gain of care, by new care won:
The cares I give, I have, though given away;
They tend¹⁰ the crown, yet still with me they stay.

Boling. Are you contented to resign the crown?

K. Rich. Ay, no;—no, ay;—for I must nothing be;

Therefore no no, for I resign to thee.

Now mark me how I will undo myself:—
I give this heavy weight from off my head,
And this unwieldy sceptre from my hand,
The pride of kingly sway from out my heart;
With mine own tears I wash away my balm,¹¹
With mine own hands I give away my crown,
With mine own tongue deny my sacred state,
With mine own breath release all duteous oaths:¹²
All pomp and majesty I do forswear;
My manors, repts, revenues, I forego;
My acts, decrees, and statutes, I deny:
God pardon all oaths, that are broke to me!
God keep all vows unbroke, are made¹³ to thee!
Make me, that nothing have, with nothing griev'd;
And thou with all pleas'd, that hast all achiev'd!
Long mayst thou live in Richard's seat to sit,
And soon lie Richard in an earthly pit!
God save King Henry, unking'd Richard says,
And send him many years of sunshine days!—
What more remains?

North. No more, but that you read [Offering a Paper.]
These accusations, and these grievous crimes,
Committed by your person, and your followers,
Against the state and profit of this land;
That, by confessing them, the souls of men
May deem that you are worthily depos'd.
K. Rich. Must I do so? and must I ravel out
My weav'd up follies? Gentle Northumberland,
If thy offences were upon record,
Would it not shame thee in so fair a troop,
To read a lecture of them? If thou would'st,¹⁴
There should'st thou find one heinous article,—
Containing the deposing of a king,
And cracking the strong warrant of an oath,— Mark'd with a blot, damn'd in the book of heaven:—
Nay, all of you, that stand and look upon me,
Whilst that my wretchedness doth bait myself,—
Though some of you, with Pilate, wash your hands,
Showing an outward pity; yet you Pilates
Have here deliver'd me to my sour cross,
And water cannot wash away your sin.

North. My lord, despatch; read o'er these articles.

K. Rich. Mine eyes are full of tears, I cannot see:
And yet salt water blinds them not so much,

5 i. e. conductor.
6 The quarto reads limbs.
7 Countenances, features. 8 Owns.

9 Shakespeare often obscures his meaning by playing with sounds. Richard seems to say here that 'his cares are not made less by the increase of Bolingbroke's cares';—his grief is, that his regal cares are at an end, by the cessation of care to which he had been accustomed.

10 Attend. 11 Oil of consecration.
12 The first quarto reads duty's rites.
13 Thus the folio. The quarto reads that swear.
14 That is, if thou would'st read over a list of thy own deeds.

ter. Even that 'cut-purse of the empire,' Claudius, in Hamlet, affects to believe that——such divinity doth hedge a king.¹

1 The quarto reads forfend.

2 The quarto reads raise.

3 i. e. grandchildren. Pope altered it to 'children's children,' and was followed by others. The old copies read, 'Lest child, child's children.'

4 What follows, almost to the end of the act, is not found in the first two quartos. The addition was made in the quarto of 1609. In the quarto, 1597, after the words 'his day of trial,' the scene thus closes:—

Bol. Let it be so: and lo! on Wednesday next
We solemnly proclaim our coronation.
Lords, be ready all.²

But they can see a sort¹ of traitors here.
 Nay, if I turn mine eyes upon myself,
 I find myself a traitor with the rest:
 For I have given here my soul's consent,
 To undeck the pompous body of a king;
 Made glory base; and sovereignty, a slave;
 Proud majesty, a subject; state, a peasant.

North. My lord,—

K. Rich. No lord of thine, thou haught,² insulting man,

Nor no man's lord; I have no name, no title,—
 No, not that name was given me at the font,—
 But 'tis usurp'd:—Alack the heavy day,
 That I have worn so many winters out,
 And know not now what name to call myself!
 O, that I were a mockery king of snow,
 Standing before the sun of Bolingbroke,
 To melt myself away in water-drops!—
 Good king,—great king,—(and yet not greatly good.)

An if my word be sterling yet in England,
 Let it command a mirror hither straight;
 That it may show me what a face I have,
 Since it is bankrupt of his³ majesty.

Boling. Go some of you, and fetch a looking-glass. [Exit an Attendant.]

North. Read o'er this paper, while the glass doth come.

K. Rich. Fiend! thou torment'st me ere I come to hell.

Boling. Urge it no more, my Lord Northumberland.

North. The commons will not then be satisfied.

K. Rich. They shall be satisfied: I'll read enough,
 When I do see the very book indeed
 Where all my sins are writ, and that's—myself.

Re-enter Attendant, with a Glass.

Give me that glass, and therein will I read.—
 No deeper wrinkles yet? Hath sorrow struck
 So many blows upon this face of mine,
 And made no deeper wounds?—O, flattering glass,
 Like to my followers in prosperity,
 Thou dost beguile me! Was this face the face,
 That every day under his household roof
 Did keep ten thousand men?⁴ Was this the face,
 That, like the sun, did make beholders wink:⁵
 Was this the face, that fac'd so many follies,
 And was at last out-fac'd by Bolingbroke?
 A brittle glory shineth in this face:
 As brittle as the glory is the face;

[Dashes the Glass against the ground.]

For there it is, crack'd in a hundred shivers.—
 Mark, silent king, the moral of this sport.—
 How soon my sorrow hath destroy'd my face.

Boling. The shadow of your sorrow hath destroy'd

The shadow of your face.

K. Rich. Say that again.
 The shadow of my sorrow? Ha! let's see:—
 'Tis very true, my grief lies all within;⁶
 And these external manners of lament
 Are merely shadows to the unseen grief,
 That swells with silence in the tortured soul;
 There lies the substance: and I thank thee, king,
 For thy great bounty, that not only giv'st
 Me cause to wail, but teachest me the way
 How to lament the cause. I'll beg one boon,

1 A sort is a set or company.

2 i. e. haughty.

3 Hic pro ita. It was common in the poet's time to use the personal for the neutral pronoun.

4 To his household came every day to meate ten thousand men.—Chronicle History.

5 The quarto omits this line and the four preceding words.

6 'But I have that within which passeth show.' These but the trappings and the suits of woe.—Hamlet.

7 To convey was formerly often used in an ill sense. Pistol says of stealing, 'convey the wise it call;' and 'to convey' is the word for slight of hand or juggling. Richard means that it is a term of contempt, 'jugglers are you all.'

And then be gone, and trouble you no more.
 Shall I obtain it?

Boling. Name it, fair cousin.

K. Rich. Fair cousin! I am greater than a king:
 For, when I was a king, my flatterers
 Were then but subjects: being now a subject,
 I have a king here to my flatterer.

Being so great, I have no need to beg.

Boling. Yet ask.

K. Rich. And shall I have?

Boling. You shall.

K. Rich. Then give me leave to go.

Boling. Whither?

K. Rich. Whither you will, so I were from your sights.

Boling. Go, some of you, convey him to the Tower.

K. Rich. O, good! Convey?—Conveyers' are you all,

That rise thus nimbly by a true king's fall.⁸

[Exeunt K. RICH. some Lords, and a Guard.]

Boling. On Wednesday next we solemnly set down

Our coronation: lords, prepare yourselves.

[Exeunt all but the Abbot, Bishop of Carlisle, and AUMERLE.]

Abbot. A woful pageant have we here beheld.

Car. The woe's to come: the children yet unborn

Shall feel this day as sharp to them as thorn.

Aum. You holy clergymen, is there no plot

To rid the realm of this pernicious blot?

Abbot. Before I freely speak my mind herein,

You shall not only take the sacrament

To bury mine intents, but also to effect

Whatever I shall happen to devise:—

I see your brows are full of discontent,

Your hearts of sorrow, and your eyes of tears;

Come home with me to supper; I will lay

A plot, shall show us all a merry day. [Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I. London. A Street leading to the Tower.

Enter Queen, and Ladies.

Queen. This way the king will come; this is the way

To Julius Caesar's ill-erected tower.⁹

To whose flint bosom my condemned lord

Is doom'd a prisoner, by proud Bolingbroke:

Here let us rest, if this rebellious earth

Have any resting for her true king's queen.

Enter KING RICHARD, and Guards.

But soft, but see, or rather do not see,

My fair rose wither: Yet look up; behold;

That you in pity may dissolve to dew,

And wash him fresh again with true-love tears.—

Ah, thou, the model where old Troy did stand;

Thou map¹⁰ of honour; thou King Richard's tomb,

And not King Richard; thou most beauteous inn,¹¹

Why should hard-favour'd grief be lodg'd in thee,

When triumph is become an ale-house guest?

K. Rich. Join not with grief, fair woman, do not so,

To make my end too sudden: learn, good soul

To think our former state a happy dream;

From which awak'd, the truth of what we are

Shows us but this; I am sworn brother,¹² sweet,

8 This is the last of the additional lines first printed in the quarto of 1603. In the first editions there is no personal appearance of King Richard.

9 By ill-erected is probably meant erected for evil purposes.

10 Model anciently signified, according to the dictionaries, 'the platform or form of any thing.' And map is used for picture resemblance. In the Rape of Lucrece Shakespeare calls sleep 'the map of death.'

11 Inn does not probably here mean a house of public entertainment, but a dwelling or lodging generally. In which sense the word was anciently used.

12 Suorum brother alludes to the fratres jurati, who in the age of adventure, bound themselves by mutual oaths to share fortunes together.

RICHARD & HOLINGBROOK.

To grim necessity; and he and I
Will keep a league till death. Hie thee to France,
And cloister there in some religious house:
Our holy lives must win a new world's crown,
Which our profane hours here have stricken down.

Queen. What, is my Richard both in shape and mind

Transform'd and weakened? Hath Bolingbroke
Depos'd thine intellect? hath he been in thy heart?
The lion, dying, thrusteth forth his paw,
And wounds the earth, if nothing else, with rage
To be o'erpower'd; and wilt thou, pupil-like,
Take thy correction mildly? kiss the rod,
And fawn on rage with base humility,
Which art a lion, and a king of beasts?

K. Rich. A king of beasts, indeed: if aught but beasts,

I had been still a happy king of men.

Good sometime queen, prepare thee hence for France:

Think, I am dead; and that even here thou tak'st,
As from my death-bed, my last living leave.
In winter's tedious nights, sit by the fire
With good old folks, and let them tell thee tales
Of woful ages, long ago betid:¹

And, ere thou bid good night, to quit² their grief,
Tell them the lamentable fall³ of me,
And send the hearers weeping to their beds.

For why, the senseless brands will sympathize
The heavy accent of thy moving tongue,
And, in compassion, weep the fire out:
And some will mourn in ashes, some coal-black,
For the deposing of a rightful king.

Enter NORTHUMBERLAND, attended.

North. My lord, the mind of Bolingbroke is chang'd;

You must to Pomfret, not unto the Tower.—

And, madam, there is order ta'en for you:⁴
With all swift speed you must away to France.

K. Rich. Northumberland, thou ladder where-withal

The mounting Bolingbroke ascends my throne,—

The time shall not be many hours of age

More than it is, ere foul sin, gathering head,

Shall break into corruption: thou shalt think,

Though he divide the realm, and give thee half,

It is too little, helping him to all;

And he shall think, that thou, which know'st this way

To plant unrightful kings, wilt know again,

Being ne'er so little urg'd, another way

To pluck him headlong from the usurped throne.

The love of wicked friends converts to fear;

That fear, to hate; and hate turns one, or both,

To worthy danger, and deserved death.

North. My guilt be on my head, and there an end.

Take leave, and part; for you must part forthwith.

K. Rich. Doubly divorc'd?—Bad men, ye violate

A twofold marriage; 'twixt my crown and me;

And then, betwixt me and my married wife.—

Let me unkind the oath 'twixt thee and me;

And yet not so, for with a kiss 'twas made.⁵—

Part us, Northumberland: I towards the north,

Where shivering cold and sickness pines the clime;

My wife to France; from whence, set forth in pomp,

She came adorned hither like sweet May,
Sent back like Hallowmas,⁶ or short'st of day.

Queen. And must we be divided? must we part?

K. Rich. Ay, hand from hand, my love, and heart from heart.

Queen. Banish us both, and send the king with me.

North. 'That were some love, but little policy.

Queen. Then whither he goes, thither let me go?

K. Rich. So two, together weeping, make one woe.

Weep thou for me in France, I for thee here;

Better far off, than—near, be ne'er the near!⁸

Go, count thy way with sighs; I, mine with groans.

Queen. So longest way shall have the longest moans.

K. Rich. Twice for one step I'll groan, the way being short,

And piece the way out with a heavy heart.

Come, come, in wooing sorrow let's be brief,

Since, wedding it, there is such length in grief.

One kiss shall stop our mouths, and dumbly part:

Thus give I mine, and thus I take thy heart.

[They kiss.]

Queen. Give me mine own again; 'twere no good part,

To take on me to keep, and kill thy heart.⁹

[Kiss again.]

So now I have mine own again, begone,

That I may strive to kill it with a groan.

K. Rich. We make woe wanton with this fond delay:

Once more, adieu; the rest let sorrow say. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. *The same. A Room in the Duke of York's Palace. Enter YORK, and his Duchess.*¹⁰

Duch. My lord, you told me, you would tell the rest,

When weeping made you break the story off

Of our two cousins coming into London.

York. Where did I leave?

Duch. At that sad stop, my lord,

Where rude misgovern'd hands, from windows' tops,

Threw dust and rubbish on King Richard's head.

York. Then, as I said, the duke, great Bolingbroke,—

Mounted upon a hot and fiery steed,

Which his aspiring rider seem'd to know,—

With slow, but stately pace, kept on his course,

While all tongues cried—God save thee, Bolingbroke!

You would have thought the very windows' spake,

So many greedy looks of young and old

Through casements darted their desiring eyes

Upon his visage; and that all the walls,

With painted imag'ry, had said at once,—

Jesu preserve thee! welcome, Bolingbroke!

Whilst he, from one side to the other turning,

Bare-headed, lower than his proud steed's neck,

Bespake them thus,—I thank you, countrymen:

And thus still doing, thus he pass'd along.

Duch. Alas, poor Richard! where rides he the while?

York. As in a theatre, the eyes of men,¹¹

After a well-grac'd actor leaves the stage,

Are idly bent on him that enters next,

Thinking his prattle to be tedious:

Even so, or with much more contempt, men's eyes

Did scowl on Richard; no man cried, God save him;

¹⁰ The first wife of Edward duke of York was Isabella, daughter of Peter the Cruel, king of Castile and Leon. He married her in 1372, and had by her the duke of Aumerle, and all his other children. In introducing her the poet has departed widely from history; for she died in 1394, four or five years before the events related in the present play. After her death York married Joan, daughter of John Holland, earl of Kent, who survived him about thirty-four years, and had three other husbands.

¹¹ 'The painting of this description is so lively, and the words so moving, that I have scarce read any thing comparable to it in any other language.'—Dryden; Pref. to Troilus and Cressida,

² To requite their mournful stories.

³ The quarto of 1597 reads tale.

⁴ Thus in Othello:—

'Honest Iago hath ta'en order for it.'

⁵ A kiss appears to have been an established circumstance in our ancient marriage ceremonies.

⁶ All Hallowes, i. e. All Saints, Nov. 1.

⁷ The quartos give this speech to the king.

⁸ Never the higher, i. e. 'it is better to be at a great distance than being near each other, to find that we are yet not likely to be peaceably and happily united.'

⁹ So in King Henry V Act ii. Sc. 2:—

'—the king hath kill'd his heart,'

No joyful tongue gave him his welcome home :
But dust was thrown upon his sacred head ;
Which with such gentle sorrow he shook off,—
His face still combating with tears and smiles,
The badges of his grief and patience,—
That had not God, for some strong purpose, steel'd
The hearts of men, they must perforce have melted,
And barbarism itself have pitied him.
But heaven hath a hand in these events ;
To whose high will we bound our calm contents.
To Bolingbroke are we sworn subjects now,
Whose state and honour I for aye allow.

Enter AUMERLE.

Duch. Here comes my son Aumerle.

York. Aumerle that was ;
But that is lost, for being Richard's friend ;
And, madam, you must call him Rutland¹ now.
I am in parliament pledge for his truth,
And lasting fealty to the new-made king.

Duch. Welcome, my son : Who are the violets
now,

That strew the green lap of the new-come spring ?
Aum. Madam, I know not, nor I greatly care not ;
God knows, I had as lief be none as one.

York. Well, bear you well in this new spring of
time,

Lest you be cropp'd before you come to prime.
What news from Oxford ? hold those justs and triumphs ?

Aum. For aught I know, my lord, they do.

York. You will be there, I know.

Aum. If God prevent it not ; I purpose so.

York. What seal is that, that hangs without thy bosom ?²

Yea, look'st thou pale ? let me see the writing.

Aum. My lord, 'tis nothing.

York. No matter then who sees it ;
I will be satisfied, let me see the writing.

Aum. I do beseech your grace to pardon me ;
It is a matter of small consequence,
Which for some reasons I would not have seen.

York. Which for some reasons, sir, I mean to see.

I fear, I fear,— What should you fear ?

'Tis nothing but some bond that he is enter'd into
For gay apparel, 'gainst the triumph day.

York. Bound to himself ? what doth he with a bond

That he is bound to ? Wife, thou art a fool.—
Boy, let me see the writing.

Aum. I do beseech you, pardon me ; I may not show it.

York. I will be satisfied ; let me see it, I say.

[Snatches it, and reads.]

Treason ! foul treason !—villain ! traitor ! slave !

Duch. What is the matter, my lord ?

York. Ho ! who is within there ? [Enter a Servant.]
Saddle my horse.

God for his mercy ! what treachery is here !

Duch. Why, what is it, my lord ?

York. Give me my boots, I say ; saddle my horse :—

Now by mine honour, by my life, my troth,
I will approach the villain. [Exit Servant.]

Duch. What's the matter ?

York. Peace, foolish woman.

Duch. I will not peace :—What is the matter, son ?

Aum. Good mother, be content ; it is no more Than my poor life must answer.

Duch. Thy life answer ?

Re-enter Servant, with Boots.

York. Bring me my boots, I will unto the king.

Duch. Strike him, Aumerle.—Poor boy, thou art amaz'd :

Hence, villain ; never more come in my sight.—
[To the Servant.]

York. Give me my boots, I say.

Duch. Why, York, what wilt thou do ?

Wilt thou not hide the trespass of thine own ?
Have we more sons ? or are we like to have ?
Is not my teeming date drunk up with time ?
And wilt thou pluck my fair son from mine age,
And rob me of a happy mother's name ?
Is he not like thee ? is he not thine own ?

York. Thou fond mad woman,
Wilt thou conceal this dark conspiracy ?
A dozen of them here have ta'en the sacrament,
And interchangeably set down their hands,
To kill the king at Oxford.

Duch. He shall be none ;

We'll keep him here : Then what is that to him ?

York. Away,
Fond woman ! were he twenty times my son,
I would approach him.

Duch. Hadst thou groan'd for him,
As I have done, thou'dst be more pitiful.
But now I know thy mind ; thou dost suspect,
That I have been disloyal to thy bed,
And that he is a bastard, not thy son :
Sweet York, sweet husband, be not of that mind :
He is as like thee as a man may be,
Not like to me, or any of my kin,
And yet I love him.

York. Make way, unruly woman. [Exit.]

Duch. After, Aumerle ; mount thee upon his horse ;

Spur, post ; and get before him to the king,
And beg thy pardon ere he do accuse thee.

I'll not be long behind ; though I be old,
I doubt not but to ride as fast as York ;
And never will I rise up from the ground,
Till Bolingbroke have pardon'd thee : Away ;
Begone. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. Windsor. A Room in the Castle.
Enter BOLINGBROKE as King ; PERCY, and other Lords.

Boling. Can no man tell of my unthrifty son ?
'Tis full three months since I did see him last :—
If any plague hang over us, 'tis he.

I would to God, my lords, he might be found :
Inquire at London, 'mongst the taverns there,
For there, they say, he daily doth frequent,
With unrestrained loose companions,
Even such, they say, as stand in narrow lanes,
And beat our watch, and rob our passengers ;
While he, young, wanton, and effeminate boy,
Takes on the point of honour, to support
So dissolute a crew.⁴

Percy. My lord, some two days since I saw the prince ;

And told him of these triumphs held at Oxford.

Boling. And what said the gallant ?

Percy. His answer was,—he would unto the stews ;

And from the commonest creature pluck a glove,
And wear it as a favour ; and with that
He would unhorse the lustiest challenger.

Boling. As dissolute, as desperate : yet, through both

I see some sparkles of a better hope,
Which elder days may happily bring forth.
But who comes here ?

Enter AUMERLE, hastily.

Aum. Where is the king ?

¹ The dukes of Aumerle, Surrey, and Exeter were deprived of their dukedoms by an act of Henry's first parliament, but were allowed to retain the earldoms of Rutland, Kent, and Huntingdon.—Holinshed.

² So in Milton's Song on May Morning :—

“ who from her green lap throws

The yellow cowslip and the pale primrose.”

³ The seals of deeds were formerly impressed on clips or labels of parchment appendant to them.

⁴ This is a very proper introduction to the future character of King Henry V. to his debaucheries in his youth, and his greatness in his manhood, as the poet has described them. But it has been ably contended by Mr. Luders that the whole story of his dissipation was a fiction. At this period (i. e. 1400) he was but twelve years old, being born in 1388.

⁵ The folio reads sparkles

Boling. What means

Our cousin, that he stares and looks so wildly?

Aum. God save your grace. I do beseech your majesty,

To have some conference with your grace alone.

Boling. Withdraw yourselves, and leave us here alone.— [Exeunt PERCY and Lords.]

What is the matter with our cousin now?

Aum. For ever may my knees grow to the earth, [Kneels.]

My tongue cleave to my roof within my mouth, Unless a pardon, ere I rise, or speak.

Boling. Intended, or committed, was this fault?

If but¹ the first, how heinous e'er it be,

To win thy after-love, I pardon thee.

Aum. Then give me leave that I may turn the key, That no man enter till my tale be done.

Boling. Have thy desire. [AUM. locks the door.]

York. [Within.] My liege, beware; look to thyself;

Thou hast a traitor in thy presence there.

Boling. Villain, I'll make thee safe. [Drawing.]

Aum. Stay thy revengeful hand;

Thou hast no cause to fear.

York. [Within.] Open the door, secure, fool-hardy king:

Shall I, for love, speak treason to thy face?

Open the door, or I will break it open.

[BOLINGBROKE opens the door.]

Enter YORK.

Boling. What is the matter, uncle? speak;

Recover breath; tell us how near is danger,

That we may arm us to encounter it.

York. Peruse this writing here, and thou shalt know

The reason that my haste forbids me show.

Aum. Remember, as thou read'st, thy promise past:

I do repent me; read not my name there, My heart is not confederate with his hand.

York. 'Twas, villain, ere thy hand did set it down.

I tore it from the traitor's bosom, king:

Fear, and not love, begets his penitence:

Forget to pity him, lest thy pity prove

A serpent that will sting thee to the heart.

Boling. O heinous, strong, and bold conspiracy! O loyal father of a treacherous son!

Thou sheer,² immaculate, and silver fountain,

From whence this stream through muddy passages, Hath held his current, and defil'd himself!

Thy overflow of good converts to bad;

And thy abundant goodness shall excuse

This deadly blot in thy digressing³ son.

York. So shall my virtue be his vice's bawd;

And he shall spend mine honour with his shame,

As thriftless sons their scraping fathers' gold.

Mine honour lives when his dishonour dies,

Or my sham'd life in his dishonour lies:

Thou kill'st me in his life; giving him breath,

The traitor lives, the true man's put to death.

Duch. [Within.] What ho, my liege! for God's sake let me in.

Boling. What shrill-voic'd suppliant makes this eager cry?

Duch. A woman, and thine aunt, great king; 'tis I.

Speak with me, pity me, open the door;

A beggar begs, that never begg'd before.

Boling. Our scene is alter'd,—from a serious thing,

And now chang'd to The Beggar and the King.—⁴

My dangerous cousin, let your mother in;

I know, she's come to pray for your foul sin.

York. If thou do pardon, whosever pray,

More sins, for his forgiveness, prosper may.

This fester'd joint cut off, the rest rests sound,

This let alone, will all the rest confound.

Enter Duchess.

Duch. O king, believe not this hard-hearted man; Love, loving not itself, none other can.

York. Thou frantic woman, what dost thou make⁵

here?

Shall thy old dugs once more a traitor rear?

Duch. Sweet York, be patient: Hear me, gentle liege. [Kneels.]

Boling. Rise up, good aunt.

Duch. Not yet, I thee beseech:

For ever will I kneel⁶ upon my knees,

And never see day that the happy sees,

Till thou give joy; until thou bid me joy,

By pardoning Rutland, my transgressing boy.

Aum. Unto my mother's prayers, I bend my knee. [Kneels.]

York. Against them both, my true joints bended be. [Kneels.]

Ill may'st thou thrive, if thou grant any grace!⁷

Duch. Pleads he in earnest? look upon his face;

His eyes do drop no tears, his prayers are in jest;

His words come from his mouth, ours from our breast;

He prays but faintly, and would be denied;

We pray with heart, and soul, and all beside:

His weary joints would gladly rise, I know;

Our knees shall kneel till to the ground they grow:

His prayers are full of false hypocrisy;

Ours, of true zeal and deep integrity.

Our prayers do out-pray his; then let them have

That mercy, which true prayers ought to have.

Boling. Good aunt, stand up.

Duch. Nay, do not say—stand up;

But, pardon, first; and afterwards, stand up.

An if I were thy nurse, thy tongue to teach,

Pardon—should be the first word of thy speech.

I never long'd to hear a word till now;

Say—pardon, king; let pity teach thee how:

The word is short, but not so short as sweet;

No word like pardon, for kings' mouths so meet.

York. Speak it in French, king; say, pardonnez

*moy.*⁸

Duch. Dost thou teach pardon pardon to destroy?

Ah, my sour husband, my hard-hearted lord,

That sett'st the word itself against the word!—

Speak, pardon, as 'tis current in our land:

The choppings⁹ French we do not understand.

Thine eye begins to speak, set thy tongue there,

Or, in thy piteous heart plant thou thine ear;

That, hearing how our plaints and prayers do pierce,

Pity may move thee, pardon to rehearse.

Boling. Good aunt, stand up.

Duch. I do not sue to stand,

Pardon is all the suit I have in hand.

Boling. I pardon him, as God shall pardon me.

Duch. O happy vantage of a kneeling knee!

Yet am I sick for fear: speak it again;

Twice saying pardon, doth not pardon twain,

But makes one pardon strong.

Boling. With all my heart

I pardon him.¹⁰

Duch. A god on earth thou art.

¹ The old copies read 'If on,' &c Pope made the alteration.

² Sheer is pellucid, transparent.

³ Thus in Romans and Juliet:—

'Digressing from the valour of a man.'

To digress is to deviate from what is right or regular.

⁴ It is probable that the old ballad of 'King Cophetua and the Beggar Maid' is here alluded to. The reader will find it in the first volume of Dr. Percy's Reliques of Ancient Poetry. There may have been a popular Interlude on the subject, for the story is alluded to by other contemporaries of the poet.

⁵ i. e. 'what dost thou do here?'

⁶ Thus the folio. The quarto copies read walk

⁷ This line is not in the folio.

⁸ The French moy being made to rhyme with destroy, would seem to imply that the poet was not well acquainted with the true pronunciation of that language: perhaps it was imperfectly understood in his time by those who had not visited France.

¹⁰ The old copies read 'I pardon him with all my heart.' The transposition was made by Pope.

Boling. But for our trusty brother-in-law,¹—and the abbot,²
 With all the rest of that consorted crew,—
 Destruction straight shall dog them at the heels.³
 Good uncle, help to order several powers
 To Oxford, or where'er these traitors are:
 They shall not live within this world, I swear,
 But I will have them, if I once know where.
 Uncle, farewell,—and cousin too,⁴ adieu!
 Your mother well hath pray'd, and prove you true.
Duch. Come, my old son;—I pray God make thee new. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. Enter EXTON, and a Servant.

Exton. Didst thou not mark the king, what words he spake?
Have I no friend will rid me of this living fear?
 Was it not so?

Serv. Those were his very words.

Exton. Have I no friend? quoth he; he spake it twice,

And urg'd it twice together; did he not?

Serv. He did.

Exton. And, speaking it, he wistfully look'd on me;
 As who should say,—I would, thou wert the man
 That would divorce this terror from my heart;
 Meaning, the king at Pomfret. Come, let's go;
 I am the king's friend, and will rid⁵ his foe.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V. Pomfret. The Dungeon of the Castle.
 Enter KING RICHARD.

K. Rich. I have been studying how I may compare
 This prison, where I live, unto the world:
 And, for because the world is populous,
 And here is not a creature but myself,
 I cannot do it;—Yet I'll hammer it out.
 My brain I'll prove the female to my soul;
 My soul, the father: and these two beget
 A generation of still-breeding thoughts,
 And these same thoughts people this little world;⁶
 In humours, like the people of this world,
 For no thought is contented. The better sort,
 As thoughts of things divine,—are intermix'd
 With scruples, and do set the word itself
 Against the word:⁷

As thus, Come, little ones; and then again,—
It is as hard to come, as for a camel
To thread the postern of a needle's eye.

Thoughts tending to ambition, they do plot
 Unlikely wonders: how these vain weak nails
 May tear a passage through the flinty ribs
 Of this hard world, my ragged prison walls;
 And, for they cannot, die in their own pride.
 Thoughts tending to content, flatter themselves,—
 That they are not the first of fortune's slaves,
 Nor shall not be the last; like silly beggars,
 Who, sitting in the stocks, refuge their shame,—
 That many have, and others must sit there:

1 The brother-in-law meant was John duke of Exeter and earl of Huntingdon (own brother to Edward II.) who had married the Lady Elizabeth, Bolingbroke's sister.

2 i. e. the abbot of Westminster.

3 'Death and destruction dog thee at the heels.'

King Richard III.

4 To, which is not in the old copies, was added by Theobald for the sake of the metre.

5 To rid and to dispatch were formerly synonymous, as may be seen in the old Dictionaries, 'To ridde or dispatche himself of any man.'—'To dispatche or ridde one quickly.' Vide Baret's Alvearie, 1576, in Ridde and Dispatche.

6 i. e. his own body.

7 By the word is meant the Holy Scriptures. The folio reads the faith itself against the faith.

8 This is the reading of the quarto, 1597; alluding, perhaps, to the custom of our early theatres. The title pages of some of our Moralities show that three or four characters were frequently represented by one person. The folio, and other copies, read 'in one prison.'

9 The folio reads 'to hear.'

10 Tick.

11 It should be recollected that there are three ways in which a clock notices the progress of time, viz. by the

And in this thought they find a kind of ease,
 Bearing their own misfortune on the back
 Of such as have before endur'd the like:
 Thus play I, in one person, many people,¹²
 And none contented: Sometimes am I king;
 Then treason makes me wish myself a beggar,
 And so I am: Then crushing penury
 Persuades me, I was better when a king;
 Then am I king'd again: and, by-and-by,
 Think that I am unking'd by Bolingbroke,
 And straight am nothing:—But, whate'er I am,
 Nor I, nor any man, that but man is,
 With nothing shall be pleas'd, till he be eas'd
 With being nothing.—Music do I hear? [Music.]
 Ha, ha! keep time:—How sour sweet music is,
 When time is broke, and no proportion kept!
 So is it in the music of men's lives.
 And here have I the daintiness of ear
 To check⁹ time broke in a disorder'd string;
 But for the concord of my state and time,
 Had not an ear to hear my true time broke.
 I wasted time, and now doth time waste me.
 For now hath time made me his numbring clock:
 My thoughts are minutes; and, with sighs, they jar¹⁰
 Their watches on to mine eyes, the outward watch.¹¹

Whereto my finger, like a dial's point,
 Is pointing still, in cleansing them from tears.
 Now, sir, the sound, that tells what hour it is,¹²
 Are clamorous groans, that strike upon my heart,
 Which is the bell: So sighs, and tears, and groans,
 Show minutes, times, and hours:—But my time
 Runs posting on in Bolingbroke's proud joy,
 While I stand fooling here, his Jack¹³ of the clock.
 This music mads me, let it sound no more;
 For, though it have help madmen to their wits,¹⁴
 In me, it seems, it will make wise men mad;
 Yet blessing on his heart that gives it me!
 For 'tis a sign of love; and love to Richard
 Is a strange brooch¹⁵ in this all hating world.

Enter Groom.

Groom. Hail, royal prince!

K. Rich.

Thanks, noble peer;

The cheapest of us is ten groats too dear.
 What art thou? and how comest thou hither,
 Where no man never comes, but that sad dog
 That brings me food, to make misfortune live?

Groom. I was a poor groom of thy stable, king,
 When thou wert king; who, travelling towards
 York,

With much ado, at length have gotten leave
 To look upon my sometimes¹⁶ master's face.
 O, how it yearn'd my heart, when I beheld,
 In London streets, that coronation day,
 When Bolingbroke rode on roan Barbary!
 That horse, that thou so often hast bestrid;
 That horse, that I so carefully have dress'd!

K. Rich. Rode he on Barbary? Tell me, gentle friend,
 How went he under him?

vibration of the pendulum, the index on the dial, and the striking of the hour. To these the king, in his comparison, severally alludes; his sighs corresponding to the jarring or ticking of the pendulum, which, at the same time that it watches or numbers the seconds, marks also their progress in minutes on the dial-plate, or outward watch, to which the king compares his eyes; and their want of figures is supplied by a succession of tears (or minute drops, to use an expression of Milton,) his finger, by as regularly wiping these away, performs the office of the dial's point: his clamorous groans are the sounds that tell the hour.

12 Should we not read —

'Now, sir, the sounds that tell what hour it is

Are clamorous groans?' &c.

13 That is, I strike for him. One of these automa-tions is alluded to in King Richard III. Act. iv. Sc. 3:—

'Because that, like a Jack, thou keep'st the stroke

Between thy begging and my meditation.'

14 See Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy, part ii. sec. 3.

15 Brooch, an ornamented buckle, and also a jewel in general, here figuratively used for jewel.

16 Sometimes was used for former, as well as some- time. Aliquando.

Groom. So proudly, as if he disdain'd the ground.¹
K. Rich. So proud that Bolingbroke was on his back!
 That jade hath eat bread from my royal hand;
 This hand hath made him proud with clapping him.
 Would he not stumble? Would he not fall down
 (Since pride must have a fall), and break the neck
 Of that proud man that did usurp his back?
 Forgiveness, horse! why do I rail on thee,
 Since thou, created to be awed by man,
 Wast born to bear? I was not made a horse;
 And yet I bear a burden like an ass,
 Spur-gall'd, and tir'd by jauncing² Bolingbroke.

Enter Keeper, with a Dish.

Keep. Fellow, give place; here is no longer stay.

[To the Groom.]

K. Rich. If thou love me, 'tis time thou wert away.
Groom. What my tongue dares not, that my heart shall say.

[Exit.]

Keep. My lord, will't please you to fall to?

K. Rich. Taste of it first, as thou art wont to do.

Keep. My lord, I dare not; Sir Pierce of Exton, who lately came from the king, commands the contrary.

K. Rich. The devil take Henry of Lancaster, and thee!

Patience is stale, and I am weary of it.

[Beats the Keeper.]

Keep. Help, help, help!

Enter Exton, and Servants, armed.

K. Rich. How now? what means death in this rude assault?

Villain, thy own hand yields thy death's instrument.

[Snatching a weapon and killing one.]

Go thou, and fill another room in hell.

[He kills another, and then Exton strikes him down.]

That hand shall burn in never-quenching fire,
 That staggers thus my person.—Exton, thy fierce hand

Hath with the king's blood stain'd the king's own Mount, mount, my soul! thy seat is up on high,
 Whilst my gross flesh sinks downward, here to die.

[Dies.]

Exton. As full of valour, as of royal blood:

Both have I spilt! O, 'would the deed were good!

For now the devil, that told me—I did well,

Says, that this deed is chronicled in hell.

This dead king to the living king I'll bear;—

Take hence the rest, and give them burial here.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. Windsor. A Room in the Castle.

Flourish. Enter BOLINGBROKE, and YORK, with Lords and Attendants.

Boling. Kind uncle York, the latest news we hear is—that the rebels have consum'd with fire Our town of Cicester in Gloucestershire;
 But whether they be ta'en, or slain, we hear not.

Enter NORTHUMBERLAND.

Welcome, my lord: What is the news? [Iness.]

North. First, to thy sacred state wish I all happy—The next news is,—I have to London sent

The heads of Salisbury, Spencer, Blunt, and Kent:⁴
 The manner of their taking may appear
 At large discours'd in this paper here.

[Presenting a paper]

Boling. We thank thee, gentle Percy, for thy pains;
 And to thy worth will add right worthy gains.

Enter FITZWATER.

Fitz. My lord, I have from Oxford sent to London The heads of Brocas and Sir Bennet Seely;
 Two of the dangerous consorted traitors,
 That sought at Oxford thy dire overthrow.

Boling. Thy pains, Fitzwater, shall not be forgot;
 Right noble is thy merit, well I wot.

Enter PERCY, with the Bishop of Carlisle.

Percy. The grand conspirator, abbot of Westminster,⁶

With clog of conscience, and sour melancholy,

Hath yielded up his body to the grave:

But here is Carlisle living to abide

Thy kindly doom, and sentence of his pride.

Boling. Carlisle, this is your doom:—⁷

Choose out some secret place, some reverend room,

More than thou hast, and with it 'joy thy life;

So, as thou liv'st in peace, die free from strife:

For though mine enemy thou hast ever been,

High sparks of honour in thee have I seen.

Enter Exton, with Attendants bearing a Coffin.

Exton. Great king, within this coffin I present

Thy buried fear: herein all breathless lies

The mightiest of thy greatest enemies,

Richard of Bourdeaux, by me hither brought.

Boling. Exton, I thank thee not; for thou hast wrought

A deed of slander, with thy fatal hand,
 Upon my head, and all this famous land.

Exton. From your own mouth, my lord, did I this deed.

Boling. They love not poison that do poison need,

Nor do I thee; though I did wish him dead,

I hate the murderer, love him murdered.

The guilt of conscience take thou for thy labour,

But neither my good word nor princely favour:

With Cain go wander through the shade of night,

And never show thy head by day nor light.—

Lords, I protest, my soul is full of woe,

That blood should sprinkle me, to make me grow:

Come, mourn with me for what I do lament,

And put on sullen black incontinent:⁸

I'll make a voyage to the Holy Land,

To wash this blood off from my guilty hand:—

March sadly after; grace my mournings here,

In weeping after this untimely bier. [Exeunt.]

THIS play is one of those which Shakspeare has apparently revised; but as success in works of invention is not always proportionate to labour, it is not finished at last with the happy force of some other of his tragedies, nor can it be said much to affect the passions, or enlarge the understanding. JOHNSTON.

Cathedral. Stowe seems to have had before him a manuscript history of the latter part of King Richard's life, written by a person who was with him in Wales. He says 'he was imprisoned in Pomfret Castle, where xv days and nights they vexed him with continual hunger, thirst, and cold, and finally bereft him of his life with such a kind of death as never before that time was known in England.'

⁵ So the folio. The quarto reads of Oxford, Salisbury, Blunt, and Kent. The folio is right according to the histories.

⁷ The bishop of Carlisle was committed to the Tower, but on the intercession of his friends obtained leave to change his prison for Westminster Abbey. In order to deprive him of his see, the pope, at the king's instance, translated him to a bishopric in partibus infidelium; and the only preferment he could ever after obtain was a rectory in Gloucestershire.

⁸ Immediately.

¹ Froissart relates a yet more silly tale of a greyhound of King Richard's, 'who was wont to leape upon the king, but left the king and came to the erle of Derby, duke of Lancaster, and made to him the same friendly countenance and chere as he was wont to do to the king.'
Froissart, by Berners, v. 11. fo. ccxxx.

² Jauncing is hard riding, from the old French word jaucer, which Cotgrave explains 'To stir a horse in the stable till he sweat withal; or (as our) to jaunt.'

³ These stage directions are not in the old copies.

⁴ The representation here given of the king's death is perfectly agreeable to Hall and Holinshed (who copied from Fabian, with whom the story of Exton is thought to have its origin.) But the fact was otherwise. He refused food for several days, and died of abstinence and a broken heart. See Walsingham, Oturburne, the monk of Evesham, the Continuator of the History of Croyland, and the Godetow Chronicle. His body, after being submitted to public inspection in the church of Pomfret, was brought to London, and exposed in Cheap-side for two hours, 'his heade on a black cushion, and his visage open,' when it was viewed, says Froissart, by twenty thousand persons, and finally in St. Paul's

FIRST PART OF KING HENRY THE FOURTH.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

'SHAKESPEARE has apparently designed a regular connection of these dramatic histories, from Richard the Second to Henry the Fifth. King Henry, at the end of Richard the Second, declares his purpose to visit the Holy Land, which he resumes in the first speech of this play. The complaint made by King Henry, in the last act of King Richard the Second, of the wildness of his son, prepares the reader for the frolics which are here to be recounted, and the characters to be exhibited.'

—Johnson.

The historical dramas of Shakespeare have indeed become the popular history. Vain attempts have been made by Walpole to vindicate the character of King Richard III. and in later times by Mr. Linders, to prove that the youthful dissipation ascribed to King Henry V. is without foundation. The arguments are probable, and ingeniously urged, but we still cling to our early notions of 'that mad-cap—that same sword and buckler Prince of Wales.' No plays were ever more read, nor does the inimitable, all-powerful genius of the poet ever shine out more than in the two parts of King Henry IV. which may be considered as one long drama divided.

It has been said that 'Falstaff is the summit of Shakespeare's comic invention,' and we may consequently add, the most inimitable comic character ever delineated; for who could invent like Shakespeare? Falstaff is now to us hardly a creature of the imagination, he is so definitely and distinctly drawn, that the mere reader of these dramas has the complete impression of a personal acquaintance. He is surrounded by a group of comic personages from time to time, each of which would have been sufficient to throw any ordinary creation into the shade; but they only serve to make the supereminent humour of the knight doubly conspicuous. What can come nigher to truth and real individual nature than those admirable delineations, Shallow and Silence? How irresistibly comic are all the scenes in which Falstaff is made to humour the fatuity and vanity of this precious pair.

The historic characters are delineated with a felicity and individuality not inferior in any respect. Harry Percy is a creation of the first order; and our favourite harebrained Prince of Wales, in whom mirthful pleasantry and midnight dissipation are mixed up with heroic dignity and generous feeling, is a rival worthy of him. Owen Glendower is another personification, managed with the most consummate skill; and the graver characters are sustained and opposed to each other in a manner peculiar to our great poet alone.

The transactions contained in the First Part of King Henry IV. are comprised within the period of about ten months; for the action commences with the news brought of Hotspur having defeated the Scots under Archibald earl of Douglas, at Holmedon (or Halidown Hill,) which battle was fought on Holyrood-day (the 14th of September,) 1402; and it closes with the battle of Shrewsbury, on Saturday, the 21st of July, 1403.

Malone places the date of the composition of this play in 1597; Dr. Drake in 1596. It was first entered at Stationers' Hall, February 25, 1597. There are no less than five quarto editions published during the author's life, viz. in 1598, 1599, 1604, 1609, 1613. For the piece which is supposed to have been its original the reader is referred to the 'Six Old Plays on which Shakespeare founded,' &c. published by Steevens and Nichols.

ACT I.

SCENE I. London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter KING HENRY, WESTMORELAND, SIR WALTER BLUNT, and others.

King Henry.

So shaken as we are, so wan with care,
Find we a time for frightened peace to pant,

1 Strands, banks of the sea.

2 Upon this passage the reader is favoured with three pages of notes in the Variorum Shakespeare. Steevens adopted Monk Mason's bold conjectural emendation, and reads—

'No more the thirsty Erinnys of this soil!'

And breathe short-winded accents of new broils
To be commenc'd in stronds¹ afar remote.
No more the thirsty entrance of this soil²
Shall daub her lips with her own children's blood;
No more shall trenching war channel her fields,
Nor bruise her flowerets with the armed hoofs
Of hostile paces: those opposed eyes,
Which,—like the meteors of a troubled heaven,
All of one nature, of one substance bred,—— which, in my opinion, does not make the passage clearer, to say nothing of the improbability of such a corruption as entrance for Erinnys. Mr. Douce proposed to read entrails instead of entrance; and Steevens once thought that we should read entrants. I am satisfied with the following explanation of the text, modified

Did lately meet in the intestine shock
And furious close of civil butchery,
Shall now, in mutual, well-beseeming ranks,
March all one way; and be no more oppos'd
Against acquaintance, kindred, and allies:
The edge of war, like an ill-sheathed knife,
No more shall cut his master. Therefore, friends,
As far as to the sepulchre of Christ,
(Whose soldier now, under whose blessed cross
We are impressed and engag'd to fight,)
Forthwith a power of English shall we levy,¹
Whose arms were moulded in their mother's womb,
To chase these pagans, in those holy fields,
Over whose acres walk'd those blessed feet,
Which, fourteen hundred years ago, were nail'd
For our advantage, on the bitter cross.
But this our purpose is a twelvemonth old,
And bootless 'tis to tell you—we will go;
Therefore we meet not now:—Then let me hear
Of you, my gentle cousin Westmoreland,
What yesternight our council did decree,
In forwarding this dear expedience.²

West. My liege, this haste was hot in question,
And many limits³ of the charge set down
But yesternight: when, all athwart, there came
A post from Wales, loaden with heavy news;
Whose worst was,—that the noble Mortimer,
Leading the men of Herefordshire to fight Against the irregular and wild Glendower,
Was by the rude hands of that Welshman taken,
And a thousand of his people butchered:
Upon whose dead corpse there was such misuse,
Such beastly, shameless transformation,
By those Welshwomen⁴ done, as may not be,
Without much shame, retold or spoken of.

K. Hen. It seems, then, that the tidings of this broil

Brake off our business for the Holy Land.

West. This, match'd with other, did, my gracious
lord;

For more uneven and unwelcome news
Came from the north, and thus it did import.
On Holyrood-day,⁵ the gallant Hotspur there,
Young Harry Percy,⁶ and brave Archibald,⁷
That ever-valiant and approved Scot,
At Holmedon met,
Where they did spend a sad and bloody hour;
As by discharge of their artillery,
And shape of likelihood, the news was told;
For he that brought them, in the very heat
And pride of their contention did take horse,
Uncertain of the issue any way.

K. Hen. Here is a dear and true-industrious
friend,

from that of Malone:—'No more shall this soil have the lips of her thirsty entrance (i. e. surface) daubed with the blood of her own children.' The soil is personified, and called the mother of those who live upon her surface; as in the following passage of King Richard II.:—

—sweet soil, adieu,

My mother and my nurse, that bears me yet.'

1 To levy a power to a place has been shown by Mr.
Gifford to be neither unexampled nor corrupt, but good authorized English. 'Scipio, before he levied his force to the walls of Carthage, gave his soldiers the print of the city on a cake to be devoured.'—Gosson's School of Abuse, 1587, E. 4.

2 Expedition.

3 Limits here seem to mean appointments or deter- minations.

4 See Thomas of Walsingham, p. 557, or Holinshed,
p. 528.

5 i. e. September 14th.

6 'This Harry Percy was surnamed, for his often pricking, Henry Hotspur, as one that seldom times rested, if there were anie service to be done abroad.'—Holinshed's Hist. of Scotland, p. 240.

7 Archibald Douglas, Earl Douglas.

8 No circumstance could have been better chosen to mark the expedition of Sir Walter. It is used by Fal-staff in a similar manner,—'to stand stained with tra- vel,' &c.

9 Balk'd in their own blood, is heaped, or laid on heaps, in their own blood. A balk was a ridge or bank of earth standing up between two furrows and to balk

Sir Walter Blunt, new lighted from his horse,
Stain'd⁹ with the variation of each soil
Betwixt that Holmedon and this seat of ours;
And he hath brought us smooth and welcome news.
The earl of Douglas is discomfited;
Ten thousand bold Scots, two-and-twenty knights,
Balk'd⁹ in their own blood, did Sir Walter see On Holmedon's plains: Of prisoners, Hotspur took Mordake earl of Fife, and eldest son
To beateon Douglas,¹⁰ and the earls of Athol,
Of Murray, Angus, and Menteith.¹¹
And is not this an honourable spoil?
A gallant prize? ha, cousin, is it not?

West. In faith,
It is a conquest for a prince to boast of.

K. Hen. Yea, there thou mak'st me sad, and mak'st me sin

In envy that my lord Northumberland
Should be the father of so blest a son:
A son, who is the theme of honour's tongue;
Amongst a grove, the very straightest plant;
Who is sweet fortune's minion, and her pride:
Whilst I, by looking on the praise of him,
See riot and dishonour stain the brow
Of my young Harry. O, that it could be prov'd,
That some might-tripping fairy had exchang'd
In cradle-clothes our children where they lay,
And call'd mine—Percy, his—Plantagenet!
Then would I have his Harry, and he mine.
But let him from my thoughts:—What think you,
coz,

Of this young Percy's pride? the prisoners,¹²
Which he in this adventure hath surpris'd,
To his own use he keeps; and sends me word,
I shall have none but Mordake earl of Fife.

West. That is his uncle's teaching, this is Worcester,

Malevolent to you in all aspects;¹³
Which makes him prune¹⁴ himself, and bristle up
The crest of youth against your dignity.

K. Hen. But I have sent for him to answer this
And, for this cause, awhile we must neglect
Our holy purpose to Jerusalem.
Cousin, on Wednesday next our council we
Will hold at Windsor; so inform the lords:
But come yourself with speed to us again;
For more is to be said, and to be done,
Than out of anger can be uttered.¹⁵

West. I will, my liege. [Exit.

SCENE II. The same. Another Room in the FALSTAFF.

Fal. Now, Hal, what time of day is it, lad?

was to throw up the earth so as to form those heaps or banks. It was sometimes used in the sense of monceau,
Fr. for a heap or hill.

10 Mordake, earl of Fife, who was son to the duke of Albany, regent of Scotland, is here called the son of Earl Douglas, through a mistake, into which the poet was led by the omission of a comma in the passage from whence he took this account of the Scottish prisoners.

11 This is a mistake of Holinshed in his English History, for in that of Scotland, pp. 259, 262, 419, he speaks of the earl of Fife and Menteith as one and the same person.

12 Percy had an exclusive right to these prisoners, except the earl of Fife. By the law of arms, every man who had taken any captive, whose redemption did not exceed ten thousand crowns, had him clearly to himself to acquit or ransom at his pleasure. But Percy could not refuse the earl of Fife to the king; for, being a prince of the royal blood, (son to the duke of Albany, brother to King Robert III.) Henry might justly claim him, by his ac-knowledge'd military prerogative.

13 An astrological allusion. Worcester is represented as a malignant star, that influenced the conduct of Hotspur.

14 The metaphor is borrowed from falconry. A hawk is said to prune herself when she picks off the loose feathers and smooths the rest: it is applied to other birds, and is perhaps so familiar as hardly to require a note.

15 That is, more is to be said than anger will suffer me to say; more than can issue from a mind disturbed like mine.

P. Hen. Thou art so fat-witted, with drinking of old sack, and unbuttoning thee after supper, and sleeping upon benches after noon, that thou hast forgotten to demand that truly which thou would'st truly know. What the devil hast thou to do with the time of the day? unless hours were cups of sack, and minutes capons, and clocks the tongues of bawds, and dials the signs of leaping-houses, and the blessed sun himself a fair hot wench in flame-coloured taffata, I see no reason why thou should'st be so superfluous to demand the time of the day.

Fal. Indeed, you come near me now, Hal; for we, that take purses, go by the moon and seven stars; and not by Phœbus,—he, *that wandering knight so fair.*¹ And, I pray thee, sweet wag, when thou art king,—as, God save thy grace—(majesty, I should say; for grace thou wilt have none,)—

P. Hen. What, none?

Fal. No, by my troth; not so much as will serve to be prologue to an egg and butter.

P. Hen. Well, how then? come, roundly, roundly.

Fal. Marry, then, sweet wag, when thou art king, let not us, that are squires of the night's body, be called thieves of the day's beauty;² let us be Diana's foresters,³ gentlemen of the shade, minions of the moon: And let men say, we be men of good government: being governed as the sea is, by our noble and chaste mistress the moon, under whose countenance we—steal.

P. Hen. Thou say'st well; and it holds well too; for the fortune of us, that are the moon's men, doth ebb and flow like the sea; being governed as the sea is, by the moon. As, for proof, now: A purse of gold most resolutely snatched on Monday night, and most dissolutely spent on Tuesday morning; got with swearing—lay by;⁴ and spent with crying—bring in;⁵ now, in as low an ebb as the foot of the ladder; and, by and by, in as high a flow as the ridge of the gallows.

Fal. By the Lord, thou say'st true, lad. And is not my hostess of the tavern a most sweet wench?

P. Hen. As the honey of Hybla, my old lad of the castle.⁶ And is not a buff jerkin, a most sweet robe of durance?⁷

Fal. How now, how now, mad wag? what, in thy quips, and thy quiddities? what a plague have I to do with a buff jerkin?

1 Falstaff, with great propriety, according to vulgar astronomy, calls the sun a wandering knight, and by this expression evidently alludes to some knight of romance; perhaps 'The Knight of the Sun'; el Cavallero del Febo, a popular book in his time. The words may be part of some forgotten ballad.

2 'Let not us who are body squires to the night (i. e. adorn the night) be called a disgrace to the day.' To take away the beauty of the day may probably mean to disgrace it. A 'squire of the body' originally signified the attendant of a knight. It became afterwards the cant term for a pimp. Falstaff puns on the words knight and beauty, quasi body.

3 'Exile and alander are justly me awarded, My wife and heirs lacks lands and lawful right; And me their lord made dame Diana's knight.'

This is the lament of Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk, in The Mirror for Magistrates. Hall, in his Chronicles, says that certain persons who appeared as foresters in a pageant exhibited in the reign of King Henry VIII. were called Diana's knights.

4 To lay by is to be still. It occurs again in King Henry VIII.:

'Even the billows of the sea

Hung their heads, and then lay by.'

Stevens says that it is a term adopted from navigation.

5 I. e. 'bring in more wine.'

6 Old lad of the castle. This passage has been supposed to have a reference to the name of Sir John Oldcastle. Rowe says that there was a tradition that the part of Falstaff was originally written by Shakespeare under that name. Fuller, in his Church History, book iv. p. 168, mentions this change in the following manner:—'Stage poets have themselves been very bold with, and others very merry at, the memory of Sir John Oldcastle, whom they have fancied a boon companion, a jovial royster, and a coward to boot. The best is, Sir John Falstaff hath relieved the memory of Sir John Oldcastle, and of late is substituted buffoon in his place.'

P. Hen. Why, what a pox have I to do with my hostess of the tavern?

Fal. Well, thou hast called her to a reckoning, many a time and oft.

P. Hen. Did I ever call for thee to pay thy part?

Fal. No; I'll give thee thy due, thou hast paid all there.

P. Hen. Yea, and elsewhere, so far as my coin would stretch; and where it would not, I have used my credit.

Fal. Yea, and so used it, that were it not here apparent that thou art heir apparent,—But, I pry thee, sweet wag, shall there be gallows standing in England when thou art king? and resolution thus fobbed as it is, with the rusty curb of old father antic the law? Do not thou, when thou art king, hang a thief.

P. Hen. No; thou shalt.

Fal. Shall I? O rare! By the Lord, I'll be a brave judge.

P. Hen. Thou judgest false already; I mean, thou shalt have the hanging of the thieves, and so become a rare hangman.

Fal. Well, Hal, well; and in some sort it jumps with my humour, as well as waiting in the court, I can tell you.

P. Hen. For obtaining of suits?

Fal. Yea, for obtaining of suits: whereof the hangman hath no lean wardrobe. 'Sblood, I am as melancholy as a gib⁸ cat, or a lugged bear.

P. Hen. Or an old lion; or a lover's lute.

Fal. Yea, or the drone of a Lincolnshire bagpipe.⁹

P. Hen. What sayest thou to a hare,¹⁰ or the melancholy of Moor-ditch?¹¹

Fal. Thou hast the most unsavoury similes: and art, indeed, the most comparative,¹² rascalliest,—sweet young prince,—But, Hal, I pry thee, trouble me no more with vanity. I would to God, thou and I knew where a commodity of good names were to be bought: An old lord of the council rated me the other day in the street about you, sir; but I marked him not: and yet he talk'd very wisely; but I regarded him not: and yet he talk'd wisely, and in the street too.

P. Hen. Thou did'st well; for wisdom cries out in the streets, and no man regards it.¹³

In confirmation of this, it may be remarked that one of Falstaff's speeches in the first edition has Old, instead of Falst, prefixed to it: and in the epilogue to the Second Part of King Henry IV. the poet makes a kind of retraction for having made too free with Sir John Oldcastle's name:—'Where, for any thing I know, Falstaff shall die of a sweat, unless he be killed with your hard opinions; for Oldcastle died a martyr, and this is not the man.'

7 The buff, or leather jerkin, was the common habit of a serjeant, or sheriff's officer, and is called a robe of durance on that account, as well as for its durability: an equivocation is intended. In the Comedy of Errors, Act iv. Sc. 2, it is called an everlasting garment. Durance might also have signified some lasting kind of stuff, such as is at present called everlasting.

8 A gib cat is a male cat, from Gilbert, the northern name for a he cat. Tom cat is now the usual term.

9 'Lincolnshire bagpipes' is a proverbial saying; the allusion is as yet unexplained. Perhaps it was a favourite instrument in that county, as well as in the north.

10 The hare was esteemed a melancholy animal, from her solitary sitting in her form; and, according to the physis of the times, the flesh of it was supposed to generate melancholy.

11 Moor-ditch, a part of the ditch surrounding the city of London, between Bishopsgate and Cripplegate, opened to an unwholesome, impassable morass, and was consequently not frequented by the citizens, like other suburban fields, and therefore had an air of melancholy. Thus in Taylor's Pennyless Pilgrimage, 1618:—'my body being tired with travel, and my mind attired with moody muddy, Moore-ditch melancholy.'

12 Comparative; this epithet, which is used here for one who is fond of making comparisons, occurs again in Act iii. Sc. 2, of this play.

13 This is a scriptural expression. See Proverbs, i. 30 and 24.

Fal. O thou hast damnable iteration;¹ and art, indeed, able to corrupt a saint. Thou hast done much harm upon me, Hal.—God forgive thee for it! Before I knew thee, Hal, I knew nothing; and now am I, if a man should speak truly, little better 'than one of the wicked. I must give over this life, and I will give it over; by the Lord, an I do not, I am a villain; I'll be damned for never a king's son in Christendom.

P. Hen. Where shall we take a purse to-morrow, Jack?

Fal. Where thou wilt, lad, I'll make one; an I do not, call me villain, and baffle² me.

P. Hen. I see a good amendment of life in thee: from praying, to purse-taking.

Enter POINS, at a distance.

Fal. Why, Hal, 'tis my vocation, Hal; 'tis no sin for a man to labour in his vocation. Poins!—Now shall we know if Gadshill have set a match.³ O, if men were to be saved by merit, what hole in hell were hot enough for him? This is the most omnipotent villain, that ever cried, Stand, to a true⁴ man.

P. Hen. Good morrow, Ned.

Poins. Good morrow, sweet Hal.—What says monsieur Remorse? What says Sir John Sack-and-Sugar?⁵ Jack, how agrees the devil and thee about thy soul, that thov—jest him on Good-friday last, for a cup of Mad—, and a cold capon's leg?

P. Hen. Sir John stands to his word, the devil shall have his bargain; for he was never yet a breaker of proverbs, he will give the devil his due.

Poins. Then art thou damned for keeping thy word with the devil.

P. Hen. Else he had been damned for cozening the devil.

Poins. But, my lads, my lads, to-morrow morning, by four o'clock, early at Gadshill: There are pilgrims going to Canterbury with rich offerings, and traders riding to London with fat purses: I have visors⁶ for you all, you have horses for yourselves; Gadshill lies to-night in Rochester; I have bespoke supper to-morrow night in Eastcheap; we may do it as secure as sleep: If you will go, I will stuff your purses full of crowns; If you will not, tarry at home, and be hanged.

Fal. Hear me, Yedward; if I tarry at home, and go not, I'll hang you for going.

Poins. You will, chaps?

Fal. Hal, wilt thou make one?

P. Hen. Who, I rob? I a thief? not I, by my faith.

Fal. There's neither honesty, manhood, nor good fellowship in thee, nor thou camest not of the blood royal, if thou darest not stand for ten shillings.⁷

1 i. e. thou hast a wicked trick of repetition, and (by the misapplication of holy texts) art indeed able to corrupt a saint.

2 To baffle is to use contemptuously, or treat with ignominy; to unknicht. It was originally a punishment of infamy inflicted on recreant knights, one part of which was hanging them up by the heels. Hall, in his Chronicle, p. 40, mentions it as still practised in Scotland. Something of the same kind is implied in a subsequent scene, where Falstaff says: 'hang me up by the heels for a rabbit sucker, or a poulterer's hare.' See King Richard II. Act I. Sc. 1.

3 To set a match is to make an appointment. So in Ben Jonson's Bartholomew Fair, 'Peace, sir, they'll be angry if they hear you eaves-dropping, now they are setting their match.' The folio reads set a watch; match is the reading of the quarto.

4 Honest.

5 After all the discussion about Falstaff's favourite beverage, here mentioned for the first time, it appears to have been the Spanish wine which we now call sherry. Falstaff expressly calls it sherris-sack, that is sack from Xeres. 'Sherry sack, so called from Xeres, a sea town of Corduba, in Spain, where that kind of sack is made.' Blount's Glossographia. It derives its name of sack probably from being a dry wine, vin sec. And it was recently written sec. 'Your best sack,' says Gervase Markham, 'are of Seres in Spaine.'—Engl. Housewife. The difficulty about it has arisen from the later importation of sweet wines from Malaga, the Ca-

P. Hen. Well, then once in my days I'll be a mad-cap.

Fal. Why, that's well said.

P. Hen. Well, come what will, I'll tarry at home.

Fal. By the Lord, I'll be a traitor then, when thou art king.

P. Hen. I care not.

Poins. Sir John, I pry'thee, leave the prince and me alone; I will lay him down such reasons for this adventure, that he shall go.

Fal. Well, may'st thou have the spirit of persuasion, and he the ears of profiting, that what thou speakest may move, and what he hears may be believed, that the true prince may (for recreation sake) prove a false thief; for the poor abuses of the time want countenance. Farewell: you shall find me in Eastcheap.

P. Hen. Farewell, thou latter spring! Farewell All-hallowen summer!⁸ [Exit FALSTAFF.]

Poins. Now, my good sweet honey lord, ride with us to-morrow; I have a jest to execute, that I cannot manage alone. Falstaff, Bardolph, Peto, and Gadshill,⁹ shall rob those men that we have already way-laid; yourself, and I, will not be there; and when they have the booty, if you and I do not rob them, cut this head from my shoulders.

P. Hen. But how shall we part with them in setting forth?

Poins. Why, we will set forth before or after them, and appoint them a place of meeting, wherein it is at our pleasure to fail; and then will they adventure upon the exploit themselves; which they shall have no sooner achieved, but we'll set upon them.

P. Hen. Ay, but, 'tis like, that they will know us, by our horses, by our habits, and by every other appointment, to be ourselves.

Poins. Tut! our horses they shall not see; I'll tie them in the wood; our visors we will change, after we leave them; and sirrah, I have cases of buckram for the nonce,¹⁰ to immask our noted outward garments.

P. Hen. But, I doubt, they will be too hard for us.

Poins. Well, for two of them, I know them to be as true-bred cowards as ever turned back; and for the third, if he fight longer than he sees reason, I'll forswear arms. The virtue of this jest will be, the incomprehensible lies that this same fat rogue will tell us, when we meet at supper: how thirty, at least, he fought with; what wards, what blows, what extremities he endured; and, in the reproof¹¹ of this, lies the jest.

P. Hen. Well, I'll go with thee: provide us all things necessary, and meet me to-morrow night¹² in Eastcheap; there I'll sup. Farewell.

Poins. Farewell, my lord. [Exit POINS.]

naries, &c. which were at first called Malaga, or Canary sacks; sack being by that time considered as a name applicable to all white wines.

6 Masks.

7 Falstaff is quibbling on the word royal. The real or royal was of the value of ten shillings.

8 i. e. late summer. All-hallowen tide meaning All-saints, which festival is the first of November.

9 The old copy reads Falstaff, Harvey, Rossil, and Gadshill. Theobald thinks that Harvey and Rossil might be the names of the actors who played the parts of Bardolph and Peto.

10 For the nonce signified for the purpose, for the occasion, for the once. Junius and Tooke, in their Etymology of Anon, led the way; and Mr. Gifford has since clearly explained its meaning. The editor of the new edition of Warton's History of English Poetry (vol. ii. p. 496,) has shown that it is nothing more than a slight variation of the A. S. 'for then anes'—'for then anis,'—'for then ones, or onces.' Similar inattention to this form of the prepositive article has produced the phrases 'at the nalc,' 'at the nend;' which have been transformed from 'at than ale,' 'at than end.'

11 Reproof is confutation. To refute, to refell, to disallow, were ancient synonyms of to reprove.

12 We should read to-night, for the robbery was to be committed, according to Poins, 'to-morrow morning by four o'clock.' Shakespeare had forgotten what he had written at the beginning of this scene.

P. Hen. I know you all, and will a while uphold
The unyok'd humour of your idleness :
Yet herein will I imitate the sun ;
Who doth permit the base contagious clouds¹
To smother up his beauty from the world,
That, when he please again to be himself,
Being wanted, he may be more wondered at,
By breaking through the foul and ugly mists
Of vapours, that did seem to strangle² him.
If all the year were playing holidays,
To sport would be as tedious as to work ;
But, when they seldom come, they wish'd-for come,
And nothing pleaseth but rare accidents.
So, when this loose behaviour I throw off,
And pay the debt I never promised,
By how much better than my word I am,
By so much shall I falsify men's hopes ;³
And, like bright metal on a sullen⁴ ground,
My reformation, glittering o'er my fault,
Shall show more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no foil to set it off.
I'll so offend, to make offence a skill ;
Redeeming time, when men think least I will.

[Exit.

SCENE III. The same. Another Room in the Palace. Enter KING HENRY, NORTHUMBERLAND, WORCESTER, HOTSPUR, SIR WALTER BLUNT, and others.

K. Hen. My blood hath been too cold and temperate,
Unapt to stir at these indignities,
And you have found me ; for, accordingly,
You tread upon my patience : but, be sure,
I will from henceforth rather be myself,
Mighty, and to be fear'd, than my condition,⁵
Which hath been smooth as oil, soft as young down,
And therefore lost that title of respect,
Which the proud soul ne'er pays, but to the proud.
Wor. Our house, my sovereign liege, little deserves

The scourge of greatness to be used on it ;
And that same greatness too which our own hands
Have help to make so poorly.

North. My lord,—

K. Hen. Worcester, get thee gone, for I do see Danger and disobedience in thine eye :
O, sir, your presence is too bold and peremptory,
And majesty might never yet endure
The moody frontier⁶ of a servant brow.
You have good leave to leave us ; when we need
Your use and counsel, we shall send for you.—

[Exit WORCESTER.

You were about to speak.

[To NORTH.

North. Yea, my good lord.
Those prisoners in your highness' name demanded,
Which Harry Percy here at Holmedon took,

1 'Full many a glorious morning have I seen,
Flatter the mountain tops with sovereign eye,—
Anon permit the basest clouds to ride
With ugly rack on his celestial face.'

Shakespeare's 33d Sonnet.

2 Thus in Macbeth :—
'And yet dark night strangles the travelling lamp.'
3 Hopes is used simply for expectations, no uncommon use of the word even at the present day.

4 So in King Richard II. :—
'The sullen passage of thy weary steps
Esteem a foil, wherein thou art to set
The precious jewel of thy home return.'

5 Condition is used for nature, disposition, as well as estate or fortune. It is so interpreted by Phillips, in his World of Words. And we find it most frequently used in this sense by Shakespeare and his contemporaries.

6 Frontier is said anciently to have meant forehead, to prove which the following quotation has been adduced from Stubbes Anatomy of Abuses : 'Then on the edges of their bolster'd hair, which standeth ousted round their frontiers, and hangeth over their brow.' Mr. Nares has justly observed, that 'this does not seem to explain the above passage, "The moody forehead of a servant brow," is not sense.' Surely it may be better interpreted 'the moody or threatening outwork ;' in which sense frontier is used in Act II. Sc. 3.

Were, as he says, not with such strength denied
As is deliver'd to your majesty :
Either envy, therefore, or misprision
Is guilty of this fault, and not my son.

Hot. My liege, I did deny no prisoners,
But, I remember, when the fight was done,
When I was dry with rage, and extreme toil,
Breathless and faint, leaning upon my sword,
Came there a certain lord, neat, trimly dress'd,
Fresh as a bridegroom ; and his chin, new reap'd,
Show'd like a stubble-land at harvest home ;⁷
He was perfumed like a milliner :
And 'twixt his finger and his thumb he held
A pouncet-box,⁸ which ever and anon
He gave his nose, and took't away again ;—
Who, therewith angry, when it next came there,
Took it in snuff :⁹—and still he smil'd, and talk'd ;
And, as the soldiers bore dead bodies by,
He call'd them—untaught knaves, unmannerly,
To bring a slovenly unhandsome corpse
Betwixt the wind and his nobility.
With many holiday and lady terms
He question'd me ; among the rest demanded
My prisoners, in your majesty's behalf.
I then, all smarting, with my wounds being cold,
To be so pester'd with a popinjay,¹⁰
Out of my grief¹¹ and my impatience,
Answer'd neglectingly, I know not what ;
He should, or he should not ;—for he made me mad,
To see him shine so brisk, and smell so sweet,
And talk so like a waiting-gentlewoman,
Of guns, and drums, and wounds (God save the mark !)

And telling me the sovereign'st thing on earth
Was parmaceti, for an inward bruise ;¹²
And that it was great pity, so it was,
That villanous salt-petre should be digg'd
Out of the bowels of the harmless earth
Which many a good tall fellow had destroy'd
So cowardly ; and, but for these vile guns,
He would himself have been a soldier.
This bald unjointed, chat of his, my lord,
I answer'd indirectly as I said ;
And, I beseech you, let not his report
Come current for an accusation,
Betwixt my love and your high majesty.

Blunt. The circumstance consider'd, good my lord,

Whatever Harry Percy then had said,
To such a person, and in such a place,
At such a time, with all the rest re-told,
May reasonably die, and never rise
To do him wrong, or any way impeach
What then he said, so he unsay it now.

K. Hen. Why, yet he doth deny his prisoners ;
But with proviso, and exception,—
That we, at our own charge, shall ransom straight
His brother-in-law, the foolish Mortimer ;¹³

7 To completely understand this simile the reader should bear in mind that the courtier's beard, according to the fashion in the poet's time, would not be closely shaved, but shorn or trimmed, and would therefore show like a stubble land new reap'd.

8 A box perforated with small holes, for carrying perfumes ; quasi pouncet-box.

9 Took it in snuff means no more than snuffed it up, but there is a quibble on the phrase, which was equivalent to taking huff at it, in familiar modern speech ; to be angry, to take offence ; 'To take in snuffe, Figliar ombra, Figliar in mala parte.'—Torriano.

10 A popinjay or popingay is a parrot.

11 I. e. pain, dolor ventris is rendered belly-grief in the old dictionaries.

12 So in Sir T. Overburie's Characters, 1616 [An Ordinarie Fencer.] 'his wounds are seldom skin-deepe ; for an inward-bruise lambstones and sweets breads are his only spermaceti.'

13 Shakespeare has fallen into some contradictions with regard to this Lord Mortimer. Before he makes his personal appearance in the play, he is repeatedly spoken of as Hotspur's brother-in-law. In Act II. Lady Percy expressly calls him her brother Mortimer. And yet when he enters in the third Act, he calls Lady Percy his aunt, which in fact she was and not his sister.

Who, on my soul, hath wilfully betray'd
The lives of those that he did lead to fight Against the great magician, damn'd Glendower;
Whose daughter, as we hear, the earl of March Hath lately married. Shall our coffers then
Be emptied, to redeem a traitor home?
Shall we buy treason? and indent¹ with fears,
When they have lost and forfeited themselves?
No, on the barren mountains let him starve;
For I shall never hold that man my friend,
Whose tongue shall ask me for one penny cost
To ransom home revolted Mortimer.

Hot. Revolted Mortimer!

He never did fall off, my sovereign liege,
By the chance of war;—To prove that true,
Needs no more but one tongue for all those wounds,
Those mouthed wounds, which valiantly he took,
When on the gentle Severn's sedgy bank,
In single opposition, hand to hand,
He did confound² the best part of an hour
In changing hardiment with great Glendower:
Three times they breath'd, and three times did they drink,

Upon agreement, of swift Severn's flood;
Who, then affrighted with their bloody looks,
Ran fearfully among the trembling reeds,
And hid his crisp³ head in the hollow bank,
Blood-stained with these valiant combatants.
Never did bare⁴ and rotten policy
Colour her working with such deadly wounds;
Nor never could the noble Mortimer
Receive so many, and all willingly:
Then let him not be slander'd with revolt.

K. Hen. Thou dost belie him, Percy, thou dost believe him;

He never did encounter with Glendower;
I tell thee,
He durst as well have met the devil alone,
As Owen Glendower for an enemy.
Art thou not ashamed? But, sirrah, henceforth
Let me not hear you speak of Mortimer:
Send me your prisoners with the speediest means,
Or you shall hear in such a kind from me
As will displease you.—My Lord Northumberland,
We license your departure with your son:—
Send us your prisoners, or you'll hear of it.

[Exeunt KING HENRY, BLUNT, and Train.]

Hot. And if the devil come and roar for them,
I will not send them;—I will after straight,
And tell him so; for I will ease my heart,
Although it be with hazard of my head.

North. What, drunk with choler? stay, and pause awhile;

Here comes your uncle.

Re-enter WORCESTER.

Hot. Speak of Mortimer?
'Zounds, I will speak of him; and let my soul
Want mercy, if I do not join with him:
Yea, on his part, I'll empty all these veins,
And shed my dear blood drop by drop i' the dust,
But I will lift the down-trod Mortimer
As high i' the air as this unthankful king,
As this ingrate and canker'd Bolingbroke.

This inconsistency may be accounted for as follows; it appears from Dugdale and Sandford's account of the Mortimer family, that there were two of them taken prisoners at different times by Glendower, each of them bearing the name of Edmund; one being Edmund, earl of March, nephew to Lady Percy, and the proper Mortimer of this play; the other Sir Edmund Mortimer, uncle to the former, and brother to Lady Percy. The poet has confounded the two persons.

1 To indent with fears is to enter into compact with covards. 'To make a covenant or to indent with one. Paciscor.'—Baret.

2 Shakespeare uses confound for spending or losing time.

3 Crisp is curled. Thus in Kyd's Cornelia, 1595:—
'O beauteous Tyber, with thine easy streams
That glide as smoothly as a Partisan shaft,
Turn not thy crispy tides, like silver curls,
Back to thy grassy-green banks to welcome us.'

4 Some of the quarto copies read bare.

North. Brother, the king hath made your nephew mad.

[To WORCESTER.]

Wor. Who struck this heat up, after I was gone?

Hot. He will, forsooth, have all my prisoners;

And when I urg'd the ransom once again

Of my wife's brother, then his cheek look'd pale;

And on my face he turn'd an eye of death,

Trembling even at the name of Mortimer.

Wor. I cannot blame him: Was he not proclaim'd,

By Richard that dead is, the next of blood?

North. He was; I heard the proclamation:

And then it was, when the unhappy king

(Whose wrongs in us God pardon!) did set forth

Upon his Irish expedition;

From whence he, intercepted, did return

To be depos'd, and shortly, murdered.

Wor. And for whose death, we in the world's wide mouth

Live scandaliz'd, and foully spoken of.

Hot. But, soft, I pray you; Did King Richard then

Proclaim my brother Edmund Mortimer

Heir to the crown?

North. He did; myself did hear it.

Hot. Nay, then I cannot blame his cousin king,
That wish'd him on the barren mountains starv'd.

But shall it be, that you,—that set the crown

Upon the head of this forgetful man;

And, for his sake, wear the detested blot

Of murd'rous subornation,—shall it be,

That you a world of curses undergo;

Being the agents, or base second means,

The cords, the ladder, or the hangman rather?—

O, pardon me, that I descend so low,

To show the line, and the predicament,

Wherein you range under this subtle king.—

Shall it, for shame, be spoken in these days,

Or fill up chronicles in time to come,

That men of your nobility and power,

Did gage them both in an unjust behalf,—

As both of you, God pardon it! have done,—

To put down Richard, that sweet lovely rose,

And plant this thorn, this canker,⁵ Bolingbroke?

And shall it, in more shame, be further spoken,

That you are fool'd, discarded, and shook off

By him, for whom these shames ye underwent?

No; yet time serves, wherein you may redeem

Your banish'd honours, and restore yourselves

Into the good thoughts of the world again:

Revenge the jeering, and disdain'd contempt,

Of this proud king; who studies, day and night,

To answer all the debt he owes to you,

Even with the bloody payment of your deaths.

Therefore, I say,—

Wor. Peace, cousin, say no more:

And now I will unclasp a secret book,

And to your quick-conceiving discontents

I'll read you matter deep and dangerous;

As full of peril, and advent'rous spirit,

As to o'erwalk a current, roaring loud,

On the unsteadfast footing of a spear.

5 Roger Mortimer, earl of March, was declared heir apparent to the crown in 1355: but he was killed in Ireland in 1399. The person who was proclaimed heir apparent by Richard II. previous to his last voyage to Ireland, was Edmund Mortimer, son of Roger, who was then but seven years old: he was not Lady Percy's brother, but her nephew. He was the undoubted heir to the crown after the death of Richard. Thomas Walsingham asserts that he married a daughter of Owen Glendower, and the subsequent historians copied him. Sandford says that he married Anne Stafford, daughter of Edmund earl of Stafford. Glendower's daughter was married to his antagonist Lord Grey of Ruthven. Holinshed led Shakespeare into the error. This Edmund, who is the Mortimer of the present play, was born in 1392, and consequently, at the time when this play is supposed to commence, was little more than ten years old. The prince of Wales was not fifteen.

6 The canker-rose is the dog-rose, the flower of the Cynosbaton. So in Much Ado about Nothing:—
'rather be a canker in a hedge, than a rose in his garden'
7 i. e. disdainful.

Hot. If he fall in, good night:—or sink or swim; Send danger from the east unto the west, So honour cross it from the north to south, And let them grapple:—O! the blood more stirs, To rouse a lion, than to start a hare.

North. Imagination of some great exploit Drives him beyond the bounds of patience.

Hot. By heaven, methinks, it were an easy leap, To pluck bright honour from the pale-fac'd moon; Or dive into the bottom of the deep,¹ Where fathom-line could never touch the ground, And pluck up drowned honour by the locks; So he, that doth redeem her thence, might wear, Without corvial, all her dignities: But out upon this half-fac'd fellowship!²

Wor. He apprehends a world of figures³ here, But not the form of what he should attend.— Good cousin, give me audience for a while.

Hot. I cry you mercy.

Wor. Those same noble Scots, That are your prisoners,—

Hot. I'll keep them all; By heaven, he shall not have a Scot of them: No, if a Scot would save his soul, he shall not: I'll keep them, by this hand.

Wor. You start away, And lend no ear unto my purposes.— Those prisoners you shall keep.

Hot. Nay, I will; that's flat:— He said, he would not ransom Mortimer; Forbad my tongue to speak of Mortimer; But I will find him when he lies asleep, And in his ear I'll holla—Mortimer!

Nay, I'll have a starting shall be taught to speak Nothing but Mortimer, and give it him, To keep his anger still in motion.

Wor. Hear you, Cousin; a word.

Hot. All studies here I solemnly defy,⁴ Save how to gall and pinch this Bolingbroke: And that same sword-and-buckler⁵ prince of Wales,—

But that I think his father loves him not, And would be glad he met with some mischance, I'd have him poison'd with a pot of ale.⁶

Wor. Farewell, kinsman! I will talk to you, When you are better temper'd to attend.

North. Why, what a wasp-tongue⁷ and impatient fool

Art thou, to break into this woman's mood; Tying thine ear to no tongue but thine own?

1 Warburton observes that Euripides has put the same sentiment into the mouth of Eteocles:—'I will not, madam, disguise my thoughts; I would scale heaven, I would descend to the very entrails of the earth, if so be that by that price I could obtain a kingdom.' Johnson says, 'Though I am far from condemning this speech, with Gildon and Theobald, as absolute madness, yet I cannot find in it that profundity of reflection, and beauty of allegory, which Warburton endeavoured to display. This sally of Hotspur may be, I think, soberly and rationally vindicated as the violent eruption of a mind inflated with ambition and fired with resentment; as the boasted clamour of a man able to do much, and eager to do more; as the dark expression of indetermined thoughts. The passage from Euripides is surely not allegorical; yet it is produced, and properly, as parallel.—In the Knight of the Burning Pestle, Beaumont and Fletcher have put this rant into the mouth of Ralph the apprentice, who, like Bottom, appears to be fond of acting parts to tear a cat in.

2 Half-faced, which has puzzled the commentators, seems here meant to convey a contemptuous idea of something imperfect. As in Nashe's Apology of Pierce Penniless:—'With all other ends of your half-faced English.'

3 Shapes created by his imagination.

4 To defy was sometimes used in the sense of to renounce, reject, refuse, by Shakespeare and his contemporaries.

5 'Sword and buckler prince' is here used as a term of contempt. The following extracts will help us to the precise meaning of the epithet:—'This field, commonly

Hot. Why, look you, I am whipp'd and scourg'd with rods, Nettled, and stung with pismires, when I hear Of this vile politician, Bolingbroke.

In Richard's time,—What do you call the place?— A plague upon't!—it is in Gloucestershire;— 'Twas where the mad-cap duke his uncle kept: His uncle York;—where I first bow'd my knee Unto this king of smiles, this Bolingbroke, When you and he came back from Ravenspurg.

North. At Berkley castle.

Hot. You say true:—

Why, what a candy⁸ deal of courtesy This fawning greyhound then did proffer me! Look,—when his infant fortune came to age, And—gentle Harry Percy,—and, kind cousin,— O, the devil take such cozeners!—God forgive me!

Good uncle, tell your tale, for I have done.

Wor. Nay, if you have not, to't again; We'll stay your leisure.

Hot. I have done, 'faith.

Wor. Then once more to your Scottish prisoners. Deliver them up without their ransom straight, And make the Douglas' son your only mean For powers in Scotland; which, for divers reasons, Which I shall send you written,—be assur'd, Will easily be granted.—You, my lord,—

[To NORTHUMBERLAND.]

Your son in Scotland being thus employed,— Shall secretly into the bosom creep Of that same noble prelate, well belov'd, The archbishop.

Hot. Of York, is't not?

Wor. True; who bears hard His brother's death at Bristol, the Lord Scroop. I speak not this in estimation, As what I think might be, but what I know Is ruminated, plotted, and set down; And only stays but to behold the face Of that occasion that shall bring it on.

Hot. I smell it; upon my life, it will do well.

North. Before the game's a-foot, thou still let'st slip.⁹

Hot. Why, it cannot choose but be a noble plot:— And then the power of Scotland, and of York,— To join with Mortimer, ha?

Wor. And so they shall.

Hot. In faith, it is exceedingly well aim'd.

Wor. And 'tis no little reason bids us speed, To save our heads by raising of a head;¹⁰ For, bear ourselves as even as we can, The king will always think him in our debt;¹¹ And think we think ourselves unsatisfied, Till he hath found a time to pay us home.

called West Smithfield, was for many years called Rufian's Hall, by reason it was the usual place for frays and common fighting, during the time that sword and bucklers were in use; when every serving man, from the base to the best, carried a buckler at his back, which hung by the hilt or pommel of his sword.—Stowe's Survey of London.

6 This is said in allusion to low pot-house company, with which the prince associated.

7 The first quarto, 1598, reads wasp-stung, which Steevens thought the true reading. The quarto of 1609 reads wasp-tongue, which Malone strenuously contends for; and I think with Mr. Nares that he is right. 'He who is stung by wasps has a real cause for impatience; but waspish, which is often used by Shakespeare, is peevish, not temper; and wasp-tongue therefore very naturally means peevish-tongue, which was exactly the accusation meant to be urged.' The folio altered it unnecessarily to wasp-tongued.

8 I.e. 'what a deal of candy courtesy.'

9 Conjecture.

10 This phrase is taken from hunting. To let slip is to loose a greyhound.

11 A body of forces.

12 This is a natural description of the state of mind between those that have conferred, and those that have received obligations too great to be satisfied. That this would be the event of Northumberland's disloyalty was predicted by King Richard in the former play.

And see already, how he doth begin

To make us strangers to his looks of love.

Hot. He does, he does; we'll be reveng'd on him.

Wor. Cousin,¹ farewell!—No further go in this, Than I by letters shall direct your course.

When time is ripe (which will be suddenly,)

I'll steal to Glendower, and Lord Mortimer;

Where you and Douglas, and our powers at once

(As I will fashion it,) shall happily meet,

To bear our fortunes in our own strong arms,

Which now we hold at much uncertainty.

North. Farewell, good brother:—we shall thrive, I trust.

Hot. Uncle, adieu:—O, let the hours be short, Till fields, and blows, and groans applaud our sport!

[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. Rochester. An Inn Yard. Enter a Carrier, with a lantern in his hand.

1 Car. Heigh ho! An't be not four by the day, I'll be hanged: Charles' wain² is over the new chimney, and yet our horse not packed. What, ostler!

Ost. [Within.] Anon, anon.

1 Car. I pry'thee, Tom, beat Cut's saddle, put a few flocks in the point: the poor jade is wrung in the withers out of all cess.³

Enter another Carrier.

2 Car. Pease and beans are as dank⁴ here as a dog, and that is the next way to give poor jades the bots:⁵ this house is turned upside down, since Robin ostler died.

1 Car. Poor fellow! never joyed since the price of oats rose; it was the death of him.

2 Car. I think, this be the most villainous house in all London road for fleas: I am stung like a tench.⁶

1 Car. Like a tench? by the mass, there is ne'er a king in Christendom could be better bit than I have been since the first cock.

2 Car. Why, they will allow us ne'er a jorden, and then we leak in your chimney; and your chamber-lie breeds fleas like a loach.⁷

1 Car. What, ostler! come away and be hanged, come away.

2 Car. I have a gammon of bacon, and two razes⁸ of ginger, to be delivered as far as Charing Cross.

1 Car. 'Odsbody! the turkeys in my pannier are quite starved.⁹—What, ostler!—A plague on thee! hast thou never an eye in thy head? canst not hear? An 'twere not as good a deed as drink, to break the pate of thee, I am a very villain.—Come, and be hang'd:—Hast no faith in thee?

Enter GADSHILL.¹⁰

Gads. Good morrow, carriers. What's o'clock?

1 Car. I think it be two o'clock.

Gads. I pry'thee, lend me thy lantern, to see my gelding in the stable.

1 Car. Nay, soft, I pray ye; I know a tric worth two of that, i'faith.

Gads. I pry'thee, lend me thine.

2 Car. Ay, when? canst tell?—Lend me thy lantern, quoth a?—marry, I'll see thee hanged first.

Gads. Sirrah carrier, what time do you mean to come to London?

2 Car. Time enough to go to bed with a candle, I warrant thee.—Come, neighbour Mugs, we'll call up the gentlemen; they will along with company, for they have great charge. [Exeunt Carriers.]

Gads. What, ho! chamberlain!

Cham. [Within.] At hand, quoth pick-purse.¹¹

Gads. That's even as fair as—at hand, quoth the chamberlain: for thou variest no more from picking of purses, than giving direction doth from labouring; thou lay'st the plot how.¹²

Enter Chamberlain.

Cham. Good morrow, master Gadshill. It holds current, that I told you yesternight: There's a franklin¹³ in the wild of Kent, hath brought three hundred marks with him in gold: I heard him tell it to one of his company, last night at supper; a kind of auditor; one that hath abundance of charge too, God knows what. They are up already, and call for eggs and butter: They will away presently.

Gads. Sirrah, if they meet not with Saint Nicholas' clerks,¹⁴ I'll give thee this neck.

Cham. No, I'll none of it: I pry'thee, keep that for the hangman; for, I know, thou worship'st Saint Nicholas as truly as a man of falsehood may.

Gads. What talkest thou to me of the hangman? if I hang, I'll make a fat pair of gallows: for, if I hang, old Sir John hangs with me; and, thou knowest, he's no starveling. Tut! there are other Trojans that thou drestamest not of, the which, for sport sake, are content to do the profession some grace; that would, if matters should be looked into, for their own credit sake, make all whole. I am joined with no foot land-rakers,¹⁵ no long-staff, sippetry strikers;¹⁶ none of these mad, mustachio, purple-

1 This was a common address in Shakspeare's time to nephews, nieces, and grand-children. See Holinshed, passim. Hotspur was Worcester's nephew.

2 Charles' wain was the vulgar name for the constellation called the great bear. It is a corruption of Chortles or Churl's wain. Churl is frequently used for a countryman in old books, from the Saxon ceorl.

3 'Out of all cess' is 'out of all measure.' Excessively, præter modum. To cess, or assess, was to number, muster, value, measure, or appraise.

4 Dank is moist, wet, and consequently mouldy.

5 Bots are worms; a disease to which horses are very subject.

6 Dr. Farmer thought tench a mistake for trout; probably alluding to the red spots with which the trout is covered, having some resemblance to the spots on the skin of a flea-bitten person.

7 It appears from a passage in Holland's translation of Pliny's Nat. Hist. b. ix. c. xlvii. that anciently fishes were supposed to be infested with fleas. 'Last of all some fishes there be which of themselves are given to breed fleas and lice; among which the chalcis, a kind of turgot, is one.' Mason suggests that 'breeds fleas as fast as a loach breeds loaches,' may be the meaning of the passage; the loach being reckoned a peculiarly prolific fish.

8 The commentators have puzzled themselves and their readers about this word razes: Theobald asserts that a raze is the Indian term for a bale. I have somewhere seen the word used for a fraile, or little rush basket, such as figs, raisins, &c. are usually packed in; but I cannot now recall the book to memory in which it occurred. Such a package was much more likely to be meant than a bale. The poet perhaps intended to mark the petty importance of the carrier's business.

9 This is one of the poet's anachronisms. Turkeys were not brought into England until the reign of Henry VIII.

10 Gadshill has his name from a place on the Kentish Road, where robberies were very frequent. A curious narrative of a gang, who appear to have infested that neighbourhood in 1590, is printed from a MS. paper of Sir Roger Manwood's in Boswell's Shakspeare, vol. xvi. p. 431.

11 This is a proverbial phrase, frequently used in old plays.

12 Thus in the life and death of Gamaliel Ratsey, 1605:—'—he dealt with the chamberlaine of the house, to learn which way they went in the morning, which the chamberlaine performed accordingly, and that with great care and diligence, for he knew he should partake of their fortunes if they sped.'

13 A freeholder or yeoman, a man above a vassal or villain, but not a gentleman. This was the Franklin of the age of Elizabeth. In earlier times he was a person of much more dignity. See Canterbury Tales, v. 333, and Mr. Tyrwhitt's note upon it.

14 In a note on The Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act iii. Sc. 1, is an account of the origin of this expression as applied to scholars; and as Nicholas or old Nick is a cant name for the devil, so thieves are equivocally called Saint Nicholas' clerks.

15 Footpads.

16 A striker was a thief.

hued malt-worms: but with nobility, and tranquillity; burgomasters, and great oneyers;¹ such as can hold in; such as will strike sooner than speak, and speak sooner than drink, and drink sooner than pray: And yet I lie; for they pray continually to their saint, the commonwealth; or, rather, not pray to her, but prey on her; for they ride up and down on her, and make her their boots.²

Cham. What, the commonwealth their boots? will she hold out water in foul way?

Gads. She will, she will; justice hath liquored her.³ We steal as in a castle,⁴ cock-sure; we have the receipt of fern-seed, we walk invisible.

Cham. Nay, by my faith, I think you are more beholden to the night, than to fern-seed,⁵ for your walking invisible.

Gads. Give me thy hand: thou shalt have a share of our purchase,⁶ as I am a true man.

Cham. Nay, rather let me have it, as you are a false thief.

Gads. Go to; Homo is a common name to all men. Bid the ostler bring my gelding out of the stable. Farewell, you muddy knave. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The Road by Gadshill. Enter PRINCE HENRY, and POINS; BARDOLPH and PETO, at some distance.

Poins. Come, shelter, shelter: I have removed Falstaff's horse, and he frets like a gummed velvet.⁷

P. Hen. Stand close.

Enter FALSTAFF.

Fal. Poins! Poins, and be hanged! Poins!

P. Hen. Peace, ye fat-kidneyed rascal; What a bawling dost thou keep?

Fal. Where's Poins, Hal?

P. Hen. He is walked up to the top of the hill, I'll go seek him. [Pretends to seek POINS.]

Fal. I am accursed to rob in that thief's company: the rascal hath removed my horse, and tied him I know not where. If I travel but four foot by the squire's further afoot, I shall break my wind. Well, I doubt not but to die a fair death for all this, if I scape hanging for killing that rogue. I have forsworn his company hourly, any time this two-and-twenty years, and yet I am bewitched with the rogue's company. If the rascal have not given me medicines⁸ to make me love him, I'll be hang'd; it could not be else; I have drunk medicines.—Poins!—Hal!—a plague upon you both!—Bardolph!—Peto!—I'll starve, ere I'll rob a foot further. An 'twere not as good a deed as drink, to turn true man, and leave these rogues, I am the veriest varlet that ever chewed with a tooth. Eight yards of uneven ground, is threescore and ten miles afoot with me; and the stony-hearted villains know it well enough: A plague upon't, when thieves cannot be true to one another! [They whistle.] Whew!—A plague upon you all! Give me my horse, you rogues; give me my horse, and be hang'd.

1 Some of the commentators have been at great pains to conjecture what class of persons were meant by great oneyers. One proposed to read moneyers; another mynheers; and Malone coins a word, onyers, which he says may mean a public accountant, from the term onus, used in the exchequer. The ludicrous nature of the appellations which Gadshill bestows upon his associates might have sufficiently shown them that such attempts must be futile; 'nobility and tranquillity, burgomasters and great oneyers.' Johnson has judiciously explained it. 'Gadshill tells the chamberlain that he is joined with an mean wretches, but with "burgomasters and great ones," or, as he terms them in merriment by a cant termination, great one-yers, or great one-ers, as we say privateer, auctioneer, circuiteer.'

2 A quibble upon boots and booty. Boot is profit, advantage.

3 Alluding to boots in the preceding passage. In the Merry Wives of Windsor, Falstaff says:—'They would melt me out of my fat drop by drop, and liquor fishermen's boots with me.'

4 As in a castle was a proverbial phrase for security. Stevens has adduced several examples of its use in contemporary writers.

P. Hen. Peace, ye fat-guts! lie down; lay thine ear close to the ground, and list if thou canst hear the tread of travellers.

Fal. Have you any levers to lift me up again, being down? 'Sblood, I'll not bear mine own flesh so far afoot again, for all the coin in thy father's exchequer. What a plague mean ye to colt!¹⁰ me thus?

P. Hen. Thou liest, thou art not colted, thou art uncolted.

Fal. I pr'ythee, good Prince Hal, help me to my horse: good king's son.

P. Hen. Out, you rogue! shall I be your ostler!

Fal. Go, hang thyself in thy own beir-apparent garters! If I be ta'en, I'll peach for this. An I have not ballads made on you all, and sung to filthy tunes, let a cup of sack be my poison: When a jest is so forward, and afoot too,—I hate it.

Enter GADSHILL.

Gads. Stand.

Fal. So I do, against my will.

Poins. O, 'tis our setter: I know his voice.

Enter BARDOLPH.

Bard. What news?

Gads. Case ye, case ye; on with your visors; there's money of the king's coming down the hill; 'tis going to the king's exchequer.

Fal. You lie, you rogue; 'tis going to the king's tavern.

Gads. There's enough to make us all.

Fal. To be hanged.

P. Hen. Sirs, you four shall front them in the narrow lane; Ned Poins and I will walk lower: if they scape from your encounter, they light on us.

Peto. How many be there of them?

Gads. Some eight, or ten.

Fal. Zounds! will they not rob us?

P. Hen. What, a coward, Sir John Paunch?

Fal. Indeed, I am not John of Gaunt, your grandfather; but yet no coward, Hal.

P. Hen. Well, we leave that to the proof.

Poins. Sirrah Jack, thy horse stands behind the hedge; when thou needest him, there thou shalt find him. Farewell, and stand fast.

Fal. Now cannot I strike him, if I should be hanged.

P. Hen. Ned, where are our disguises?

Poins. Here, hard by; stand close.

[Exeunt P. HEN. and POINS.]

Fal. Now, my masters, happy man be his dole,¹¹ say I; every man to his business.

Enter Travellers.

1 Trav. Come, neighbour; the boy shall lead our horses down the hill: we'll walk afoot a while, and ease our legs.

Thieves. Stand.

Trav. Jesu bless us!

Fal. Strike; down with them; cut the villains' throats: Ah! whoreson caterpillars! bacon-fed

5 Fern-seed was supposed to have the power of rendering persons invisible: the seed of fern is itself invisible; therefore to find it was a magic operation, and in the use it was supposed to communicate its own property.

6 Purchase was anciently understood in the sense of gain, profit, whether legally or illegally obtained. The commentators are wrong in saying that it meant stolen goods.

7 This allusion we often meet with in the old comedies. Thus in The Malecontent, 1604:—'I'll come among you, like gum into taffata, to fret, fret.' Velvet and taffata were sometimes stiffened with gum; but the consequence was, that the stuff being thus hardened, quickly rubbed and fretted itself out.

8 i. e. the square or measure. A carpenter's rule was called a square; from esquierre, Fr.

9 Alluding to the vulgar notion of love-powders.

10 To colt is to trick, fool, or deceive; perhaps from the wild tricks of a colt.

11 i. e. be his lot or portion happiness. This proverbial phrase has been already explained in the notes on The Merry Wives of Windsor, The Taming of the Shrew, and Winter's Tale.

knaves! they hate us youth: down with them; fleece them.

1 Trav. O, we are undone, both we and ours, for ever.

Fal. Hang ye, gorbellied¹ knaves; Are ye undone? No, ye fat chuffs;² I would, your store were here! On, bacons, on! What, ye knaves? young men must live: You are grand-jurors are ye? We'll jure ye, i'faith.

[Exeunt FAL. &c. driving the Travellers out.]

Re-enter Prince Henry and Poins.

P. Hen. The thieves have bound the true³ men: Now could thou and I rob the thieves, and go merrily to London, it would be argument⁴ for a week, laughter for a month, and a good jest for ever.

Poins. Stand close, I hear them coming.

Re-enter Thieves.

Fal. Come, my masters, let us share, and then to horse before day. An the prince and Poins be not two arrant cowards, there's no equity stirring: there's no more valour in that Poins, than in a wild duck.

P. Hen. Your money. [Rushing out upon them.]

Poins. Villains.

As they are sharing, the Prince and Poins set upon them. FALSTAFF, after a blow or two, and the rest, run away, leaving the booty behind them.

P. Hen. Got with much ease. Now merrily to horse:

The thieves are scatter'd, and possess'd with fear So strongly, that they dare not meet each other; Each takes his fellow for an officer.

Away, good Ned. Falstaff sweats to death, And lards the lean earth as he walks along: Wer't not for laughing, I should pity him.

Poins. How the rogue roar'd! [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. Warkworth. A Room in the Castle.

Enter Hotspur, reading a Letter.⁵

—But, for my own part, my lord, I could be well contented to be there, in respect of the love I bear your house.—He could be contented,—Why is he not, then? In respect of the love he bears our house:—he shows in this, he loves his own barn better than he loves our house. Let me see some more. The purpose you undertake is dangerous;—Why, that's certain; 'tis dangerous to take a cold, to sleep, to drink! but I tell you, my lord fool, out of this nettle, danger, we pluck this flower, safety. The purpose you undertake is dangerous; the friends you have named, uncertain; the time itself unsorted; and your whole plot too light, for the counterpoise of so great an opposition.—Say you so, say you so? I say unto you again, you are a shallow, cowardly hind, and you lie. What a lack-brain is this? By the Lord, our plot is a good plot as ever was laid; our friends true and constant: a good plot, good friends, and full of expectation: an excellent plot, very good friends. What a frosty-spirited rogue is this? Why, my lord of York⁶ commends the plot, and the general course of the action. 'Zounds, an I were now by this rascal, I could brain him with his lady's fan.⁷ Is there not my father, my uncle, and myself? Lord Edmund Mortimer, my lord of York, and Owen Glendower? Is there not, besides, the Douglas? Have I not all their letters, to meet me in arms by the ninth of the next month; and are they not, some of them, set forward already? What a pagan rascal is this? an infidel? Ha! you shall see now, in very sincerity of fear and cold heart, will he to the king, and lay open all our proceedings. O, I could divide myself, and go to buf-fets, for moving such a dish of skimmed milk with so honourable an action! Hang him! let him tell the king: We are prepared: I will set forward to-night.

Enter Lady Percy.

How now, Kate?⁸ I must leave you within these two hours.

Lady. O my good lord, why are you thus alone? For what offence have I, this fortnight, been A banish'd woman from my Harry's bed?

Tell me, sweet lord, what is't that takes from thee Thy stomach, pleasure, and thy golden sleep?⁹

Why dost thou bend thine eyes upon the earth; And start so often when thou sit'st alone?

Why hast thou lost the fresh blood in thy cheeks; And given my treasures, and my rights of thee,

To thick-ey'd musing, and curs'd melancholy?

In thy faint slumbers, I by thee have watch'd,

And heard thee murmur tales of iron wars:

Speak terms of manage to the bounding steed;

Cry, Courage!—to the field! And thou hast talk'd

Of sallies, and retires;¹⁰ of trenches, tents,

Of palisadoes, frontiers,¹¹ parapets;

Of basilisks,¹² of cannon, culverin;

Of prisoners' ransom, and of soldiers slain,

And all the 'currents'¹³ of a heady fight.

Thy spirit within thee hath been so at war,

And thus hath so bestirr'd thee in thy sleep,

That beads of sweat have stood upon thy brow,

Like bubbles in a late-disturbed stream:

And in thy face strange motions have appear'd,

Such as we see when men restrain their breath

On some great sudden haste. O, what portents are these?

Some heavy business hath my lord in hand,

And I must know it, else he loves me not.

Hot. What, ho! is Gilliams with the packet gone?

Enter Servant.

Serv. He is, my lord, an hour ago.

Hot. Hath Butler brought those horses from the sheriff?

Serv. One horse, my lord, he brought even now.

Hot. What horse? a roan, a crop-ear, is it not?

Serv. It is, my lord.

Hot.

That roan shall be my throne.

Well, I will back him straight: O *esperance!*¹⁴

Bid Butler lead him forth into the park.

[Exit Servant.]

Lady. But hear you, my lord.

Hot. What say'st thou, my lady?

Lady. What is it carries you away?

Hot. Why, my horse, my love, my horse.

Lady. Out, you mad-headed ape!

A weasel hath not such a deal of spleen,¹⁵

As you are toss'd with. In faith,

I'll know your business, Harry, that I will.

I fear, my brother Mortimer doth stir

In Virgil 'ferreus somnus.' Homer terms sleep brazen, or, more suitably, copper.

¹⁰ Retires are retreats.

¹¹ Frontiers formerly meant not only the bounds of different territories, but also the forts built along or near those limits. Thus in Ives's Practice of Fortification, 1589:—'A forte not placed where it were needful, might skantly be accounted for frontier.' Florio interprets 'frontiera, a frontire or bounding place: also a skonce, a bastion, a defence, a trench, or block-house, upon or about confines or borders.'

¹² Basilisks are a species of ordnance, probably so named from the imaginary serpent or dragon, with figures of which it was ordinary to ornament great guns.

¹³ Occurrences.

¹⁴ The motto of the Percy family.

¹⁵ So in Cymbeline we have:—

'As quarrellous as the weasel.'

² A term of reproach usually applied to avaricious old citizens. It is of uncertain derivation. Cotgrave interprets 'Un gros marroufle, a big cat; also an ouglie lusk or clusterist; also a rich churl or fat chuff.'

³ True for honest: thus opposing the true men to the thieves.

⁴ Argument is subject matter for conversation.

⁵ This letter was from George Dunbar, Earl of March, in Scotland.

⁶ Richard Scroop, archbishop of York.

⁷ See note on the Merry Wives of Windsor, Act ii. Sc. 3.

⁸ Shakspeare either mistook the name of Hotspur's wife (which was not Katherine, but Elizabeth), or else designedly changed it, out of the remarkable fondness he seems to have had for the name of Kate. Hall and Holinshed call her erroneously Elinor.

⁹ In King Richard III. we have 'leaden slumber'

About his title; and hath sent for you,
To line¹ his enterprise: But if you go—

Hot. So far afoot, I shall be weary, love.

Lady. Come, come, you paraquito, answer me
Directly to this question that I ask.

In faith, I'll break thy little finger, Harry,
An if thou wilt not tell me all things true.

Hot. Away,

Away, you trisler!—Love? I love thee not,
I care not for thee, Kate: this is no world,
To play with mammetts,² and to tilt with lips:
We must have bloody noses, and crack'd crowns,
And pass them current too.—Gods me, my horse!—
What say'st thou, Kate? what would'st thou have with me?

Lady. Do you not love me? do you not indeed?
Well, do not then; for since you love me not,
I will not love myself. Do you not love me?
Nay, tell me, if you speak in jest, or no?

Hot. Come, wilt thou see me ride?

And when I am o' horseback, I will swear
I love thee infinitely. But hark you, Kate;
I must not have you henceforth question me
Whither I go, nor reason whereabout:
Whither I must, I must; and, to conclude,
This evening must I leave you, gentle Kate.
I know you wise; but yet no further wise,
Than Harry Percy's wife: constant you are;
But yet a woman: and for secrecy,
No lady closer; and for I well believe,
Thou wilt not utter what thou dost not know;
And so far will I trust thee, gentle Kate!

Lady. How! so far?

Hot. Not an inch further. But hark you, Kate?
Whither I go, thither shall you go too;
To-day will I set forth, to-morrow you.—
Will this content you, Kate?

Lady.

It must, of force.

SCENE IV. Eastcheap.³ A Room in the Boar's
Head Tavern. Enter PRINCE HENRY and POINS.

P. Hen. Ned, pr'ythee, come out of that fat room, and lend me thy hand to laugh a little.

Poins. Where hast been, Hal?

P. Hen. With three or four loggerheads, amongst three or four score hogsheads. I have sounded the very base string of humility. Sirrah, I am sworn brother to a leash of drawers; and can call them all by their Christian names, as—Tom, Dick, and Francis. They take it already upon their salvation, that, though I be but prince of Wales, yet I am the king of courtesy; and tell me flatly I am no proud Jack, like Falstaff; but a Corinthian,⁴ a lad of mettle, a good boy,—by the Lord, so they call me; and when I am king of England, I shall command all the good lads in Eastcheap. They call—drinking deep, dying scarlet; and when you breathe in your watering, they cry—hem! and bid you play it off.⁵—To con-

1 i.e. to strengthen.

2 Mammetts were puppets or dolls, here used by Shakespeare for a female plaything; a diminutive of mam. 'Quasi dicat parvam matrem, seu matronulam.'—'Icuncule, mammetts or puppets that goe by devices of wyer or strings, as though they had life and moving.' Junius's Nomenclator, by Fleming, 1385.—Mr. Gifford has thrown out a conjecture about the meaning of mammetts from the Italian mammetta, which signified a bosom as well as a young wench. See Ben Jonson's Works, vol. v. p. 66. I have not found the word used in English in that sense; but mammet, for a puppet or dressed up living doll, is common enough.

3 Eastcheap is selected with propriety for the scene of the prince's merry meetings, as it was near his own residence: a mansion called Cold Harbour (near All Hallows Church, Upper Thames Street), was granted to Henry Prince of Wales. 11 Henry IV. 1410. Rymer, vol. viii. p. 628. In the old anonymous play of King Henry V. Eastcheap is the place where Henry and his companions meet:—'Hen. V. You know the old tavern in Eastcheap; there is good wine.' Shakespeare has hung up a sign for them that he saw daily; for the Boar's Head tavern was very near Blackfriars' Play-house.—Stowe's Survey.

Sir John Falstaff was in his lifetime a considerable benefactor to Magdalen College, Oxford; and though the College cannot give the particulars at large, the clude, I am so good a proficient in one quarter of an hour, that I can drink with any tinker in his own language during my life. I tell thee, Ned, thou hast lost much honour, that thou wert not with me in this action. But, sweet Ned,—to sweeten which name of Ned, I give thee this penny-worth of sugar,⁶ clapped even now in my hand by an under-skinker;⁷ one that never spake other English in his life, than—Eight shillings and sixpence, and—You are welcome; with this shrill addition,—Anon, anon, sir! Score a pint of bastard in the Half-moon, or so. But, Ned, to drive away the time till Falstaff come, I pr'ythee, do thou stand in some by-room, while I question my puny drawer, to what end he gave me the sugar; and do thou never leave calling—Francis, that his tale to me may be nothing but—anon. Step aside, and I'll show thee a precedent.

Poins. Francis!

P. Hen. Thou art perfect.

Poins. Francis!

[Exit POINS.]

Enter FRANCIS.

Fran. Anon, anon, sir. Look down into the Pomegranate, Ralph.

P. Hen. Come hither, Francis.

Fran. My lord.

P. Hen. How long hast thou to serve, Francis?

Fran. Forsooth, five year, and as much as to—

Poins. [Within.] Francis!

Fran. Anon, anon, sir!

P. Hen. Five years! by'r lady, a long lease for the clinking of pewter. But, Francis, darest thou be so valiant, as to play the coward with thy indenture, and to show it a fair pair of heels, and run from it?

Fran. O lord, sir! I'll be sworn upon all the books in England, I could find in my heart—

Poins. [Within.] Francis!

Fran. Anon, anon, sir!

P. Hen. How old art thou, Francis?

Fran. Let me see,—About Michaelmas next I shall be—

Poins. [Within.] Francis!

Fran. Anon, sir.—Pray you, stay a little, my lord.

P. Hen. Nay, but hark you, Francis: For the sugar thou gavest me,—'twas a pennyworth, was't not?

Fran. O lord, sir! I would it had been two.

P. Hen. I will give thee for it a thousand pound; ask me when thou wilt, and thou shalt have it.

Poins. [Within.] Francis!

Fran. Anon, anon.

P. Hen. Anon, Francis? No, Francis: but to-morrow, Francis; or, Francis, on Thursday; or, indeed, Francis, when thou wilt. But, Francis,—

Fran. My lord?

P. Hen. Wilt thou rob this leathern-jerkin,⁸ crystal-button, nodd-pated,⁹ agate-ring, puke-stocking,¹⁰ caddis-garter,¹¹ smooth-tongue, Spanish-pouch,— Boar's Head in Southwark, and Caldecot Manor in Suffolk were part of the lands, &c. he bestowed.

4 A Corinthian was a wencher a debauchee. The fame of Corinth, as a place of resort for loose women, was not yet extinct.

5 Mr. Gifford has shown that there is no ground for the filthy interpretation of this passage which Steevens chose to give. 'To breathe in your watering,' is 'to stop and take breath when you are drinking.'

6 It appears from two passages cited by Steevens that the drawers kept sugar folded up in paper, ready to be delivered to those who called for sack.

7 An under-skinker is a tapster, an under-drawer. Skink is drink, liquor; from seene, drink, Saxon.

8 The prince intends to ask the drawer whether he will rob his master, whom he denotes by these contemptuous distinctions.

9 Nodd-pated is shorn-pated, or cropped; having the hair cut close.

10 Puke-stockings are dark-coloured stockings. Puke is a colour between russet and black; pultus, Lat. according to the dictionaries. By the receipt for dyeing it, it appears to have been a dark gray or slate colour.

11 Caddis was probably a kind of ferret or weaselt lace. A slight kind of serge still bears the name of cadis in France. In Glaphorne's Wit in a Constable, we are told of 'footmen in caddis.' Garters being formerly worn in sight were often of rich materials; to wear a coarse cheap sort was therefore reproachful.

Fran. O lord, sir, who do you mean?

P. Hen. Why then, your brown bastard¹ is your only drink: for, look you, Francis, your white canvass doublet will sully: in Barbary, sir, it cannot come to so much.

Fran. What, sir?

Poins. [Within.] Francis!

P. Hen. Away, you rogue; Dost thou not hear them call?

[Here they both call him; the Drawer stands amazed, not knowing which way to go.

Enter Vintner.

Vint. What! stand'st thou still, and hear'st such a calling? Look to the guests within. [Exit FRAN.] My lord, old Sir John, with half a dozen more, are at the door; Shall I let them in?

P. Hen. Let them alone awhile, and then open the door. [Exit Vintner.] Poins!

Re-enter POINS.

Poins. Anon, anon, sir.

P. Hen. Sirrah, Falstaff and the rest of the thieves are at the door; Shall we be merry?

Poins. As merry as crickets, my lad. But hark ye; What cunning match have you made with this jest of the drawer? come, what's the issue?

P. Hen. I am now of all humours, that have show'd themselves humours, since the old days of good man Adam, to the pupil age of this present twelve o'clock at midnight. [Re-enter FRANCIS with wine.] What's o'clock, Francis?

Fran. Anon, anon, sir.

P. Hen. That ever this fellow should have fewer words than a parrot, and yet the son of a woman!—His industry is—up-stairs, and down-stairs; his eloquence, the parcel of a reckoning. I am not yet of Percy's mind, the Hotspur of the north: he that kills me some six or seven dozen of Scots at a breakfast, washes his hands, and says to his wife,—Fye upon this quiet life! I want work. O my sweet Harry, says she, how many hast thou killed to-day? Give my roan horse a drench, says he, and answers, Some fourteen, an hour after; a trifle, a trifle. I prythee, call in Falstaff; I'll play Percy, and that damned brawn shall play dame Mortimer his wife. *Rivo,*² says the drunkard. Call in ribs, call in tallow.

Enter FALSTAFF, GADSHILL, BARDOLPH, and PETO.

Poins. Welcome, Jack. Where hast thou been?

Fal. A plague of all cowards, I say, and a vengeance too! marry, and amen!—Give me a cup of sack, boy.—Ere I lead this life long, I'll sew nether-stocks,³ and mend them, and foot them too. A plague of all cowards!—Give me a cup of sack, rogue.—Is there no virtue extant? [He drinks.]

P. Hen. Didst thou never see Titan kiss a dish

1 A kind of sweet Spanish wine, of which there were two sorts, brown and white. Baret says that 'bastarde is muscadet, sweete wine, mulsum.' Bastard wines are said to be Spanish wines in general, by Olaus Magnus. He speaks of them with almost as much enthusiasm as Falstaff does of sack, and concludes by saying, 'Nullum vinum majoris pretii est, quam bastardum, ob dulcedinis nobilitatem.'—De Gent. Septent. p. 521.

2 Of this exclamation, which was frequently used in Bacchanalian revelry, the origin or derivation has not been discovered.

3 Stockings.

4 'Didst thou never see Titan kiss a dish of butter?' alludes to Falstaff's entering in a great heat, melting with the motion, like butter with the heat of the sun. 'Pitiful-hearted' is used in the sense which Colgrave gives to 'misericordieux, merciful, pitiful, compassionate, tender.' Theobald reads 'pitiful-hearted butter,' which is countenanced by none of the old copies, but affords a clear sense. Malone and Steevens have each given a reading, founded upon the quarto of 1593, which has '— at the sweet tale of the sonnes:' but they differ in their explanations of the passage. Their arguments are too long for this place, and are the less necessary as I do not adopt the readings upon which they are founded. Bishop Earle, in his Microcosmography, giving the character of a pot poet, says, 'His frequentest works go out in single sheets, and are of butter? pitiful-hearted butter, that melted at the sweet tale of the sun! if thou didst, then behold that compound.

Fal. You rogue, here's lime⁵ in this sack too: There is nothing but roguery to be found in villainous man: Yet a coward is worse than a cup of sack with lime in it; a villainous coward.—Go thy ways, old Jack; die when thou wilt, if manhood, good manhood, be not forgot upon the face of the earth, then am I a shotten herring. There lives not three good men unhanged in England; and one of them is fat, and grows old: God help the while! a bad world, I say! I would, I were a weaver; I could sing psalms or any thing:⁶ A plague of all cowards, I say still.

P. Hen. How now, wool-sack? what mutter you?

Fal. A king's son! If I do not beat thee out of thy kingdom with a dagger of lath,⁷ and drive all thy subjects afore thee like a flock of wild geese, I'll never wear hair on my face more. You prince of Wales!

P. Hen. Why, you whoreson round man! what's the matter?

Fal. Are you not a coward? answer me to that; and Poins there?

Poins. 'Zounds, ye fat paunch, an ye call me coward, I'll stab thee.

Fal. I call thee coward! I'll see thee damned ere I call thee coward: but I would give a thousand pound, I could run as fast as thou canst. You are straight enough in the shoulders, you care not who sees your back: Call you that backing of your friends? A plague upon such backing! give me them that will face me.—Give me a cup of sack:—I am a rogue, if I drunk to-day.

P. Hen. O villain, thy lips are scarce wiped since thou drunk'st last.

Fal. All's one for that. A plague of all cowards, still stay I. [He drinks.]

P. Hen. What's the matter?

Fal. What's the matter? there be four of us here have ta'en a thousand pound this morning.

P. Hen. Where is it, Jack? where is it?

Fal. Where is it? taken from us it is: a hundred upon poor four of us.

P. Hen. What, a hundred, man?

Fal. I am a rogue, if I were not at half-sword with a dozen of them two hours together. I have 'scap'd by miracle. I am eight times thrust through the doublet; four, through the hose; my buckler cut through and through;⁸ my sword hacked like a hand-saw, ecce signum. I never dealt better since I was a man: all would not do. A plague of all cowards!—Let them speak; if they speak more or chaunted from market to market to a vile tune and a worse throat; whilst the poor country wench melts like butter to hear them.'

5 Eliot, in his Orthoepeia, 1593, speaking of sack and rhenish, says, 'The vintners of London put in lime; thence proceed infinite maladies, specially the goutes.'

6 This is the reading of the first quarto, 1593. The folio reads 'I could sing all manner of songs.' The passage was probably altered to avoid the penalty of the statute, 3 Jac. I. cxxi. Weavers are mentioned as lovers of music in the Twelfth Night. The protestants who fled from the persecutions of the duke of Alva were mostly weavers, and, being Calvinists, were distinguished for their love of psalmody. Weavers were supposed to be generally good singers: their trade being sedentary, they had an opportunity of practising, and sometimes in parts, while they were at work.

7 A dagger of lath is the weapon given to the Vice in the Old Moralities. In the second part of this play Falstaff calls Shallow a Vice's dagger.

8 It appears from the old comedy of The Two Angry Women of Abingdon, (1599) that this method of defence and fight was then going out of fashion:—'I see by this dearth of good swords that sword and buckler fight begins to grow out. I am sorry for it; I shall never see good manhood again. If it be once gone, this poking fight of rapier and dagger will come up then: then a tall man and a good sword-and-buckler-man will be spitted like a cat or a coney: then a boy will be as good as a man,' &c.

less than truth, they are villains, and the sons of darkness.

P. Hen. Speak, sirs; how was it?

Gads. We four set upon some dozen,—

Fal. Sixteen, at least, my lord.

Gads. And bound them.

Peto. No, no, they were not bound.

Fal. You rogue, they were bound, every man of them; or I am a Jew else, an Ebrew Jew.¹

Gads. As we were sharing, some six or seven fough set upon us,—

Fal. And unbound the rest, and then come in the other.

P. Hen. What, fought you with them all?

Fal. All? I know not what ye call, all; but if I fought not with fifty of them, I am a bunch of radish: if there were not two or three and fifty upon poor old Jack, then I am no two-legged creature.

Poins. 'Pray God, you have not murdered some of them.

Fal. Nay, that's past praying for: for I have peppered two of them: two, I am sure, I have paid; two rogues in buckram suits. I tell thee what, Hal,—if I tell thee a lie, spit in my face, call me horse. Thou knowest my old ward;—here I lay, and thus I bore my point. Four rogues in buckram let drive at me,—

P. Hen. What, four? thou saidst but two, even now.

Fal. Four, Hal; I told thee four.

Poins. Ay, ay, he said four.

Fal. These four came all a-front, and mainly thrust at me. I made me no more ado, but took all their seven points in my target thus.

P. Hen. Seven? why, there were but four, even now.

Fal. In buckram.

Poins. Ay, four, in buckram suits.

Fal. Seven, by these hilts, or I am a villain else.

P. Hen. Pr'ythee, let him alone; we shall have more anon.

Fal. Dost thou hear me, Hal?

P. Hen. Ay, and mark thee too, Jack.

Fal. Do so, for it is worth the listening to. These nine in buckram, that I told thee of,—

P. Hen. So, two more already.

Fal. Their points being broken,—

Poins. Down fell their hose.²

Fal. Began to give me ground: But I followed me close, came in foot and hand; and, with a thought, seven of the eleven I paid.

P. Hen. O monstrous! eleven buckram men grown out of two!

Fal. But, as the devil would have it, three misbegotten knaves, in Kendal³ green, came at my back, and let drive at me;—for it was so dark, Hal, that thou could'st not see thy hand.

P. Hen. These lies are like the father that begets them; gross as a mountain, open, palpable. Why, thou clay-brained guts; thou knotty-pated fool; thou whoreson, obscene, greasy tallow-keech⁴—

Fal. What, art thou mad? art thou mad? is not the truth, the truth?

P. Hen. Why, how could'st thou know these men in Kendal green, when it was so dark thou could'st not see thy hand? come tell us your reason; What sayest thou to this?

Poins. Come, your reason, Jack, your reason.

Fal. What, upon compulsion? No; were I at the strappado,⁵ or all the racks in the world, I would not tell you on compulsion. Give you a reason on compulsion! if reasons were as plenty as blackberries, I would give no man a reason upon compulsion, I.

P. Hen. I'll be no longer guilty of this sin: this sanguine coward, this bed-presser, this horse-back-breaker, this huge hill of flesh;—

Fal. Away, you starveling, you elf-skin,⁶ you dried neats-tongue, bull's pizzle, you stock-fish,—O, for breath to utter what is like thee!—you tailor's yard, you sheath, you bow-case, you vile standing tuck;—

P. Hen. Well, breathe awhile, and then to it again: and when thou hast tired thyself in base comparisons, hear me speak but this.

Poins. Mark, Jack.

P. Hen. We two saw you four set on four; you bound them, and were masters of their wealth.—Mark now, how plain a tale shall put you down.—Then did we two set on you four: and, with a word out-faced you from your prize, and have it; yea, and can show it you here in the house:—and, Fal staff, you carried your guts away as nimbly, with as quick dexterity, and roared for mercy, and still ran and roared, as ever I heard bull-calf. What a slave art thou, to hack thy sword as thou hast done; and then say, it was in fight? What trick, what device, what starting-hole, canst thou now find out to hide thee from this open and apparent shame?

Poins. Come let's hear, Jack; What trick hast thou now?

Fal. By the Lord, I knew ye, as well as he that made ye. Why, hear ye, my masters: Was it for me to kill the heir apparent? Should I turn upon the true prince? Why, thou knowest, I am as valiant as Hercules: but beware instinct; the lion will not touch the true prince. Instinct is a great matter; I was a coward on instinct. I shall think the better of myself and thee, during my life; I, for a valiant lion, and thou for a true prince. But, by the Lord, lads, I am glad you have the money.—Hostess, clap to the doors; watch to-night, pray to-morrow.—Gallants, lads, boys, hearts of gold, all the titles of good fellowship come to you! What, shall we be merry? shall we have a play extempore?

P. Hen. Content;—and the argument shall be, thy running away.

Fal. Ah! no more of that, Hal, an thou lovest me,

Enter Hostess.

Host. My lord the prince,—

P. Hen. How now, my lady the hostess? what say'st thou to me?

Host. Marry, my lord, there is a nobleman of the court at door, would speak with you: he says, he comes from your father.

P. Hen. Give him as much as will make him a royal man,⁷ and send him back again to my mother.

4 A keech is a round lump of fat, rolled up by the butcher in order to be carried to the chandler, and in its form resembles the rotundity of a fat man's belly. The old editions read catch.

5 The strappado was a dreadful punishment inflicted on soldiers and criminals, by drawing them up on high with their arms tied backward. Randle Holme says that they were suddenly let fall half way with a jerk, which not only broke the arms but shook all the joints out of joint. He adds, 'which punishment it is better to be hanged than for a man to undergo.' Academy of Arms and Blazon, b. iii. p. 310.

6 It has been proposed to read elf-skin, with great plausibility. Shakspeare had historical authority for the leanness of the prince. Stowe speaking of him, says, 'He exceeded the mean stature of men, his neck long, body slender and lean, and his bones small,' &c.

7 This is a kind of a joke upon noble and royal, two coins, one of the value of 6s. 8d. the other 10s. Mr.

1 So in The Two Gentlemen of Verona:—'Thou art an Hebrew, a Jew, and not worth the name of a Christian.'

2 The same jest has already occurred in Twelfth Night, Act I. Sc. 5. To understand it, the double meaning of point must be remembered, which signifies a tagged lace used by our ancestors to fasten their garments, as well as the sharp end of a weapon. So in Sir Giles Goosecap, a comedy, 1606:—'Help me to truss my points.'—'I had rather see your hose about your heels than I would help you to truss a point.'

3 Kendal Green was the livery of Robert earl of Huntingdon and his followers, when in a state of outlawry, under the name of Robin Hood and his men. The colour took its name from Kendal, in Westmoreland, formerly celebrated for its cloth manufacture. Green still continues the colour of woodmen and gamekeepers.

Fal. What manner of man is he?

Host. An old man.

Fal. What doth gravity out of his bed at midnight?—Shall I give him his answer?

P. Hen. 'Pr'ythee, do, Jack.

Fal. 'Faith, and I'll send him packing. [Exit.]

P. Hen. Now, sirs; by'r lady, you fought fair;—so did you, Peto;—so did you, Bardolph: you are lions too, you ran away upon instinct, you will not touch the true prince, no,—fye!

Bard. 'Faith, I ran when I saw others run.

P. Hen. Tell me now in earnest, how came Falstaff's sword so hacked?

Peto. Why, he hacked it with his dagger; and said, he would swear truth out of England, but he would make you believe it was done in fight; and persuaded us to do the like.

Bard. Yea, and to tickle our noses with spear-grass, to make them bleed; and then to beslobber our garments with it, and to swear it was the blood of true men. I did that I did not this seven year before, I blushed to hear his monstrous devices.

P. Hen. O villain, thou stolest a cup of sack eighteen years ago, and wert taken with the manner,¹ and ever since thou hast blushed extempore: Thou hast fire² and sword on thy side, and yet thou ran'st away; What instinct hast thou for it?

Bard. My lord, do you see these meteors? do you behold these exhalations?

P. Hen. I do.

Bard. What think you they portend?

P. Hen. Hot livers and cold purses.³

Bard. Choler, my lord, if rightly taken.

P. Hen. No, if rightly taken, halter.

Re-enter FALSTAFF.

Here comes lean Jack, here comes bare-bone. How now, my sweet creature of bombast?⁴ How long is't ago, Jack, since thou savest thine own knee?

Fal. My own knee? when I was about thy years, Hal, I was not an eagle's talon in the waist; I could have crept into any alderman's thumb-ring:⁵ A plague of sighing and grief! it blows a man up like a bladder. There's villainous news abroad: here was Sir John Bracy from your father; you must to the court in the morning. That same mad fellow of the north, Percy; and he of Wales, that gave Amainon⁶ the bastinado, and made Lucifer cuckold, and swore the devil his true liegeman upon the cross of a Welsh hook⁷—What, a plague, call you him?

Poins. O, Glendower.

Fal. Owen, Owen; the same;—and his son-in-law, Mortimer; and old Northumberland; and that sprightly Scot of Scots, Douglas, that runs o'horseback up a hill perpendicular.

P. Hen. He that rides at high speed, and with his pistol⁸ kills a sparrow flying.

Fal. You have hit it.

John Blower, in a sermon before her majesty, first said:—'My royal queen,' and a little after, 'My noble queen.' Upon which says the queen, 'What, am I ten groats worse than I was?'—Hearne's Discourse of some Antiquities between Windsor and Oxford.

1 i. e. taken in the fact. See Love's Labour's Lost, Act I. Sc. 1.

2 The fire in Bardolph's face.

3 i. e. drunkenness and poverty.

4 i. e. 'my sweet stuffed creature.' Bombast is cotton. Gerard calls the cotton plant the bombast tree. It is here used for the stuffing of clothes. See a note on Love's Labour's Lost, Act v. Sc. 2.

5 The custom of wearing a ring upon the thumb is very ancient. The rider of the brazen horse in Chaucer's Squiers Tale:—

'—upon his thombe he had a ring of gold.'

Grave personages, citizens, and aldermen wore a plain broad gold ring upon the thumb, which often had a motto engraved in the inside of it. An alderman's thumb-ring, and its motto, is mentioned in The Antipodes, by Brome.

6 A demon; who is described as one of the four kings who rule over all the demons in the world.

7 The Welsh hook was a kind of hedging bill made with a hook at the end, and a long handle like the par-

P. Hen. So did he never the sparrow.

Fal. Well, that rascal hath good mettle in him; he will not run.

P. Hen. Why, what a rascal art thou then, to praise him so for running?

Fal. O'horseback, ye cuckoo! but, afoot, he will not budge a foot.

P. Hen. Yes, Jack, upon instinct.

Fal. I grant ye, upon instinct. Well, he is there too, and one Mordake, and a thousand blue-caps⁹ more: Worcester is stolen away to-night; thy father's beard is turned white with the news; you may buy land now as cheap as stinking mackarel.

P. Hen. Why then, 'tis like, if there come a hot June, and this civil buffeting hold, we should buy maidenheads as they buy hob-nails, by the hundreds.

Fal. By the mass, lad, thou sayest true; it is like, we shall have good trading that way.—But, tell me, Hal, art thou not horribly afraid? thou being heir apparent, could the world pick thee out three such enemies again, as that fiend Douglas, that spirit Percy, and that devil Glendower? Art thou not horribly afraid? doth not thy blood thrill at it?

P. Hen. Not a whit, 'i'faith; I lack some of thy instinct.

Fal. Well, thou wilt be horribly chid to-morrow, when thou comest to thy father: if thou love me, practise an answer.

P. Hen. Do thou stand for my father, and examine me upon the particulars of my life.

Fal. Shall I? content:—This chair shall be my state,¹⁰ this dagger my sceptre, and this cushion my crown.

P. Hen. Thy state is taken for a joint-stool, thy golden sceptre for a leaden dagger, and thy precious rich crown, for a pitiful bald crown!

Fal. Well, an the fire of grace be not quite out of thee, now shalt thou be moved.—Give me a cup of sack, to make mine eyes look red, that it may be thought I have wept; for I must speak in passion, and I will do it in King Cambyse's¹¹ vein.

P. Hen. Well, here is my leg.¹²

Fal. And here is my speech:—Stand aside, nobility.

Host. This is excellent sport, 'i'faith.

Fal. Weep not, sweet queen, for trickling tears are vain.

Host. O, the father, how he holds his countenance!

Fal. For God's sake, lords, convey my tristful queen,

For tears do stop the flood-gates of her eyes.¹³

Host. O rare! he doth it as like one of these harlotry players, as I ever see.

Fal. Peace, good pint-pot; peace, good tickle-brain.—Harry, I do not only marvel where thou tisan or halbert. 'The Welsh glaive,' (which appears to be the same thing,) Grose says, 'is a kind of bill sometimes reckoned among the pole-axes.'

8 Pistols were not in use in the age of Henry IV. They are said to have been much used by the Scotch in Shakespeare's time.

9 Scotsmen, on account of their blue bonnets.

10 In the old anonymous play of King Henry V. the same strain of humour is discoverable:—'Thou shalt be my lord chief justice, and shalt sit in this chair; and I'll be the young prince, and hit thee a box of the ear,' &c. A state is a chair with a canopy over it.

11 The banter is here upon the play called A Lamentable Tragedie mixed full of pleasant Mirthe, containing the Life of Cambyses, King of Persia, by Thomas Preston [1570.] There is a marginal direction in this play, 'At this tale tolde, let the queen weep,' which is probably alluded to, though the measure in the parody is not the same with that of the original.

12 i. e. my obeisance.

13 Thus in Cambyse's:—

'Queen. These words to hear makes stilling tears issue from chrysell eyes.'

Ritson thinks that the following passage in Soliman and Perseda is glanced at:—

'How can mine eyes dart forth a pleasant look, When they are stopp'd with floods of flowing tears?'

spendest thy time, but also how thou art accompanied: for though the camomile, the more it is trodden on, the faster it grows, yet youth, the more it is wasted, the sooner it wears. That thou art my son, I have partly thy mother's word, partly my own opinion; but chiefly, a villainous trick of thine eye, and a foolish hanging of thy nether lip, that doth warrant me. If then thou be son to me, here lies the point;—Why, being son to me, art thou so pointed at? Shall the blessed sun of heaven prove a micher,¹ and eat blackberries? a question not to be asked. Shall the son of England prove a thief, and take purses? a question to be asked. There is a thing, Harry, which thou hast often heard of, and it is known to many in our land by the name of pitch: this pitch, as ancient writers do report, doth defile; so doth the company thou keepest: for, Harry, now I do not speak to thee in drink, but in tears; not in pleasure, but in passion; not in words only, but in woes also:—And yet there is a virtuous man, whom I have often noted in thy company, but I know not his name.

P. Hen. What manner of man, an it like your majesty?

Fal. A good portly man, i'faith, and a corpulent; of a cheerful look, a pleasing eye, and a most noble carriage; and, as I think, his age some fifty, or by'r-lady, inclining to threescore; And now I remember me, his name is Falstaff: if that man should be lewdly given, he deceiveth me; for, Harry, I see virtue in his looks. If then the tree may be known by the fruit, as the fruit by the tree, then, peremptorily I speak it, there is virtue in that Falstaff: him keep with, the rest banish. And tell me now, thou naughty varlet, tell me, where hast thou been this month?

P. Hen. Dost thou speak like a king? Do thou stand for me, and I'll play my father.

Fal. Depose me? if thou dost it half so gravely, so majestically, both in word and matter, hang me up by the heels for a rabbit-sucker,² or a poulter's hare.

P. Hen. Well, here I am set.

Fal. And here I stand:—judge, my masters.

P. Hen. Now, Harry? whence come you?

Fal. My noble lord, from Eastcheap.

P. Hen. The complaints I hear of thee are grievous.

Fal. 'Blood, my lord, they are false:—nay, I'll tickle ye for a young prince, i'faith.

P. Hen. Swear'st thou, ungracious boy? henceforth ne'er look on me. Thou art violently carried away from grace: there is a devil haunts thee, in the likeness of a fat old man: a tun of man is thy companion. Why dost thou converse with that trunk of humours, that bolting-hutch³ of beastliness, that swoln parcel of dropnies, that huge bombard⁴ of sack, that stuffed cloak-bag of guts, that roasted Manningtree⁵ ox with the pudding in his belly, that reverend vice, that gray iniquity, that father ruffian, that vanity in years? Wherein is he good, but to taste sack and drink it? wherein neat and cleanly, but to carve a capon and eat it? wherein cunning, but in craft? wherein crafty, but in villainy? wherein villainous, but in all things? wherein worthy, but in nothing?

¹ A micher here signifies a truant. So in an old phrase book, Hormanni Vulgaria, 1509:—'He is a mychar; vagus est non disculus.' To mich was to skulk, to hide; and hence the word sometimes also signified a skulking thief, and sometimes a miser. In Lyly's Mother Bombe, 1594, we have: 'How like a micher he stands, as if he had truanted from honesty.'

² A young rabbit.

³ The machine which separates flour from bran.

⁴ A bombard was a very large leathern vessel to hold drink, perhaps so called from its similarity to a sort of cannon of the same name. That it was not a barrel, as some have supposed, is evident from the following passage:—

'His boots as wde as the black jacks,
Or bombards tosed by the king's guards.'

Shirley's Martyr'd Soldier.

⁵ Manningtree, in Essex, formerly enjoyed the privi-

Fal. I would, your grace would take me with you;—Whom means your grace?

P. Hen. That villainous abominable misleader of youth, Falstaff, that old white-bearded Satan.

Fal. My lord, the man I know.

P. Hen. I know, thou dost.

Fal. But to say, I know more harm in him than in myself, were to say more than I know. That he is old (the more the pity,) his white hairs do witness it: but that he is (saving your reverence) a whore-master, that I utterly deny. If sack and sugar be a fault, God help the wicked! If to be old and merry be a sin, then many an old host that I know, is damned: if to be fat be to be hated, then Pharaoh's lean kine are to be loved. No, my good lord; banish Peto, banish Bardolph, banish Poins; but for sweet Jack Falstaff, kind Jack Falstaff, true Jack Falstaff, valiant Jack Falstaff, and therefore more valiant, being as he is, old Jack Falstaff, banish not him thy Harry's company; banish plump Jack, and banish all the world.

P. Hen. I do, I will.

[A knocking heard.]

[Exit Hostess, FRANCIS, and BARDOLPH.]

Re-enter BARDOLPH, running.

Bard. O, my lord, my lord; the sheriff, with a most monstrous watch, is at the door.

Fal. Out, you rogue! play out the play; I have much to say in the behalf of that Falstaff.

Re-enter Hostess, hastily.

Host. O Jesu, my lord! my lord!—

Fal. Heigh, heigh! the devil rides upon a fiddlestick: What's the matter?

Host. The sheriff and all the watch are at the door: they are come to search the house: Shall I let them in?

Fal. Dost thou hear, Hal? never call a true piece of gold, a counterfeit: thou art essentially mad, without seeming so.

P. Hen. And thou a natural coward, without instinct.

Fal. I deny your major: if you will deny the sheriff, so; if not, let him enter: if I become not a cart as well as another man, a plague on my bringing up! I hope, I shall as soon be strangled with a halter as another.

P. Hen. Go, hide thee behind the arras;—the rest walk up above. Now, my masters, for a true face, and good conscience.

Fal. Both which I have had: but their date is out, and therefore I'll hide me.

[Exit all but the Prince and Poins.]

P. Hen. Call in the sheriff.—

Enter Sheriff and Carrier.

Now, master Sheriff; what's your will with me?

Sher. First, pardon me, my lord. A hue and cry Hath follow'd certain men unto this house.

P. Hen. What men?

Sher. One of them is well known, my gracious lord, A gross fat man.

Car. As fat as butter.

P. Hen. The man, I do assure you, is not here; For I myself at this time have employ'd him.

And, Sheriff, I will engage my word to thee,

That I will, by to-morrow dinner time,

Send him to answer thee, or any man,

For any thing he shall be charg'd withal:

And so let me entreat you leave the house.

lege of fairs, by exhibiting a certain number of stage plays yearly. It appears from other intimations that there were great festivities there, and much good eating at Whitsun ales, &c.

⁶ I. e. go no faster than I can follow.

⁷ When arras was first brought into England, it was suspended on small hooks driven into the walls of houses and castles; but this practice was soon discontinued. After the damp of the stone and brickwork had been found to rot the tapestry, it was fixed on frames of wood at such distance from the wall as prevented the damp from being injurious; large spaces were thus left between the arras and the walls, sufficient to contain even one of Falstaff's bulk. Our old dramatists avail themselves of this convenient hiding place upon all occasions

Sher. I will, my lord: There are two gentlemen Have in this robbery lost three hundred marks.

P. Hen. It may be so: if he have robb'd these men,

He shall be answerable; and so, farewell.

Sher. Good night, my noble lord.

P. Hen. I think it is good morrow: Is it not?

Sher. Indeed, my lord, I think it be two o'clock.

[Exeunt Sheriff and Carrier.]

P. Hen. This oily rascal is known as well as Paul's.¹ Go call him forth.

Poins. Falstaff!—fast asleep behind the arras, and snorting like a horse.

P. Hen. Hark, how hard he fetches breath: Search his pockets. [Poins searches.] What hast thou found?

Poins. Nothing but papers, my lord.

P. Hen. Let's see what they be: read them.

Poins. Item, A capon, 2s. 2d.

Item, Sauce, 4d.

Item, Sack, two gallons, 5s. 8d.²

Item, Anchovies, and sack after supper, 2s. 6d.

Item, Bread, a halfpenny.

P. Hen. O monstrous! but one halfpenny-worth of bread to this intolerable deal of sack!—What there is else, keep close; we'll read it at more advantage: there let him sleep till day. I'll to the court in the morning; we must all to the wars, and thy place shall be honourable. I'll procure this fat rogue a charge of foot; and, I know, his death will be a mark of twelve-score.³ The money shall be paid back again with advantage. Be with me to-morrow in the morning; and so good morrow, Poins.

Poins. Good morrow, good my lord. [Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I. Bangor. A Room in the Archdeacon's House. Enter Hotspur, Worcester, Mortimer, and Glendower.

Mort. These promises are fair, the parties sure, And our induction⁴ full of prosperous hope.

Hot. Lord Mortimer,—and cousin Glendower,—Will you sit down?—

And, uncle Worcester:—A plague upon it!

I have forgot the map.

Glend. No, here it is, Sit, cousin Percy; sit, good cousin Hotspur, For by that name as oft as Lancaster Doth speak of you, his cheek looks pale; and, with A rising sigh, he wisheth you in heaven.

Hot. And you in hell, as often as he hears Owen Glendower spoke of.

Glend. I cannot blame him: at my nativity, The front of heaven was full of fiery shapes,⁵ Of burning cressets;⁶ and, at my birth, The frame and huge foundation of the earth, Shak'd like a coward.

Hot. Why, so it would have done At the same season, if your mother's cat had But kitten'd, though yourself had ne'er been born.

² In a very curious letter from Thomas Rainolds, vice chanceller of Oxford, in 1566, to Cardinal Pole, among the Coway Papers, he entreats the suppression of some of the wine taverns in Oxford, and states as one of his reasons that they sell Gascony wine at 16d. a gallon, sack at 2s. 4d. per gallon, and Malvoisie at 2s. 6d. to the utter ruin of the poor students.³ In Florio's First Frutes, 1578:—'Claret wine, red and white, is sold for fivepence the quart, and sack for sixpence; muscadell and malmsey for eight.' Twenty years afterwards sack had probably risen to eightpence or eightpence halfpenny a quart, which would make the computation of five shillings and eightpence for two gallons correct. To the note on sack, at p. 433, we may add that sack is called Vinum Hispanicum by Coles, and Vin d'Espagne by Sherwood. In Florio's Second Frutes it is Vino de Spagna.

³ A score, in the language Toxophilites, was twenty yards. A mark of twelve score meant a mark at a distance of two hundred and forty yards.

⁴ Induction is used by Shakespeare for commencement, beginning. The introductory part of a play or poem was called the induction. Such is the prelude of Glend. I say, the earth did shake when I was born.

Hot. And I say, the earth was not of my mind, If you suppose, as fearing you it shook.

Glend. The heavens were all on fire, the earth did tremble.

Hot. O, then the earth shook to see the heavens on fire,

And not in fear of your nativity.

Diseased nature oftentimes breaks forth

In strange eruptions: oft the teeming earth

Is with a kind of colick pinch'd and vex'd

By the imprisoning of unruly wind

Within her womb; which, for enlargement striving,

Shakes the old beldame⁷ earth, and topples⁸ down

Steeple, and moss-grown towers. At your birth,

Our grandam earth, having this distemperature,

In passion shook.

Glend. Cousin, of many men

I do not bear these crossings. Give me leave

To tell you once again,—that, at my birth,

The front of heaven was full of fiery shapes;

The goats ran from the mountains, and the herds

Were strangely clamorous to the frighted fields.

These signs have mark'd me extraordinary;

And all the courses of my life do show,

I am not in the roll of common men.

Where is he living,—clipp'd in with the sea

That chides the banks of England, Scotland,

Wales,—

Which calls me pupil, or hath read to me?

And bring him out, that is but woman's son,

Can trace me in the tedious ways of art,

And hold me pace in deep experiments.

Hot. I think, there is no man speaks better Welsh:—

I'll to dinner.

Mort. Peace, cousin Percy; you will make him mad.

Glend. I can call spirits from the vasty deep.

Hot. Why, so can I; or so can any man:

But will they come, when you do call for them?

Glend. Why, I can teach you, cousin, to command The devil.

Hot. And I can teach thee, coz, to shame the devil,

By telling truth; Tell truth, and shame the devil.—

If thou have power to raise him, bring him hither,

And I'll be sworn, I have power to shame him hence.

O, while you live, tell truth, and shame the devil.

Mort. Come, come,

No more of this unprofitable chat.

Glend. Three times hath Henry Bolingbroke made head

Against my power: thrice from the banks of Wye,

And sandy-bottom'd Severn, have I sent him,

Bootless⁹ home, and weather-beaten back.

Hot. Home without boots, and in foul weather too!

How 'scapes he agues, in the devil's name?

Glend. Come, here's the map: Shall we divide our right?

According to our three-fold order ta'en?

Mort. The archdeacon hath divided it

Into three limits, very equally:

the Tinkert to the Taming of the Shrew. Sackville's induction to the Mirror for Magistrates is another instance.

⁵ Shakspeare has amplified the hint of Holinshed, who says, 'Strange wonders happened at the nativity of this man; for the same night that he was born, all his father's horses in the stable were found to stand in blood up to their bellies.' The poet had probably also heard that, in 1402, a blazing star appeared, which the Welsh bards represented as portending good fortune to Owen Glendower.

⁶ Cressets were open lamps, exhibited on a beacon, carried upon a pole or otherwise suspended. Cotgrave thus describes them under the word fatot, 'a cresset light (such as they use in playhouses,) made of ropes wreathed, pitched, and put into small open cages of iron.'

⁷ Beldame, and beldaire, formerly signified grand-mother and grandfather.

⁸ To topple, in its active sense, is to throw down.

⁹ Shakspeare has already, in Act ii. Sc. 1, quibbled upon boots and boot, profit.

England, from Trent and Severn hitherto,¹
By south and east, is to my part assign'd :
All westward, Wales beyond the Severn shore,
And all the fertile land within that bound,
To Owen Glendower : and, dear coz, to you
The remnant northward, lying off from Trent.
And our indentures tripartite are drawn :
Which being sealed interchangeably,
(A business that this night may execute,)
To-morrow, cousin Percy, you, and I,
And my good lord of Worcester, will set forth,
To meet your father, and the Scottish power,
As is appointed us, at Shrewsbury.
My father Glendower is not ready yet,
Nor shall we need his help these fourteen days :—
Within that space [To GLEND.] you may have drawn together

Your tenants, friends, and neighbouring gentlemen.

Glend. A shorter time shall send me to you, lords,
And in my conduct shall your ladies come :
From whom you now must steal, and take no leave ;
For there will be a world of water shed,
Upon the parting of your wives and you.

Hot. Methinks, my moiety,² north from Burton
here,

In quantity equals not one of yours :
See, how this river comes me cranking³ in,
And cuts me from the best of all my land,
A huge half moon, and monstrous cantle⁴ out.
I'll have the current in this place damm'd up ;
And here the smug and silver Trent shall run,
In a new channel, fair and evenly :
It shall not wind with such a deep indent,
To rob me of so rich a bottom here.

Glend. Not wind? it shall, it must ; you see, it doth.

Mort. Yea,
But mark, how he bears his course, and runs me up
With like advantage on the other side ;
Gelding the opposed continent as much,
As on the other side it takes from you.

Wor. Yea, but a little charge will trench him here,
And on this north side win this cap of land ;
And then he runs straight and even.

Hot. I'll have it so ; a little charge will do it.

Glend. I will not have it alter'd.

Hot. Will not you ?

Glend. No, nor you shall not.

Hot. Who shall say me nay ?

Glend. Why, that will I.

Hot. Let me not understand you then,
Speak it in Welsh.

Glend. I can speak English, lord, as well as you ;
For I was train'd up in the English court ;⁵
Where, being but young, I framed to the harp
Many an English ditty, lovely well,
And gave the tongue a helpful ornament ;⁶
A virtue that was never seen in you.

Hot. Marry, and I'm glad of it with all my heart ;
I had rather be a kitten, and cry—mew,
Than one of these same metre ballad-mongers :
I had rather hear a brazen canstick⁷ turn'd,
Or a dry wheel grate on an axle-tree ;
And that would set my teeth nothing on edge,
Nothing so much as mincing poetry ;
'Tis like the forc'd gait of a shuffling nag.

1 i. e. to this spot (pointing to the map.)

2 A moiety was frequently used by the writers of Shakespeare's age as a portion of any thing, though not divided into equal parts.

3 To crank is to crook, to turn in and out. Crankling is used by Drayton in the same sense : speaking of a river, he says that Meander

'Hath not so many turns and cranking nooks as she.'

4 A cantle is a portion, a part, a corner or fragment of any thing. The French had chanteau and chantel, and the Italians canto and cantone in the same sense.

5 Owen Glendower's real name was Owen ap-Gryffyth Vaughan. He took the name of Glendower from the lordship of which he was the owner.

6 This disputed passage seems to me to mean that he gave to the language the helpful ornament of verse. Hotspur's answer shows that he took it in that sense.

Glend. Come, you shall have Trent turn'd.

Hot. I do not care : I'll give thrice so much land
To any well-deserving friend ;
But, in the way of bargain, mark ye me,
I'll cavil on the ninth part of a hair.

Are the indentures drawn? shall we be gone?

Glend. The moon shines fair, you may away by night :

I'll in and haste the writer,⁸ and, withal,
Break with your wives of your departure hence :
I am afraid, my daughter will run mad,
So much she doteth on her Mortimer. [Exit.]

Mort. Fye, cousin Percy! how you cross my father!

Hot. I cannot choose : sometimes he angers me,
With telling me of the moldwarp⁹ and the ant,
Of the dreamer Merlin and his prophecies ;

And of a dragon and a finless fish,
A clip-wing'd griffin, and a moulten raven,
A couching lion, and a ramping cat,
And such a deal of skumble-skamble stuff
As puts me from my faith. I tell you what,—
He held me, last night, at least nine hours,
In reckoning up the several devils' names,
That were his lackeys : I cried, humph,—and well,

—go to,—
But mark'd him not a word. O, he's as tedious
As is a tired horse, a railing wife ;
Worse than a smoky house ;—I had rather live
With cheese and garlick, in a windmill, far,
Than feed on cates, and have him talk to me,
In any summer-house in christendom.

Mort. In faith, he is a worthy gentleman ;
Exceedingly well read, and profited
In strange concealments ;¹⁰ valiant as a lion,
And wondrous affable : and as bountiful
As mines of India. Shall I tell you, cousin?
He holds your temper in a high respect,
And curbs himself even of his natural scope,
When you do cross his humour ; 'faith, he does :
I warrant you, that man is not alive,
Might so have tempted him as you have done,
Without the taste of danger and reproof ;
But do not use it oft, let me entreat you.

Wor. In faith, my lord, you are too wilful—blame ;¹¹

And since your coming hither, have done enough
To put him quite beside his patience.

You must needs learn, lord, to amend this fault :
Though sometimes it show greatness, courage, blood,
(And that's the dearest grace it renders you,)
Yet oftentimes it doth present harsh rage,
Defect of manners, want of government,
Pride, haughtiness, opinion,¹² and disdain :
The least of which, haunting a nobleman,
Loseth men's hearts ; and leaves behind a stain
Upon the beauty of all parts besides,
Beguiling them of commendation.

Hot. Well, I am school'd ; good manners be your speed!

Here come our wives, and let us take our leave.

Re-enter GLENDOWER, with the Ladies.

Mort. This is the deadly spite that angers me,—
My wife can speak no English, I no Welsh.

7 A very common contraction of candlestick. The noise to which Hotspur alludes is mentioned in A New Trick to cheat the Devil, 1636 :—
'As if you were to lodge in Lothbury,
Where they turn brazen candlesticks.'

8 i. e. the writer of the articles. The old copy reads 'I'll haste the writer, &c.' The two necessary words (in and) were suggested by Steevens.

9 The moldwarp is the mole ; A. S. molde and aeorpan ; because it warps or renders the surface of the earth uneven by its hillocks.

10 Skilled in wonderful secrets.

11 Shakespeare has several compounds in which the first adjective has the power of an adverb. In King Richard III. we meet with childish-foolish, senseless, obstinate, and mortal-staring.

12 i. e. self-opinion or conceit.

Glend. My daughter weeps; she will not part with you,

She'll be a soldier too, she'll to the wars.

Mort. Good father, tell her,—that she, and my aunt Percy,

Shall follow in your conduct' speedily.

[GLEND. speaks to his daughter in Welsh, and she answers him in the same.]

Glend. She's desperate here; a peevish self-will'd harlotry.²

One that no persuasion can do good upon.

[LADY M. speaks to MORTIMER in Welsh.]

Mort. I understand thy looks: that pretty Welsh Which thou pourest down from these swelling heavens,³

I am too perfect in; and, but for shame,

In such a parley would I answer thee.

[LADY M. speaks.]

I understand thy kisses, and thou mine,

And that's a feeling disputation:

But I will never be a truant, love,

Till I have learn'd thy language; for thy tongue

Makes Welsh as sweet as ditties highly penn'd,

Sung by a fair queen in a summer's bower,

With ravishing division, to her lute.⁴

Glend. Nay, if you melt, then will she run mad.

[LADY M. speaks again.]

Mort. O, I am ignorance itself in this.

Glend. She bids you on the wanton rushes lay you down.⁵

And rest your gentle head upon her lap,

And she will sing the song that pleaseth you,

And on your eyelids crown the god of sleep,⁶

Charming your blood with pleasing heaviness;

Making such difference 'twixt wake and sleep,

As is the difference betwixt day and night,

The hour before the heavenly-harness'd team

Begins his golden progress in the east.

Mort. With all my heart I'll sit, and hear her sing:

By that time will our book,⁷ I think, be drawn.

Glend. Do so;

And those musicians that shall play to you,

Hang in the air a thousand leagues from hence;

And straight they shall be here: sit, and attend.

Hot. Come, Kate, thou art perfect in lying down: Come, quick, quick; that I may lay my head in thy lap.

Lady P. Go, ye giddy goose.

[GLENDOWER speaks some Welsh words, and then the Music plays.]

Hot. Now I perceive the devil understands Welsh;

And 'tis no marvel, he's so humorous.

By'r-lady, he's a good musician.

Lady P. Then should you be nothing but musical; for you are altogether governed by humours. Lie still, ye thief, and hear the lady sing in Welsh.

Hot. I had rather hear Lady, my brach,⁸ howl in Irish.

Lady P. Would'st thou have thy head broken?

Hot. No.

Lady P. Then be still.

Hot. Neither; 'tis a woman's fault.⁹

Lady P. Now God help thee!

Hot. To the Welsh lady's bed.

Lady P. What's that?

Hot. Peace! she sings.

[A Welsh song sung by LADY M.]

Hot. Come, Kate, I'll have your song too.

Lady P. Not mine, in good sooth.

Hot. Not yours, in good sooth! 'Heart, you swear like a comfit-maker's wife! Not you, in good sooth: and, As true as I live; and, As God shall mend me; and, As sure as day:

And giv'st such sarcenet surety for thy oaths,

As if thou never walk'st further than Finsbury.¹

Swear me, Kate, like a lady, as thou art,

A good mouth-filling oath; and leave in sooth,

And such protést of pepper-gingerbread,

To velvet-guards,¹¹ and Sunday-citizens.

Come, sing.

Lady P. I will not sing.

Hot. 'Tis the next way to turn tailor, or be red-breast teacher.¹² An the indentures be drawn, I'll away within these two hours; and so come in when ye will. [Exit.]

Glend. Come, come, Lord Mortimer; you are as slow,

As hot lord Percy is on fire to go.

By this our book's drawn; we'll but seal, and then To horse immediately.

Mort. With all my heart. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. London. A Room in the Palace.
Enter KING HENRY, Prince of Wales, and Lords.

K. Hen. Lords, give us leave: the Prince of Wales and I Must have some private conference: But be near at hand,

For we shall presently have need of you.

[Exeunt Lords]

I know not whether God will have it so,

For some displeasing service¹³ I have done,

That in his secret doom, out of my blood

He'll breed revengement and a scourge for me;

But thou dost, in thy passages of life,

Make me believe,—that thou art only mark'd

For the hot vengeance and the rod of heaven,

To punish my mistreadings. Tell me else,

Could such inordinate, and low desires,
Such poor, such bare, such lewd, such mean attempts,¹⁴

Such barren pleasures, rude society,
As thou art match'd withal, and grafted to, nants, &c.—In a MS. letter from Sir Richard Sackville, in 1560, to Lady Throckmorton, announcing a grant of some land to her husband Sir Nicholas, he says, 'It hath pleased the queen's majesty to sign Mr. Frogmorton's book.'—Comney Papers.

⁸ Hound.

⁹ That this is spoken ironically is sufficiently obvious, as Mr. Pye has observed; but the strange attempts to misunderstand the passage made by some commentators, make the observation in some measure necessary.

¹⁰ Finsbury, being then open walks and fields, was the common resort of the citizens, as appears from many old plays.

¹² Tailors, like weavers, have ever been remarkable for their vocal skill. Percy is jocular in his mode of persuading his wife to sing, and this is a humorous turn which he gives to his argument, 'Come, sing.'—'I will not sing.'—'Tis the next (i. e. readiest, nearest) way to turn tailor or redbreast teacher.' The meaning is, 'to sing is to put yourself upon a level with tailors and teachers of birds.'

¹³ Service, for action.

¹⁴ Mean attempts are mean, unworthy undertakings. Lewd, in this place, has its original signification of idle, ungracious, naughty.

² Capulet, in Romeo and Juliet, reproaches his daughter in the same words:—

'A peevish self-will'd harlotry it is.'

³ It seems extraordinary that Steevens could for a moment conceive that Mortimer meant his lady's two prominent tips! It is obvious, as Mr. Douce has remarked, that her eyes swollen with tears are meant, whose language he is too perfect in, and could answer with the like if it were not for shame.

⁵ It has been already remarked, that it was long the custom in this country to strew the floors with rushes, as we now cover them with carpets.

⁶ So in Beaumont and Fletcher's Philaster:—

— who shall take his lute,

And touch it till he crown a silent sleep

Upon my eyelid.

The God of Sleep is not only to sit on Mortimer's eyelids, but to sit crowned, that is, with sovereign dominion.

⁷ It was usual to call any manuscript of bulk a book in ancient times, such as patents, grants, articles, cove-

Accompany the greatness of thy blood,
And hold their level with thy princely heart?

P. Hen. So please your majesty, I would I could Quit all offences with as clear excuse,
As well as, I am doubtless, I can purge
Myself of many I am charg'd withal:
Yet such extenuation let me beg,¹
As, in reproof of many tales devis'd,—
Which oft the ear of greatness needs must hear,—
By smiling pickthanks² and base newsmongers,
I may, for some things true, wherein my youth
Hath faulty wander'd and irregular,
Find pardon on my true submission.

K. Hen. God pardon thee!—yet let me wonder,
Harry,

At thy affections, which do hold a wing
Quite from the flight of all thy ancestors.
Thy place in council thou hast rudely lost,³
Which by thy younger brother is supplied;
And art almost an alien to the hearts
Of all the court and princes of my blood:
The hope and expectation of thy time
Is ruin'd; and the soul of every man
Prophetically does forethink thy fall.
Had I so lavish of my presence been,
So common-hackney'd in the eyes of men,
So stale and cheap to vulgar company;
Opinion, that did help me to the crown,
Had still kept loyal to possession;⁴
And left me in reputeless banishment,
A fellow of no mark, nor likelihood.
By being seldom seen, I could not stir,
But, like a comet, I was wonder'd at:
That men would tell their children, This is he;
Others would say,—Where? which is Bolingbroke?
And then I stole all courtesy from heaven,⁵
And dress'd myself in such humility,
That I did pluck allegiance from men's hearts,
Loud shouts and salutations from their mouths,
Even in the presence of the crowned king.
Thus did I keep my person fresh, and new;
My presence, like a robe pontifical,
Ne'er seen, but wonder'd at: and so my state,
Seldom, but sumptuous, shewed like a feast;
And won, by rareness, such solemnity.
The skipping king, he ambled up and down
With shallow jesters, and rash bavin⁶ wits,
Soon kindled, and soon burn'd: carded⁷ his state;
Mingled his royalty with carping⁸ fools;
Had his great name profaned with their scorns;
And gave his countenance, against his name,
To laugh at glib boys, and stand the push
Of every beardless vain comparative:⁹
Grew a companion to the common streets,

1 The construction of this passage is somewhat obscure. Johnson thus explains it:—'Let me beg so much extenuation, that upon confutation of many false charges, I may be pardoned some which are true.' Reproof means disproof.

2 A sycophant, a flatterer, one who is studious to gain favour, or to pick occasions for obtaining thanks.

3 This appears to be an anachronism. The prince's removal from council, in consequence of his striking the Lord Chief Justice Gascoigne, was some years after the battle of Shrewsbury, (1403). His brother the duke of Clarence was appointed president in his room, and he was not created a duke till 1411.

4 True to him that had then possession of the crown.

5 Massinger, in The Great Duke of Florence, has adopted this expression:—

'—Giovanni,

A prince in expectation, when he lived here
Stole courtesy from heaven; and would not to
The meanest servant in my father's house
Have kept such distance.'

Mr. Gifford, in the following note on this passage, gives the best explanation of the phrase, which the commentators have altogether mistaken:—'The plain meaning of the phrase is, that the affability and sweetness of Giovanni were of a heavenly kind, i. e. more perfect than was usually found among men, resembling that divine condescension which excludes none from its regard, and, therefore, immediately derived or stolen from heaven, from whence all good proceeds. The word stolen here

Enfeoff'd¹⁰ himself to popularity:
That being daily swallow'd by men's eyes,
They surfeited with honey; and began
To loathe the taste of sweetness, whereof a little More than a little is by much too much.
So, when he had occasion to be seen,
He was but as the cuckoo is in June,
Heard, not regarded; seen, but with such eyes,
As, sick and blunted with community,
Afford no extraordinary gaze,
Such as is bent on sunlike majesty,
When it shines seldom in admiring eyes:
But rather drow'd, and hung their eyelids down,
Slept in his face, and render'd such aspect
As cloudy men use to their adversaries;
Being with his presence glutted, gorg'd, and full.
And in that very line, Harry, standest thou:
For thou hast lost thy princely privilege,
With vile participation; not an eye
But is a-weary of thy common sight,
Save mine, which hath desir'd to see thee more;
Which now doth that I would not have it do,
Make blind itself with foolish tenderness.

P. Hen. I shall hereafter, my thrice-gracious lord,
Be more myself.

K. Hen. For all the world,
As thou art to this hour, was Richard then
When I from France set foot at Ravenspur;
And even as I was then, is Percy now.
Now by my sceptre, and my soul to boot,
He hath more worthy interest to the state,¹¹
Than thou, the shadow of succession:
For, of no right, nor colour like to right,
He doth fill fields with harness in the realm;
Turns head against the lion's armed jaws;
And, being no more in debt to years than thou,
Leads ancient lords and reverend bishops on,
To bloody battles, and to bruising arms.
What never-dying honour hath he got Against renowned Douglas; whose high deeds,
Whose hot incursions, and great name in arms,
Holds from all soldiers chief majority,
And military title capital,
Through all the kingdoms that acknowledge Christ?
Thrice hath this Hotspur Mars in swathing clothes,
This infant warrior, in his enterprises
Discomfited great Douglas; ta'en him once,
Enlarged him, and made a friend of him,
To fill the mouth of deep defiance up,
And shake the peace and safety of our throne.
And what say you to this? Percy, Northumberland,
The archbishop's grace of York, Douglas, Mortimer,
Capitulate¹² against us, and are up.
But wherefore do I tell these news to thee?

means little else than to win by imperceptible progress, by gentle violence.'

6 Bavins are brushwood, or small fagots used for lighting fires.

7 To card is to mix, or debase by mixing. The metaphor is probably taken from mingling coarse wool with fine, and carding them together, thereby diminishing the value of the latter. The phrase is used by other writers for to mingle or mix.

8 The quarto, 1598, reads carping. The quarto, 1609, and subsequent old copies, read carping, which I am inclined to think from the context is the word which Shakespeare wrote. 'A carping momus,' and 'a carping fool,' were very common expressions in that age.

9 I. e. every beardless vain young fellow who affected wit, or was a dealer in comparisons. Vide Act I. Sc. 2.

10 I. e. gave himself up, absolutely and entirely, to popularity. To enfeoff is a law term, signifying to give or grant any thing to another in fee simple.

11 'Interest to the state.' We should now write in the state; but this was the phraseology of the poet's time. So in The Winter's Tale, 'he is less frequent to his princely exercises than formerly,' 'Thou hast but the shadow of succession, compared with the more worthy interest in the state (i. e. great popularity) which he possesses.'

12 To capitulate, according to the old dictionaries, formerly signified to make articles of agreement. The nobles enumerated had entered into such articles, or confederated against the king.

Why, Harry, do I tell thee of my foes,
Which art my near'st and dearest enemy?
Thou that art like enough,—through vassal fear,
Base inclination, and the start of spleen—
To fight against me under Percy's pay,
To dog his heels, and court'sy at his frowns,
To show how much degenerate thou art.

P. Hen. Do not think so, you shall not find it so;
And God forgive them, that have so much sway'd
Your majesty's good thoughts away from me!
I will redeem all this on Percy's head,
And, in the closing of some glorious day,
Be bold to tell you, that I am your son;
When I will wear a garment all of blood,
And stain my favours² in a bloody mark,
Which, wash'd away, shall scour my shame with it.
And that shall be the day, whene'er it lights,
That this same child of honour and renown,
This gallant Hotspur, this all-praised knight,
And your unthought-of Harry, chance to meet:
For every honour sitting on his helm,
Would they were multitudes; and on my head
My shames redoubled! for the time will come,
That I shall make this northern youth exchange
His glorious deeds for my indignities.
Percy is but my factor, good my lord,
To engross up glorious deeds on my behalf;
And I will call him to so strict account,
That he shall render every glory up,
Yea, even the slightest worship of his time,
Or I will tear the reckoning from his heart.
This, in the name of God, I promise here:
The which if he be pleas'd I shall perform,
I do beseech your majesty, may save
The long-grown wounds of my intemperance:
If not, the end of life cancels all bands;³
And I will die a hundred thousand deaths,
Ere break the smallest parcel⁴ of this vow.

K. Hen. A hundred thousand rebels die in this:—
Thou shalt have charge, and sovereign trust, herein.

Enter BLUNT.

How now, good Blunt? thy looks are full of speed.

Blunt. So hath the business that I come to speak of.

Lord Mortimer of Scotland⁵ hath sent word,—
That Douglas, and the English rebels, met,
The eleventh of this month, at Shrewsbury:
A mighty and a fearful head they are,
If promises be kept on every hand,
As ever offer'd foul play in a state.

K. Hen. The earl of Westmoreland set forth to-day;

With him my son, Lord John of Lancaster;
For this advertisement⁶ is five days old:—
On Wednesday next, Harry, you shall set
Forward; on Thursday, we ourselves will march:
Our meeting is Bridgnorth: and, Harry, you

Shall march through Glostershire; by which account,
Our business valued, some twelve days hence
Our general forces at Bridgnorth shall meet.
Our hands are full of business: let's away;
Advantage feeds him⁷ fat, while men delay.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. Eastcheap. A Room in the Boar's Head Tavern. Enter FALSTAFF and BARDOLPH.

Fal. Bardolph, am I not fallen away vilely since this last action? do I not bate? do I not dwindle? Why, my skin hangs about me like an old lady's loose gown; I am wither'd like an old apple-John. Well, I'll repent, and that suddenly, while I am in some liking;⁸ I shall be out of heart shortly, and then I shall have no strength to repent. An I have not forgotten what the inside of a church is made of, I am a pepper-corn, a brewer's horse:⁹ the inside of a church! Company, villanous company, hath been the spoil of me.

Bard. Sir John, you are so fretful, you cannot live long.

Fal. Why, there is it:—come, sing me a bawdy song; make me merry. I was as virtuously given, as a gentleman need to be; virtuous enough: swore little; dined, not above seven times a week; went to a bawdy-house, not above once in a quarter—of an hour; paid money that I borrowed, three or four times; lived well, and in good compass: and now I live out of all order, out of all compass.

Bard. Why, you are so fat, Sir John, that you must needs be out of all compass; out of all reasonable compass, Sir John.

Fal. Do thou amend thy face, and I'll amend my life: Thou art our admiral,¹⁰ thou bearest the lantern in the poop,—but 'tis in the nose of thee: thou art the knight of the burning lamp.

Bard. Why, Sir John, my face does you no harm.

Fal. No, I'll be sworn; I make as good use of it as many a man doth of a death's head, or a memento mori: I never see thy face, but I think upon hell-fire, and Dives that lived in purple; for there he is in his robes, burning, burning. If thou wert any way given to virtue, I would swear by thy face; my oath should be, By thy fire: but thou art altogether given over; and wert indeed, but for the light in thy face, the son of utter darkness. When thou ran'st up Gads-hill in the night to catch my horse, if I did not think thou hadst been an ignis fatuus, or a ball of wildfire, there's no purchase in money. O, thou art a perpetual triumph, an everlasting bonfire-light! Thou hast saved me a thousand marks in links and torches, walking with thee in the night betwixt tavern and tavern:¹¹ but the sack that thou hast drunk me, would have bought me lights as good cheap,¹² at the dearest chandler's in liquor on his back, and the other in his belly.' Malt horse, which is the same thing, was a common term of reproach, and is used elsewhere by Shakspeare, and by Ben Jonson.

¹² Cheap being derived from KAVPON, Gothic, is the past participle of cypan, Sax. to traffic, to bargain, to buy and sell. Good cheap was therefore a good bargain. Our ancestors not only used good cheap, but better cheap, in the sense which we now use cheap and cheaper. Tooke thinks that bad-cheap was also used, but has adduced no example. Baret translates the ova villa of Horace by good cheap eggs; and the minoris vendere aliquid, of Plautus, by to sell better-cheap. Cheap and cheaping therefore came to signify a market, which led Johnson to suppose that good-cheap was derived from a bon marche. All the northern dialects

² Favours is probably here used for colours; the scarf by which a knight of rank was distinguished.

⁵ There was no such person as Lord Mortimer of Scotland; but there was a Lord March of Scotland, (George Dunbar,) who having quitted his own country in disgust, attached himself so warmly to the English, and did them such signal services in their wars with Scotland, that the parliament petitioned the king to bestow some reward on him. He fought on the side of King Henry in this rebellion, and was the means of saving his life at the battle of Shrewsbury. The poet recollected that there was a Scottish lord on the king's side, who bore the same title with the English family on the rebels' side, (one being earl of March in England, the other earl of March in Scotland,) but his memory deceived him as to the particular name which was common to both. He took it to be Mortimer instead of March.

⁶ Intelligence. ⁷ Feeds himself fat.

⁸ Liking is condition, plight of body. 'If one be in better plight of body, or better liking.'

⁹ That Falstaff was unlike a brewer's horse may be collected from a conundrum in The Devil's Cabinet Opened:—'What is the difference between a drunkard and a brewer's horse?—Because one carries all his Europe. I have maintained that salamander of yours with fire, any time this two and thirty years; Heaven reward me for it!

Bard. 'Sblood, I would my face were in your belly!

Fal. God-a-mercy! so should I be sure to be heart-burned.

Enter Hostess.

How now, dame Parlet the hen? have you inquired yet, who picked my pocket?

Host. Why, Sir John! what do you think, Sir John? Do you think I keep thieves in my house? I have searched, I have inquired, so has my husband, man by man, boy by boy, servant by servant: the title of a hair was never lost in my house before.

Fal. You lie, hostess; Bardolph was shaved and lost many a hair: and I'll be sworn, my pocket was picked: Go to, you are a woman, go.

Host. Who I? I defy thee: I was never cailed so in mine own house before.

Fal. Go to, I know you well enough.

Host. No, Sir John; you do not know me, Sir John: I know you, Sir John: you owe me money, Sir John, and now you pick a quarrel to beguile me of it: I bought you a dozen of shirts to your back.

Fal. Dowlas, filthy dowlas: I have given them away to bakers' wives, and they have made bolters of them.

Host. Now, as I am a true woman, holland of eight shillings an ell! You owe money here besides, Sir John, for your diet, and by-drinkings, and money lent you, four and twenty pound.

Fal. He had his part of it; let him pay.

Host. He? alas, he is poor; he hath nothing.

Fal. How! poor? look upon his face; What call you rich? let them coin his nose, let them coin his cheeks; I'll not pay a denier. What, will you make a younker² of me? shall I not take mine ease in mine inn,³ but I shall have my pocket picked? I have lost a seal-ring of my grandfather's worth forty mark.

Host. O Jesu! I have heard the prince tell him, I know not how oft, that that ring was copper.

Fal. How! the prince is a Jack, a sneak-cup; and, if he were here, I would cudgel him like a dog, if he would say so.

Enter PRINCE HENRY and POINS, marching.
FALSTAFF meets the Prince, playing on his trunchion like a fife.

Fal. How now, lad? is the wind in that door, 'faith? must we all march?

Bard. Yea, two and two, Newgate-fashion?

Host. My lord, I pray you, hear me.

P. Hen. What sayest thou, mistress Quickly? How does thy husband? I love him well, he is an honest man.

Host. Good my lord, hear me.

Fal. Pr'ythee, let her alone, and list to me.

P. Hen. What sayest thou, Jack?

have the same form of speech that our ancestors used; thus god-kop, betre kop, in Swedish; got kiob, better kiob, in Danish, &c. Florio has 'buon-mercato, good-cheape, a good bargain.'

² Younker is here used for a novice, a dupe, or a person thoughtless through inexperience.

³ This was a common phrase for enjoying one's self in quiet, as if at home; not very different in its application from that maxim, Every man's house is his castle. Inne originally signified a house or habitation. When the word began to change its meaning, and to be used for a house of public entertainment, the proverb still continuing in force, was applied in the latter sense. Falstaff puns upon the word inn in order to represent

Fal. The other night I fell asleep here behind the arras, and had my pocket picked: this house is turned bawdy-house, they pick pockets.

P. Hen. What didst thou lose, Jack?

Fal. Wilt thou believe me, Hal? three or four bonds of forty pound a-piece, and a seal-ring of my grandfather's.

P. Hen. A trifle, some eight-penny matter.

Host. So I told him, my lord; and I said I heard your grace say so: And, my lord, he speaks most vilely of you, like a foul-mouthed man as he is; and said, he would cudgel you.

P. Hen. What! he did not?

Host. There's neither faith, truth, nor womanhood in me else.

Fal. There's no more faith in thee than in a stewed prune;⁴ nor no more truth in thee, than in a drawn fox; and for womanhood, maid Marian⁵ may be the deputy's wife of the ward to thee. Go, you thing, go.

Host. Say, what thing? what thing?

Fal. What thing? why a thing to thank God on.

Host. I am no thing to thank God on, I would thou should'st know it; I am an honest man's wife: and, setting thy knighthood aside, thou art a knave to call me so.

Fal. Setting thy womanhood aside, thou art a beast to say otherwise.

Host. Say, what beast, thou knave thou?

Fal. What beast? why an otter.

P. Hen. An otter, Sir John! why an otter?

Fal. Why? she's neither fish, nor flesh; a man knows not where to have her.

Host. Thou art an unjust man in saying so; thou or any man knows where to have me, thou knave thou.

P. Hen. Thou sayest true, hostess; and he slanders thee most grossly.

Host. So he doth you, my lord; and said this other day, you ought him a thousand pound.

P. Hen. Sirrah, do I owe you a thousand pound.

Fal. A thousand pound, Hal? a million: thy love is worth a million; thou owest me thy love.

Host. Nay, my lord, he called you Jack, and said, he would cudgel you.

Fal. Did I, Bardolph?

Bard. Indeed, Sir John, you said so.

Fal. Yea; if he said, my ring was copper.

P. Hen. I say, 'tis copper: Darest thou be as good as thy word now?

Fal. Why, Hal, thou knowest, as thou art but man, I dare: but, as thou art prince, I fear thee, as I fear the roaring of the lion's whelp.

P. Hen. And why not, as the lion?

Fal. The king himself is to be feared as the lion: Dost thou think, I'll fear thee as I fear thy father? nay, an I do, I pray God, my girdle break!⁶

P. Hen. O, if it should, how would thy guts fall about thy knees! But, sirrah, there's no room for faith, truth, nor honesty, in this bosom of thine; it is filled up with guts, and midriff. Charge an honest woman with picking thy pocket! Why, thou whore-

the wrong done him the more strongly. Old Heywood has one or two epigrams which turn upon this phrase.

⁴ Steevens has been too abundantly copious on the subject of stewed prunes. They were a refection particularly common in brothels in Shakespeare's time, perhaps from mistaken notions of their antiepileptic properties. It is not easy to understand Falstaff's similes, perhaps he means as faithless as a strumpet or a bawd. A drawn fox is surely neither an exenterated fox: nor a fox drawn over the grounds to exercise the hounds; but a hunted fox, a fox drawn from his cover, whose cunning in doubling and deceiving the hounds makes the simile perfectly appropriate.

⁵ One of the characters in the ancient morris dance, generally a man dressed like a woman, sometimes a strumpet; and therefore forms an allusion to describe women of a masculine character. A curious tract, entitled 'Old Meg of Herefordshire for a Mayd Marian, and Hereford Town for a Morris-dance, 1609,' was reprinted by Mr. Triphook in 1816.

⁶ This imprecation is supposed to have reference to the old adage, 'Ungirt, unblessed.' It appears to have been also proverbial.

son, impudent, embossed¹ rascal, if there were any thing in thy pocket but tavern-reckonings, memorandums of bawdy-houses, and one poor penny-worth of sugar-candy to make thee long-winded; if thy pocket were enriched with any other injuries but these, I am a villain. And yet you will stand to it; you will not pocket up wrong; Art thou not ashamed?

Fal. Dost thou hear, Hal? thou knowest, in the state of innocence, Adam fell; and what should poor Jack Falstaff do, in the days of villany? Thou seest I have more flesh than another man; and therefore more frailty.—You confess then, you picked my pocket?

P. Hen. It appears so by the story.

Fal. Hostess, I forgive thee: Go, make ready breakfast; love thy husband, look to thy servants, cherish thy guests: thou shalt find me tractable to any honest reason: thou seest, I am pacified.—Still?—Nay, prythee, be gone. [Exit Hostess.] Now, Hal, to the news at court: for the robbery, lad,—How is that answered?

P. Hen. O, my sweet beef, I must still be good angel to thee:—The money is paid back again.

Fal. O, I do not like that paying back, 'tis a double labour.

P. Hen. I am good friends with my father, and may do any thing.

Fal. Rob me the exchequer the first thing thou doest, and do it with unwashed hands too.

Bard. Do, my lord.

P. Hen. I have procured thee, Jack, a charge of foot.

Fal. I would, it had been of horse. Where shall I find one that can steal well? O for a fine thief, of the age of two and twenty, or thereabouts! I am heinously unprovided. Well, God be thanked for these rebels, they offend none but the virtuous; I laud them, I praise them.

P. Hen. Bardolph—

Bard. My lord.

P. Hen. Go bear this letter to Lord John of Lancaster,—my brother John;—this to my lord of Westmoreland.—Go, Poins, to horse, to horse; for thou, and I, have thirty miles to ride yet ere dinner time.—Jack, meet me to-morrow i'the Temple-hall at two o'clock i'the afternoon: there shalt thou know thy charge; and there receive money, and order for their furniture.²

The land is burning; Percy stands on high; And either they, or we, must lower lie.

[Exeunt Prince, Poins, and Bardolph.]

Fal. Rare words! brave world!—Hostess, my breakfast; come:—

O, I could wish, this tavern were my drum. [Exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. The rebel Camp near Shrewsbury. Enter Hotspur, Worcester, and Douglas.

Hot. Well said, my noble Scot: If speaking truth, In this fine age, were not thought flattery, Such attribution should the Douglas have,³ As not a soldier of this season's stamp Should go so general current through the world. By heaven, I cannot flatter; I defy⁴ The tongues of soothers; but a braver place

In my heart's love, hath no man than yourself; Nay, task me to the word; approve me, lord.

Doug. Thou art the king of honour:

No man so potent breathes upon the ground, But I will beard⁵ him.

Hot.

Do so, and 'tis well:—

Enter a Messenger, with Letters.

What letters hast thou there?—I can but thank you.

Mess. These letters come from your father,—

Hot. Letters from him! why comes he not himself?

Mess. He cannot come, my lord; he's grievous sick.

Hot. 'Zounds! how has he the leisure to be sick,⁶ In such a justling time? Who leads his power?

Under whose government come they along?

Mess. His letters bear his mind, not I, my lord.⁷

Wor. I prythee, tell me, doth he keep his bed?

Mess. He did, my lord, four days ere I set forth? And at the time of my departure thence, He was much fear'd by his physicians.

Wor. I would, the state of time had first been whole,

Ere he by sickness had been visited;

His health was never better worth than now.

Hot. Sick now! droop now! this sickness doth infect

The very life-blood of our enterprise;

'Tis catching hither, even to our camp.—

He writes me here,—that inward sickness—

And that his friends by deputation could not

So soon be drawn; nor did he think it meet,

To lay so dangerous and dear a trust

On any soul remov'd,⁸ but on his own.

Yet doth he give us bold advertisement,—

That with our small conjunction, we should on,

To see how fortune is dispos'd to us:

For, as he writes, there is no quailing⁹ now;

Because the king is certainly possess'd¹⁰

Of all our purposes. What say you to it?

Wor. Your father's sickness is a main to us.

Hot. A perilous gash, a very limb lopp'd off:—

And yet, in faith, 'tis not; his present want

Seems more than we shall find it:—Were it good

To set the exact wealth of all our states

All at one cast? to set so rich a main

On the nice hazard of one doubtful hour?

It were not good; for therein should we read

The very bottom and the soul of hope:

The very list, the very utmost bound

Of all our fortunes.

Doug.

'Faith, and so we should;

Where¹¹ now remains a sweet reversion;

We may boldly spend upon the hope of what

Is to come in:

A comfort of retirement¹² lives in this.

Hot. A rendezvous, a home to fly unto,

If that the devil and mischance look big

Upon the maidenhead of our affairs.

Wor. But yet, I would your father had been here.

The quality and hair¹³ of our attempt

Brooks no division: It will be thought

By some, that know not why he is away,

That wisdom, loyalty, and mere dislike

Of our proceedings, kept the earl from hence;

And think, how such an apprehension

May turn the tide of fearful faction,

And breed a kind of question in our cause:

² I have followed Mr. Douce's suggestion in printing thus much of this speech in prose. No correct ear will ever receive it as blank verse, notwithstanding the efforts by omission, &c. to convert it into metre.

³ This expression is frequent in Holinshed, and is applied by way of preeminence to the head of the Douglas family.

⁴ Disdain.

⁵ To beard is to oppose face to face, in a daring and hostile manner, to threaten even to his beard.

⁶ Epaminondas being told, on the evening before the battle of Leuctra, that an officer of distinction had died in his tent, exclaimed, 'Good gods! how could any body find time to die in such a conjuncture.'—Xenophon Hellenic, l. vi.

⁷ The folio reads 'not I his mind.' The quarto, 1598, 'not I my mind.' The emendation is Capell's.

⁸ That is, on any less near to himself, or whose interest is remote.

⁹ Quailing is fainting, slackening, flagging; or falling in vigour or resolution; going back. Cotgrave renders it by alacchissement.

¹⁰ Informed.

¹¹ Where, for whereas.

¹² I. e. 'a support to which we may have recourse.'

¹³ 'Hair was anciently used metaphorically for the colour, complexion, or nature of a thing. Pelo (an Italian) is used for the colour of a horse, also for the countenance of a man; and pail, in French, has the same significations, ésser d'un pelo, estre d'un poil To be of the same hair, quality, or condition.

For, well you know, we of the offering¹ side
Must keep aloof from strict arbitrement;
And stop all sight-holes, every loop, from whence
The eye of reason may pry in upon us:
This absence of your father's draws a curtain,²
That shows the ignorant a kind of fear
Before not dreamt of.

Hot. You strain too far.

I, rather, of his absence make this use;—
It lends a lustre, and more great opinion,
A larger dare to our great enterprise,
Than if the earl were here: for men must think,
If we, without his help, can make a head,
To push against the kingdom; with his help,
We shall o'erturn it topsy-turvy down.—
Yet all goes well, yet all our joints are whole.

Doug. As heart can think: there is not such a word
Spoke of in Scotland, as this term³ of fear.

Enter SIR RICHARD VERNON.

Hot. My cousin Vernon! welcome, by my soul.

Ver. 'Pray God, my news be worth a welcome,
lord.

The earl of Westmorland, seven thousand strong,
Is marching hitherwards; with him, Prince John.

Hot. No harm: What more?

Ver. And further, I have learn'd,
The king himself in person is set forth,
Or hitherwards intended speedily,
With strong and mighty preparation.

Hot. He shall be welcome too. Where is his son,
'The nimble-footed' mad-cap prince of Wales,
And his comrades, that da'd the world aside,
And bid it pass?

Ver. All furnish'd, all in arms,
All plum'd: like estridges that with the wind
Bated, like eagles having lately bath'd;⁴
Glittering in golden coats, like images;
As full of spirit as the month of May,
And gorgeous as the sun at midsummer;
Wanton as youthful goats, wild as young bulls.
I saw young Harry,—with his beaver⁵ on,
His cuisses⁶ on his thighs, gallantly arm'd,—
Rise from the ground like feather'd Mercury,
And vaulted with such ease into his seat,
As if an angel dropp'd down from the clouds,
To turn and wind a fiery Pegasus,
And witch the world with noble horsemanship.

Hot. No more, no more; worse than the sun in March,

1 The offering side is the assailing side. Baret renders 'Attentare pudicitiam puellæ, to assaile a maydens chastite: to offer.'

2 To draw a curtain had anciently the same meaning as to undraw one at present. Thus in the Second Part of King Henry VI. quarto, 1600:—'Then the curtaines being drawne, Duke Humphrey is discovered in his bed.'

The folio reads 'dream of fear.'

Shakspeare rarely bestows his epithets at random. Stowe says of the prince:—'He was passing swift in running, insomuch that he, with two other of his lords, without hounds, bow, or other engine, would take a wilde bucke, or doe, in a large parke.'

5 This is the reading of all the old copies, which Hamner not understanding, altered to—

'All plum'd like estridges, and with the wind

Bating like eagles, &c.'

Then came Johnson, who supposed that there must be necessity for emendation, as it had already been attempted: he changed it thus:—

'All plum'd like estridges, that wing the wind;

Bated like eagles, &c.'

This reading has been adopted by Malone, and by Steevens, with a voluminous commentary to show its necessity. But surely, if a clear sense can be deduced from the passage as it stands, no conjectural alteration of the text should be admitted. The meaning of the passage is obviously this:—'The prince and his comrades were all furnish'd, all in arms, all plum'd: like estridges (ostriches) that bated (i. e. flutter or beat) the wind with their wings; like eagles having lately bathed.' Johnson's reading is exceptionable, if it was not an unwarrantable innovation, because to wing the wind and to bate are the same thing; and the difficul-

This praise doth nourish agues. Let them come;
They come like sacrifices in their trim,
And to the fire-ey'd maid of smoky war,
All hot, and bleeding, will we offer them:
The mailed Mars shall on his altar sit,
Up to the ears in blood. I am on fire,
To hear this rich reprisal is so nigh,
And yet not ours:—Come, let me take⁷ my horse,
Who is to bear me, like a thunderbolt,
Against the bosom of the prince of Wales:
Harry to Harry shall, hot horse to horse,
Meet, and ne'er part, till one drop down a corse.—
O, that Glendower were come!

Ver. There is more news:
I learn'd in Worcester, as I rode along,
He cannot draw his power this fourteen days.

Doug. That's the worst tidings that I hear of yet.

Wor. Ay, by my faith, that bears a frosty sound.

Hot. What may the king's whole battle reach unto?

Ver. To thirty thousand.

Hot. Forty let it be;
My father and Glendower being both away,
The powers of us may serve so great a day.
Come, let us make a muster speedily:
Doomsday is near; die all, die merrily.

Doug. Talk not of dying; I am out of fear
Of death, or death's hand, for this one half year.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. A Public Road near Coventry. Enter FALSTAFF and BARDOLPH.

Fal. Bardolph, get thee before to Coventry; fill me a bottle of sack; our soldiers shall march through; we'll to Sutton-Colfield to-night.

Bard. Will you give me money, captain?

Fal. Lay out, lay out.

Bard. This bottle makes an angel.

Fal. And if it do, take it for thy labour; and if it make twenty, take them all, I'll answer the coinage. Bid my lieutenant Peto meet me at the town's end.

Bard. I will, captain: farewell. [Exit.]

Fal. If I be not ashamed of my soldiers, I am a soused gurnet.⁸ I have misused the king's press damnably. I have got, in exchange of a hundred and fifty soldiers, three hundred and odd pounds. I press me none but good householders, yeomen's sons: inquire me out contracted bachelors, such as had been asked twice on the bans; such a commodities of an elliptical construction are not avoided by it. Malone's notion, that a line had been omitted, has not any concurrence. Nor do I think with Mr. Douce, that by estridges, estrige-falcons are here meant, though the word may be used in that sense in Antony and Cleopatra. The ostridge's plumage would be more likely to occur to the poet, from the circumstance of its being the cognizance of the prince of Wales. So in Drayton's Polyolbion, Song 22:—

'Prince Edward all in gold, as he great Jove had been,
The Mountford's all in plumes like estridges were seen.'

Bating, or to bate, in falconry, is the unquiet fluttering of a hawk. To beat the wing, batter Pale, Ital. All birds bate, i. e. flutter, beat, or flap their wings to dry their feathers after bathing; and the mode in which the ostrich uses its wings, to assist itself in running with the wind, is of this character; it is a fluttering or a flapping, not a flight. The fluttering motion and flapping of the plumed crests of the prince and his associates naturally excited these images. Bated refers both to the flapping of the plumes, and of the wings of the ostrich; the plumage of that bird is displayed to more advantage when its wings are in motion, than when at rest; and hence the propriety of representing the feathers of the helmets flouting the air to the plumage of the ostrich when its wings were in motion, or when it 'bated the air, like eagles lately bathed.'

6 The bearer of a helmet was a moveable piece, which lifted up or down to enable the wearer to drink or take breath more freely. It is frequently, though improperly, used to express the helmet itself.

7 Armour for the thighs.

8 The quartos of 1598 and 1599 read tasse.

9 The gurnet, or gurnard, was a fish of the piper kind. It was probably deemed a vulgar dish when soused or pickled, hence soused gurnet was a common term of reproach.

dity of warm slaves, as had as lief hear the devil as a drum; such as fear the report of a caliver,¹ worse than a struck fowl, or a hurt wild-duck. I pressed me none but such toasts and butter,² with hearts in their bellies no bigger than pins' heads, and they have bought out their services; and now my whole charge consists of ancients, corporals, lieutenants, gentlemen of companies, slaves as ragged as Lazarus in the painted cloth, where the glutton's dogs licked his sores: and such as, indeed, were never soldiers; but discarded unjust serving-men, younger sons to younger brothers, revolted tapsters, and ostlers trade-fallen; the cankers of a calm world, and a long peace; ten times more dishonourable ragged than an old faced ancient:³ and such have I, to fill up the rooms of them that have bought out their services, that you would think, that I had a hundred and fifty tattered prodigals, lately come from swine keeping, from eating draff and husks. A mad-fellow met me on the way, and told me, I had unloaded all the gibbets, and pressed the dead bodies. No eye hath seen such scare-crows. I'll not march through Coventry with them, that's flat:—Nay, and the villainous march wide betwixt the legs, as if they had gives⁴ on; for indeed, I had the most of them out of prison. There's but a shirt and a half in all my company: and the half-shirt is two napkins, tacked together, and thrown over the shoulders like a herald's coat without sleeves; and the shirt, to say the truth, stolen from my host at Saint Albans, or the red-noose inn-keeper of Daintry.⁵ But that's all one; they'll find linen enough on every hedge.

Enter PRINCE HENRY and WESTMORELAND.

P. Hen. How now, blown Jack? how now, quilt?

Fal. What, Hal? Ifow now, mad wag? what a devil dost thou in Warwickshire?—My good lord of Westmoreland, I cry you mercy; I thought, your honour had already been at Shrewsbury.

West. Faith, Sir John, 'tis more than time that I were there, and you too; but my powers are there already: The king, I can tell you, looks for us all: we must away all night.

Fal. Tut, never fear me; I am as vigilant as a cat to steal cream.

P. Hen. I think, to steal cream indeed; for thy theft hath already made thee butter. But tell me, Jack; Whose fellows are these that come after?

Fal. Mine, Hal, mine.

P. Hen. I did never see such pitiful rascals.

Fal. Tut, tut; good enough to toss; food for powder, food for powder; they'll fill a pit, as well as better: tush, man, mortal men, mortal men.

West. Ay, but, Sir John, methinks they are exceeding poor and bare; too beggarly.

Fal. Faith, for their poverty,—I know not where they had that: and for their bareness,—I am sure, they never learned that of me.

P. Hen. No, I'll be sworn; unless you call three fingers on the ribs, bare. But, sirrah, make haste; Percy is already in the field.

Fal. What, is the king encamped?

West. He is, Sir John; I fear, we shall stay too long.

Fal. Well,

To the latter end of a fray, and the beginning of a feast,

Fits a dull fighter, and a keen guest. [Exeunt.

1 A gun.

2 Londoners, and all within the sound of Bow bell, are in reproach called cockneys, and eaters of buttered toasts.—Moryson's Itin. 1617.

3 An old faced ancient is an old patched standard. To face a garment was to line or trim it. Thus in the present play:—

'To face the garment of rebellion

With some fine colour.'

4 Fatters.

5 Davenry.

6 The old copies read 'that this day lives'; but the words, as Mason observes, weaken the sense and destroy the measure.

SCENE III. The Rebel Camp near Shrewsbury.

Enter HOTSUR, WORCESTER, DOUGLAS, and VERNON.

Hot. We'll fight with him to-night.

Wor. It may not be.

Doug. You give him then advantage.

Ver. Not a whit.

Hot. Why say you so? looks he not for supply?

Ver. So do we.

Hot. His is certain, ours is doubtful.

Wor. Good cousin, be advis'd; stir not to-night.

Ver. Do not, my lord.

Doug.

You do not counsel well;

You speak it out of fear, and cold heart.

Ver. Do me no slander, Douglas: by my life

(And I dare well maintain it with my life,)

If well-respected honour bid me on,

I hold as little counsel with weak fear,

As you, my lord, or any Scot that lives:—

Let it be seen to-morrow in the battle,

Which of us fears.

Doug.

Yea, or to-night.

Ver.

Content.

Hot. To-night, say I.

Ver.

Come, come, it may not be.

I wonder much, being men of such great leading,⁷

That you foresee not what impediments

Drag back our expedition: Certain horse

Of my cousin Vernon's are not yet come up:

Your uncle Worcester's horse came but to-day;

And now their pride and mettle is asleep,

Their courage with hard labour tame and dull,

That not a horse is half the half of himself.

Hot. So are the horses of the enemy

In general, journey-bated, and brought low;

The better part of ours is full of rest.

Wor. The number of the king exceedeth ours:

For God's sake, cousin, stay till all come in.

[The trumpet sounds a parley.

Enter SIR WALTER BLUNT.

Blunt. I come with gracious offers from the king, If you vouchsafe me hearing, and respect.

Hot. Welcome, Sir Walter Blunt; And 'would to God, to God,

You were of our determination!

Some of us love you well: and even those some

Envy your great deserving, and good name;

Because you are not of our quality,⁸

But stand against us like an enemy.

Blunt. And God defend, but still I should stand so,

So long as, out of limit, and true rule,

You stand against anointed majesty!

But, to my charge.—The king hath sent to know

The nature of your griefs;⁹ and whereupon

You conjure from the breast of civil peace

Such bold hostility, teaching his duteous land

Audacious cruelty: If that the king

Have any way your good deserts forgot,—

Which he confesseth to be manifold,—

He bids you name your griefs; and, with all speed,

You shall have your desires, with interest;

And pardon absolute for yourself, and these,

Herein misled by your suggestion.

Hot. The king is kind; and, well we know, the king

Knows at what time to promise, when to pay.

My father, and my uncle, and myself,

Did give him that same royalty he wears:

And,—when he was not six and twenty strong,

Sick in the world's regard, wretched and low,

A poor unbidden outlaw sneaking home,

My father gave him welcome to the shore:

And,—when he heard him swear, and vow to God,

7 Leading is experience in the conduct of armies. The old copies have 'such leading as you are'; but the superfluous words serve only to destroy the metre.

8 Quality, in its general sense, anciently signified profession, occupation. Shakspeare here gives it metaphorically for one of the same fraternity or fellowship.

9 Grievances.

He came but to be duke of Lancaster,
To sue his livery,¹ and beg his peace;
With tears of innocency, and terms of zeal,—
My father, in kind heart and pity mov'd,
Swore him assistance, and perform'd it too.
Now, when the lords, and barons of the realm
Perceiv'd Northumberland did lean to him,
The more and less² came in with cap and knee;
Met him in boroughs, cities, villages;
Attended him on bridges, stood in lanes,
Laid gifts before him, proffer'd him their oaths,
Gave him their heirs as pages; follow'd him,
Even at the heels, in golden multitudes.
He presently,—as greatness knows itself,—
Steps me a little higher than his vow
Made to my father, while his blood was poor,
Upon the naked shore at Ravenspur:³
And now, forsooth, takes on him to reform
Some certain edicts, and some strait decrees,
That lie too heavy on the commonwealth:
Cries out upon abuses, seems to weep
Over his country's wrongs; and, by this face,
'This seeming brow of justice, did he win
The hearts of all that he did angle for,
Proceeded further; cut me off the heads
Of all the favourites, that the absent king
In deputation left behind him here,
When he was personal in the Irish war.

Blunt. Tut, I came not to hear this.

Hot. Then, to the point.—

In short time, after, he depos'd the king;
Soon after that, depriv'd him of his life;
And, in the neck of that,⁴ task'd the whole state:
'To make that worse, suffer'd his kinsman March (Who is, if every owner were well plac'd, Indeed his king) to be engag'd⁵ in Wales,
There without ransom to lie forfeited:
Disgrac'd me in my happy victories;
Sought to entrap me by intelligence;
Rated my uncle from the council-board;
In rage dismiss'd my father from the court;
Broke oath on oath, committed wrong on wrong;
And, in conclusion, drove us to seek out
This head of safety; and, withal, to pry
Into his title, the which we find
'Too indirect for long continuance.

Blunt. Shall I return this answer to the king?

Hot. Not so, Sir Walter; we'll withdraw awhile.
Go to the king; and let there be impawn'd
Some surety for a safe return again,
And in the morning early shall mine uncle
Bring him our purposes: and so farewell.

Blunt. I would, you would accept of grace and love.

Hot. And, may be, so we shall.

Blunt. 'Pray heaven, you do!
[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. A Room in the Archbishop's House.
Enter the Archbishop of York, and a Gentleman.

Arch. Hie, good Sir Michael; bear this sealed brief,

With winged haste, to the lord marshal;⁷
This to my cousin Scroop; and all the rest
To whom they are directed: if you know
How much they do import, you would make haste.

Gent. My good lord,
I guess their tenor.

Arch. Like enough, you do.

To-morrow, good Sir Michael, is a day,
Wherein the fortune of ten thousand men
Must 'bide the touch: For, sir, at Shrewsbury,
As I am truly given to understand,
The king, with mighty and quick-raised power,
Meets with Lord Harry: and I fear, Sir Michael,—
What with the sickness of Northumberland
(Whose power was in the first proportion),
And what with Owen Glendower's absence thence,
(Who with them was a rated sinew too,⁸
And comes not in, o'er-ruled by prophecies),—
I fear, the power of Percy is too weak
To wage an instant trial with the king.

Gent. Why, good my lord, you need not fear there's Douglas,

And Lord Mortimer.

Arch. No, Mortimer's not there.

Gent. But there is Mordake, Vernon, Lord Harry Percy,

And there's my lord of Worcester; and a head
Of gallant warriors, noble gentlemen.

Arch. And so there is: but yet the king hath drawn

The special head of all the land together:—
The prince of Wales, Lord John of Lancaster,
The noble Westmoreland, and warlike Blunt;
And many more co-rivals, and dear men
Of estimation and command in arms.

Gent. Doubt not, my lord, they shall be well oppos'd.

Arch. I hope no less, yet needful 'tis to fear;
And, to prevent the worst, Sir Michael, speed:
For, if Lord Percy thrive not, ere the king
Dismiss his power, he means to visit us,—
For he hath heard of our confederacy.—
And 'tis but wisdom to make strong against him;
Therefore, make haste: I must go write again
To other friends; and so farewell, Sir Michael.

[Exeunt severally.]

ACT V.

SCENE I. The King's Camp near Shrewsbury.

Enter KING HENRY, PRINCE HENRY, PRINCE JOHN of Lancaster, SIR WALTER BLUNT, and SIR JOHN FALSTAFF.

K. Hen. How bloodily the sun begins to peer Above yon busky⁹ hill! the day looks pale
At his distemperature.

P. Hen. The southern wind
Doth play the trumpet to his purposes:
And, by his hollow whistling in the leaves,
Foretells a tempest, and a blustering day.

K. Hen. Then with the losers let it sympathize;
For nothing can seem foul to those that win.—

Trumpet. Enter WORCESTER and VERNON.

How now, my lord of Worcester? 'tis not well,
That you and I should meet upon such terms.
As now we meet: You have deceiv'd our trust;
And made us doff our easy robes of peace,
To crush our old limbs¹⁰ in ungentle steel;

1 That is, to sue out the delivery or possession of his lands. This law term has been already explained in King Richard II. Act II. Sc. 1.

2 The greater and the less.

3 The whole of this speech alludes to passages in King Richard II.

4 So in Painter's Palace of Pleasure: 'Great mischiefs succeeding one in another's necke.' Task'd is here used for taxed: it was common to use these words indiscriminately, says Steevens. Taxes were tributes or subsidies, and should not be confounded with taxes, which are carefully distinguished by Baret. He interprets 'telonum, the place where tasks or tributes are paid.' Phillips, in his World of Words, says, 'Task is an old British word, signifying tribute, from whence haply cometh our word task, which is a duty or labour imposed upon any one.'

5 The old copies read engag'd, which Theobald altered to incag'd, without reason: to be engaged is to be pledged as an hostage.

6 A brief is any short writing, as a letter, &c.

7 Thomas Lord Mowbray.

8 A strength on which we reckoned, a help of which we made account.

9 'I do not know (says Mr. Blakeway) whether Shakespeare ever surveyed the ground of Battlefield, but he has described the sun's rising over Haughmound Hill from that spot as accurately as if he had. It still merits the name of a busky hill.' Milton writes the word, perhaps more properly, bosky, it is from the French bois-cageux, woody.

10 Shakespeare forgot that he was not at this time old, it was only four-years since the deposition of King Richard.

This is not well, my lord, this is not well.
 What say you to't? will you again unknot
 This churlish knot of all-abhorred war?
 And move in that obedient orb again,
 Where you did give a fair and natural light;
 And be no more an exhal'd meteor,
 A prodigy of fear, and a portent
 Of broached mischief to the unborn times?

Wor. Hear me, my liege;
 For mine own part, I could be well content
 To entertain the lag-end of my life
 With quiet hours; for, I do protest,
 I have not sought the day of this dislike.

K. Hen. You have not sought for it! how comes it then?

Fal. Rebellion lay in his way, and he found it.

P. Hen. Peace, chewet,¹ peace.

Wor. It pleas'd your majesty, to turn your looks
 Of favour, from myself, and all our house;
 And yet I must remember you, my lord,
 We were the first and dearest of your friends.
 For you, my staff of office did I break
 In Richard's time; and posted day and night
 To meet you on the way, and kiss your hand,
 When yet you were in place and in account
 Nothing so strong and fortunate as I.
 It was myself, my brother, and his son,
 That brought you home, and boldly did outdare
 The dangers of the time: You swore to us,—
 And you did swear that oath at Doncaster,—
 That you did nothing purpose 'gainst the state;
 Nor claim no further than your new-fall'n right,
 The seat of Gaunt, dukedom of Lancaster:
 To this we swore our aid. But, in short space,
 It rain'd down fortune showering on your head;
 And such a flood of greatness fell on you,—
 What with our help: what with the absent king!
 What with the injuries of a wanton time;
 The seeming sufferances that you had borne;
 And the contrarious winds, that held the king
 So long in his unlucky Irish wars,
 That all in England did repute him dead,—
 And, from this swarm of fair advantages,
 You took occasion to be quickly woo'd
 To gripe the general sway into your hand:
 Forgot your oath to us at Doncaster;
 And, being fed by us, what with us so
 As that ungentele gull, the cuckoo's bird,²
 Useth the sparrow: did oppress our nest;
 Grew by our feeding to so great a bulk,
 That even our love durst not come near your sight,
 For fear of swallowing; but with nimble wing
 We were enforc'd, for safety sake, to fly
 Out of your sight, and raise this present head:
 Whereby we stand oppos'd³ by such means
 As you yourself have forg'd against yourself;
 By unkind usage, dangerous countenance,
 And violation of all faith and troth
 Sworn to us in your younger enterprise.

K. Hen. These things, indeed, you have articulated,⁴ Proclaim'd at market-crosses, read in churches;
 To face the garment of rebellion
 With some fine colour, that may please the eye
 Of fickle changelings, and poor discontents,
 Which gape, and rub the elbow, at the news
 Of hurlyburly innovation:
 And never yet did insurrection want

Such water colours, to impaint his cause;
 Nor moody beggars, starving⁵ for a time
 Of pell-mell havoc and confusion.

P. Hen. In both our armies, there is many a soul
 Shall pay full dearly for this encounter,
 If once they join in trial. Tell your nephew,
 The Prince of Wales doth join with all the world
 In praise of Henry Percy: By my hopes,—
 This present enterprise set off his head,⁶
 I do not think, a braver gentleman,
 More active-valiant, or more valiant-young,
 More daring, or more bold, is now alive,
 To grace this latter age with noble deeds.
 For my part, I may speak it to my shame,
 I have a truant been to chivalry;
 And so, I hear, he doth account me too:
 Yet this before my father's majesty,—
 I am content, that he shall take the odds
 Of his great name and estimation;
 And will, to save the blood on either side,
 Try fortune with him in a single fight.

K. Hen. And, prince of Wales, so dare we venture thee,

Albeit, considerations infinite
 Do make against it:—No, good Worcester, no.⁷
 We love our people well: even those we love,
 That are misled upon your cousin's part:
 And, will they take the offer of our grace,
 Both he, and they, and you, yea, every man
 Shall be my friend again, and I'll be his:
 So tell your cousin, and bring me word
 What he will do:—But if he will not yield,
 Rebuke and dread correction wait on us,
 And they shall do their office. So, be gone;
 We will not now be troubled with reply:
 We offer fair, take it advisedly.

[Exeunt WORCESTER and VERNON.]

P. Hen. It will not be accepted, on my life
 The Douglas and the Hotspur both together
 Are confident against the world in arms.

K. Hen. Hence, therefore, every leader to his charge;

For, on their answer, will we set on them:
 And God befriend us, as our cause is just!

[Exeunt KING, BLUNT, and PRINCE JOHN.]

Fal. Hal, if thou see me down in the battle, and bestride me,⁸ so; 'tis a point of friendship.

P. Hen. Nothing but a colossus can do thee that friendship. Say thy prayers, and farewell.

Fal. I would it were bed-time, Hal, and all well.

P. Hen. Why, thou owest God a death. [Exit.]

Fal. 'Tis not due yet; I would be loath to pay him before his day. What need I be so forward with him that calls not on me? Well, 'tis no matter; Honour pricks me on. Yea, but how if honour prick me off when I come on? how then? Can honour set to a leg? No. Or an arm? No. Or take away the grief of a wound? No. Honour hath no skill in surgery then? No. What is honour? A word. What is in that word, honour? What is that honour? Air. A trim reckoning!—Who hath it?
 He that died o' Wednesday. Doth he feel it? No.
 Doth he hear it? No. Is it insensible then? Yea, to the dead. But will it not live with the living?
 No. Why? Detraction will not suffer it:—therefore I'll none of it: Honour is a mere scutcheon, and so ends my catechism. [Exit.]

1 A chewet was (as Theobald justly observes) a noisy chattering bird, a pie or jackdaw; called also in French chouette. This simple and satisfactory explanation would not do for Steevens and Malone, who fiding that chewets were also little round pies made of minced meat, thought that the prince complained Falstaff, for his unseasonable chattering, to a minced pie! The word is a diminutive of chough, pronounced chouh, from the Saxon ceo. Graculus Monedula. Belon, in his History of Birds, describes the chouette as the smallest kind of chough or crow, and this will account for the diminutive termination of its name.

2 'The Titling, therefore, that sitteth, being thus deceived, hatcheth the egge, and bringeth up the chick' of another bird:—and this she doth so long, untill the young cuckoo being once fledged and ready to flie abroad, is so bold as to seize upon the old titling, and eat up her that hatched her.'—Pliny's Nat. Hist. by Holland, b. x. ch. 9.

3 i. e. we stand in opposition to you.

4 The quartos read articulate. To articulate is to set down in articles.

5 i. e. anxiously expecting a time.

6 That is, taken from his account

7 Mason suggests that we should read 'know good Worcester, know, &c.'

8 In the battle of Agincourt, Henry, when king, did this act of friendship for his brother the duke of Gloucester.

SCENE II. The Rebel Camp. Enter WORCESTER and VERNON.

Wor. O, no, my nephew must not know, Sir Richard,

The liberal kind offer of the king.

Ver. 'Twere best, he did.

Wor. Then we are all undone.

It is not possible, it cannot be,
The king should keep his word in loving us;
He will suspect us still, and find a time
To punish this offence in other faults:
Suspicion all our lives shall be stuck full of eyes:
For treason is but trusted like the fox;
Who, ne'er so tame, so cherish'd, and lock'd up,
Will have a wild trick of his ancestors.
Look how we can, or sad, or merrily,
Interpretation will misquote our looks;
And we shall feed like oxen at a stall,
The better cherish'd, still the nearer death.
My nephew's trespass may be well forgot.
It hath the excuse of youth, and heat of blood;
And an adopted name of privilege.—
A hare-brain'd Hotspur, govern'd by a spleen:
All his offences live upon my head,
And on his father's;—we did train him on;
And, his corruption being ta'en from us,
We, as the spring of all, shall pay for all.
Therefore, good cousin, let not Harry know,
In any case, the offer of the king.

Ver. Deliver what you will, I'll say, 'tis so.
Here comes your cousin.

Enter HOTSPUR and DOUGLAS; and Officers and Soldiers, behind.

Hot. My uncle is return'd:—Deliver up
My lord of Westmoreland.—Uncle, what news?

Wor. The king will bid you battle presently.

Doug. Defy him by the lord of Westmoreland.

Hot. Lord Douglas, go you and tell him so.

Doug. Marry, and shall, and very willingly. [Exit.]

Wor. There is no seeming mercy in the king.

Hot. Did you beg any? God forbid!

Wor. I told him gently of our grievances,
Of his oath-breaking; which he mended thus,—
By now forswearing that he is forsworn:
He calls us rebels, traitors; and will scourge
With haughty arms this hateful name in us.

Re-enter DOUGLAS.

Doug. Arm, gentlemen; to arms! for I have thrown

A brave defiance in King Henry's teeth,
And Westmoreland, that was engag'd, did bear it;
Which cannot choose but bring him quickly on.

Wor. The prince of Wales stepp'd forth before the king,

And, nephew, challeng'd you to single fight.

Hot. O, 'would the quarrel lay upon our heads;
And that no man might draw short breath to-day,
But I, and Harry Monmouth! Tell me, tell me,
How show'd his tasking? seem'd it in contempt?

Ver. No, by my soul; I never in my life
Did hear a challenge urg'd more modestly,
Unless a brother should a brother dare
To gentle exercise and proof of arms.
He gave you all the duties of a man;
Trim'd up your praises with a princely tongue;
Spoke your deservings like a chronicle;
Making you ever better than his praise,
By still dispraising praise, valued with you:
And, which became him like a prince indeed,

1 Westmoreland was impawned as a surety for the safe return of Worcester. See Act iv. Sc. 3.

2 Tasking as well as lasing was used for reproof. We still say 'he took him to task.'

3 I. e. 'mention of himself.' To cite is to quote, allege, or mention any passage or incident. The mistakes of Pope and others have induced me to give an explanation of this word, which I should otherwise have thought sufficiently intelligible.

4 That is, was master of.

5 Own.

6 So wild at liberty may mean so wild and licentious, or loose in his conduct. Johnson misunderstood and

He made a blushing citi¹ of himself;
And chid his truant youth with such a grace,
As if he master'd⁴ there a double spirit,
Of teaching, and of learning, instantly.
There did he pause: But let me tell the world,—
If he outlive the envy of this day,
England did never owe⁵ so sweet a hope,
So much misconstrued in his wantonness.

Hot. Cousin, I think thou art enamoured
Upon his follies; never did I hear
Of any prince, so wild at liberty:⁶
But, be he as he will, yet once ere night
I will embrace him with a soldier's arm,
That he shall shrink under my courtesy.—
Arm, arm, with speed:—And, fellows, soldiers,
friends,

Better consider what you have to do,
Than I, that have not well the gift of tongue,
Can lift your blood up with persuasion.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, here are letters for you.

Hot. I cannot read them now.—

O gentlemen, the time of life is short;
To spend that shortness basely, were too long,
If life did ride upon a dial's point,
Still ending at the arrival of an hour.
An if we live, we live to tread on kings;
If die, brave death, when princes die with us
Now for our consciences,—the arms are fair,
When the intent of bearing them is just.

Enter another Messenger.

Mess. My lord, prepare: the king comes on apace.

Hot. I thank him, that he cuts me from my tale,
For I profess not talking; Only this—
Let each man do his best: and here draw I
A sword, whose temper I intend to stain
With the best blood that I can meet withal
In the adventure of this perilous day.
Now,—Esperance!—Percy!—and set on.—
Sound all the lofty instruments of war,
And by that music let us all embrace:
For, heaven to earth, some of us never shall
A second time do such a courtesy.

[The Trumpets sound. They embrace, and exeunt.]

SCENE III. Plain near Shrewsbury. Excursions, and Parties fighting. Alarm to the Battle. Then enter DOUGLAS and BLUNT, meeting.

Blunt. What is thy name, that in the battle thus Thou crossest me? what honour dost thou seek Upon my head?

Doug. Know then, my name is Douglas;
And I do haunt thee in the battle thus,
Because some tell me that thou art a king.

Blunt. They tell thee true.

Doug. The lord of Stafford dear to-day hath bought Thy likeness: for, instead of thee, King Harry,
This sword hath ended him: so shall it thee,
Unless thou yield thee as my prisoner.

Blunt. I was not born a yielder, thou proud Scot;
And thou shalt find a king that will revenge
Lord Stafford's death.

[They fight, and BLUNT is slain.]

Enter HOTSPUR.

Hot. O Douglas, hadst thou fought at Holmedon
thus,
I never had triumph'd upon a Scot.

Doug. All's done, all's won; here breathless lies the king.

Hot. Where?

wrong pointed this passage. The quarto copies most of them read 'so wild a libertie.' Steevens suggests that perhaps the author wrote 'so wild a libertine;' to which reading I very much incline.

7 Esperance, or Esperanza, has always been the motto of the Percy family. Shakspeare uses esperance as a word of four syllables, the e final having the same power as in French verse.

8 The folio reads:—

'I was not born to yield thou haughty Scot.'

Doug. Here.

Hot. This, Douglas? no, I know this face full well: A gallant knight he was, his name was Blunt; Schemably¹ furnish'd like the king himself.

Doug. A fool go with thy soul, whither² it goes! A borrow'd title hast thou bought too dear. Why didst thou tell me that thou wert a king?

Hot. The king hath many marching in his coats.

Doug. Now, by my sword, I will kill all his coats. I'll murder all his wardrobe, piece by piece, Until I meet the king.

Hot. Up, and away; Our soldiers stand full fairly for the day. [Exeunt.]

Other Alarums. Enter FALSTAFF.

Fal. Though I could 'scape shot-free at London, I fear the shot here; here's no scoring, but upon the pate.—Soft! who art thou? Sir Walter Blunt;—there's honour for you: Here's no vanity!³—I am as hot as molten lead, and as heavy too: God keep lead out of me! I need no more weight than mine own bowels.—I have led my raggamuffins where they are peppered: there's but three of my hundred and fifty left alive; and they are for the town's end, to beg during life. But who comes here!

Enter PRINCE HENRY.

P. Hen. What, stand'st thou idle here? lend me thy sword:

Many a nobleman lies stark and stiff Under the hoofs of vaunting enemies, Whose deaths are unreveng'd: Pr'ythee, lend me thy sword.

Fal. O Hal, I pr'ythee give me leave to breathe a while.—Turk Gregory⁴ never did such deeds in arms, as I have done this day. I have paid Percy, I have made him sure.

P. Hen. He is, indeed; and living to kill thee. I pr'ythee, lend me thy sword.

Fal. Nay, before God, Hal, if Percy be alive, thou get'st not my sword; but take my pistol, if thou wilt.

P. Hen. Give it me: What, is it in the case?

Fal. Ay, Hal: 'tis hot, 'tis hot; there's that will sack a city. [The Prince draws out a bottle of sack.]

P. Hen. What, is't a time to jest and dally now?

[Throws it at him, and exits.]

Fal. Well, if Percy be alive, I'll pierce him.⁵ If he do come in my way, so: if he do not, if I come in his, willingly, let him make a carbonado⁶ of me. I like not such grinning honour as Sir Walter hath: Give me life: which if I can save, so; if not, honour comes unlooked for, and there's an end. [Exit.]

SCENE IV. Another Part of the Field. Alarums:

Excursions. Enter the KING, PRINCE HENRY, PRINCE JOHN, and WESTMORELAND.

K. Hen. I pr'ythee, Harry, withdraw thyself; thou bleed'st too much:⁷—Lord John of Lancaster, go you with him.

P. John. Not I, my lord, unless I did bleed too.

P. Hen. I beseech your majesty, make up, Lest your retirement do amaze your friends.

K. Hen. I will do so:

My lord of Westmoreland, lead him to his tent.

West. Come, my lord, I'll lead you to your tent.

P. Hen. Lead me, my lord? I do not need your help:

¹ That is in seeming or outward appearance.

² Whither for whithersoever. Thus Baret, 'Whither, or to what place you will. Quovis.' Any-whither also signified to any place. In the last scene of the second act, Hotspur says to his wife:—

³ 'Whither I go, thither shak thou go too.'

⁴ 'Here's no vanity,' the negative is here used ironically, to designate the excess of a thing.

⁵ 'Turk Gregory' means Gregory the Seventh, called Hildebrand. This furious friar surmounted almost invincible obstacles to deprive the emperor of his right of investiture of bishops, which his predecessors had long attempted in vain. Fox, in his Martyrology, has made Gregory so odious that the Protestants would be well pleased to hear him thus characterized, as uniting the attributes of their two great enemies, the Turk and the Pope, in one. There was an old tragedy on the

And heaven forbid, a shallow scratch should drive The prince of Wales from such a field as this; Where stain'd nobility lies trodden on; And rebels' arms triumph in massacres!

P. John. We breathe too long:—Come, cousin Westmoreland,

Our duty this way lies; for God's sake, come.

[Exeunt P. JOHN and WESTMORELAND.]

P. Hen. By heaven, thou hast deceiv'd me, Lancaster,

I did not think thee lord of such a spirit;

Before, I lov'd thee as a brother, John;

But now, I do respect thee as my soul.

K. Hen. I saw him hold Lord Percy at the point, With lustier maintenance than I did look for Of such an ungrown warrior.⁸

P. Hen. O, this boy

Lends mettle to us all! [Exit.]

Alarums. Enter DOUGLAS.

Doug. Another king! they grow like Hydra's heads;

I am the Douglas, fatal to all those

That wear those colours on them.—What art thou, That counterfeits⁹ the person of a king?

K. Hen. The king himself; who, Douglas, grieves at heart,

So many of his shadows thou hast met,

And not the very king. I have two boys,

Seek Percy, and thyself, about the field:

But, seeing thou fall'st on me so luckily,

I will assay thee; so defend thyself.

Doug. I fear, thou art another counterfeit;

And yet, in faith, thou bear'st thee like a king:

But mine, I am sure, thou art, whoever thou be,

And thus I win thee.

[They fight; the King being in danger, enter PRINCE HENRY.]

P. Hen. Hold up thy head, vile Scot, or thou art like

Never to hold it up again! the spirits

Of valiant Shirley, Stafford, Blunt, are in my arms:

It is the prince of Wales, that threatens thee;

Who never promiseth, but he means to pay.—

[They fight; DOUGLAS flies]

Cheerly, my lord: How fares your grace?

Sir Nicholas Gawsey hath for succour sent,

And so hath Clifton: I'll to Clifton straight.

K. Hen. Stay, and breathe a while:—

Thou hast redeem'd thy lost opinion;⁹

And show'd thou mak'st some tender of my life,

In this fair rescue thou hast brought to me.

P. Hen. O heaven! they did me too much injury,

That ever said, I hearken'd for your death:

If it were so, I might have let alone

The insulting hand of Douglas over you;

Which would have been as speedy in your end,

As all the poisonous potions in the world,

And sav'd the treacherous labour of your son.

K. Hen. Make up to Clifton, I'll to Sir Nicholas

Gawsey. [Exit KING HENRY.]

Enter HOTSPUR.

Hot. If I mistake not, thou art Harry Monmouth.

P. Hen. Thou speak'st as if I would deny my name.

subject of Hildebrand, but not even the title of it has come down to us.

⁵ 'Well, if Percy be alive, I'll pierce him,' is addressed to the prince as he goes out; the rest of the speech is a soliloquy. Shakspeare was not aware that he ridiculed the serious etymology of the Scottish historian:—'Piercy a penetrando oculum Regis Scotorum ut fabulator Boetius.'—Skinner.

⁶ A rasher or collop of meat cut crosswise for the gridiron.

⁷ History says that the prince was wounded in the face by an arrow.

⁸—the earle of Richmond withstood his violence, and kept him at the sword's point, without advantage, longer than his companions either thought or judged.—Holinshed, p. 759.

⁹ Opinion for estimation, reputation, the opinion of the world. The word was then used in that sense.

Hot. My name is Harry Percy.

P. Hen. Why, then I see

A very valiant rebel of the name.

I am the prince of Wales; and think not, Percy,
To share with me in glory any more:

Two stars keep not their motion in one sphere;
Nor can one England brook a double reign,
Of Harry Percy, and the prince of Wales.

Hot. Nor shall it, Harry, for the hour is come
To end the one of us; And 'would to God,
Thy name in arms were now as great as mine!

P. Hen. I'll make it greater, ere I part from thee;
And all the budding honours on thy crest
I'll crop, to make a garland for my head.

Hot. I can no longer brook thy vanities.

[They fight.]

Enter FALSTAFF.

Fal. Well said, Hal! to it, Hal!—Nay, you shall find no boy's play here, I can tell you.

*Enter DOUGLAS; he fights with FALSTAFF, who falls down as if he were dead, and exit DOUGLAS.
HOTSPUR is wounded, and falls.*

Hot. O, Harry, thou hast robb'd me of my youth:
I better brook the loss of brittle life,
Than those proud titles thou hast won of me;
They wound my thoughts, worse than thy sword
my flesh:—

But thought's the slave of life, and life time's fool;
And time, that takes survey of all the world,
Must have a stop.² O, I could prophesy,
But that the earthy and cold hand of death
Lies on my tongue:—No, Percy, thou art dust,
And food for—

[Dies.]

P. Hen. For worms, brave Percy: Fare thee well, great heart!—

Ill-weav'd ambition, how much art thou shrunk!
When that this body did contain a spirit,
A kingdom for it was too small a bound;³
But now, two paces of the vilest earth
Is room enough:—This earth, that bears thee dead,
Bears not alive so stout a gentleman.
If thou wert sensible of courtesy,
I should not make so dear a show of zeal:—
But let my favours⁴ hide thy mangled face;
And, even in thy behalf, I'll thank myself
For doing these fair rites of tenderness.
Adieu, and take thy praise with thee to heaven!
Thy ignomy⁵ sleep with thee in the grave,
But not remember'd in thy epitaph!—

[He sees FALSTAFF on the ground.]

What! old acquaintance! could not all this flesh
Keep in a little life? Poor Jack, farewell!
I could have better spar'd a better man.
O, I should have a heavy miss of thee,
If I were much in love with vanity.
Death hath not struck so fat a deer to-day,
Though many dearer, in this bloody fray:—
Embowell'd⁶ will I see thee by and by;
Till then, in blood by noble Percy lie.

[Exit.]

Fal. [Rising slowly.] Embowell'd! if thou em-bowel me to-day, I'll give you leave to powder⁷ me, and eat me too, to-morrow. 'Sblood, 'twas time to counterfeit, or that hot termagant Scot had paid me scot and lot too. Counterfeit? I lie, I am no counterfeit: To die, is to be a counterfeit; for he is but the counterfeit of a man who hath not the life of a man: but to counterfeit dying, when a man thereby liveth, is to be no counterfeit, but the true and perfect image of life indeed. The better

1 Shakespeare had no authority for making Hotspur fall by the hand of the prince. Holinshed says, 'The king slew that day with his own hand six and thirty persons of his enemies. The other of his party, encouraged by his doings, fought valiantly, and slew the Lord Percy, called Henry Hotspur.' Speed says that Percy was killed by an unknown hand.

2 Hotspur, in his last moments endeavours to console himself. The glory of the prince wounds his thoughts, but thought, being dependent on life, must cease with it, and will soon be at an end. Life, on which thought depends, is itself of no great value, being the fool and sport of time; of time which, with all its dominion over part of valour is—discretion; in the which better part, I have saved my life. 'Zounds, I am afraid of this gunpowder Percy, though he be dead:

How, if he should counterfeit too, and rise? I am afraid, he would prove the better counterfeit. Therefore I'll make him sure: yea, and I'll swear I killed him. Why may not he rise as well as I? Nothing confutes me but eyes, and nobody sees me. Therefore, sirrah [stabbing him.] with a new wound in your thigh, come you along with me.

[Takes HOTSPUR on his back.]

Re-enter PRINCE HENRY and PRINCE JOHN.

P. Hen. Come, brother John, full bravely hast thou flesh'd

Thy maiden sword.

P. John. But, soft! whom have we here?
Did you not tell me, this fat man was dead?

P. Hen. I did; I saw him dead, breathless and bleeding

On the ground.—

Art thou alive? or is it phantasy
That plays upon our eyesight? I pry thee, speak;
We will not trust our eyes, without our ears:—
Thou art not what thou seem'st.

Fal. No, that's certain; I am not a doubtful man:
but if I be not Jack Falstaff, then am I a Jack.
There is Percy [throwing the body down.]: if your father will do me any honour, so; if not, let him kill the next Percy himself. I look to be either earl or duke, I can assure you.

P. Hen. Why, Percy I killed myself, and saw thee dead.

Fal. Didst thou?—Lord, lord, how this world is given to lying!—I grant you, I was down, and out of breath; and so was he: but we rose both in an instant, and fought a long hour by Shrewsbury clock. If I may be believed, so; if not, let them, that should reward valour, bear the sin upon their own heads. I'll take it upon my death, I gave him this wound in the thigh: if the man were alive, and would deny it, I would make him eat a piece of my sword.

P. John. This is the strangest tale that e'er I heard.

P. Hen. This is the strangest fellow, brother John.—

Come, bring your luggage nobly on your back:

For my part, if a lie may do thee grace,
I'll gild it with the happiest terms I have.

[A Retreat is sounded.]

The trumpet sounds retreat, the day is ours.

Come, brother, let's to the highest of the field,

To see what friends are living, who are dead.

[Exeunt P. HEN. and P. JOHN.]

Fal. I'll follow, as they say, for reward. He that rewards me, God reward him! If I do grow great, I'll grow less; for I'll purge, and leave sack, and live cleanly, as a nobleman should do.

[Exit bearing off the Body.]

SCENE V. Another Part of the Field. The Trumpets sound. Enter KING HENRY, PRINCE HENRY, PRINCE JOHN, WESTMORELAND, and others, with WORCESTER, and VERNON, prisoners.

K. Hen. Thus ever did rebellion find rebuke.—

Ill-spirited Worcester! did we not send grace,

Pardon, and terms of love to all of you?

And would'st thou turn our offers contrary?

sublunary things, must itself at last be stopped.—
Johnson.

3 'Carminibus confide bonis—jacet ecce Tibullus;

Vix manet e toto parva quod urna capit.—Ovid.

4 His scarf, with which he covers Percy's face.

5 Thus the folio. The quartos read ignominy.

6 To embowell was the old term for embalming the body, as was usually done by those of persons of rank.
Thus in Aulicus Coquinarius, 1650:—'The next day was solemnly appointed for embowelling the corpse, in the presence of some of the counsell, all the physicians, chirurgeons, apothecaries, and the Palsgrave's physician.'

7 Salt.

Misuse the tenor o' thy kinsman's trust ?
Three knights upon our party slain to day,
A noble earl, and many a creature else,
Had been alive this hour,
If, like a christian, thou hadst truly borne
Betwixt our armies true intelligence.

Wor. What I have done, my safety urged me to ;
And I embrace this fortune patiently,
Since not to be avoided it falls on me.

K. Hen. Bear Worcester to the death, and Vernon too :

Other offenders we will pause upon.—

[Exeunt WOR. and VERNON, guarded.
How goes the field ?

P. Hen. The noble Scot, Lord Douglas, when he saw

The fortune of the day quite turn'd from him,
The noble Percy slain, and all his men
Upon the foot of fear, fled with the rest ;
And, falling from a hill, he was so bruised,
That the pursuer took him. At my tent
The Douglas is ; and I beseech your grace,
I may dispose of him.

K. Hen. With all my heart.

P. Hen. Then, brother John of Lancaster, to you
This honourable bounty shall belong :
Go to the Douglas, and deliver him
Up to his pleasure, ransomless, and free :
His valour, shown upon our crests to-day,
Hath taught¹ us how to cherish such high deeds,
Even in the bosom of our adversaries.

Lan. I thank your grace for this high courtesy,
Which I shall give away immediately.

K. Hen. Then this remains,—that we divide our power.—

You, son John, and my cousin Westmoreland,
Towards York shall bend you, with your dearest speed,

To meet Northumberland, and the prelate Scroop,
Who, as we hear, are busily in arms :

Myself,—and you, son Harry, will towards Wales
To fight with Glendower, and the earl of March.
Rebellion in this land shall lose his sway,
Meeting the check of such another day :
And since this business so fair is done,
Let us not leave till all our own be won. [Exeunt.

SECOND PART OF

KING HENRY THE FOURTH.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

THE transactions comprised in this play take up about nine years. The action commences with the account of Hotspur's being defeated and killed [1403 ;] and closes with the death of King Henry IV. and the coronation of King Henry V. [1412-13.] 'Upton thinks these two plays improperly called The First and Second Parts of Henry the Fourth. "The first play ends (he says) with the peaceful settlement of Henry in the kingdom by the defeats of the rebels." This is hardly true ; for the rebels are not yet finally suppressed. The second, he tells us, shows Henry the Fifth in the various lights of a good-natured rake, till, on his father's death, he assumes a more manly character. This is true ; but this representation gives us no idea of a dramatic action. These two plays will appear to every reader, who shall peruse them without ambition of critical discoveries, to be so connected, that the second is merely a sequel to the first ; to be two only to be one.—JOHNSON.

This play was entered at Stationers' Hall, August 23, 1600. There are two copies, in quarto, printed in that year ; but it is doubtful whether they are different editions, or the one only a corrected impression of the other.

Malone supposes it to have been composed in 1598.

INDUCTION.

Warkworth. Before Northumberland's Castle.

Enter RUMOUR painted full of Tongues.¹

Rum. Open your ears; For which of you will stop

The vent of hearing when loud Rumour speaks?
I, from the orient to the drooping² west,
Making the wind my post-horse, still unfold
The acts commenced on this ball of earth:
Upon my tongues continual slanders ride;
The which in every language I pronounce,
Stuffing the ears of men with false reports.
I speak of peace while covert enmity,
Under the smile of safety, wounds the world:
And who but Rumour, who but only I,
Make fearful musters, and prepar'd defence;
Whilst the big ear, swollen with some other grief,
Is thought with child by the stern tyrant war,
And no such matter? Rumour is a pipe
Blown by surmises, jealousies, conjectures;
And of so easy and so plain a stop,³
That the blunt monster with uncounted heads,
The still-discordant wavering multitude,
Can play upon it. But what need I thus

¹ This was the common way of representing this personage, no unfrequent character in the masques of the poet's time. In a masque on St. Stephen's Night, 1614, by Thomas Campion, Rumour comes on in a skin coat full of winged tongues. Several other instances are cited in the Variorum Shakspeare.

My well-known body to anatomize
Among my household? Why is rumour here?
I run before King Harry's victory;
Who, in a bloody field by Shrewsbury,
Hath beaten down young Hotspur, and his troops
Quenching the flame of bold rebellion
Even with the rebels' blood. But what mean I
To speak so true at first? my office is
To noise abroad,—that Harry Monmouth fell:
Under the wrath of noble Hotspur's sword;
And that the king before the Douglas' rage
Stoop'd his anointed head as low as death.
This have I rumour'd through the peasant towns
Between that royal field of Shrewsbury
And this worm-eaten hold of ragged stone,⁴
Where Hotspur's father, old Northumberland, Lies crafty-sick: the posts come tiring on,
And not a man of them brings other news
Than they have learn'd of me; from Rumour's tongues
They bring smooth comforts false, worse than true
wroughts. [Exit.]

² The force of this epithet will be best explained by the following passage in Macbeth:—

³ Good things of day begin to droop and drowse,
And night's black agents to their preys do rouse.

³ The stops are the holes in a flute or pipe.

⁴ Northumberland's castle.

ACT I.

SCENE I. The same. The Porter before the Gate.
Enter LORD BARDOLPH.

Bardolph.

Who keeps the gate here, ho?—Where is the earl?
Port. What shall I say you are?

Bard. Tell thou the earl,
That the Lord Bardolph doth attend him here.

Port. His lordship is walk'd forth into the orchard;

Please it your honour, knock but at the gate,
And he himself will answer.

Enter NORTHUMBERLAND.

Bard. Here comes the earl.
North. What news, Lord Bardolph? every minute now

Should be the father of some stratagem;
The times are wild; contention, like a horse
Full of high feeding, madly hath broke loose,
And bears down all before him.

Bard. Noble earl,
I bring you certain news from Shrewsbury.

North. Good, an heaven will!

Bard. As good as heart can wish:—
The king is almost wounded to the death;
And, in the fortune of my lord your son,
Prince Harry slain outright; and both the Blunts Kill'd by the hand of Douglas: young prince John,
And Westmoreland, and Stafford, fled the field;
And Harry Monmouth's brawn, the hulk Sir John,
Is prisoner to your son: O, such a day,
So fought, so follow'd, and so fairly won,
Came not, till now, to dignify the times,
Since Cæsar's fortunes!

North. How is this deriv'd?
Saw you the field? came you from Shrewsbury?

Bard. I spake with one, my lord, that came from thence;

A gentleman well bred, and of good name,
That freely render'd me these news for true.

North. Here comes my servant, Travers, whom I sent

On Tuesday last to listen after news.

Bard. My lord, I over-rode him on the way;
And he is furnish'd with no certainties,
More than he haply may retail from me.

Enter TRAVERS.

North. Now, Travers, what good tidings come with you?

Tra. My lord, Sir John Umfrevile turn'd me back
With joyful tidings; and, being better hors'd, Outrode me. After him, came, spurring hard,
A gentleman almost forspent¹ with speed,
That stopp'd by me to breathe his bloodied horse:
He ask'd the way to Chester; and of him
I did demand, what news from Shrewsbury.
He told me, that rebellion had bad luck,
And that young Harry Percy's spur was cold:
With that he gave his able horse the head,
And, bending forward, struck his armed heels
Against the panting sides of his poor jade²
Up to the rowel-head; and, starting so,
He seem'd in running to devour the way,³
Staying no longer question.

North. Ha!—Again.
Said he, young Harry Percy's spur was cold?
Of Hotspur,⁴ coldspur? that rebellion
Had met ill luck!

Bard. My lord, I'll tell you what;
If my young lord your son have not the day,
Upon mine honour, for a silken point⁵
I'll give my barony: never talk of it.

¹ Exhausted.

² Jade is not used by Shakspeare as a term of contempt; for King Richard II. gives this appellation to his favourite horse Roan Barbary, which Henry IV. rode at his coronation:—

³ That jade hath eat bread from my royal hand.
The commentators suppose that a jade meant a horse kept for drudgery, a hackney; but this is not the fact it was only another name for a horse, as nag since.

⁴ So in the book of Job, ch. xxxix:—'He swalloweth the ground in fierceness and rage.'

⁵ Hotspur seems to have been a very common term for a man of vehemence and precipitation.

⁵ A silken point is a tagged lace.

North. Why should the gentleman, that rode by Travers,
Give thee such instances of loss?

Bard. Who, he?
He was some hilding¹ fellow, that had stol'n
The horse he rode on; and, upon my life,
Spoke at a venture. Look, here comes more news.

Enter MORTON.

North. Yea, this man's brow, like to a title-leaf,
Foretells the nature of a tragic volume:
So looks the strand, whereon the imperious flood
Hath left a witness'd usurpation.²

Say, Morton, didst thou come from Shrewsbury?

Mor. I ran from Shrewsbury, my noble lord;
Where hateful death put on his ugliest mask,
To fright our party.

North. How doth my son, and brother?
Thou tremblest: and the whiteness in thy cheek
Is apter than thy tongue to tell thy errand.
Even such a man, so faint, so spiritless,
So dull, so dead in look, so woe-begone,³
Drew Priam's curtain in the dead of night,
And would have told him, half his Troy was burn'd:
But Priam found the fire, ere he his tongue,
And I my Percy's death, ere thou report'st it.
This thou would'st say,—Your son did thus, and
thus;

Your brother, thus; so fought the noble Douglas;
Stopping my greedy ear with their bold deeds:
But in the end, to stop mine ear indeed,
Thou hast to sigh to blow away this praise,
Ending with—brother, son, and all are dead.

Mor. Douglas is living, and your brother, yet:
But, for my lord your son,—

North. Why, he is dead.
See, what a ready tongue suspicion hath!
He, that but fears the thing he would not know,
Hath, by instinct, knowledge from others' eyes,
That what he fear'd is chanc'd. Yet speak, Morton;
Tell thou thy earl, his divination lies;
And I will take it as a sweet disgrace,
And make thee rich for doing me such wrong.

Mor. You are too great to be by me gainsaid:
Your spirit is too true, your fears too certain.

North. Yet, for all this, say not that Percy's dead.

I see a strange confession in thine eye:
Thou shak'st thy head, and hold'st it fear or sin,
To speak a truth. If he be slain, say so:
The tongue offends not, that reports his death:
And he doth sin, that doth belie the dead;
Not he, which says the dead is not alive.
Yet the first bringer of unwelcome news
Hath but a losing office; and his tongue
Sounds ever after as a sullen bell,
Remember'd knolling a departing friend.⁴

Bard. I cannot think, my lord, your son is dead.

Mor. I am sorry, I should force you to believe
That, which I would to heaven I had not seen:
But these mine eyes saw him in bloody state,
Rend'ring faint quittance,⁵ wearied and out-
breath'd,

To Harry Monmouth: whose swift wrath beat down
The never-daunted Percy to the earth,
From whence with life he never more sprung up.
In few, his death (whose spirit lent a fire
Even to the dulllest peasant in his camp,)
Being bruited⁶ once, took fire and heat away
From the best temper'd courage in his troops:
For from his metal was his party steel'd;
Which once in him abated, all the rest
Turn'd on themselves, like dull and heavy lead.
And as the thing that's heavy in itself,
Upon enforcement, flies with greatest speed;
So did our men, heavy in Hotspur's loss,
Lend to this weight such lightness with their fear,
That arrows fled not swifter toward their aim,
Than did our soldiers, aiming at their safety,
Fly from the field: Then was that noble Worcester
Too soon ta'en prisoner: and that furious Scot,
The bloody Douglas, whose well-labouring sword
Had three times slain the appearance of the king,
'Gan vaill' his stomach, and did grace the shame
Of those that turn'd their backs; and, in his flight, Stumbling in fear, was took. The sum of all
Is,—that the king hath won; and hath sent out
A speedy power to encounter you, my lord,
Under the conduct of young Lancaster,
And Westmoreland: this is the news at full.

North. For this I shall have time enough to mourn.

In poison there is physic; and these news,
Having been well, that would have made me sick,
Being sick, have in some measure made me well:
And as the wretch, whose fever-weakn'd joints,
Like strengthless hinges, buckle under life,
Impatient of his fit, breaks like a fire
Out of his keeper's arms; even so my limbs, Weaken'd with grief, being now enrag'd with grief,⁸

Are thrice themselves: hence therefore, thou nice⁹
crutch;

A scaly gauntlet now, with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand: and hence, thou sickly quioif;
Thou art a guard too wanton for the head,
Which princes, flesh'd with conquest, aim to hit.
Now bind my brows with iron; and approach
The ragged'st brow that time and spite dare bring,
To frown upon the enrag'd Northumberland!
Let heaven kiss earth! Now let not nature's hand
Keep the wild flood confin'd! let order die!
And let this world no longer be a stage,
To feed contention in a lingering act;
But let one spirit of the first-born Cain
Reign in all bosoms, that, each heart being set
On bloody courses, the rude scene may end,
And darkness be the burier of the dead!¹⁰

Tra. This strained passion doth you wrong, my lord.¹¹

Bard. Sweet earl, divorce not wisdom from you honour.

Mor. The lives of all your loving complices
Lean on your health; the which, if you give o'er
To stormy passion, must perforce decay.

1 i. e. Hilderling, base, low fellow.

2 An attestation of its ravage.

3 Dr. Bentley is said to have thought this passage corrupt; and therefore (with a greater degree of gravity than the reader will probably express) proposed the following emendation:—

'So dead, so dull in look Ucalagon,

Drew Priam's curtain,' &c.

The name of Ucalagon occurs in the third Iliad, and in the Æneid.

4 So in Shakespeare's seventy-first Sonnet:—

'—You shall hear the surly sullen bell

Give warning to the world that I am fled.' Milton has adopted this expressive epithet:—

'I hear the far-off curfew sound

Over some wide-water'd shore,

Swinging slow with sullen roar.'

The bell anciently was rung before the dying person had expired, and thence was called the passing bell. Mr. Douce thinks it probable that this bell might have been originally used to drive away demons, who were supposed to watch for the parting soul.

5 By faint quittance a faint return of blows is meant.

6 i. e. reported, noised abroad.

7 i. e. began to fall his courage, to let his spirits sink under his fortune. *To vail is to lower, to cast down.

8 Grief, in the latter part of this line, is used, in its present sense, for sorrow; in the former part for bodily pain.

9 Steevens explains nice here by trifling; but Shakspeare, like his contemporaries, uses it in the sense of effeminate, delicate, tender.

10 'The conclusion of this noble speech (says Johnson) is extremely striking. There is no need to suppose it exactly philosophical; darkness, in poetry, may be absence of eyes, as well as privation of light. Yet we may remark that, by an ancient opinion, it has been held that if the human race, for whom the world was made, were extirpated, the whole system of sublunary nature would cease at once.'

11 This line in the quarto is by mistake given to Ummefreville, who is spoken of in this very scene as absent. It is given to Travers at Steevens's suggestion.

You cast the event of war, my noble lord,¹
And sum'd² the account of chance, before you said,—

Let us make head. It was your presumise,
That in the dole³ of blows your son might drop:
You knew, he walk'd o'er perils, on an edge,
More likely to fall in, than to get o'er;⁴
You were advis'd,⁵ his flesh was capable
Of wounds, and scars; and that his forward spirit
Would lift him where most trade of danger rang'd;
Yet did you say,—Go forth; and none of this,
Though strongly apprehended, could restrain
The stiff-borne action: What hath then befallen,
Or what hath this bold enterprise brought forth,
More than that being which was like to be?

Bard. We all, that are engaged to this loss,⁶
Knew that we ventur'd on such dangerous seas,
That, if we wrought out life, 'twas ten to one:
And yet we ventur'd, for the gain propos'd
Chok'd the respect of likely peril fear'd;
And, since we are o'er-set, venture again.
Come, we will all put forth; body, and goods.

Mor. 'Tis more than time: And, my most noble
lord,

I hear for certain, and do speak the truth,—
The gentle archbishop of York is up,⁷
With well-appointed powers; he is a man,
Who with a double surety binds his followers.
My lord your son had only but the corps,
But shadows, and the shows of men, to fight:
For that same word, rebellion, did divide
The action of their bodies from their souls;
And they did fight with queasiness,⁸ constrain'd,
As men drink potions; that their weapons only
Seem'd on our side, but, for their spirits and souls,
This word, rebellion, it had froze them up,
As fish are in a pond: But now the bishop
Turns insurrection to religion:
Suppos'd sincere and holy in his thoughts,
He's follow'd both with body and with mind;
And doth enlarge his rising with the blood
Of fair King Richard, scrap'd from Pomfret stones:
Derives from heaven his quarrel, and his cause;
Tells them, he doth bestride a bleeding land,⁹
Gasping for life under great Bolingbroke;
And more¹⁰ and less do flock to follow him.

North. I knew of this before; but, to speak truth,
This present grief had wip'd it from my mind.
Go in with me; and counsel every man
The aptest way for safety, and revenge:
Get posts, and letters, and make friends with speed;
Never so few, and never yet more need. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. London. A Street. Enter Sir
JOHN FALSTAFF, with his Page bearing his Sword and Buckler.

Fal. Sirrah, you giant, what says the doctor to my water?¹¹

Page. He said, sir, the water itself was a good healthy water: but for the party that owed¹² it, he might have more diseases than he knew for.

Fal. Men of all sorts take a pride to gird¹³ at me: The brain of this foolish-compounded clay, man, is not able to vent any thing that tends to laughter, more than I invent, or is invented on me:
I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men. I do here walk before thee, like a sow, that hath overwhelmed all her litter but one. If the prince put thee into my service for any other reason than to set me off, why then I have no judgment. Thou whoreson mandrake,¹⁴ thou art fitter to be worn in my cap, than to wait at my heels.
I was never mann'd with an agate¹⁵ till now: but I will set you neither in gold nor silver, but in vile apparel, and send you back again to your master, for a jewel; the juvenal,¹⁶ the prince your master, whose chin is not yet fledged. I will sooner have a beard grow in the palm of my hand, than he shall get one on his cheek; and yet he will not stick to say, his face is a face-royal: God may finish it when he will, it is not a hair amiss yet: he may keep it still as a face-royal,¹⁷ for a barber shall never earn sixpence out of it; and yet he will be crowing, as if he had writ man ever since his father was a bachelor. He may keep his own grace, but he is almost out of mine, I can assure him.—What said master Dumbleton about the satin for my short cloak, and slops?

Page. He said, sir, you should procure him better assurance than Bardolph: he would not take his bond and yours; he liked not the security.

Fal. Let him be damned like the glutton! may his tongue be hotter!¹⁸—A whoreson Achitophel!¹⁹ a rascally yea-forsooth knave! to bear a gentleman in hand,²⁰ and then stand upon security!—The whoreson smooth-pates do now wear nothing but high shoes, and bunches of keys at their girdles;
and if a man is thorough²¹ with them in honest taking up, then they must stand upon—security.
I had as lief they would put ratsbane in my mouth, as offer to stop it with security. I looked he should have sent me two and twenty yards of satin, as I am a true knight, and he sends me security.—Well, he may sleep in security; for he bath the horn of abundance, and the lightness of his wife shines through it; and yet cannot he see, though he have

1 The fourteen following lines, and a number of others in this play, were not in the quarto edition.

2 Dealing, or distribution.

3 So in King Henry IV. Part I.—

‘As full of peril and adventurous spirit,
As to o’erwalk a current roaring loud,
On the unsteadfast footing of a spear.’

4 That is, you were warned or aware.

5 This mode of expression has before been noticed.

6 This and the following twenty lines are not found in the quarto.

7 Against their stomachs.

8 That is, ‘stand over his country, as she lies bleeding and prostrate, to protect her.’ It was the office of a friend to protect his fallen comrade in battle in this manner. Shakspeare has alluded to it in other places.

9 i. e. great and small, all ranks.

10 This quackery was once so much in fashion that Linacre, the founder of the College of Physicians, formed a statute to restrain apothecaries from carrying the water of their patients to a doctor, and afterwards giving medicines in consequence of the opinions pronounced concerning it. This statute was followed by another, which forbade the doctors themselves to pronounce on any disorder from such an uncertain diagnostic. But this did not extinguish the practice, which has even its dupes in these enlightened times.

11 Owned.

12 Gird (Mr. Gifford says) is a mere metathesis of gride, and means a thrust, a blow; the metaphorical use of the word for a smart stroke of wit, taunt, reproachful retort, &c. is justified by a similar application of kindred terms in all languages.

13 A root supposed to have the shape of a man. Quacks and impostors counterfeited, with the root briony, figures resembling parts of the human body, which were sold to the credulous as endued with specific virtues. See Sir Thomas Brown’s Vulgar Errors, p. 72, edit. 1686, for some very curious particulars.

14 An agate is used metaphorically for a very diminutive person, in allusion to the small figures cut in agate for rings and brooches. Thus Florio explains ‘Formaglio: ouches, broaches, or tablets and jewels, that yet some old men wear in their hats, with agate-stones, cut and graven with some formes and images on them, namely, of famous men’s heads.’

15 Juvenal occurs in A Midsummer Night’s Dream, and in Love’s Labour’s Lost. It is also used in many places by Chaucer for a young man.

16 Johnson says that, by a face-royal, Falstaff means a face exempt from the touch of vulgar hands. As a stage-royal is not to be hunted, a mine-royal is not to be dug. Stevens imagines that there may be a quibble intended on the coin called a real, or royal; that a barber can no more earn sixpence by his face, than by the face stamped on the coin, the one requiring as little shaving as the other. Mason thinks that Falstaff’s conceit is, ‘If nothing be taken out of a royal, it will remain a royal still, as it was.’ The reader will decide for himself. I have nothing better in the way of conjecture to offer.

17 An allusion to the fate of the rich man, who had fared sumptuously every day, when he requested a drop of water to cool his tongue, being tormented with flames.

18 To bear in hand is to keep in expectation by false promises.

19 I. e. in their debt, by taking up goods on credit.

his own lantern to light him.——Where's Bardolph?

Page. He's gone into Smithfield, to buy your worship a horse.

Fal. I bought him in Paul's,¹ and he'll buy me a horse in Smithfield: an I could get me but a wife in the stews, I were manned, horsed, and wived.

Enter the Lord Chief Justice,² and an Attendant.

Page. Sir, here comes the nobleman that committed the prince for striking him about Bardolph.

Fal. Wait close, I will not see him.

Ch. Just. What's he that goes there?

Atten. Falstaff, an't please your lordship.

Ch. Just. He that was in question for the robbery?

Atten. He, my lord: but he hath since done good service at Shrewsbury; and, as I hear, is now going with some charge to the lord John of Lancaster.

Ch. Just. What, to York? Call him back again.

Atten. Sir John Falstaff!

Fal. Boy, tell him, I am deaf.

Page. You must speak louder, my master is deaf.

Ch. Just. I am sure he is, to the hearing of any thing good.—Go, pluck him by the elbow: I must speak with him.

Atten. Sir John,——

Fal. What! a young knave, and beg! Is there not wars? is there not employment? Doth not the king lack subjects? do not the rebels need soldiers? Though it be a shame to be on any side but one, it is worse shame to beg than to be on the worst side, were it worse than the name of rebellion can tell how to make it.

Atten. You mistake me, sir.

Fal. Why, sir, did I say you were an honest man? setting my knighthood and my soldiery aside, I had lied in my throat if I had said so.

Atten. I pray you, sir, then set your knighthood and your soldiery aside; and give me leave to tell you, you lie in your throat, if you say I am any other than an honest man.

Fal. I give thee leave to tell me so! I lay aside that which grows to me! If thou get'st any leave of me, hang me; if thou takest leave, thou wert better be hanged; You hunt counter,³ hence! avant!

Atten. Sir, my lord would speak with you.

Ch. Just. Sir John Falstaff, a word with you.

Fal. My good lord!—God give your lordship good time of day. I am glad to see your lordship abroad: I heard say, your lordship was sick: I hope, your lordship goes abroad by advice. Your lordship, though not clean past your youth, hath yet some smack of age in you, some relish of the saltiness of time; and I most humbly beseech your lordship, to have a reverend care of your health.

Ch. Just. Sir John, I sent for you before your expedition to Shrewsbury.

Fal. An't please your lordship, I hear, his majesty is returned with some discomfort from Wales.

Ch. Just. I talk not of his majesty:—You would not come when I sent for you.

Fal. And I hear moreover, his highness is fallen into this same whoreson apoplexy.

Ch. Just. Well, heaven mend him! I pray, let me speak with you.

Fal. This apoplexy is, as I take it, a kind of lethargy, an't please your lordship; a kind of sleeping in the blood, a whoreson tingling.

Ch. Just. What tell you me of it? be it as it is.

Fal. It hath its original from much grief; from study, and perturbation of the brain: I have read the cause of its effects in Galen; it is a kind of deafness.

Ch. Just. I think, you are fallen into the disease; for you hear not what I say to you.

Fal. Very well, my lord, very well: rather, an't please you, it is the disease of not listening, the malady of not marking, that I am troubled withal.

Ch. Just. To punish you by the heels would amend the attention of your ears; and I care not, if I do become your physician.

Fal. I am as poor as Job, my lord; but not so patient: your lordship may minister the potion of imprisonment to me, in respect to poverty; but how I should be your patient to follow your prescriptions, the wise may make some dram of a scruple, or, indeed, a scruple itself.

Ch. Just. I sent for you, when there were matters against you for your life, to come speak with me.

Fal. As I was then advised by my learned counsel in the laws of this land-service, I did not come.

Ch. Just. Well, the truth is, Sir John, you live in great infamy.

Fal. He that buckles him in my belt, cannot live in less.

Ch. Just. Your means are very slender, and your waste is great.

Fal. I would it were otherwise; I would my means were greater, and my waist slenderer.

Ch. Just. You have misled the youthful prince.

Fal. The young prince hath misled me: I am the fellow with the great belly, and he my dog.

Ch. Just. Well, I am loath to gail a new-heal'd wound; your day's service at Shrewsbury hath a little gilded over your night's exploit on Gad's-hill: you may thank the unquiet time for your quiet o'erposting that action.

Fal. My lord?

Ch. Just. But since all is well, keep it so: wake not a sleeping wolf.

Fal. To wake a wolf, is as bad as to smell a fox.

Ch. Just. What! you are as a candle, the better part burnt out.

Fal. A wassel candle,⁵ my lord; all tallow: if I did say of wax, my growth would approve the truth.

Ch. Just. There is not a white hair on your face, but should have his effect of gravity.

Fal. His effect of gravity, gravity, gravity.

Ch. Just. You follow the young prince up and down, like his ill angel.

Fal. Not so, my lord; your ill angel is light;⁶ but, I hope, he that looks upon me, will take me without weighing: and yet, in some respects, I grant, I cannot go, I cannot tell:⁷ Virtue is of so does not seem to be any allusion to the Counter prison here; though such allusions were very common in the poet's age.

4 In the quarto edition this speech stands thus:—

'Old. Very well, my lord, very well.'

This is a strong corroboration of the tradition that Falstaff was first called Oldcastle.

5 A wassell candle is a large candle lighted up at a feast. There is a poor quibble upon the word war, which signifies increase as well as the matter of the honeycomb.

6 'As light as a clipt angel' is a comparison frequent in the old comedies.

7 I cannot tell, Johnson explains, 'I cannot be taken in a reckoning, I cannot pass current.' Mr. Gifford objects to this explanation, and says that it merely means 'I cannot tell what to think of it.' The phrase with that signification, was certainly common (says Mr. Boswell); but as it will also bear the sense which Dr. Johnson assigned to it, his interpretation appears to me to suit the context better. Let the reader judge.

1 The body of old St. Paul's Church, in London, was a constant place of resort for business and amusement, and consequently frequented by idle people of all descriptions. Advertisements were fixed up there, bargains made, servants hired, &c.

2 This judge was Sir Wm. Gascoigne, chief justice of the King's Bench. He died Dec. 17, 1413, and was buried in Harewood Church, in Yorkshire. His effigy is on his monument, and may be seen in Gough's Sepulchral Monuments, vol. ii.

3 To hunt counter was to hunt the wrong way, to trace the scent backwards; to hunt it by the heel is the technical phrase. Falstaff means to tell the man that he is on a wrong scent. The folio and the modern editions print hunt-counter with a hyphen, so as to make it appear like a name; but in the quartos the words are disjoined—hunt counter. Cotgrave explains 'contrepied, that which we call counter in hunting;' and 'tenir contrepied, to set or hold his foot against another man's, thereby to stop him from going any further; to cross or impeach the designs or enterprises of another.' There little regard in these coster-monger times,¹ that true valour is turned bear-herd: Pregnancy² is made a tapster; and hath his quick wit wasted in giving reckonings: all the other gifts appertinent to man, as the malice of this age shapes them, are not worth a gooseberry. You, that are old, consider not the capacities of us that are young: you measure the heat of our livers with the bitterness of your galls: and we that are in the vaward of our youth, I must confess, are wags too.

Ch. Just. Do you set down your name in the scroll of youth, that are written down old with all the characters of age? Have you not a moist eye? a dry hand? a yellow cheek? a white beard? a decreasing leg? an increasing belly? Is not your voice broken? your wind short? your chin double? your wit single?³ and every part about you blasted with antiquity? and will you yet call yourself young? Fye, fye, fye, Sir John!

Fal. My lord, I was born about three of the clock in the afternoon, with a white head, and something a round belly. For my voice,—I have lost it with hollaing, and singing of anthems. To approve my youth further, I will not: the truth is, I am only old in judgment and understanding: and he that will caper with me for a thousand marks, let him lend me the money, and have at him. For the box of the ear that the prince gave you,—he gave it like a rude prince, and you took it like a sensible lord. I have checked him for it; and the young lion repents; marry, not in ashes, and sackcloth; but in new silk and old sack.

Ch. Just. Well, heaven send the prince a better companion!

Fal. Heaven send the companion a better prince! I cannot rid my hands of him.

Ch. Just. Well, the king hath severed you and Prince Harry: I hear, you are going with Lord John of Lancaster, against the archbishop, and the earl of Northumberland.

Fal. Yea; I thank your pretty sweet wit for it. But look you pray, all you that kiss my lady peace at home, that our armies join not in a hot day! for, by the Lord, I take but two shirts out with me, and I mean not to sweat extraordinarily: if it be a hot day, an I brandish any thing but my bottle, I would I might never spit white again. There is not a dangerous action can peep out his head, but I am thrust upon it: Well, I cannot last ever:⁴ But it was always yet the trick of our English nation, if they have a good thing, to make it too common. If you will needs say, I am an old man, you should give me rest. I would to God, my name were not so terrible to the enemy as it is. I were better to be eaten to death with rust, than to be scoured to nothing with perpetual motion.

Ch. Just. Well, be honest, be honest; and God bless your expedition!

Fal. Will your lordship lend me a thousand pounds, to furnish me forth?

Ch. Just. Not a penny, not a penny; you are too impatient to bear crosses.⁵ Fare you well: Commend me to my cousin Westmoreland.

[Exeunt Chief Justice and Attendant.]

Fal. If I do, filip me with a three-man beetle.⁶

1 Coster-monger times are petty peddling times; when the prevalence of trade has produced that meanness that rates the merit of every thing by money.

2 Pregnancy is readiness.

3 Single is simple, silly. How much has been written about this phrase, and to how little purpose! Single-witted and single-sould were common epithets with our ancestors, to designate simple persons.

4 The rest of this speech, which is not in the folio, is restored from the quarto copy.

5 A quibble is here intended between crosses, contraries, and the sort of money so called.

6 This alludes to a common but cruel diversion of boys, called filipping the toad. They lay a board, two or three feet long, at right angles, over a transverse piece, two or three inches thick; then placing the toad at one end of the board, the other end is struck by a bat or large stick, which throws the poor toad forty or fifty feet perpendicular from the earth: and the fall

—A man can no more separate age and covetousness, than he can part young limbs and lechery: but the gout galls the one, and the pox pinches the other; and so both the degrees prevent⁷ my curses.

—Boy!

Page. Sir?

Fal. What money is in my purse?

Page. Seven groats and two-pence.

Fal. I can get no remedy against this consumption of the purse: borrowing only lingers and lingers it out, but the disease is incurable.—Go bear this letter to my lord of Lancaster; this to the prince; this to the earl of Westmoreland; and this to old mistress Ursula, whom I have weekly sworn to marry since I perceived the first white hair on my chin: About it; you know where to find me. [Exit Page.] A pox of this gout! or, a gout of this pox! for the one, or the other, plays the rogue with my great toe. It is no matter, if I do halt; I have the wars for my colour, and my pension shall seem the more reasonable: A good wit will make use of any thing; I will turn diseases to commodity.⁸ [Exit.]

SCENE III. York. A Room in the Archbishop's Palace. Enter the Archbishop of York; the LORDS HASTINGS, MOWBRAY, and BARDOLPH.

Arch. Thus have you heard our cause, and known our means;

And, my most noble friends, I pray you all, Speak plainly your opinions of our hopes:—

And first, lord marshal, what say you to it?

Mowb. I well allow the occasion of our arms; But gladly would be better satisfied, How, in our means, we should advance ourselves To look with forehead bold and big enough Upon the power and puissance of the king.

Hast. Our present musters grow upon the file To five and twenty thousand men of choice; And our supplies five largely in the hope Of great Northumberland, whose bosom burns With an incensed fire of injuries.

Bard. The question then, Lord Hastings, standeth thus:—

Whether our present five and twenty thousand May hold up head without Northumberland.

Hast. With him, we may.

Bard. Ay, marry, there's the point: But if without him we be thought too feeble, My judgment is, we should not step too far Till we had his assistance by the hand: For, in a theme so bloody-fac'd as this, Conjecture, expectation, and surmise Of aids uncertain, should not be admitted.

Arch. 'Tis very true, Lord Bardolph; for, indeed, It was young Hotspur's case at Shrewsbury.

Bard. It was, my lord; who lin'd himself with hope, Eating the air on promise of supply, Flattering himself with project of a power Much smaller than the smallest of his thoughts:⁹ And so, with great imagination,

Proper to madmen, led his powers to death, And, winking, leap'd into destruction.

Hast. But, by your leave, it never yet did hurt, To lay down likelihoods, and forms of hope.

Bard. Yes, in this present quality of war;— Indeed the instant action,¹⁰ (a cause on foot), generally kills it. A three-man beetle is a heavy beetle, with three handles, used in driving piles, &c.

7 To prevent is to anticipate.

8 Mine eyes prevent the night watches.—Ps. cxix. One of our old translators renders the 'Noctem quæ instabat interpretacere; to prevent the night that was at hand.'

9 Commodity is profit, interest.

10 That is, which turned out to be much smaller than, &c.

11 The first twenty lines of this speech were first inserted in the folio, 1623. This passage has perplexed the editors. The old copies read:

'Yes, if this present quality of war, Indeed the instant action: a cause on foot Lives so in hope: As in, &c.'

It has been proposed to read:— 'Yes, if this present quality of war;—

Lives so in hope, as in an early spring
We see the appearing buds; which, to prove fruit,
Hope gives not so much warrant, as despair,
That frosts will bite them. When we mean to build,

We first survey the plot, then draw the model;
And when we see the figure of the house,
Then must we rate the cost of the erection:
Which if we find outweighs ability,
What do we then, but draw anew the model
In fewer offices; or, at least, desist
To build at all? Much more, in this great work, (Which is, almost, to pluck a kingdom down,
And set another up,) should we survey
The plot of situation, and the model;
Consent! upon a sure foundation;
Question surveyors; know our own estate,
How able such a work to undergo,
To weigh against his opposite; or else,
We fortify in paper, and in figures,
Using the names of men instead of men:
Like one, that draws the model of a house
Beyond his power to build it; who, half through,
Gives o'er, and leaves his part-created cost
A naked subject to the weeping clouds,
And waste for churlish winter's tyranny.

Host. Grant, that our hopes (yet likely of fair birth,)

Should be still-born, and that we now possess'd
The utmost man of expectation;
I think, we are a body strong enough,
Even as we are, to equal with the king.

Bard. What! is the king but five and twenty thousand?

Host. To us, no more; nay, not so much, Lord
Bardolph.

For his divisions, as the times do brawl,
Are in three heads: one power against the French,²
And one against Glendower; perforce, a third
Must take up us: So is the unfirm king
In three divided; and his coffers sound
With hollow poverty and emptiness.

Arch. That he should draw his several strengths together,

And come against us in full puissance,
Need not be dreaded.

Host. If he should do so,
He leaves his back unarm'd, the French and Welsh
Baying him at the heels: never fear that.

Bard. Who, is it like, should lead his forces hither?

Host. The duke of Lancaster,³ and Westmoreland:

Against the Welsh, himself, and Harry Monmouth:
But who is substituted 'gainst the French,
I have no certain notice.

Arch. Let us on;⁴
And publish the occasion of our arms.

The commonwealth is sick of their own choice,
Their over-greedy love hath surfeited:—
An habitation giddy and unsure
Hath he, that buildeth on the vulgar heart.
O thou fond man!⁵ with what loud applause
Didst thou beat heaven with blessing Bolingbroke,
Before he was what thou would'st have him be?

Induc'd the instant action: a cause on foot
Lives so in hope, as in, &c.
The reading adopted by Stevens and Malone, from Johnson's suggestion, is that which I have given; it affords a clear sense, and agrees with the whole tenor of Bardolph's argument; at the same time little violence is done to the text, two letters only being changed.

1 Agree.
2 During this rebellion of Northumberland and the Archbishop a French army of twelve thousand men landed at Milford Haven in aid of Owen Glendower.
See Holinshed, p. 531.

3 This is an anachronism. Prince John of Lancaster was not created a duke till the second year of the reign of his brother, King Henry V. At this time Prince Henry was actually duke of Lancaster. Shakspeare was misled by Stowe, who, speaking of the first parliament of King Henry IV. says, 'Then the king rose, and made his eldest sonne prince of Wales. &c.: his second

And being now trimm'd⁶ in thine own desires,
Thou, beasty feeder, art so full of him,
That thou provok'st thyself to cast him up.
So, so, thou common dog, didst thou disgorge
Thy glutton bosom of the royal Richard;
And now thou would'st eat thy dead vomit up,
And howl'st to find it. What trust is in these times?
They that, when Richard liv'd, would have him die,
Are now become enamour'd on his grave:
Thou, that threw'st dust upon his goodly head,
When through proud London he came sighing on
After the admired heels of Bolingbroke,
Cry'st now, O earth, yield us that king again,
And take thou this! O thoughts of men accurst!
Past, and to come, seem best; things present, worst.
Mouv. Shall we go draw our numbers, and set on?
Host. We are time's subjects, and time bids be gone. [Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. London. A Street. Enter Hostess; Fang, and his Boy, with her; and SNARE following.

Host. Master Fang, have you entered the action?
Fang. It is entered.

Host. Where is your yeoman? Is it a lusty yeoman? will a' stand to't?

Fang. Sirrah, where's the Snare?

Host. O lord, ay: good master Snare.

Snare. Here, here.

Fang. Snare, we must arrest Sir John Falstaff.

Host. Yea, good master Snare; I have entered him and all.

Snare. It may chance cost some of us our lives, for he will stab.

Host. Alas the day! take heed of him; he stabbed me in mine own house, and that most beastly:
in good faith, a' cares not what mischief he doth, if his weapon be out: he will foil⁸ like any devil; he will spare neither man, woman, nor child.

Fang. If I can close with him, I care not for his thrust.

Host. No, nor I neither: I'll be at your elbow.

Fang. An I but fist him once; an a' come but within my vice;⁹—

Host. I am undone by his going; I warrant you, he's an infinitive thing upon my score:—Good master Fang, hold him sure;—good master Snare, let him not 'scape. He comes continually to Pie-corner (saving your manhoods,) to buy a saddle; and he's indicted to dinner to the lubbar's head in Lumbert-street, to master Smooth's the silkman: I pray ye, since my exion is entered, and my case so openly known to the world, let him be brought in to his answer. A hundred mark is a long loan¹⁰ for a poor lone woman to bear: and I have borne,
and borne, and borne; and have been fubbed off, and fubbed off, and fubbed off, from this day to that day, that it is a shame to be thought on. There is no honesty in such dealing; unless a woman should be made an ass, and a beast, to bear every knave's wrong.—

sonne was there made duke of Lancaster.' Annals, 1631.—He seems to have consulted Stowe (p. 323) between the times of finishing the last play and beginning of the present.

4 This speech first appeared in the folio.

5 Many or meyny; from the French mesnie, a multitude.

6 Dressed.

7 A bailiff's follower was formerly called a serjeant's yeoman.

8 Thrust.

9 The quarto reads vien. Vice is used for grasp or clutch. The first is vulgarly called the vice in the west of England.

10 The old copies read 'long one;' which Theobald supposed was a corruption of lone or loan. Mr. Douce thinks the alteration unnecessary; and that the hostess means to say that a hundred mark is a long score, or reckoning, for her to bear

Enter SIR JOHN FALSTAFF, Page, and BARDOLPH.

Yonder he comes; and that arrant malmsey-nose knave, Bardolph, with him. Do your offices, do your offices, master Fang, and master Snare; do me, do me, do me your offices.

Fal. How now? whose mare's dead? what's the matter?

Fang. Sir John, I arrest you at the suit of Mistress Quickly.

Fal. Away, varlets!—Draw, Bardolph; cut me off the villain's head; throw the quean in the channel.

Host. Throw me in the channel? I'll throw thee in the channel. Wilt thou? wilt thou? thou basely rogue!—Murder, murder! O thou honey-suckle! villain! wilt thou kill God's officers, and the king's? O thou honey-seed! rogue! thou art a honey-seed; a man-queller,² and a woman-queller.

Fal. Keep them off, Bardolph.

Fang. A rescue! a rescue!

Host. Good people, bring a rescue or two.—Thou wot'st, wot'st thou? thou wot'st, wot'st thou? do, do, thou rogue! do, thou hemp-seed!

Fal. Away, you scullion! you rampallian! you fustilarian! I'll tickle your catastrophe.

Enter the Lord Chief Justice, attended.

Ch. Just. What's the matter? keep the peace here, ho!

Host. Good my lord, be good to me! I beseech you, stand to me!

Ch. Just. How now, Sir John? what, are you brawling here?

Doth this become your place, your time, and business?

You should have been well on your way to York—Stand from him, fellow; wherefore hang'st thou on him?

Host. O my most worshipful lord, an't please your grace, I am a poor widow of Eastcheap, and he is arrested at my suit.

Ch. Just. For what sum?

Host. It is more than for some, my lord: it is for all, all I have: he hath eaten me out of house and home; he hath put all my substance into that fat belly of his;—but I will have some of it out again, or I'll ride thee o' nights, like the mare.

Fal. I think I am as like to ride the mare, if I have any vantage of ground to get up.

Ch. Just. How comes this, Sir John? Fye! what man of good temper would endure this tempest of exclamation? Are you not ashamed to enforce a poor widow to so rough a course to come by her own?

Fal. What is the gross sum that I owe thee?

Host. Marry, if thou wert an honest man, thyself, and the money too. Thou didst swear to me upon a parcel-gilt³ goblet, sitting in my Dolphin-chamber, at the round table, by a sea-coal fire, upon Wednesday in Wheeson-week,⁴ when the prince broke thy head for liking his father⁵ to a singing-man of Windsor; thou didst swear to me then, as I was washing thy wound, to marry me, and make me my lady thy wife. Canst thou deny it? Did not goodwife Keech, the butcher's wife, come in then, and call me gossip Quickly? coming in to borrow a mess of vinegar; telling us, she had a good dish of prawns; whereby thou didst desire to eat some;

¹ It is scarce necessary to remark that honey-suckle and honey-seed are Dame Quickly's corruptions of homicidal and homicide.

² To quell was anciently used for to kill. 'A man-queller, a manslayer, or murderer; homicida.'—Juvenius's Nomenclator, 1555.

³ Parcel-gilt is partly gilt, or gilt only in parts. Lancham, in his Letter from Kenilworth, describing a bridecup, says, 'It was formed of a sweet sucket barrel, a faire turn'd foot set to it, all seemly be-silvered and parcel gilt.' The expression is too common in old writers to need further illustration.

⁴ The folio reads Whitsun-week; but the corruption is in the hostess's manner.

⁵ The folio has 'for likening him to,' &c.

whereby I told thee, they were ill for a green wound? And didst thou not, when she was gone down stairs, desire me to be no more so familiarly with such poor people; saying that ere long they should call me madam? And didst thou not kiss me, and bid me fetch thee thirty shillings? I put thee now to thy book-oath; deny it if thou canst.

Fal. My lord, this is a poor mad soul; and she says, up and down the town, that her eldest son is like you: she hath been in good case, and, the truth is, poverty hath distracted her. But for these foolish officers, I beseech you, I may have redress against them.

Ch. Just. Sir John, Sir John, I am well acquainted with your manner of wrenching the true cause the false way. It is not a confident brow, nor the throng of words that come with such more than impudent sauciness from you, can thrust me from a level consideration: you have, as it appears to me, practised upon the easy-yielding spirit of this woman, and made her serve your uses both in purse and person.

Host. Yea, in troth, my lord.

Ch. Just. Pr'ythee, peace:—Pay her the debt you owe her, and unpay the villany you have done with her; the one you may do with sterling money, and the other with current repentance.

Fal. My lord, I will not undergo this sneap⁶ without reply. You call honourable boldness, impudent sauciness: if a man will make court'sy, and say nothing, he is virtuous: No, my lord, my humble duty remembered, I will not be your sutor; I say to you, I do desire deliverance from these officers, being upon hasty employment in the king's affairs.

Ch. Just. You speak as having power to do wrong: but answer in the effect of your reputation,⁷ and satisfy the poor woman.

Fal. Come hither, hostess. [Taking her aside.]

Enter GOWER.

Ch. Just. Now, master Gower; what news?

Gow. The king, my lord, and Harry prince of Wales,

Are near at hand: the rest the paper tells.

Fal. As I am a gentleman:—

Host. Nay, you said so before.

Fal. As I am a gentleman;—Come, no more words of it.

Host. By this heavenly ground I tread on, I must be fain to pawn both my plate, and the tapestry of my dining-chambers.

Fal. Glasses, glasses, is the only drinking: and for thy walls,—a pretty slight drollery, or the story of the prodigal, or the German hunting in water-work,⁸ is worth a thousand of these bed-hangings, and these fly-bitten tapestries. Let it be ten pound, if thou canst. Come, and it were not for thy humours, there is not a better wench in England. Go wash thy face, and 'draw' thy action: Come, thou must not be in this humour with me! dost not know me? Come, come, I know thou wast set on to this?

Host. Pray thee, Sir John, let it be but twenty nobles; I'faith I am loath to pawn my plate, in good earnest, la.

⁶ Sneap is reproof, rebuke. Thus in Brome's Antipodes:—

'Do you sneap me, my lord?'

And again:—

'No need to come hither to be sneap'd.'

—even as now I was not,

When you sneap'd me, my lord.

Snip, snib, sneb, and snub, are different forms of the same word. To sneap was originally to check or pinch by frost. Shakspeare has sneaping frost and sneaping winds in other places.

⁷ Suitably to your character.

⁸ Water work is water colour paintings or hangings. The painted cloth was generally oil colour; but a cheaper sort, probably resembling in their execution some modern paper-hangings, was brought from Holland or Germany, executed in water colour, or disemper. The German hunting, or wild boar hunt, would consequently be a prevalent subject.

⁹ Withdraw.

Fal. Let it alone; I'll make other shift: you'll be a fool still.

Host. Well, you shall have it, though I pawn my gown. I hope you'll come to supper; you'll pay me altogether.

Fal. Will I live?—Go, with her, with her; [To BARDOLPH.] hook on, hook on.

Host. Will you have Doll Tear-sheet meet you at supper?

Fal. No more words; let's have her.

[Exeunt Hostess, BARDOLPH, Officers, and Page.]

Ch. Just. I have heard better news.

Fal. What's the news, my good lord?

Ch. Just. Where lay the king last night?

Gow. At Basingstoke, my lord.

Fal. I hope, my lord, all's well: What's the news, my lord?

Ch. Just. Come all his forces back?

Gow. No; fifteen hundred foot, five hundred horse,

Are march'd up to my lord of Lancaster, Against Northumberland and the archbishop.

Fal. Comes the king back from Wales, my noble lord?

Ch. Just. You shall have letters of me presently: Come, go along with me, good master Gower.

Fal. My lord!

Ch. Just. What's the matter?

Fal. Master Gower, shall I entreat you with me to dinner?

Gow. I must wait upon my good lord here: I thank you, good Sir John.

Ch. Just. Sir John, you loiter here too long, being you are to take soldiers up in counties as you go.

Fal. Will you sup with me, master Gower?

Ch. Just. What foolish master taught you these manners, Sir John?

Fal. Master Gower, if they become me not, he was a fool that taught them me.—This is the right fencing grace, my lord; tap for tap, and so part fair.

Ch. Just. Now the lord lighten thee! thou art a great fool. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The same. Another Street. Enter PRINCE HENRY and POINS.

P. Hen. Trust me, I am exceeding weary.

Poins. Is it come to that? I had thought, weariness durst not have attached one of so high blood.

P. Hen. 'Faith, it does me; though it discolours the complexion of my greatness to acknowledge it. Doth it not show vilely in me to desire small beer?

Poins. Why, a prince should not be so loosely studied, as to remember so weak a composition.

P. Hen. Belike then, my appetite was not princely got; for, by my troth, I do now remember the poor creature, small beer. But, indeed, these humble considerations make me out of love with my greatness. What a disgrace is it to me, to remember thy name? or to know thy face to-morrow? or to take note how many pair of silk stockings thou hast; viz. these and those that were the peach-colour'd ones? or to bear the inventory of thy shirts; as, one for superfluity, and one other for use?—but that the tennis-court keeper knows better than I; for it is a low ebb of linen with thee, when thou keepest not racket there; as thou hast not done a great while, because the rest of thy low-countries have made a shift to eat up thy holland; and God knows, whether those that bawl out the ruins of thy linen,¹ shall inherit his kingdom: but the midwives say, the children are not in the fault; whereupon the world increases, and kindreds are mightily strengthened.

¹ His bastard children, wrapt up in his old shirts. The ellipsis out for out of, Steevens says, is sometimes used.

² Ostentation is not here used for boastful show, but for mere outward show:—

'Like one well studied in a sad ostent

'To please 'his grandam.'—Merchant of Venice.

³ A proper fellow of my hands is the same as a tall fellow of his hands, which has been already explained

Poins. How ill it follows, after you have laboured so hard, you should talk so idly? Tell me, how many good young princes would do so, their fathers being so sick as yours at this time is?

P. Hen. Shall I tell thee one thing, Poins?

Poins. Yes; and let it be an excellent good thing.

P. Hen. It shall serve among wits of no higher breeding than thine.

Poins. Go to; I stand the push of your one thing that you will tell.

P. Hen. Why, I tell thee,—it is not meet that should be sad, now my father is sick: albeit I could tell to thee (as to one it pleases me, for fault of a better, to call my friend,) I could be sad, and sad indeed too.

Poins. Very hardly, upon such a subject.

P. Hen. By this hand, thou think'st me as far in the devil's book, as thou, and Falstaff, for obduracy and persistency: Let the end try the man. But I tell thee,—my heart bleeds inwardly, that my father is so sick: and keeping such vile company as thou art, hath in reason taken from me all ostentation² of sorrow.

Poins. The reason?

P. Hen. What would'st thou think of me, if I should weep?

Poins. I would think thee a most princely hypocrite.

P. Hen. It would be every man's thought: and thou art a blessed fellow, to think as every man thinks; never a man's thoughts in the world keeps the road-way better than thine: every man would think me a hypocrite indeed. And what accites your most worshipful thought to think so?

Poins. Why, because you have been so lewd, and so much engrafed to Falstaff.

P. Hen. And to thee.

Poins. By this light, I am well spoken of, I can hear it with mine own ears: the worst that they can say of me is; that I am a second brother, and that I am a proper fellow of my hands;³ and those two things, I confess, I cannot help. By the mass, here comes Bardolph.

P. Hen. And the boy that I gave Falstaff: he had him from me christian; and look, if the fat villain have not transformed him aye.

Enter BARDOLPH and Page.

Bard. 'Save your grace!

P. Hen. And yours, most noble Bardolph!

Bard. Come, you virtuous ass [To the Page,] you bashful fool, must you be blushing? wherefore blush you now? What a maidenly man at arms are you become! Is it such a matter, to get a pot-telepot's maidenhead?

Page. He called me even now, my lord, through a red-lattice,⁴ and I could discern no part of his face from the window: at last, I spied his eyes; and, methought, he had made two holes in the ale-wife's new petticoat, and peeped through.

P. Hen. Hath not the boy profited?

Bard. Away, you whoreson upright rabbit, away!

Page. Away, you rascally Althea's dream, away!

P. Hen. Instruct us, boy: What dream, boy?

Page. Marry, my lord, Althea dreamed she was delivered of a firebrand; and therefore I call him her dream.

P. Hen. A crown's worth of good interpretation. —There it is, boy. [Gives him money.]

Poins. O, that this good blossom could be kept from cankers!—Well, there is sixpence to preserve thee.

in a note on The Merry Wives of Windsor, Act i. Sc. 4. That a tall or a proper fellow was sometimes used in an equivocal sense for a thief, there can be no doubt. Cotgrave has a proverb, 'Les beaux hommes at gibet.' The gibet makes an end of proper men.⁵ A striker is one of its meanings, according to Cotgrave, 'who taking a proper youth to be his apprentice, to teach him the order of striking and foisting.'—Greene's Art of Cony-Catching.

⁴ An alehouse widow.

Bard. An you do not make him be hanged among you, the gallows shall have wrong.

P. Hen. And how doth thy master, Bardolph? Bard. Well, my lord. He heard of your grace's coming to town; there's a letter for you.

Poins. Delivered with good respect.—And how doth the martlemas,¹ your master?

Bard. In bodily health, sir.

Poins. Marry, the immortal part needs a physician; but that moves not him; though that be sick, it dies not.

P. Hen. I do allow this wen² to be as familiar with me as my dog: and he holds his place; for, look you, how he writes.

Poins. [Reads.] John Falstaff, knight,—Every man must know that, as oft as he has occasion to name himself. Even like those that are kin to the king; for they never prick their finger, but they say, There is some of the king's blood spilt: How comes that? says he that takes upon him not to conceive: the answer is as ready as a borrower's³ cap; I am the king's poor cousin, sir.

P. Hen. Nay, they will be kin to us, or they will fetch it from Japhet. But the letter:—

Poins. Sir John Falstaff, knight, to the son of the king, nearest his father, Harry, Prince of Wales, greeting.—Why, this is a certificate.

P. Hen. Peace!

Poins. I will imitate the honourable Roman⁴ in brevity:—he sure means brevity in breath; short-winded.—I commend me to thee, I commend thee, and I leave thee. Be not too familiar with Poins: for he misuses thy favours so much, that he swears, thou art to marry his sister Nell. Repent at idle times as thou may'st, and so farewell.

Thine, by yea and no (which is as much as to say, as thou usest him,) Jack Falstaff, with my familiars; John with my brothers and sisters; and Sir John, with all Europe.

My lord, I will steep this letter in sack, and make him eat it.

P. Hen. That's to make him eat twenty of his words. But do you use me thus, Ned? must I marry your sister?

Poins. May the wench have no worse fortune! but I never said so.

P. Hen. Well, thus we play the fools with the time: and the spirits of the wise sit in the clouds, and mock us.—Is your master here in London?

Bard. Yes, my lord.

P. Hen. Where sups he? doth the old boar feed in the old frank?⁵

Bard. At the old place, my lord; in Eastcheap.

P. Hen. What company?

Page. Ephesians, my lord; of the old church.⁶

P. Hen. Sup any women with him?

Page. None, my lord, but old mistress Quickly, and mistress Doll Tear-sheet.

P. Hen. What pagan⁷ may that be?

Page. A proper gentleman, sir, and a kinswoman of my master's.

P. Hen. Even such kin as the parish heifers are to the town bull. Shall we steal upon them, Ned, at supper?

1 Falstaff is before called 'thou latter spring, all-hal-louen summer,' and Poins now calls him martlemas, a corruption of martinmas, which means the same thing. The feast of St. Martin being considered the latter end of autumn. Este de St. Martin is a French proverb for a late summer. It means therefore an old fellow with juvenile passions.

2 Swollen excrescence.

3 The old copy reads a borrowed cap. The emendation is Warburton's.

4 That is Julius Caesar. Falstaff alludes to the veni, vidi, vici, which he afterwards quotes.

5 A sty, a place to fatten a boar in.

6 A cant phrase probably signifying topers, or jolly companions of the old sort.

7 Massinger, in The City Madam, has used this phrase for a wench:—

—In all these places

I've had my several pagans billeted.

Poins. I am your shadow, my lord; I'll follow you.

P. Hen. Sirrah, you boy,—and Bardolph;—no word to your master, that I am yet come to town: There's for your silence.

Bard. I have no tongue, sir.

Page. And for mine, sir,—I will govern it.

P. Hen. Fare ye well; go. [Exeunt BARDOLPH and Page.]—This Doll Tear-sheet should be some road.

Poins. I warrant you, as common as the way between Saint Albans and London.

P. Hen. How might we see Falstaff bestow⁸ himself to-night in his true colours, and not ourselves be seen?

Poins. Put on two leather jerkins, and aprons, and wait upon him at his table as drawers.

P. Hen. From a god to a bull? a heavy descension!⁹ it was Jove's case. From a prince to a prentice? a low transformation! that shall be mine: for, in every thing, the purpose must weigh with the folly. Follow me, Ned. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. Warkworth. —Before the Castle. Enter NORTHUMBERLAND, LADY NORTHUMBERLAND, and LADY PERCY.

North. I pray thee, loving wife, and gentle daughter,

Give even way unto my rough affairs;

Put not you on the visage of the times,

And be, like them, to Percy troublesome.

Lady N. I have given over, I will speak no more: Do what you will; your wisdom be your guide.

North. Alas, sweet wife, my honour is at pawn; And, but my going, nothing can redeem it.

Lady P. O, yet, for God's sake, go not to these wars!

The time was, father, that you broke your word, When you were more endear'd to it than now; When your own Percy, when my heart's dear Harry, Threw many a northward look, to see his father Bring up his powers: but he did long in vain.

Who then persuaded you to stay at home?

There were two honours lost; yours, and your son's.

For yours,—may heavenly glory brighten it!

For his,—it stuck upon him, as the sun

In the grey vault of heaven: and, by his light,

Did all the chivalry of England move

To do brave acts; he was, indeed, the glass

Wherein the noble youth did dress themselves.

He had no legs, that practis'd not his gait:¹⁰

And speaking thick,¹¹ which nature made his blemish,

Became the accents of the valiant;

For those that could speak low, and tardily,

Would turn their own perfection to abuse,

To seem like him: So that, in speech, in gait,

In diet, in affections of delight,

In military rules, humours of blood,

He was the mark and glass, copy and book,¹²

That fashion'd others. And him,—O wondrous him!

O miracle of men!—him did you leave

(Second to none, unseconded by you,)

To look upon the hideous god of war

In disadvantage; to abide a field,

Where nothing but the sound of Hotspur's name

Did seem defensible:¹³—so you left him:

S i. e. act. In a MS. letter from Secretary Conway to Buckingham, at the Isle of Ree, 'also what the lords have advanced for the expedition towards you, since Saturday that they returned from Windsor with charge to bestow themselves seriously in it.'—Conway Papers.

9 The folio reads descension.

10 The twenty-two following lines were first given in the folio.

11 Speaking thick is speaking quick; rapidity of utterance. Baret translates the anhiltus creber of Virgil thicke-breathing.

12 Thus in the Rape of Lucrece:—

'For princes are the glass, the school, the book'

'Where subjects' eyes do learn, do read, do look.'

13 Defensible does not in this place mean capable of defence, but bearing strength, furnishing the means of defence: the passive for the active participle.

Never, O never, do his ghost the wrong,
To hold your honour more precise and nice
With others, than with him; let them alone;
The marshal, and the archbishop, are strong:
Had my sweet Harry had but half their numbers,
To-day might I, hanging on Hotspur's neck,
Have talk'd of Monmouth's grave.

North. Beshrew¹ your heart,
Fair daughter! you do draw my spirits from me,
With new lamenting ancient oversights.
But I must go, and meet with danger there;
Or it will seek me in another place,
And find me worse provided.

Lady N. O, fly to Scotland,
Till that the nobles, and the armed commons,
Have of their puissance made a little taste.

Lady P. If they get ground and vantage of the king,

Then join you with them, like a rib of steel,
To make strength stronger; but, for all our loves,
First let them try themselves: So did your son;
He was so suffer'd; so came I a widow;
And never shall have length of life enough,
To rain upon remembrance² with mine eyes,
That it may grow and sprout as high as heaven,
For recordation to my noble husband.

North. Come, come, go in with me: 'tis with my mind,

As with the tide swell'd up unto its height,
That makes a still-stand, running neither way.
Fain would I go to meet the archbishop,
But many thousand reasons hold me back:—
I will resolve for Scotland; there am I,
Till time and vantage crave my company. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. London. A Room in the Boar's Head Tavern in Eastcheap. Enter Two Drawers.

1 Draw. What the devil hast thou brought there?
apple-Johns? thou know'st, Sir John cannot endure an apple-John.³

2 Draw. Mass, thou sayest true: The prince once set a dish of apple-Johns before him, and told him, there were five more Sir Johns: and, putting off his hat, said, I will now take my leave of these six dry, round, old, withered knights. It angered him to the heart; but he hath forgot that.

1 Draw. Why then, cover, and set them down:
And see if thou canst find out Sneak's noise;⁴
mistress Tear-sheet would fain hear some music.
Despatch:—The room where they supped is too hot;
they'll come in straight.

2 Draw. Sirrah, here will be the prince, and master Poins anon: and they will put on two of our jerkins, and aprons; and Sir John must not know of it: Bardolph hath brought word.

1 Draw. By the mass, here will be old utis:⁵ It will be an excellent stratagem.

2 Draw. I'll see if I can find out Sneak. [Exit.]

Enter Hostess and DOLL TEAR-SHEET.

Host. Pfiaith, sweet heart, methinks now you are

² Alluding to the plant rosemary, so called because it was the symbol of remembrance, and therefore used at weddings and funerals.

³ This apple, which was said to keep two years, is well described by Philips:—

'Nor John-apple, whose wither'd rind entrench'd
By many a furrow, aptly represents Decrepid age.'

Falstaff has already said of himself, 'I am withered like an old apple-John.'

⁴ A noise, or, a concert, was used for a set or company of musicians. Sneak was a street minstrel, and therefore the drawer goes out to listen for his band.
Falstaff addresses them as a company in another scene.
In the old play of King Henry IV. 'There came the young prince, and two or three more of his companions, and called for wine good store, and then sent for a noyse of musitians,' &c.

⁵ Old utis is old festivity, or merry doings. Utis, or utas, being the eighth day after any festival; any day between the feast and the eighth day was said to be within the utas. So Sir Thomas More, in the last letter in an excellent good temperality: your pulsidge beats as extraordinarily as heart would desire; and your colour, I warrant you, is as red as any rose;

But, if faith, you have drunk too much canaries; and that's a marvellous searching wine, and it perfumes the blood ere one can say,—What's this? How do you now?

Dol. Better than I was. Hem.

Host. Why, that's well said; a good heart's worth gold. Look, here comes Sir John.

Enter FALSTAFF, singing.

Fal. When Arthur first in court.⁶—Empty the jordan.—And was a worthy king: [Exit Drawer.]
How now, mistress Doll?

Host. Sick of a calm: yea, good sooth.

Fal. So is all her sect;⁷ an they be once in a calm, they are sick.

Dol. You muddy rascal, is that all the comfort you give me?

Fal. You make fat rascals,⁸ mistress Doll.

Dol. I make them! gluttony and diseases make them; I make them not.

Fal. If the cook help to make the gluttony, you help to make the diseases, Doll: we catch of you, Doll, we catch of you; grant that, my poor virtue,
grant that.

Dol. Ay, marry; our chains, and our jewels.

Fal. Your brooches, pearls, and owches.⁹—for to serve bravely, is to come halting off, you know: To come off the breach with his pike bent bravely, and to surgery bravely; to venture upon the charged chambers!¹⁰ bravely:—

Dol. Hang yourself, you muddy conger, hang yourself!

Host. By my troth, this is the old fashion; you two never meet, but you fall to some discord: you are both, in good truth, as rheumatic!¹¹ as two dry toasts; you cannot one bear with another's confirm-ties. What the good-year! one must bear, and that must be you: [To DOLL.] you are the weaker vessel, as they say, the emptier vessel.

Dol. Can a weak empty vessel bear such a huge full hog'shead? there's a whole merchant's venture of Bordeaux stuff in him: you have not seen a hulk better stuffed in the hold.—Come, I'll be friends with thee, Jack: thou art going to the wars; and whether I shall ever see thee again, or no, there is nobody cares.

Re-enter Drawer.

Draw. Sir, ancient¹² Pistol's below, and would speak with you.

Dol. Hang him, swaggering rascal! let him not come hither: it is the foul-mouth'd rogue in England.

Host. If he swagger, let him not come here; no,
by my faith; I must live amongst my neighbours;

he wrote to his daughter the day before his execution, desires to die on the morrow, 'For it is Saint Thomas'
even, and the utas of Saint Peter.'

⁶ The entire ballad is in the first volume of Dr. Percy's Reliques of Ancient Poetry.

⁷ Steevens is right in his assertion that sect and sex were anciently synonymous; the instances of the use of the one for the other are too numerous for it to have been a mere vulgar corruption.

⁸ Falstaff alludes to a phrase of the forest. 'Rascal
(says Putehan, p. 150) is properly the hunting term given to young deer leane and out of season, and not to people.'

⁹ Falstaff gives these splendid names to something very different from gems and ornaments, as we still use carbuncle. The passage, as Johnson observed, is not deserving of further illustration.

¹⁰ To understand this quibble it is necessary to remember that a chamber signifies not only an apartment, but a small piece of ordnance.

¹¹ Mrs. Quickly means splenetic. It should be remarked, however, that rheum seems to have been a cant word for spleen.

¹² That is, 'he that carrieth the colours to a company of foot soldiers, an ensign bearer.'—Philips. Falstaff was captain, Peto lieutenant, and Pistol ensign. I have met with the word in old MSS. written ansine.

I'll no swaggerers: I am in good name and fame with the very best:—Shut the door;—there comes no swaggerers here: I have not lived all this while to have swaggering now:—shut the door, I pray you.

Fal. Dost thou hear, hostess?

Host. 'Pray you, pacify yourself, Sir John; there comes no swaggerers here.

Fal. Dost thou hear? it is mine ancient.

Host. Tilly-fally, Sir John, never tell me; your ancient swaggerer comes not in my doors. I was before master Tisick, the deputy, the other day; and, as he said to me,—it was no longer ago than Wednesday last,—Neighbour Quickly, says he;—master Dumb, our minister, was by then;—Neighbour Quickly, says he, receive those that are civil; for, saith he, you are in an ill name;—now he said so, I can tell whereupon; for, says he, you are an honest woman, and well thought on; therefore take heed what guests you receive: Receive, says he, no swaggering companions.—There comes none here;—you would bless you to hear what he said:—no, I'll no swaggerers.

Fal. He's no swaggerer, hostess; a tame cheater,² he, you may stroke him as gently as a puppy greyhound: he will not swagger with a Barbary hen, if her feathers turn back in any show of resistance.—Call him up, drawer.

Host. Cheater, call you him? I will bar no honest man my house, nor no cheater:³ But I do not love swaggering; by my troth, I am the worse, when one says—swagger: feel, masters, how I shake; look you, I warrant you.

Dol. So you do, hostess.

Host. Do I? yea, in very truth, do I, an'twere an aspen leaf: I cannot abide swaggerers.

Enter PISTOL, BARDOLPH, and Page.

Pist. 'Save you, Sir John!

Fal. Welcome, ancient Pistol. Here, Pistol, I charge you with a cup of sack: do you discharge upon mine hostess.

Pist. I will discharge upon her, Sir John, with two bullets.

Fal. She is pistol-proof, sir; you shall hardly offend her.

Host. Come, I'll drink no proofs, nor no bullets: I'll drink no more than will do me good, for no man's pleasure, I.

Pist. Then to you, mistress Dorothy; I will charge you.

Dol. Charge me? I scorn you, scurvy companion.

1 The names of Master Tisick and Master Dumb are ludicrously intended to denote that the deputy was purey and short-winded; the minister one of those who preached only the homilies set forth by authority. The puritans nicknamed them Dumb-dogs, and the opprobrious epithet continued in use as late as the reign of King Charles II. See Burnet's Own Times, vol. i. p. 395.

2 A cheater sometimes meant an unfair gamester. But lame cheater seems to have meant a rogue in general.

3 The humour consists in Mrs. Quickly's mistaking a cheater for an escheator, or officer of the exchequer. Greene, in his Mihil Munchauce, has the following passage, which gives the origin of the phrase:—'They call their art by a new found name as cheating, themselves cheators, and the dice chieters: borrowing the term from among our lawyers, with whom all such casuals as fall to the lord, at the holding of his leets, as waives, strales, and such like, be called chetes, and are accountably to be eschated to the lord's use.' Lord Coke, in his Charge at Norwich, 1607, puns upon the equivocal:—'But if you will be content to let the eschator alone, and not look into his actions, he will be contented by deceiving you to change his name, taking unto himself the two last syllables only, with the es left out, and so turn cheater.'

4 To nip a bung, in the cant of thievery, was to cut a purse. 'Bung is now used for a pocket, heretofore for a purse.'—Belman of London, 1610. Doll means to call him pick-pocket. Cuttle, and cuttle-bung, were also cant terms for the knife used by cutpurses. These terms are therefore used by metonymy for a thief.

5 Lacea, marks of his commission.

6 An expression of disdain.

7 There is a personage of the same stamp with Pistol

What! you poor, base, rascally, cheating, lack-linen mate! Away, you mouldy rogue; away! I am meat for your master.

Pist. I know you, mistress Dorothy.

Dol. Away, you cut-purse rascal! you filthy bung,⁴ away! by this wine, I'll thrust my knife in your mouldy chaps, an you play the saucy cuttle with me. Away, you bottle-ale rascal! you basket-hilt stale juggler, you!—Since when, I pray you, sir?—What, with two points⁵ on your shoulder? much!⁶

Pist. I will murder your ruff for this.

Fal. No more, Pistol; I would not have you go off here: discharge yourself of our company, Pistol.

Host. No, good captain Pistol; not here, sweet captain.

Dol. Captain! thou abominable damned cheater, art thou not ashamed to be called—captain? If captains were of my mind, they would truncheon you out, for taking their names upon you before you have earned them. You a captain, you slave! for what? for tearing a poor whore's ruff in a bawdy-house?—He a captain! Hang him, rogue! He lives upon mouldy stewed prunes, and dried cakes.⁷ A captain! these villains will make the word captain as odious as the word occupy;⁸ which was an excellent good word before it was ill-sorted; therefore captains had need look to it.

Bard. 'Pray thee, go down, good ancient.

Fal. Hark thee hither, mistress Doll.

Pist. Not I: tell thee what, corporal Bardolph;—I could tear her:—I'll be revenged on her.

Page. 'Pray thee, go down.

Pist. I'll see her damned first;—to Pluto's damned lake, to the infernal deep, with Erebus and tortures vile also. Hold hook and line, say I. Down! down, dogs! down, fautors!⁹ Have we not Hiren here?¹⁰

Host. Good captain Peesel, be quiet; it is very late, ifaith: I beseech you now, aggravate your choler.

Pist. These be good humours, indeed! Shall packhorses, And hollow pampers' jades of Asia, Which cannot go but thirty miles a day,¹¹ Compare with Cæsars, and with Cannibals,¹² And Trojan Greeks? nay, rather damn them with King Cerberus; and let the welkin roar. Shall we fall foul for toys?

Host. By my troth, captain, these are very bitter words.

in A Woman's a Weathercock, by Nat. Field, 1612 who is thus described:—

'Thou unspeakable rascal, thou a soldier!

That with thy slops and cat-a-mountain face, Thy blather-chaps, and thy robustious words, Fright'st the poor whore, and terribly dost exact A weekly subsidy, twelve pence a piece,

Whereon thou livest; and on my conscience

'Thou snap'st besides with cheats and cutpurses.'

'Mouldy stewed prunes and dried cakes' are put for the refuse of brothels.

8 This word had been perverted to an obscene meaning. An occupant was also a term for a woman of the town, and an occupier meant a wench. Ben Jonson, in his Discoveries, says:—'Many, out of their own obscene apprehensions, refuse proper and fit words, as occupy, nature,' &c.

9 Traitors, rascals.

10 Shakespeare has put into the mouth of Pistol a tissue of absurd and fustian passages from many ridiculous old plays. Part of this speech is parodied from The Battle of Alcazar, 1594. Have we not Hiren here, is probably a line from a play of George Peele's, called The Turkish Mahomet and Hiren the fair Greek. It is often used ludicrously by subsequent dramatists. Hiren, from its resemblance to siren, was used for a seducing woman, and consequently for a courtesan. Pistol, in his raunts, twice brings in the same words, but apparently meaning to give his word the name of Hiren. Mrs. Quickly, with admirable simplicity, supposes him to ask for a woman.

11 This is a parody of the lines addressed by Tamborlane to the captive princes who draw his chariot, in Marlowe's Tamborlane, 1590.

12 A blunder for Hannibal.

Bard. Be gone, good ancient: this will grow to a brawl anon.

Pist. Die men, ike dogs: give crowns like pins; Have we not Hiren here?

Host. O' my word, captain; there's none such here. What the good-year! do you think, I would deny her? for God's sake, be quiet.

Pist. Then feed and be fat, my fair Calipolis: Come, give's you some sack.

*Si fortuna me tormenta, sperato me contenta.*²— Fear we broadsides? no, let the fiend give fire: Give me some sack;—and, sweetheart, lie thou there.

[Laying down his sword.]
Come we to full points here; and are et ceteras nothing?³

Fal. Pistol, I would be quiet.

Pist. Sweet knight, I kiss thy neif!⁴ What! we have seen the seven stars.

Dol. Thrust him down stairs; I cannot endure such a fustian rascal.

Pist. Thrust him down stairs! know we not Gal- loway nags?⁵

Fal. Quoit⁶ him down, Bardolph, like a shove- goat shilling: nay, if he do nothing but speak nothing, he shall be nothing here.

Bard. Come, get you down stairs.

Pist. What! shall we have incision? shall we imbrue?— [Snatching up his sword.]
Then death rock me asleep, abridge my doleful days!

Why, then, let grievous, ghastly, gaping wounds Untwine the sisters three! Come, Atropos, I say!⁷

Host. Here's goodly stuff toward!

Fal. Give me my rapier, boy.

Dol. I pray thee, Jack, I pray thee, do not draw.

Fal. Get you down stairs.

[Drawing, and driving PISTOL out.]

Host. Here's a goodly tumult! I'll forswear keeping house, afore I'll be in these tiritris and frights. So; murder, I warrant you.—Alas, alas! put up your naked weapons, put up your naked weapons.

[Exeunt PISTOL and BARDOLPH.]

Dol. I pray thee, Jack, be quiet; the rascal is gone. Ah, you whoreson little valiant villain, you.

Host. Are you not hurt i'the groin? methought, he made a shrewd thrust at your belly.

Re-enter BARDOLPH.

Fal. Have you turned him out of doors?

Bard. Yes, sir. The rascal's drunk: you have hurt him, sir, in the shoulder.

Fal. A rascal! to brave me!

Dol. Ah, you sweet little rogue, you! Alas, poor ape, how thou sweat'st! Come, let me wipe thy face;—come on, you whoreson chops:—Ah, rogue!

i'faith, I love thee. Thou art as valorous as Hector of Troy, worth five of Agamemnon, and ten times better than the nine worthies. Ah, villain!

Fal. A rascally slave! I will toss the rogue in a blanket.

Dol. Do, if thou darest for thy heart: if thou dost, I'll canvass thee between a pair of sheets.

Enter Music.

Page. The music is come, sir.

Fal. Let them play:—Play, sirs;—Sit on my knee, Doll. A rascally bragging slave! the rogue fled from me like quicksilver.

Dol. I'faith, and thou followedst him like a church. Thou whoreson little tidy Bartholomew boar-pig,⁸ when wilt thou leave fighting o' days, and foining o' nights, and begin to patch up thine old body for heaven?

Enter behind PRINCE HENRY and POINS, disguised like Drawers.

Fal. Peace, good Doll! do not speak like a death's head: do not bid me remember mine end.

Dol. Sirrah, what humour is the prince of?

Fal. A good shallow young fellow: he would have made a good pantler, he would have chipped bread well.

Dol. They say, Poins has a good wit.

Fal. He a good wit? hang him, baboon! his wit is as thick as Tewksbury mustard; there is no more conceit in him, than in a mallet.

Dol. Why does the prince love him so then?

Fal. Because their legs are both of a bigness: and he plays at quoits well; and eats conger and fennel;⁹ and drinks off candles' ends for flap-dragons;¹⁰ and rides the wild mare with the boys;¹¹ and jumps upon joint-stools; and swears with a good grace; and wears his boot very smooth, like unto the sign of the leg: and breeds no bate with telling of discreet stories;¹² and such other gambol faculties he hath, that show a weak mind and an able body, for the which the prince admits him: for the prince himself is such another; the weight of a hair will turn the scales between their avoirdupois.

P. Hen. Would not this nave of a wheel¹³ have his ears cut off?

Poins. Let's beat him before his whore.

P. Hen. Look, if the withered elder hath not his poll clawed like a parrot.

Poins. Is it not strange, that desire should so many years outlive performance?

Fal. Kiss me, Doll.

P. Hen. Saturn and Venus this year in conjunction!¹⁴ what says the almanack to that?

Untwist the thread of mortal strife,
Send death, and let me die.¹

⁸ Doll says this in coaxing playful ridicule of Falstaff's enormous bulk. Roasted pigs were formerly among the chief attractions of Bartholomew fair; they were sold, piping hot, in booths and on stalls, and were ostentatiously displayed to excite the appetite of passers-gers. It was a common subject of allusion.

⁹ Fennel was generally esteemed an inflammatory herb, and therefore to eat conger and fennel was to eat two high and hot things together. Fennel was also regarded as an emblem of flattery.

¹¹ Riding the wild mare is another name for the childish sport of see-saw, or what the French call bascule and balanoire.

¹² Mr. Douce thinks Falstaff's meaning to be that Poins excites no censure by telling his companions modest stories, or, in plain English, that he tells them nothing but immodest ones.

¹³ Falstaff is humourously called nave of a wheel, from his rotundity of figure. The equivocal between nave and knave is obvious.

¹⁴ This was indeed a prodigy. The astrologers, says Ficinus, remark that Saturn and Venus are never conjoined.

¹ This is again a burlesque upon a line in The Battle of Alcazar, in which Muley Mahomet enters to his wife with lion's flesh on his sword:—

'Feed then and faint not, my faire Calypolis.'

² Pistol is supposed to read this motto on his sword; by singular chance Mr. Douce picked up an old rapier with the same motto in French:—

Si fortune me tourmente, l'esperance me contente.
A representation is given of it in his Illustrations, vol. i. p. 453.

³ That is, Shall we stop here, and have no further entertainment?

⁴ Neif is used by Shakspeare for fist. It is a north country word, to be found in Ray's Collection.

⁵ Common hackneys.

⁶ I. e. pitch him down. The shove-groat shillings were such broad shillings of King Edward VI. as Slencker calls Edward shovel-boards, in The Merry Wives of Windsor, Act i. Sc. 1.

⁷ Pistol makes use of fragments of old ballads as well as old plays:—

'O death, rock me on slepe,

Bring me on quiet rest,' is an ancient song, attributed to Anne Boleyn. There is another in the Gorgious Gallery of Gallant Inventions, 1573, which has furnished him with some of his rhodomontade:—

'I hate this loathsome life,
O Atropos, draw nle,

Poins. And, look, whether the fiery Trigon,¹ his man, be not liasing to his master's old tables, his note-book, his counsel-keeper.

Fal. Thou dost give me flattering busses.

Dol. Nay, truly: I kiss thee with a most constant heart.

Fal. I am old, I am old.

Dol. I love thee better than I love e'er a scurvy young boy of them all.

Fal. What stuff wilt have a kirtle² of? I shall receive money on Thursday: thou shalt have a cap to-morrow. A merry song, come: it grows late, we'll to bed. Thou'lt forget me, when I am gone.

Dol. By my troth thou'lt set me a weeping, an thou sayest so: prove that ever I dress myself handsome till thy return.—Well, hearken the end.

Fal. Some sack, Francis.

P. Hen. Poins. Anon, anon, sir. [Advancing.]

Fal. Ha! a bastard son of the king's?—And art not thou Poins his brother?

P. Hen. Why, thou globe of sinful continents, what a life dost thou lead?

Fal. A better than thou; I am a gentleman, thou art a drawer.

P. Hen. Very true, sir: and I come to draw you out by the ears.

Host. O, the Lord preserve thy good grace! by my troth, welcome to London.—Now the Lord bless that sweet face of thine! O Jesu, are you come from Wales?

Fal. Thou whoreson mad compound of majesty, —by this light flesh and corrupt blood, thou art welcome. [Leaning his hand upon DOLL.]

Dol. How! you fat fool, I scorn you.

Poins. My lord, he will drive you out of your revenge, and turn all to a merriment, if you take not the heat.

P. Hen. You whoreson candle-mine, you, how vilely did you speak of me even now, before this honest, virtuous, civil gentlewoman?

Host. 'Blessing o' your good heart! and so she is, by my troth.

Fal. Didst thou hear me?

P. Hen. Yes; and you knew me, as you did when you ran away by Gads-hill: you knew, I was at your back; and spoke it on purpose, to try my patience.

Fal. No, no, no; not so; I did not think thou wast within hearing.

P. Hen. I shall drive thee then to confess the wilful abuse; and then I know how to handle you.

Fal. No abuse, Hal, on mine honour; no abuse.

P. Hen. Not! to dispraise me; and call me—pantler, and bread-chipper, and I know not what?

Fal. No abuse, Hal.

Poins. No abuse!

Fal. No abuse, Ned, in the world; honest Ned, none. I dispraised him before the wicked, that the wicked might not fall in love with him:—in which doing, I have done the part of a careful friend, and a true subject, and thy father is to give me thanks for it. No abuse, Hal;—none, Ned, none;—no, boys, none.

P. Hen. See now, whether pure fear, and entire cowardice, doth not make thee wrong this virtuous gentlewoman to close with us? Is she of the wicked? Is thine hostess here of the wicked? Or is the boy of the wicked? Or honest Bardolph, whose zeal burns in his nose, of the wicked?

Poins. Answer, thou dead elm, answer.

Fal. The fiend hath pricked down Bardolph irrecoverable; and his face is Lucifer's privy-kitchen, where he doth nothing but roast malt-worms. For the boy,—there is a good angel about him; but the devil outbids him too.³

¹ Trigon or triangle, a term in the old judicial astrology. They called it a fiery trigon when the three upper planets met in a fiery sign; which was thought to denote rage and contention.

² Few words, as Mr. Gifford observes, have occasioned such controversy among the commentators as

P. Hen. For the women,—

Fal. For one of them,—she is in hell already, and burns, poor soul! For the other,—I owe her money; and whether she be damned for that, I know not.

Host. No, I warrant you.

Fal. No, I think thou art not; I think, thou art quit for that: Marry, there is another indictment upon thee, for suffering flesh to be eaten in thy house, contrary to the law;⁴ for the which, I think, thou wilt howl.

Host. All victuallers do so: What's a joint of mutton or two in a whole Lent?

P. Hen. You, gentlewoman,—

Dol. What says your grace?

Fal. His grace says that which his flesh rebels against.

Host. Who knocks so loud at door? look to the door there, Francis.

Enter PETO.

P. Hen. Peto, how now? what news

Peto. The king your father is at Westminster:

And there are twenty weak and wearied posts,

Come from the north: and, as I came along,

I met, and overtook, a dozen captains,

Bare-headed, sweating, knocking at the taverns,

And asking every one for Sir John Falstaff.

P. Hen. By heaven, Poins, I feel me much to blame,

So idly to profane the precious time;

When tempest of commotion, like the south

Borne with black vapour, doth begin to melt,

And drop upon our bare unarmed heads.

Give me my sword, and cloak:—Falstaff, good night.

[Exit PRINCE HENRY, POINS, PETO, and BARDOLPH.]

Fal. Now comes in the sweetest morsel of the night, and we must hence, and leave it unpick'd. [Knocking heard.] More knocking at the door!

Re-enter BARDOLPH.

How now? what's the matter?

Bard. You must away to court, sir, presently; a dozen captains stay at door for you.

Fal. Pay the musicians, sirrah. [To the Page.]—Farewell, hostess;—farewell, Dol.—You see, my good wenches, how men of merit are sought after: the undeserver may sleep, when the man of action is called on. Farewell, good wenches: If I be not sent away post, I will see you again ere I go.

Dol. I cannot speak;—if my heart be not ready to burst;—Well, sweet Jack, have a care of thyself.

Fal. Farewell, farewell.

[Exit FALSTAFF and BARDOLPH.]

Host. Well, fare thee well: I have known thee these twenty-nine years, come peascod-time; but an honest, and truer-hearted man,—Well, fare thee well.

Bard. [Within.] Mistress Tear-sheet,—

Host. What's the matter?

Bard. [Within.] Bid mistress Tear-sheet come to my master.

Host. O run, Doll, run; run, good Doll.

[Exit.]

ACT III.

SCENE I. A Room in the Palace. Enter KING HENRY in his Nightgown, with a Page.

K. Hen. Go, call the earls of Surrey and of Warwick;

But ere they come, bid them o'er-read these letters, kirtle. These familiar terms frequently are the most baffling to the antiquary, for being in general use they were clearly understood by our ancestors, and are not therefore accurately defined in the dictionaries. A kirtle was undoubtedly a petticoat, which sometimes had a body without sleeves attached to it.

³ The quarto reads 'and the devil blinds him too.'

⁴ Baret defines, a 'victualling house, a tavern where

And well consider of them : Make good speed.—

[Exit Page.]

How many thousand of my poorest subjects
Are at this hour asleep!—O sleep, O gentle sleep,
Nature's soft nurse, how have I frighted thee,
That thou no more wilt weigh my eyelids down,
And steep my senses in forgetfulness?
Why rather, sleep, liest thou in smoky cribs,
Upon uneasy pallets stretching thee,
And hush'd with buzzing night-flies to thy slumber;
Than in the perfum'd chambers of the great,
Under the canopies of costly state,
And lull'd with sounds of sweetest melody?
O thou dull god, why liest thou with the vile,
In loathsome beds; and leav'st the kingly couch,
A watch-case,¹ or a common 'larum bell?
Wilt thou upon the high and giddy mast
Seal up the ship-boy's eyes, and rock his brains
In cradle of the rude imperious surge;
And in the visitation of the winds,
Who take the ruffian billows by the top,
Curling their monstrous heads, and hanging them
With deaf'ning clamours in the slippery clouds,²
That, with the hurly,³ death itself awakes?
Canst thou, O partial sleep! give thy repose
To the wet sea-boy in an hour so rude;
And, in the calmest and most stillest night,
With all appliances and means to boot,
Deny it to a king? Then, happy low,⁴ lie down!
Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown.

Enter WARWICK and SURREY.

War. Many good morrows to your majesty!

K. Hen. Is it good morrow, lords?

War. 'Tis one o'clock, and past.

K. Hen. Why then, good morrow⁵ to you all, my lords,

Have you read o'er the letters that I sent you?

War. We have, my liege.

K. Hen. Then you perceive, the body of our kingdom

How foul it is; what rank diseases grow,

And with what danger, near the heart of it.

War. It is but as a body, yet, distemper'd.⁶

Which to his former strength may be restor'd,

With good advice, and little medicine:—

My Lord Northumberland will soon be cool'd.

K. Hen. O heaven! that one might read the book of fate;

And see the revolution of the times

Make mountains level, and the continent

(Weary of solid firmness) melt itself

Into the sea! and, other times, to see

The beachy girdle of the ocean

Too wide for Neptune's hips;⁷ how chances mock, meate is eaten out of due season.⁸ By several statutes made in the reigns of Queen Elizabeth and King James I. for the regulation and observance of fish days, victuallers were expressly forbidden to utter flesh in Lent. The brothels were formerly screened under the pretence of being victualling-houses and taverns.

1 A watch case here may mean the case of a watch-light; but the following article, cited by Strutt in his Manners and Customs. vol. iii. p. 70, from an old inventory, may throw some light upon it:—'Item, a laume (larum) or watche of iron, in an iron case, with two leaden plumets.'

2 Some of the officious modern editors altered clouds to shrouds, meaning the rope ladders of a ship, thus marring the poet's noble image. Stevens judiciously opposed himself to this alteration, but was wrong in asserting that 'shrouds had anciently the same meaning as clouds.' Shrouds were covertures, hiding places of any kind, aerial or otherwise. This will be found the meaning of the word in all the passages cited by Stevens. That clouds was the poet's word there can be no doubt.

3 Hurly is a noise or tumult. As hurly-burly in the first scene of Macbeth. See note there.

4 Warburton's conjecture, that this is a corrupt reading for happy lovely clown, deserves attention.

5 This mode of phraseology, where only two persons are addressed, is not very correct; but Shakspeare has used it again in King Henry VI. Part 2, where York addresses his two friends Salisbury and Warwick.

And changes fill the cup of alteration.

With divers liquors! O, if this were seen,⁹

The happiest youth,—viewing his progress through,

What perils past, what crosses to ensue,—

Would shut the book, and sit him down and die.

'Tis not ten years gone,

Since Richard, and Northumberland, great friends,

Did feast together, and, in two years after,

Were they at wars: It is but eight years since

This Percy was the man nearest my soul;

Who like a brother toil'd in my affairs,

And laid his love and life under my foot;

Yea, for my sake, even to the eyes of Richard,

Gave him defiance. But which of you was by,⁹

(You, cousin Nevil,¹⁰ as I may remember,

[To WARWICK.]

When Richard,—with his eyes brimfull of tears,

Then check'd and rated by Northumberland,—

Did speak these words, now prov'd a prophecy?

Northumberland, thou ladder, by the which

My cousin Bolingbroke ascends my throne;—

Though then, heaven knows, I had no such intent;

But that necessity so bow'd the state,

That I and greatness were compell'd to kiss:—

The time shall come, thus did he follow it,

The time will come, that foul sin, gathering head,

Shall break into corruption:—so went on,

Foretelling this same time's condition,

And the division of our amity.

War. There is a history in all men's lives,

Figuring the nature of the time's decay:¹¹

The which observ'd, a man may prophesy,

With a near aim, of the main chance of things

As yet not come to life; which in their seeds,

And weak beginnings, lie intresured.

Such things become the hatch and brood of time;

And, by the necessary form of this,

King Richard might create a perfect guess,

That great Northumberland, then false to him,

Would, of that seed, grow to a greater falseness;

Which should not find a ground to root upon,

Unless on you.

K. Hen. Are these things then necessities?

Then let us meet them like necessities:—

And that same word even now cries out on us;

They say, the bishop and Northumberland

Are fifty thousand strong.

War. It cannot be, my lord;

Rumour doth double, like the voice and echo,

The numbers of the fear'd:—Please it your grace

To go to bed; upon my life, my lord,

The powers that you already have sent forth,

Shall bring this prize in very easily.

To comfort you the more, I have receiv'd

A certain instance, that Glendower is dead.¹¹

Your majesty hath been this fortnight ill;

6 Distempered means disordered, sick; being only in that state which foreruns or produces diseases.

7 'When I have seen the hungry ocean gain

Advantage on the kingdom of the shore,

And the firm soil win of the wat'ry main,

Increasing store with loss, and loss with store,

When I have seen such interchange of state,' &c.

Shakspeare's sixty-fourth Sonnet

8 This and the three following lines are from the quarto copy. Johnson having misunderstood the line—

'What perils past, what crosses to ensue?'

it may be necessary to remark that the perils are spoken of prospectively, as seen by the youth in the book of fate. The construction is, 'What perils having been past, what crosses are to ensue.'

9 The reference is to King Richard II. Act iv. Sc. 2: but neither Warwick nor the king were present at that conversation. Henry had then ascended the throne; either the king's or the poet's memory failed him.

10 The earldom of Warwick was at this time in the family of Beauchamp, and did not come into that of the Nevils till many years after: when Anne, the daughter of this earl, married Richard Nevil, son of the earl of Salisbury, who makes a conspicuous figure in the Third Part of King Henry VI. under the title of Earl of Warwick.

11 Glendower did not die till after King Henry IV. Shakspeare was led into this error by Holinshed. Vide note on the First Part of King Henry IV. Act iii. Sc. 1.

And these unseason'd hours, perforce, must add
Unto your sickness.

K. Hen. I will take your counsel:
And, were these inward wars once out of hand,
We would, dear lords, unto the Holy Land.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. Court before Justice Shallow's House in Gloucestershire. Enter SHALLOW and SILENCE, meeting; MOULDY, SHADOW, WART, FEEBLE, BULL-CALF, and Servants, behind.

Shal. Come on, come on, come on; give me your hand, sir, give me your hand, sir: an early stirrer, by the rood! And how doth my good cousin Silence?

Sil. Good morrow, good cousin Shallow.

Shal. And how doth my cousin, your bedfellow? and your fairest daughter, and mine, your good-daughter Ellen?

Sil. Alas, a black ouzel, cousin Shallow.

Shal. By yea and nay, sir, I dare say, my cousin William is become a good scholar: He is at Oxford, still, is he not?

Sil. Indeed, sir; to my cost.

Shal. He must then to the inns of court shortly: I was once of Clement's inn, where, I think, they will talk of mad Shallow yet.

Sil. You were called—lusty Shallow, then, cousin.

Shal. By the mass, I was called any thing; and I would have done any thing, indeed, and roundly too. There was I, and little John Doit of Staffordshire, and black George Bare, and Francis Pickbone, and Will Squele a Cotswold man,²—you had not four such swinge-bucklers³ in all the inns of court again: and, I may say to you, we knew where the bona-robas⁴ were; and had the best of them all at commandment. Then was Jack Falstaff, now Sir John, a boy: and page to Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk.

Sil. This Sir John, cousin, that comes hither anon about soldiers?

Shal. The same Sir John, the very same. I saw him break Skogan's⁵ head at the court gate, when he was a crack,⁶ not thus high: and the very same day did I fight with one Sampson Stockfish, a fruiterer, behind Gray's Inn. O, the mad days that I have spent! and to see how many of mine old acquaintance are dead!

Sil. We shall all follow, cousin.

Shal. Certain, 'tis certain; very sure, very sure: death, as the Psalmist saith, is certain to all: all shall die. How a good yoke of bullocks at Stamford fair?

Sil. Truly, cousin, I was not there.

Shal. Death is certain.—Is old Double of your town living yet?

Sil. Dead, sir.

Shal. Dead!—See, see!—he drew a good bow;—And dead!—he shot a fine shoot:—John of Gaunt loved him well, and betted much money on his head. Dead!—he would have clapped it the clout at twelve score;⁷ and carried you a forehead shaft a fourteen and fourteen and a half, that it would have done a man's heart good to see.—How a score of ewes now?

Sil. Thereafter as they be: a score of good ewes may be worth ten pounds.

Shal. And is old Double dead?

Enter BARDOLPH, and one with him.

Sil. Here come two of Sir John Falstaff's men, as I think.

Bard. Good morrow, honest gentlemen: I beseech you, which is Justice Shallow?

Shal. I am Robert Shallow, sir; a poor esquire of this county, and one of the king's justices of the peace: What is your good pleasure with me?

Bard. My captain, sir, commends him to you; my captain, Sir John Falstaff; a tall gentleman, by heaven, and a most gallant leader.

Shal. He greets me well, sir; I knew him a good backward-man: How doth the good knight? may I ask, how my lady his wife doth?

Bard. Sir, pardon; a soldier is better accommodated, than with a wife.

Shal. It is well said, in faith, sir; and it is well said indeed too. Better accommodated!—it is good: yea, indeed, it is: good phrases are surely, and ever were, very commendable. Accommodated!—it comes from accommodo: very good; a good phrase.⁸

Bard. Pardon me, sir; I have heard the word. Phrase, call you it? By this good day, I know not the phrase; but I will maintain the word with my sword, to be a soldierlike word, and a word of exceeding good command. Accommodated: That is, when a man is, as they say, accommodated; or, when a man is,—being,—whereby,—he may be thought to be accommodated; which is an excellent thing.

Enter FALSTAFF.

Shal. It is very just:—Look, here comes good Sir John.—Give me your good hand, give me your worship's good hand: By my troth, you look well, and bear your years very well: welcome, good Sir John.

Fal. I am glad to see you well, good master Robert Shallow:—Master Sure-card, as I think.

Shal. No, Sir John; it is my cousin Silence, in commission with me.

Fal. Good master Silence, it well befits you should be of the peace.

Sil. Your good worship is welcome.

Fal. Fye! this is hot weather.—Gentlemen, have you provided me here half a dozen sufficient men?

Shal. Marry, have we, sir. Will you sit?

Fal. Let me see them, I beseech you.

Shal. Where's the roll? where's the roll? where's the roll?—Let me see, let me see. So, so, so, so: Yea, marry, sir:—Ralph Mouldy:—let them appear as I call; let them do so, let them do so.—Let me see; Where is Mouldy?

saunt pastime, he plaid many sporting parts, although not in such uncivil manner as hath bene of hym reported.⁹ The uncivil reports have relation to the above jests. Ben Jonson introduces Scogan with Skelton in his Masque of The Fortunate Isles, and describes him thus:—

— Skogan, what was he?

O, a fine gentleman, and master of arts

Of Henry the Fourth's time, that made disguises

For the king's sons, and writ in ballad royal

Daintily well.

In rhyme, fine tinkling rhyme, and flowing verse,

With now and then some sense! and he was paid for't,

Regarded, and rewarded; which few poets

Are nowadays.¹⁰

6 A crack is a boy.

7 Hit the white mark at twelve score yards. By the statute 33 Hen. VIII. c. 9, every person turned of seventeen years of age, who shoots at a less distance than twelve score, is to forfeit six shillings and eight pence.

8 It appears that it was fashionable in the poet's time to introduce this word accommodate upon all occasions. Ben Jonson, in his Discoveries, calls it one of the perfunctory terms of the time. The indefinite use of it is well ridiculed by Bardolph's vain attempt to define it.

1 The rood is the cross or crucifix. Rode, Sax.

2 The Cotswold Hills in Gloucestershire were famous for rural sports of all kinds; by distinguishing Will Squele as a Cotswold man, Shallow meant to have it understood that he was well versed in manly exercises, and consequently of a daring spirit and athletic constitution.

3 Swinge-bucklers and swash-bucklers were terms implying rakes and rioters in the time of Shakspeare. See a note on sword and buckler men in the First Part of King Henry IV. Act I. Sc. 3.

4 Buona-roba as we say, good stuff; a good wholesome plump-cheeked wench? Florio.

5 There has been a doughty dispute between Messieurs Ritson and Malone whether there were two Scogans, Henry and John, or only one. Shakspeare probably got his idea of Scogan from his jests, which were published by Andrew Borde in the reign of King Henry VIII. Hollinshed, speaking of the distinguished persons of King Edward the Fourth's time, mentions 'Scogan, a learned gentleman, and student for a time in Oxford, of a pleasaunte witte, and bent to mery devises, in respect whereof he was called into the courte, where giving himself to his natural inclination of mirthe and plea-

Moul. Here, an't please you.

Shal. What think you, Sir John? a good limbed fellow: young, strong, and of good friends.

Fal. Is thy name Mouldy?

Moul. Yea, an't please you.

Fal. 'Tis the more time thou wert used.

Shal. Ha, ha, ha! most excellent, i'faith! things, that are mouldy, lack use: Very singular good!—In faith, well said, Sir John; very well said.

Fal. Prick him. [To SHALLOW.]

Moul. I was pricked well enough before, an you could have let me alone: my old dame will be undone now, for one to do her husbandry, and her drudgery: you need not to have pricked me; there are other men fitter to go out than I.

Fal. Go to; peace, Mouldy, you shall go, Mouldy, it is time you were spent.

Moul. Spent!

Shal. Peace, fellow, peace; stand aside; Know you where you are?—For the other, Sir John:—let me see;—Simon Shadow!

Fal. Ay marry, let me have him to sit under: he's like to be a cold soldier.

Shal. Where's Shadow?

Shad. Here, sir.

Fal. Shadow, whose son art thou?

Shad. My mother's son, sir?

Fal. Thy mother's son! like enough; and thy father's shadow: so the son of the female is the shadow of the male: It is often so, indeed; but not much of the father's substance.

Shad. Do you like him, Sir John?

Fal. Shadow will serve for summer,—prick him;—for we have a number of shadows to fill up the muster book.

Shal. Thomas Wart!

Fal. Where's he?

Wart. Here, sir.

Fal. Is thy name Wart?

Wart. Yea, sir.

Fal. Thou art a very ragged wart.

Shal. Shall I prick him, Sir John?

Fal. It were superfluous; for his apparel is built upon his back, and the whole frame stands upon pins: prick him no more.

Shal. Ha, ha, ha!—you can do it, sir; you can do it: I commend you well.—Francis Feeble!

Fee. Here, sir.

Fal. What trade art thou, Feeble?

Fee. A woman's tailor, sir.

Shal. Shall I prick him, sir?

Fal. You may: but if he had been a man's tailor, he would have pricked you.—Wilt thou make as many holes in an enemy's battle, as thou hast done in a woman's petticoat?

Fee. I will do my good will, sir; you can have no more.

Fal. Well said, good woman's tailor! well said, courageous Feeble! Thou wilt be as valiant as the wrathful dove, or most magnanimous mouse.—Prick the woman's tailor well, master Shallow; deep, master Shallow.

Fee. I would, Wart might have gone, sir.

Fal. I would, thou wert a man's tailor; that thou might'st mend him, and make him fit to go. I cannot put him to a private soldier, that is the leader of so many thousands: Let that suffice, most forcible Feeble.

Fee. It shall suffice, sir.

Fal. I am bound to thee, reverend Feeble.—Who is next?

Shal. Peter Bull-calf of the green!

Fal. Yea, marry, let us see Bull-calf.

Bull. Here, sir.

Fal. 'Fore God, a likely fellow!—Come, prick me Bull-calf till he roar again.

Bull. O lord! good my lord captain,—

Fal. What, dost thou roar before thou art pricked?

Bull. O lord, sir! I am a diseased man.

Fal. What disease hast thou?

Bull. A whoreson cold, sir; a cough, sir; which I caught with ringing in the king's affairs, upon his coronation-day, sir.

Fal. Come, thou shalt go to the wars in a gown; we will have away thy cold; and I will take such order, that thy friends shall ring for thee.—Is here all?

Shal. Here is two¹ more called than your number; you must have but four here, sir;—and so, I pray you, go in with me to dinner.

Fal. Come, I will go drink with you, but I cannot tarry dinner. I am glad to see you, in good troth, master Shallow.

Shal. O, Sir John, do you remember since we lay all night in the windmill in Saint George's Fields.

Fal. No more of that, good master Shallow, no more of that.

Shal. Ha, it was a merry night. And is Jane Night-work alive?

Fal. She lives, master Shallow.

Shal. She never could away with me.²

Fal. Never, never: she would always say, she could not abide master Shallow.

Shal. By the mass, I could anger her to the heart. She was then a bona-roba. Doth she hold her own well?

Fal. Old, old, master Shallow.

Shal. Nay, she must be old; she cannot choose but be old; certain, she's old; and had Robin Night-work by old Night-work, before I came to Clement's Inn.

Sil. That's fifty-five years ago.

Shal. Ha, cousin Silence, that thou hadst seen that that this knight and I have seen!—Ha, Sir John, said I well?

Fal. We have heard the chimes at midnight, master Shallow.

Shal. That we have, that we have, that we have; in faith, Sir John, we have; our watch-word was, Hem, boys!—Come, let's to dinner; come, let's to dinner:—O, the days that we have seen!—Come, come. [Exeunt FAL, SHAL, and SILENCE.]

Bull. Good master corporate Bardolph, stand my friend; and here is four Harry ten shillings³ in French crowns for you. In very truth, sir, I had as lief be hanged, sir, as go: and yet, for mine own part, sir, I do not care; but rather, because I am unwilling, and, for mine own part, have a desire to stay with my friends; else, sir, I did not care, for mine own part, so much.

Bard. Go to; stand aside.

Moul. And, good master corporal captain, for my old dame's sake, stand my friend: she has nobody to do any thing about her, when I am gone: and she is old, and cannot help herself: you shall have forty, sir.

Bard. Go to; stand aside.

Fee. By my troth, I care not;—a man can die but once;—we owe God a death;—I'll ne'er bear a base mind:—an't be my destiny, so; an't be not, so: No man's too good to serve his prince; and let it go which way it will, he that dies this year is quit for the next.

Bard. Well said; thou'rt a good fellow.

Fee. 'Faith, I'll bear no base mind.

Re-enter FALSTAFF, and Justices.

Fal. Come, sir, which men shall I have?

¹ There is in fact but one more called than Falstaff required, perhaps we might with Mr. Capel omit the word two.

² This was a common expression of dislike; which is even used at a later period by Locke in his Conduct of the Understanding. It is of some antiquity also; for I find it frequently in Herman's Vulgaria, 1519:—'He cannot away to marry Thetis, or to lie with her: The-tidis connubia vitat. I cannot away to be guilty of dissembling: Non sustineo esse conscius mihi dissimulanti.'

³ There were no coins of ten shillings value in Henry the Fourth's time. Shakespeare's Harry ten shillings were those of Henry VII. or VIII. He thought that those might do for any other Henry.

Shal. Four, of which you please.

Bard. Sir, a word with you:—I have three pound¹ to free Mouldy and Bull-calf.

Fal. Go to; well.

Shal. Come, Sir John, which four will you have?

Fal. Do you choose for me.

Shal. Marry then, Mouldy, Bull-calf, Feeble, and Shadow

Fal. Mouldy, and Bull-calf:—For you, Mouldy, stay at home till you are past service:—and, for your part, Bull-calf,—grow till you come unto it; I will none of you.

Shal. Sir John, Sir John, do not yourself wrong: they are your likeliest men, and I would have you served with the best.

Fal. Will you tell me, master Shallow, how to choose a man? Care I for the limb, the thewes,² the stature, bulk, and big assemblance of a man! Give me the spirit, master Shallow.—Here's Wart;—you see what a ragged appearance it is: he shall charge you, and discharge you, with the motion of a pewterer's hammer; come off, and on, swifter than he that gibbets-on the brewer's bucket. And this same half-fac'd fellow, Shadow,—give me this man; he presents no mark to the enemy: the foe-man may with as great aim level at the edge of a penknife: And, for a retreat,—how swiftly will this Feeble, the woman's tailor, run off? O, give me the spare men, and spare me the great ones.—Put me a caliver³ into Wart's hand, Bardolph.

Bard. Hold, Wart, traverse:⁴ thus, thus, thus.

Fal. Come, manage me your caliver. So:—very well:—go to:—very good:—exceeding good.—O, give me always a little, lean, old, chapped, bald shot.⁵—Well said, i' faith Wart; thou'rt a good scab: hold, there's a tester for thee.

Shal. He is not his craft's-master, he doth not do it right. I remember at Mile-end green⁶ (when I lay at Clement's Inn,—I was then Sir Dagonet in Arthur's show,) there was a little quiver⁸ fellow, and 'a would manage you his piece thus: and 'a would about, and about, and come you in, and come you in: rah, tah, tah, would 'a say; bounce, would 'a say; and away again would 'a go, and again would 'a come:—I shall never see such a fellow.

Fal. These fellows will do well, master Shallow—God keep you, master Silence; I will not use many words with you:—Fare you well, gentlemen both: I thank you: I must a dozen mile to-night.—Bardolph, give the soldiers coats.

Shal. Sir John, heaven bless you, and prosper your affairs, and send us peace! As you return, visit my house; let our old acquaintance be renewed: peradventure, I will with you to the court.

Fal. I would you would, master Shallow.

Shal. Go to; I have spoke, at a word. Fare you well.

[Exeunt SHALLOW and SILENCE.]

Fal. Fare you well, gentle gentlemen. On, Bardolph; lead the men away. [Exeunt BARDOLPH, Recruits, &c.] As I return, I will fetch off these justices: I do see the bottom of Justice Shallow. Lord, lord, how subject we old men are to this vice of lying! This same starved justice hath done nothing but prate to me of the wildness of his youth, and the feats he had done about Turnbush Street⁹ and every third word a lie, duer paid to the hearer than the Turk's tribute. I do remember him at Clement's Inn, like a man made after supper of a cheese-paring: when he was naked, he was, for all the world like a forked radish, with a head fantastically carved upon it with a knife: he was so forlorn, that his dimensions to any thick sight were invincible:¹⁰ he was the very Genius of famine; yet lecherous as a monkey, and the whores called him mandrake:¹¹ he came ever in the rear-ward of the fashion; and sung those tunes to the over-scuted¹² buswives that he heard the carmen whistle, and swear—they were his fancies, or his good-nights.¹³ And now is this Vice's dagger¹⁴ become a squire; and talks as familiarly of John of Gaunt, as if he had been sworn brother to him: and I'll be sworn he never saw him but once in the Tilt-yard; and then he burst¹⁵ his head, for crowding among the marshal's men. I saw it; and told John of Gaunt, he beat his own name;¹⁶ for you might have truss'd him, and all his apparel, into an eel-skin; the case of a treble haut-boy was a mansion for him, a court; and now has he land and beeves. Well; I will be acquainted with him, if I return: and it shall go hard, but I will make him a philosopher's two stones¹⁷ to me: If the young dace be

1 Bardolph was to have four pound: perhaps he means to conceal part of his profit.

2 Shakespeare uses thewes in a sense almost peculiar to himself, for muscular strength or sinews.

3 A caliver was less and lighter than a musket; and was fired without a rest. Falstaff's meaning is that though Wart is unfit for a musqueteer, yet, if armed with a lighter piece, he may do good service.

4 Traverse was an ancient military term for march!

5 Shot, for shooter.

6 Mile End Green was the place for public sports and exercises. Stowe mentions that, in 1585, 4000 citizens were trained and exercised there. And again, that 30,000 citizens sheered on the 27th August, 1599, on the Miles-end; where they trained all that day and other days under their captains (also citizens) until the 4th of September. The pupils of this military school were thought but slightly of. Shakespeare has already referred to Mile End and its military exercises rather contemptuously in All's Well that Ends Well, Act iv. Sc. 3.

7 Arthur's show was not, as some have supposed, a masque or pageant, in which an exact representation of Arthur and his knights was made, but an exhibition of Toxophilites, styling themselves 'The Ancient Order, Society, and Unite laudable of Prince Arthur and his Knightly Armory of the Round Table.' The associates of which were fifty-eight in number, taking the names of the knights in the romantic history of that chivalric worthy. According to their historian and poet, Richard Robinson, this Society was established by charter under King Henry the Eighth, who, 'when he saw a good archer indecise, he chose him and ordained such a one for a knight of this order.' Robinson's book was printed in 1583, and in a MS. list of his own works, now in the British Museum, he says, 'Mr. Thomas Smith, her majesty's customer, representing himself Prince Arthur, gave me for his booke vs. His 66 knights gave me every one for his xvijd. and every Esque for his booke viijd. when they shot under the same Prince Arthur at Myles end green.' Shakespeare has admirably heightened the ridicule of Shallow's vanity and folly, by making him boast in this parenthesis that he was Sir Dagonet, who, though one of the knights, is also represented in the romance as King Arthur's fool. This society is also noticed by Richard Mulcaster (who was a member) in his book Concerning the Training up of Children, 1591, in a passage communicated to Malone by the Rev. Mr. Bowle.

8 Quiver is nimble, artifice.

9 Turnbull-street, or Turnball-street, is a corruption of Turnmill-street, near Clerkenwell; and anciently the resort of bullies, rogues, and other dissolute persons. The reader will remember its vicinity to Ruffians' Hall, now Smithfield Market. Picket Hatch, a celebrated brothelry, is supposed to have been situate in or near Turnbush-street.

10 Steevens has adopted Rowe's alteration of this word, invincible to invisible, without necessity. The word is metaphorically used for not to be mastered or taken in.

11 See Sir Thomas Brown's Vulgar Errors, 1686, p. 72; and note on Act i. Sc. 2, of this play.

12 I. e. whipped, carted, says Pope; and notwithstanding Johnson's doubts, Pope is right. A netwhor was a whip or riding rod, according to Coigrave. And for a further illustration of this passage the reader, curious in such matters, may turn to Torriano's Italian Dictionary, 1659, in v. Trentuno.

13 Titles of little poems.

14 For some account of the Vice and his dagger of lath the reader may see Twelfth Night, Act iv. Sc. 3. There is something excessively ludicrous in the comparison of Shallow to this powerless weapon of that droll personage the Old Vice or fool.

15 Burst, brast and broken, were formerly synonymous; as may be seen under the words break and broken, in Bart.

16 Gaunt is thin, slender.

17 This is only a humorous exaggerative way of expressing 'He shall be more than the philosopher's stone to me, or twice as good. I will make good out of him.'

a bait for the old pike, I see no reason, in the law of nature, but I may snap at him. Let time shape, and there an end. [Exit.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. A Forest in Yorkshire. Enter the Archbishop of York, Mowbray, Hastings, and others.

Arch. What is this forest called?

Hast. 'Tis Gualtree forest, an't shall please your grace.

Arch. Here stand, my lords; and send discoveries forth,

To know the numbers of our enemies.

Hast. We have sent forth already.

Arch. 'Tis well done.

My friends, and brethren in these great affairs, I must acquaint you that I have receiv'd New-dated letters from Northumberland; Their cold intent, tenour, and substance, thus:—Here doth he wish his person, with such powers As might hold sortance¹ with his quality, The which he could not levy; whereupon He is retir'd, to ripe his growing fortunes, To Scotland: and concludes in hearty prayers, That your attempts may overlive the hazard, And fearful meeting of their opposite.

Mowb. Thus do the hopes we have in him touch ground, And dash themselves to pieces.

Enter a Messenger.

Hast. Now, what news?

Mess. West of this forest, scarcely off a mile, In goodly form comes on the enemy: And, by the ground they hide, I judge their number Upon, or near, the rate of thirty thousand.

Mowb. The just proportion that we gave them out. Let us sway² on, and face them in the field.

Enter WESTMORELAND.

Arch. What well-appointed³ leader fronts us here?

Mowb. I think, it is my lord of Westmoreland.

West. Health and fair greeting from our general, The prince, Lord John and duke of Lancaster.

Arch. Say on, my lord of Westmoreland, in peace;

What doth concern your coming?

West. Then, my lord, Unto your grace do I in chief address The substance of my speech. If that rebellion Came like itself, in base and abject routs, Led on by bloody⁴ youth, guarded⁵ with rage, And countenance⁶ by boys, and beggary; I say, if damn'd commotion so appear'd In his true, native, and most proper shape, You, reverend father, and these noble lords

Had not been here, to dress the ugly form Of base and bloody insurrection With your fair honours. You, lord archbishop,—Whose see is by a civil peace maintain'd; Whose beard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd; Whose learning and good letters peace hath tutor'd; Whose white investments⁷ figure innocence, The dove and very blessed spirit of peace,—Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself, Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace, Into the harsh and boist'rous tongue of war? Turning your books to graves,⁸ your ink to blood, Your pens to lances; and your tongue divine To a loud trumpet, and a point of war?

Arch. Wherefore do I this?—so the question stands.

Briefly to this end:—We are all diseas'd; And, with our surfeiting, and wanton hours, Have brought ourselves into a burning fever, And we must bleed for it: of which disease Our late king, Richard, being infected, died. But, my most noble lord of Westmoreland, I take not on me here as a physician; Nor do I, as an enemy to peace, Troop in the throngs of military men: But, rather, show a while like fearful war, To diet rank minds, sick of happiness; And purge the obstructions, which begin to stop Our very veins of life. Hear me more plainly. I have in equal balance justly weigh'd What wrongs our arms may do, what wrongs we suffer.

And find our griefs⁹ heavier than our offences. We see which way the stream of time doth run, And are enforc'd from our most quiet sphere⁹ By the rough torrent of occasion: And have the summary of all our griefs, When time shall serve, to show in articles, Which, long ere this, we offer'd to the king, And might by no suit gain our audience: When we are wrong'd, and would unfold our griefs We are denied access unto his person¹⁰ Even by those men that most have done us wrong The dangers of the days but newly gone, (Whose memory is written on the earth With yet-appearing blood,) and the examples Of every minute's instance¹¹ (present now,) Have put us in these ill-beseeming arms: Not to break peace, or any branch of it; But to establish here a peace indeed, Concurring both in name and quality.

West. When ever yet was your appeal denied? Wherein have you been galled by the king? What peer hath been suborn'd to grate on you? That you should seal this lawless bloody book, Of forg'd rebellion with a seal divine, And consecrate commotion's bitter edge?¹²

Arch. My brother general, the commonwealth, To brother born an household cruelty, I make my quarrel in particular.¹³

1 Be suitable.

2 That is, let us pass on with our armament. To sway was sometimes used for a rushing hasty movement.

3 Completely accoutred.

4 Baret carefully distinguishes between bloody, full of blood, sanguineous, and bloody, desirous of blood, sanguinarius. In this speech Shakspeare uses the word in both senses.

5 Guarded is a metaphor taken from dress; to guard being to ornament with guards or facings.

6 Formerly all bishops wore white, even when they travelled.—Hady's History of Convocations, p. 141. This white investment was the episcopal rochet.

7 Warburton very plausibly reads glaises; Steevens proposed greaves; and this emendation has my full concurrence. It should be remarked that greaves, or eg-armour, is sometimes spelt graves.

8 Grievances.

9 The old copies read 'from our most quiet there.' Warburton made the alteration; I am not quite persuaded that it was necessary.

10 In Holinshed the Archbishop says, 'Where he and his companie were in armes, it was for feare of the king, to whom he could have no free access, by reason of such a multitude of flatterers as were about him.'

11 'Examples of every minute's instance,' are 'Examples which every minute instances or supplies.' Which even the present minute presses on their notice.

12 Commotion's bitter edge? that is, the edge of bitter strife and commotion; the sword of rebellion. This line is omitted in the folio.

13 The second line of this very obscure speech is omitted in the folio. As the passage stands I can make nothing of it; nor do any of the explanations which have been offered appear to me satisfactory. I think with Malone that a line has been lost, though I do not agree with him in the sense he would give to it. It is with all proper humility I offer the following reading:—

'My quarrel general, the commonwealth,
Whose wrongs do loudly call out for redress;
To brother born an household cruelty,
I make my quarrel in particular.'

i. e. my general cause of discontent is public wrongs, my particular cause the death of my own brother, who was beheaded by the king's order. This circumstance is referred to in the first part of this play:—

'The archbishop—who bears hard

His brother's death at Bristol, the Lord Scroop.'

The answer of Westmoreland makes it obvious that

West. There is no need of any such redress ; Or, if there were, it not belongs to you.

Mowb. Why not to him, in part ; and to us all, That feel the bruises of the days before ; And suffer the condition of these times To lay a heavy and unequal hand Upon our honours ?

West. O my good lord Mowbray,¹ Construe the times to their necessities, And you shall say indeed,—it is the time, And not the king, that doth you injuries. Yet, for your part, it not appears to me, Either from the king, or in the present time, That you should have an inch of any ground To build a grief on : Were you not restor'd To all the duke of Norfolk's signiories, Your noble and right well remember'd father's ?

Mowb. What thing in honour had my father lost, That need to be reviv'd and breath'd in me ? The king, that lov'd him, as the state stood then, Was, force perforce, compell'd to banish him : And then, when Harry Bolingbroke, and he,— Being mounted, and both roused in their seats, Their neighing coursers daring of the spur, Their armed staves² in charge, their beavers³ down, Their eyes of fire sparkling through sights⁴ of steel, And the loud trumpet blowing them together ; Then, then, when there was nothing could have staid

My father from the breast of Bolingbroke, O, when the king did throw his warder⁵ down, His own life hung upon the staff he throw : Then threw he down himself ; and all their lives, That by indictment, and by dint of sword, Have since miscarried under Bolingbroke.

West. You speak, Lord Mowbray, now you know not what :

The earl of Hereford⁶ was reputed then In England the most valiant gentleman ; Who knows, on whom fortune would then have smil'd ?

But, if your father had been victor there, He ne'er had borne it out of Coventry : For all the country, in a general voice, Cried hate upon him ; and all their prayers, and love,

Were set on Hereford, whom they doted on, And bless'd, and grac'd indeed, more than the king. But this is mere digression from my purpose.— Here come I from our princely general, To know your griefs ; to tell you from his grace, That he will give you audience : and wherein It shall appear that your demands are just, You shall enjoy them ; every thing set off, That might so much as think you enemies.

Mowb. But he hath forc'd us to compel this offer ; And it proceeds from policy, not love.

West. Mowbray, you overween, to take it so ; This offer comes from mercy, not from fear ; For, lo ! within a ken our army lies ; Upon mine honour, all too confident To give admittance to a thought of fear. Our battle is more full of names than yours, Our men more perfect in the use of arms, Our armour all as strong, our cause the best ; Then reason wills, our hearts should be as good :— Say you not then, our offer is compell'd.

something about redress of public wrongs should have fallen from the archbishop. Johnson proposed to read quarrel instead of brother. In the first line, and explained the passage much as I have done. I have merely superadded the line, which seems to me necessary to complete the sense, and make Westmoreland's reply intelligible.

1 The thirty-seven following lines are not in the quarto.

2 I. e. their lances fixed in the rest for the encounter.

3 It has been already observed that the beaver was a moveable piece of the helmet, which lifted up or down, to enable the bearer to drink or breathe more freely.

4 The perforated part of the helmets, through which they could see to direct their aim. Visiere, Fr.

5 Truncheon.

Mowb. Well, by my will, we shall admit no parley.

West. That argues but the shame of your offence : A rotten case abides no handling.

Hast. Hath the Prince John a full commission, In very ample virtue of his father, To hear, and absolutely to determine Of what conditions we shall stand upon ?

West. That is intended⁷ in the general's name : I muse, you make so slight a question.

Arch. Then take, my lord of Westmoreland, this schedule ;

For this contains our general grievances ;— Each several article herein redress'd ; All members of our cause, both here and hence, That are insinew'd to this action, Acquitted by a true substantial form ; And present execution of our wills To us, and to our purposes, consign'd ;⁸ We come within our awful⁹ banks again, And kuit our powers to the arm of peace.

West. This will I show the general. Please you, lords,

In sight of both our battles we may meet : And either end in peace, which heaven so frame ; Or to the place of difference call the swords Which must decide it.

Arch. My lord, we will do so.

[Exit West.]

Mowb. There is a thing within my bosom, tells me, That no conditions of our peace can stand.

Hast. Fear you not that : if we can make our peace

Upon such large terms, and so absolute, As our conditions shall consist¹⁰ upon, Our peace shall stand as firm as rocky mountains.

Mowb. Ay, but our valuation shall be such, That every slight and false-derived cause, Yea, every idle, nice,¹¹ and wanton reason, Shall, to the king, taste of this action : That, were our royal faiths¹² martyrs in love, We shall be winnow'd with so rough a wind, That even our corn shall seem as light as chaff, And good from bad find no partition.

Arch. No, no, my lord ; Note this, the king is weary

Of dainty and such picking¹³ grievances : For he hath found,—to end one doubt by death, Revives two greater in the heirs of life. And therefore will he wipe his tables¹⁴ clean ; And keep no tell-tale to his memory, That may repeat and history his loss To new-remembrance : For full well he knows He cannot so precisely weed this land, As his misdoubts present occasion : His foes are so enrooted with his friends, That, plucking to unfix an enemy, He doth unfasten so, and shake a friend. So that this land, like an offensive wife, That hath enrag'd him on to offer strokes ; As he is striking, holds his infant up, And hangs resolv'd correction in the arm That was uprear'd to execution.

Hast. Besides, the king hath wasted all his rods On late offenders, that he now doth lack 6 This is a mistake : he was duke of Hereford.

7 Intended is understood, I. e. meant without express sing it. Entendu, Fr. ; subauditus, Lat.

8 The old copy reads confind. Johnson proposed to read consign'd ; which must be understood in the Latin sense, consignatus, signed, sealed, ratified, confirmed ; which was indeed the old meaning according to the dictionaries. Shakespeare uses consign and consigning in other places in this sense.

9 Aufsil for lance ; or under the due awe of an authority.

10 To consist, to rest ; consisto.—Barell.

11 Trivial.

12 The faith due to a king. So in King Henry VIII. :—'The citizens have shown at full their royal minds,' I. e. their minds well affected to the king.

13 Piddling, insignificant.

14 Alluding to the table books of slate, ivory, &c. used by our ancestors.

The very instruments of chastisement :
So that his power, like to a fangless lion,
May offer, but not hold.

Arch. 'Tis very true ; —
And therefore be assur'd, my good lord marshal,
If we do now make our atonement well,
Our peace will, like a broken limb united,
Grow stronger for the breaking.

Mowb. Be it so.
Here is return'd my lord of Westmoreland.

Re-enter WESTMORELAND.

West. The prince is here at hand : Pleaseth your lordship,

To meet his grace just distance 'tween our armies ?

Mowb. Your grace of York, in God's name then set forward.

Arch. Before, and greet his grace : my lord, we come. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. Another Part of the Forest. Enter, from one side, MOWBRAY, the Archbishop, HASTINGS, and others : from the other side, PRINCE JOHN of Lancaster, WESTMORELAND, Officers, and Attendants.

P. John. You are well encounter'd here, my cousin Mowbray : —

Good day to you, gentle lord archbishop ; —
And so to you, Lord Hastings, — and to all. —
My lord of York, it better show'd with you,
When that your flock, assembled by the bell,
Encircled you, to hear with reverence
Your exposition on the holy text ;
Than now to see you here an iron man,¹
Cheering a rout of rebels with your drum,
Turning the word to sword, and life to death.
That man that sits within a monarch's heart,
And ripens in the sunshine of his favour,
Would he abuse the countenance of the king,
Alack, what mischiefs might he set abroad,
In shadow of such greatness ! With you, lord bishop,

It is even so : — Who hath not heard it spoken,
How deep you were within the books of God ?
To us, the speaker in his parliament :
To us, the imagin'd voice of God himself :
The very opener, and intelligencer,
Between the grace, the sanctities² of heaven,
And our dull workings :³ O, who shall believe,
But you misuse the reverence of your place ;
Employ the countenance and grace of heaven,
As a false favourite doth his prince's name,
In deeds dishonourable ? You have taken up ;⁴
Under the counterfeited zeal of God,
The subjects of the substitute, my father ;
And, both against the peace of heaven and him,
Have here up-swarm'd them.

Arch. Good, my lord of Lancaster,
I am not here against your father's peace :
But, as I told my lord of Westmoreland,
The time misorder'd doth, in common sense,⁵
Crowd us, and crush us, to this monstrous form,
To hold our safety up. I sent your grace
The parcels and particulars of our grief ;
The which hath been with scorn show'd from the court,

Whereon this Hydra son of war is born :
Whose dangerous eyes may well be charm'd asleep.⁶

With grant of our most just and right desires :
And true obedience of this madness cur'd,
Scoop tamely to the foot of majesty.

1 Holinshed says of the Archbishop, that, 'coming forth amongst them clad in armour, he encouraged and pricked them forth to take the enterprise in hand.'

2 This expression has been adopted by Milton : —
'Around him all the sanctities of heaven
Stood thick as stars.'

3 Dull workings are labours of thought.

4 Raised up in arms.

5 Common sense is the general sense of general danger.

Mowb. If not, we ready are to try our fortunes
To the last man.

Hast. And though we here fall down,
We have supplies to second our attempt ;
If they miscarry, theirs shall second them :
And so, success⁷ of mischief shall be born ;
And heir from heir shall hold this quarrel up,
Whiles England shall have generation.

P. John. You are too shallow, Hastings, much too shallow,

To sound the bottom of the after-times.

West. Pleaseth your grace to answer them directly,

How far-forth do you like their articles ?

P. John. I like them all, and do allow⁸ them well :
And swear here by the honour of my blood,
My father's purposes have been mistook ;
And some about him have too lavishly
Wrested his meaning, and authority. —

My lord, these griefs shall be with speed redress'd ;
Upon my soul, they shall. If this may please you,
Discharge your powers⁹ unto their several counties,
As we will ours : and here, between the armies,
Let's drink together friendly, and embrace ;
That all their eyes may bear those tokens home,
Of our restored love and amity.

Arch. I take your princely word for these rodresses.

P. John. I give it you, and will maintain my word ;
And thereupon I drink unto your grace.

Hast. Go, captain [To an Officer,] and deliver to the army

This news of peace ; let them have pay, and part ;
I know, it will well please them ; Hie thee, captain.

[Exit Officer.]

Arch. To you, my noble lord of Westmoreland.

West. I pledge your grace : And, if you knew what pains

I have bestow'd to breed this present peace,
You would drink freely : but my love to you
Shall show itself more openly hereafter.

Arch. I do not doubt you.

West. I am glad of it. —
Health to my lord, and gentle cousin, Mowbray.

Mowb. You wish me health in very happy season ;
For I am, on the sudden, something ill.

Arch. Against ill chances, men are ever merry ;
But heaviness forfeits the good event.

West. Therefore be merry, coz : since sudden sorrow

Serves to say thus, — Some good thing, comes tomorrow.

Arch. Believe me, I am passing light in spirit.

Mowb. So much the worse, if your own rule be true. [Shouts within.]

P. John. The word of peace is render'd ; Hark, how they shout !

Mowb. This had been cheerful, after victory.

Arch. A peace is of the nature of a conquest ;
For then both parties nobly are subdued,
And neither party loser.

P. John. Go, my lord,
And let our army be discharged too. —

[Exit WESTMORELAND.]

And, good my lord, so please you, let our trains
March by us ; that we may peruse the men
We should have cop'd withal.

Arch. Go, good Lord Hastings,
And, ere they be dismiss'd, let them march by.

[Exit HASTINGS.]

P. John. I trust, my lords, we shall lie to-night
together. —

6 Alluding to the dragon charmed to rest by the spells of Medea.

7 Succession.

8 Approve.

9 It was Westmoreland who made this deceitful proposal, as appears from Holinshed : — 'The earl of Westmoreland, using more policy than the rest, said, whereas our people have been long in armour, let them depart home to their woonted trades : In the mean time let us drink together in signe of agreement, that the people on both sides may see it, and know that it is true, that we be light at a point.'

Re-enter WESTMORELAND.

Now, cousin, wherefore stands our army still?

West. The leaders, having charge from you to stand,

Will not go off until they hear you speak.

P. John. They know their duties.

Re-enter HASTINGS.

Hast. My lord, our army is dispers'd already:

Like youthful steers unyok'd, they take their courses
East, west, north, south; or, like a school broke up,
Each hurries toward his home, and sporting-place.

West. Good tidings, my Lord Hastings; for the which

I do arrest thee, traitor, of high treason:—

And you, lord archbishop,—and you, Lord Mowbray,

Of capital treason I attach you both.

Mowb. Is this proceeding just and honourable?

West. Is your assembly so?

Arch. Will you thus break your faith?

P. John. I pawn'd these none:

I promis'd you redress of these same grievances,
Whereof you did complain; which, by mine honour,
I will perform with a most christian care.

But, for you, rebels,—look to taste the due
Meet for rebellion, and such acts as yours.

Most shallowly did you these arms commence,
Fondly¹ brought here, and foolishly sent hence.—

Strike up our drums, pursue the scatter'd stray;
Heaven, and not we, have safely fought to-day.—

Some guard these traitors to the block of death;
Treason's true bed, and yielder up of breath.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. Another Part of the Forest. Alarums: Excursions. Enter FALSTAFF and COLEVILE, meeting.

Fal. What's your name, sir? of what condition are you: and of what place, I pray?

Cole. I am a knight, sir; and my name is—Coleville of the dale.

Fal. Well then, Coleville is your name; a knight is your degree; and your place, the dale: Coleville shall still be your name; a traitor your degree; and the dungeon your place,—a place deep enough: so shall you still be Coleville of the dale.

Cole. Are not you Sir John Falstaff?

Fal. As good a man as he, sir, whoe'er I am. Do ye yield, sir? or shall I sweat for you? If I do sweat, they are drops of thy lovers, and they weep for thy death: therefore rouse up fear and trembling, and do observance to my mercy.

Cole. I think, you are Sir John Falstaff; and in that thought, yield me.

Fal. I have a whole school of tongues in this belly of mine; and not a tongue of them all speaks any other word but my name. An I had but a belly of any indifference, I were simply the most active fellow in Europe: My womb, my womb, my womb undoes me.—Here comes our general.

Enter PRINCE JOHN of Lancaster, WESTMORELAND, and others.

P. John. The heat is past, follow no further now;—

Call in the powers, good cousin Westmoreland.—

[Exit WEST.]

1 i. e. foolishly.

2 'It cannot but raise some indignation to find this horrid violation of faith passed over thus slightly by the poet without any note of censure or detestation.'—Johnson. That Shakspeare followed the historians is no excuse; for it is the duty of a poet always to take the side of virtue.—I had some doubt whether I should retain this reflection upon the poetical justice of Shakspeare; but I have been determined to do so by the hope that it may lead to the discussion of the passage. I would not willingly believe that the poet approved this abominable piece of treachery.

3 Cassid.

4 It appears that Coleville was designed to be pronounced as 'colle'vile; it is often spelt Colleville in the old copies.

Now, Falstaff, where have you been all this while? When every thing is ended, then you come: These tardy tricks of yours will, on my life, One time or other break some gallews' back.

Fal. I would be sorry, my lord, but it should be thus; I never knew yet, but rebuke and check was the reward of valour. Do you think me a swallow, an arrow, or a bullet? have I, in my poor and old motion, the expedition of thought? I have speeded hither with the very extremest inch of possibility; I have foundered nine score and odd posts: and here, travel-tainted as I am, have, in my pure and immaculate valour, taken Sir John Coleville of the dale, a most furious knight, and valorous enemy: But what of that? he saw me, and yielded; that I may justly say with the hook-nosed fellow of Rome,³—I came, saw, and overcame.

P. John. It was more of his courtesy than your deserving.

Fal. I know not; here he is, and here I yield him: and I beseech your grace, let it be booked with the rest of this day's deeds; or, by the Lord, I will have it in a particular ballad else, with mine own picture on the top of it, Coleville kissing my foot: To the which course, if I be enforced, if you do not all show like gilt two-pences to me; and I, in the clear sky of fame, o'ersbine you as much as the full moon doth the cinders of the element,⁴ which show like pins' heads to her; believe not the word of the noble: Therefore let me have right, and let desert mount.

P. John. Thine's too heavy to mount.

Fal. Let it shine then.

P. John. Thine's too thick to shine.

Fal. Let it do something, my good lord, that may do me good, and call it what you will.

P. John. Is thy name Coleville?

Cole.

It is, my lord.

P. John. A famous rebel art thou, Coleville.

Fal. And a famous true subject took him.

Cole. I am, my lord, but as my betters are, That led me hither: had they been rul'd by me, You should have won them dearer than you have.

Fal. I know not how they sold themselves: but thou, like a kind fellow, gavest thyself away; and I thank thee for these.

Re-enter WESTMORELAND.

P. John. Now, have you left pursuit?

West. Retreat is made, and execution stay'd.

P. John. Send Coleville, with his confederates, To York, to present execution:—
Blunt, lead him hence; and see you guard him sure.

[Exeunt some with COLEVILE.]

And now despatch we toward the court, my lords; I hear, the king my father is sore sick: Our news shall go before us to his majesty,—Which, cousin, you shall bear,—to comfort him; And we with sober speed will follow you.

Fal. My lord, I beseech you, give me leave to go through Glostershire: and, when you come to court, stand my good lord, 'pray, in your good report.

6 'At the king's coming to Durham the Lord Hastings, Sir John Coleville of the dale, &c. being convicted of the conspiracy, were there beheaded.'—Holinshed, p. 530. It is to be observed that there are two accounts of the termination of the archbishop of York's conspiracy, both of which are given by Holinshed. He states that on the archbishop and earl marshal submitting to the king and to his son Prince John, there present, 'their troops skaled and fledde their wayes; but being pursued, many were taken, many slain, &c.; the archbishop and earl marshal were brought to Pomfret to the king, who from thence went to York; whyther the prisoners were also brought, and there beheaded.' It is in this last account that Shakspeare has followed, but with some variation; for the names of Coleville and Hastings are not mentioned among those who were beheaded at York.

7 Johnstone was so much unacquainted with ancient phraseology as to make difficulties about this phrase, which is one of the most common petitionary terms of our ancestors. Stand my good lord, or be my good

P. John. Fare you well, Falstaff: I, in my condition,¹

Shall better speak of you than you deserve. [Exit.]

Fal. I would you had but the wit: 'twere better than your dukedom.—Good faith, this same young sober-blooded boy doth not love me: nor a man cannot make him laugh;—but that's no marvel, he drinks no wine. There's never any of these demure boys come to any proof: for thin drink doth so over-cool their blood, and making many fish-meals, that they fall into a kind of male green-sickness; and then, when they marry, they get wenches: they are generally fools and cowards;—which some of us should be too, but for inflammation. A good sherris sack² hath a two-fold operation in it. It ascends me into the brain; dries me there all the foolish and dull, and crudy vapours which environ it: makes it apprehensive, quick, forgetive,³ full of nimble, fiery, and delectable shapes; which delivered o'er to the voice (the tongue,) which is the birth, becomes excellent wit. The second property of your excellent sherris is,—the warming of the blood; which, before cold and settled, left the liver white and pale, which is the badge of pusillanimity and cowardice: but the sherris warms it, and makes it course from the inwards to the parts extreme. It illumineth the face: which, as a beacon, gives warning to all the rest of this little kingdom, man, to arm: and then the vital commoners, and inland petty spirits, muster me all to their captain, the heart; who, great, and puffed up with this retinue, doth any deed of courage; and this valour comes of sherris: So that skill in the weapon is nothing, without sack; for that sets it a-work; and learning, a mere hoard of gold kept by a devil;⁴ till sack commences it,⁵ and sets it in act and use. Hereof comes it, that Prince Harry is valiant: for the cold blood he did naturally inherit of his father, he hath, like lean, sterile, and bare land, manured, husbanded, and tilled, with excellent endeavour of drinking good, and good store of fertile sherris; that he is become very hot, and valiant. If I had a thousand sons, the first human principle I would teach them, should be,—to forswear thin potations, and addict themselves to sack.

ENTER BARDOLPH.

How now, Bardolph?

Bard. The army is discharged all, and gone.

Fal. Let them go. I'll through Glostershire; and there will I visit master Robert Shallow, esquire: I have him already tempering⁶ between my finger and my thumb, and shortly will I seal with him. Come away. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. Westminster. A Room in the Palace. Enter KING HENRY, CLARENCE, PRINCE HUMPHREY, WARWICK, and others.

K. Hen. Now, lords, if heaven doth give successful end

To this debate that bleedeth at our doors,
We will our youth lead on to higher fields, lord, means stand my friend, be my patron or benefactor, report well of me.

¹ Condition is most frequently used by Shakspeare for nature, disposition. The prince may therefore mean, 'I shall in my good nature speak better of you than you deserve.'

² Vide note on King Henry IV. Part I. Act. I. Sc. II.

³ Inventive, imaginative.

⁴ It was anciently supposed that all the mines of gold, &c. were guarded by evil spirits. See the Secret Wonders of Nature and Art, by Edw. Fenton, 1569, p. 91.

⁵ Commences it, that is brings it into action. Tyrwhitt thinks it is probable that there is an allusion to the commencement and act of the universities, which give to students a complete authority to use those hoards of learning which have entitled them to their degrees. As the dictionaries of the poet's time explain this matter, the conjecture seems probable.

⁶ A pleasant allusion to the old use of soft wax for sealing.

⁷ Ready, prepared.

⁸ To-morrow for our march are we address'd.

King Henry V.

And draw no swords but what are sanctified.
Our navy is address'd,⁷ our power collected,
Our substitutes in absence well invested,
And every thing lies level to our wish:
Only, we want a little personal strength;
And pause us, till those rebels, now afoot,
Come underneath the yoke of government.

War. Both which, we doubt not but your majesty
Shall soon enjoy.

K. Hen. Humphrey, my son of Gloster,
Where is the prince your brother?

P. Humph. I think, he's gone to hunt, my lord, at Windsor.

K. Hen. And how accompanied?

P. Humph. I do not know, my lord.

K. Hen. Is not his brother, Thomas of Clarence,
with him?

P. Humph. No, my good lord; he is in presence
here.

Cl. What would my lord and father?

K. Hen. Nothing but well to thee, Thomas of Clarence.

How chance, thou art not with the prince thy brother?

He loves thee, and thou dost neglect him, Thomas;
Thou hast a better place in his affection,
Than all thy brothers: cherish it, my boy;

And noble offices thou may'st effect
Of mediation, after I am dead,
Between his greatness and thy other brethren:—

Therefore, omit him not: blunt not his love:
Nor lose the good advantage of his grace,

By seeming cold or careless of his will.
For he is gracious, if he be observ'd;⁸

He hath a tear for pity, and a hand
Open as day for melting charity:

Yet, notwithstanding, being incens'd, he's flint;
As humorous⁹ as winter, and as sudden

As flaws congealed in the spring of day.¹⁰
His temper, therefore, must be well observ'd:

Chide him for faults, and do it reverently,
Nor lose his blood inclind to mirth:

But, being moody, give him line and scope;
Till that his passions, like a whale on ground,

Confound themselves with working. Learn this,
Thomas,

And thou shalt prove a shelter to thy friends;
A hoop of gold, to bind thy brothers in;

That the united vessel of their blood,
Mingled with venom of suggestion,¹¹

(As, force perforce, the age will pour it in,) Shall never leak, though it do work as strong

As aconitum,¹² or rash gunpowder.

Cl. I shall observe him with all care and love.

K. Hen. Why art thou not at Windsor with him,
Thomas?

Cl. He is not there to-day; he dines in London.

K. Hen. And how accompanied? canst thou tell that?

Cl. With Poinis, and other his continual followers.

⁸ I. e. if he has respectful attention shown him.

⁹ His qualities were beautiful as his form,

For maiden-tongu'd he was, and therefore free;

Yet if men mov'd him, was he such a storm

As oft 'twixt May and April is to see,

When winds breathe sweet, unruily though they be.

Shakspeare's Lover's Complaint.
Humorous was used for capricious, as humorous now is.

¹⁰ A flaw is a sudden gust of violent wind; alluding to the opinion of some philosophers, that the vapours being congealed in the air by cold (which is the most intense in the morning,) and being afterwards rarefied and let loose by the warmth of the sun, occasion those sudden and impetuous gusts of wind which are called flaws. Shakspeare uses the word again in King Henry VI. and in his Venus and Adonis.

¹¹ Though their blood be inflamed by the temptations to which youth is peculiarly subject.

¹² Aconitum, or aconite, wolfsbane, a poisonous herb. Rush is sudden, hasty, violent.

K. Hen. Most subject is the fattest soil to weeds ;
And he, the noble image of my youth,
Is overspread with them : Therefore my grief
Stretches itself beyond the hour of death :
The blood weeps from my heart, when I do shape,
In forms imaginary, the unguided days,
And rotten times, that you shall look upon,
When I am sleeping with my ancestors.
For when his headstrong riot hath no curb,
When rage and hot blood are his counsellors,
When means and lavish manners meet together,
O, with what wings shall his affections¹ fly
Towards fronting peril and oppos'd decay !

War. My gracious lord, you look beyond him quite :

The prince but studies his companions,
Like a strange tongue : wherein, to gain the language,

'Tis needful, that the most immodest word
Be look'd upon, and learn'd : which once attain'd,
Your highness knows, comes to no further use,
But to be known, and hated.² So, like gross terms,

The prince will, in the perfectness of time,
Cast off his followers : and their memory
Shall as a pattern or a measure live,
By which his grace must mete the lives of others ;
Turning past evils to advantages.

K. Hen. 'Tis seldom—when the bee doth leave her comb
In the dead carrion.³—Who's here ? Westmoreland ?

Enter WESTMORELAND.

West. Health to my sovereign ! and new happiness

Added to that that I am to deliver !

Prince John, your son, doth kiss your grace's hand :
Mowbray, the bishop Scroop, Hastings, and all,
Are brought to the correction of your law ;
There is not now a rebel's sword unsheath'd,
But peace puts forth her olive every where.
The manner how this action hath been borne,
Here at more leisure may your highness read ;
With every course, in his particular.⁴

K. Hen. O Westmoreland, thou art a summer bird,

Which ever in the haunch of winter sings
The lifting up of day. Look ! here's more news.

Enter HARCOURT.

Harc. From enemies heaven keep your majesty ;
And, when they stand against you, may they fall
As those that I am come to tell you of !
The Earl Northumberland, and the Lord Bardolph,
With a great power of English, and of Scots,
Are by the sheriff of Yorkshire overthrow'n :
The manner and true order of the fight,
This packet, please it you, contains at large.

1 Affections, in the language of Shakespeare's time, are passions, desires. Appetitus animi.

2 A parallel passage occurs in Terence :—

—quo modo adolescentulus

Meretricum ingenia et mores posset noscere

Mature ut cum cognovit, perpetuo oderit.

3 As the bee, having once placed her comb in a carcass, stays by her honey, so he that has once taken pleasure in bad company will continue to associate with those that have the art of pleasing him.

4 The detail contained in Prince John's letter.

5 Mure for wall is another of Shakespeare's Latinisms. It was not in frequent use by his cotemporaries. Wrought it thin is made it thin by gradual detriment : wrought being the preterite of work.

6 To fear anciently signified to make afraid, as well as to dread. 'A vengeance light on thee that so doth fear me, or maketh me so feared.'—Baret.

7 That is, equivocal births, monsters.

8 i. e. as if the year.

9 An historical fact. On Oct. 12, 1411, this happened.

10 Johnson asserts that dull here signifies 'melancholy, gentle, soothing.' Malone says that it means 'producing dullness or heaviness.' The fact is that

K. Hen. And wherefore should these good news make me sick ?

Will fortune never come with both hands full,
But write her fair words still in foulest letters ?
She either gives a stomach, and no food,—
Such are the poor, in health ; or else a feast,
And takes away the stomach,—such are the rich,
That have abundance, and enjoy it not.
I should rejoice now at this happy news ;
And now my sight fails, and my brain is giddy :
O me ! come near me, now I am much ill.

[Swoons.]

P. Humph. Comfort, your majesty !

Cl. O my royal father !

West. My sovereign lord, cheer up yourself, look up !

War. Be patient, princes ; you do know, these fits

Are with his highness very ordinary.
Stand from him, give him air ; he'll straight be well.

Cl. No, no ; he cannot long hold out these pangs ;

The incessant care and labour of his mind
Hath wrought the mure,⁵ that should confine it in,
So thin, that life looks through, and will break out.

P. Humph. The people fear me ;⁶ for they do observe

Unfather'd heirs,⁷ and loathly birds of nature :
The seasons change their manners, as the year⁸
Had found some months asleep, and leap'd them over.

Cl. The river hath thrice flow'd, no ebb between :⁹

And the old folk, time's doting chronicles,
Say, it did so, a little time before
That our great grandsire, Edward, sick'd and died.

War. Speak lower, princes, for the king recovers.

P. Humph. This apoplex will, certain, be his end.

K. Hen. I pray you, take me up, and bear me hence

Into some other chamber : softly, pray.

[They convey the King into an inner part of the Room, and place him on a Bed.]

Let there be no noise made, my gentle friends ;
Unless some dull¹⁰ and favourable hand
Will whisper music to my weary spirit.

War. Call for the music in the other room.

K. Hen. Set me the crown upon my pillow here.

Cl. His eye is hollow, and he changes much.

War. Less noise, less noise.

Enter PRINCE HENRY.

P. Hen. Who saw the Duke of Clarence ?

Cl. I am here, brother, full of heaviness.

P. Hen. How now ! rain within doors, and none abroad !

How doth the king ?

P. Humph. Exceeding ill.

P. Hen. Heard he the good news yet ?
Tell it him.

dull and slow were synonymous. 'Dullness, slowness ; tarditas, tardivete. Somewhat dull or slow ; tardiusculus, tardelet ;' says Baret. But Shakespeare uses dullness for drowsiness in the Tempest. And Baret has also this sense :—'Slow, dull, asleep, drowsie, astounded, heavy ; torpidus.' It has always been thought that slow music induces sleep. Ariel enters playing solemn music to produce this effect, in the Tempest. The notion is not peculiar to our great poet, as the following exquisite lines, almost worthy of his hand, may witness :—

'Oh, lull me, lull me, charming air,
My senses rock'd with wonder sweet ;
Like snow on wool thy fallings are,
Soft like a spirit are thy feet.
Grief who need fear
That hath an ear ?
Down let him lie,
And slumbering die,
And change his soul for harmony.'

(From Wit Restored, 1658.) They are attributed to Dr. Sirode, who died in 1644.

P. Humph. He alter'd much upon the hearing it.

P. Hen. If he be sick
With joy, he will recover without physic.

War. Not so much noise, my lords;—sweet prince, speak low;

The king your father is dispos'd to sleep.

Cla. Let us withdraw into the other room.

War. Will't please your grace to go along with us?

P. Hen. No; I will sit and watch here by the king.¹ [Exeunt all but P. HENRY.]

Why doth the crown lie there upon his pillow,

Being so troublesome a bedfellow?

O polish'd perturbation! golden care!

That keeps the ports² of slumber open wide

To many a watchful night!—sleep with it now!

Yet not so sound, and half so deeply sweet,

As he, whose brow, with homely biggin³ bound,

Snore out the watch of night. O majesty!

When thou dost pinch thy bearer, thou dost sit

Like a rich armour worn in heat of day,

That scalds with safety. By his gates of breath

There lies a downy feather, that stirs not:

Did he suspire, that light and weightless down

Perforce must move.—My gracious lord!—my father!—

This sleep is sound indeed; this is a sleep,

That from this golden rigol⁴ hath divorc'd

So many English kings. Thy due, from me,

Is tears, and heavy sorrows of the blood;

Which nature, love, and filial tenderness,

Shall, O dear father, pay thee plenteously:

My due, from thee, is this imperial crown;

Which, as immediate from thy place and blood,

Derives itself to me. Lo, here it sits,—

[Putting it on his head.]

Which heaven shall guard: And put the world's whole strength

Into one giant arm, it shall not force

This lineal honour from me: This from thee

Will I to mine leave, as 'tis left to me. [Exit.]

K. Hen. Warwick! Gloster! Clarence!

Re-enter WARWICK, and the rest.

Cla. Doth the king call!

War. What would your majesty? How fares your grace?

K. Hen. Why did you leave me here alone, my lords?

Cla. We left the prince my brother here, my liege,

Who undertook to sit and watch by you.

K. Hen. The prince of Wales? Where is he? let me see him:

He is not here.

War. This door is open; he is gone this way.

P. Humph. He came not through the chamber where we stay'd.

K. Hen. Where is the crown? who took it from my pillow?

War. When we withdrew, my liege, we left it here.

K. Hen. The prince hath ta'en it hence:—go, seek him out;

Is he so hasty, that he doth suppose

My sleep my death?

Find him, my lord of Warwick; chide him hither.

[Exit WARWICK.]

This part of his conjoins with my disease,
And helps to end me.—See, sons, what things you are!

How quickly nature falls into revolt,

When good becomes her object!

1 The hint only of this beautiful scene is taken from Holinshed, p. 541. The poet has wrought up the bare bald narration of the chronicler in the most pathetic and poetical manner.

2 Gates.

3 A biggin was a head-band of coarse cloth; so called because such a forehead-band was worn by the Beguines, an order of nuns. 'Upon his head he wore a filthy coarse biggin, and next it a garnish of night-caps.' A'ash, speaking of a miser in his Pierce Penniless.

For this the foolish 'over-careful fathers
Have broke their sleep with thoughts, their brains with care,

Their bones with industry;

For this they have engrossed and pil'd up

The canker'd heaps of strange-achieved gold;

For this they have been thoughtful to invest

Their sons with arts, and martial exercises:

When, like the bee, tolling⁵ from every flower

The virtuous sweets;

Our thighs pack'd with wax, our mouths with honey,

We bring it to the hive; and, like the bees,

Are murder'd for our pains. This bitter taste

Yields lus engrossments⁶ to the ending father.

Re-enter WARWICK.

Now, where is he that will not stay so long

Till his friend sickness hath determin'd⁷ me?

War. My lord, I found the prince in the next room,

Washing with kindly tears his gentle cheeks;

With such a deep demeanor in great sorrow,

That tyranny, which never quaff'd but blood,

Would, by beholding him, have wash'd his knife

With gentle eye-drops. He is coming hither.

K. Hen. But wherefore did he take away the crown?

Re-enter PRINCE HENRY.

Lo, where he comes.—Come hither to me, Harry:—
Depart the chamber, leave us here alone.

[Exeunt CLARENCE, PRINCE HUMPHREY, Lords, &c.]

P. Hen. I never thought to hear you speak again.

K. Hen. Thy wish was father, Harry, to that thought:

I stay too long by thee, I weary thee.

Dost thou so hunger for my empty chair,

That thou wilt needs invest thee with mine honours

Before thy hour be ripe? O foolish youth!

Thou seek'st the greatness that will overwhelm

thee.

Stay but a little; for my cloud of dignity

Is held from falling with so weak a wind,

That it will quickly drop: my day is dim.

Thou hast stol'n that, which, after some few hours,

Were thine without offence; and, at my death,

Thou hast seal'd up my expectation:⁸

Thy life did manifest, thou lov'd'st me not,

And thou wilt have me die assured of it.

Thou hid'st a thousand daggers in thy thoughts;

Which thou hast whetted on thy stony heart,

To stab at half an hour⁹ of my life.

What! canst thou not forbear me half an hour?

Then get thee gone, and dig my grave thyself;

And bid the merry bells ring to thine ear,

That thou art crown'd, not that I am dead.

Let all the tears that should bedew my hearse,

Be drops of balm, to sanctify thy head:

Only compound me with forgotten dust;

Give that, which gave thee life, unto the worms.

Pluck down my officers, break my decrees;

For now a time is come to mock at vanity,

Harry the fifth is crown'd;—Up, vanity!

Down, royal state! all you sage counsellors, hence!

And to the English court assemble now,

From every region, apes of idleness!

Now, neighbour confines, purge you of your scum:

Have you a ruffian, that will swear, drink, dance,

Revel the night; rob, murder, and commit

The oldest sins the newest kind of ways?

Be happy, he will trouble you no more:

England shall double gild his treble guilt;¹⁰

4 i. e. circle; probably from the old Italian rigolo, a small wheel.

5 Taking toll.

6 Accumulations

7 i. e. ended. It is still used in that sense in legal conveyances.

8 i. e. confirmed my opinion.

9 Hour, anciently written houer, is used sometimes as a dissyllable, as well by Shakspeare as others.

10 This playing upon words seems to have been highly admired in the age of Shakspeare.

England shall give him office, honour, might:
For the fifth Harry, from curb'd licence plucks
The muzzle of restraint, and the wild dog
Shall flesh his tooth in every innocent.
O my poor kingdom, sick with civil blows!
When that my care could not withhold thy riots,
What wilt thou do, when riot is thy care?
O, thou wilt be a wilderness again,
Peopled with wolves, thy old inhabitants!

P. Hen. O, pardon me, my liege! but for my tears,

[Kneeling.]

The moist impediments unto my speech,
I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke,
Ere you with grief had spoke, and I had heard
The course of it so far. There is your crown;
And he that wears the crown immortally,
Long guard it yours! If I affect it more,
Than as your honour, and as your renown,
Let me no more from this obedience rise,
Which my most true and inward-duteous spirit
Teacheth this prostrate and exterior bending!¹
Heaven witness with me, when I here came in,
And found no course of breath within your majesty,

How cold it struck my heart! If I do feign,
O, let me in my present wildness die;
And never live to show the incredulous world
The noble change that I have purposed!
Coming to look on you, thinking you dead
(And dead almost, my liege, to think you were,)
I spake unto the crown as having sense,
And thus upbraided it: *The care on thee depending,
Hath fed upon the body of my father;
Therefore, thou, best of gold, art worst of gold.
Other, less fine in carat, is more precious,
Preserving life in medicine potable.*²

But thou, most fine, most honour'd, most renown'd,
Hast eat thy bearer up. Thus, my most royal liege,
Accusing it, I put it on my head;
To try with it,—as with an enemy,
That had before my face murder'd my father,—
The quarrel of a true inheritor.

But if it did infect my blood with joy,
Or swell my thoughts to any strain of pride;
If any rebel or vain spirit of mine
Did, with the least affection of a welcome,
Give entertainment to the night of it,
Let God for ever keep it from my head!
And make me as the poorest vassal is,
That doth with awe and terror kneel to it!

K. Hen. O my son!
Heaven put it in thy mind, to take it hence,
That thou might'st win the more thy father's love,
Pleading so wisely in excuse of it.
Come hither, Harry, sit thou by my bed;
And hear, I think, the very latest counsel
That ever I shall breathe. Heaven knows, my son,

By what by-paths, and indirect crook'd ways,
I met this crown; and I myself know well,

How troublesome it sat upon my head:
To thee it shall descend with better quiet,
Better opinion, better confirmation;
For all the soil³ of the achievement goes
With me into the earth. It seem'd in me,
But as an honour snatch'd with boisterous hand;
And I had many living, to upbraid
My gain of it by their assistances;
Which daily grew to quarrel and to bloodshed,
Wounding supposed peace:⁴ all these bold fears,⁵
Thou see'st with peril I have answered:
For all my reign hath been but as a scene
Acting that argument; and now my death
Changes the mode:⁶ for what in me was purchas'd,⁷
Falls upon thee in a more fair sort;
So thou the garland wear'st successively.⁸
Yet, though thou stand'st more sure than I could do,
Thou art not firm enough, since griefs are green:
And all thy friends, which thou must make thy

friends,

Have but thy stings and teeth newly ta'en out;
By whose fell working I was first advanc'd,
And by whose power I well might lodge a fear
To be again displac'd: which to avoid,
I cut them⁹ off; and had a purpose now
To lead out many to the Holy Land;
Least rest, and lying still, might make them look Too near unto my state. Therefore, my Harry,
Be it thy course, to busy giddy minds
With foreign quarrels; that action, hence borne out,

May waste the memory of the former days.
More would I, but my lungs are wasted so,
That strength of speech is utterly denied me.
How I came by the crown, O God, forgive!¹⁰
And grant it may with thee in true peace live!

P. Hen. My gracious liege,
You won it, wore it, kept it, gave it me;
Then plain, and right, must my possession be:
Which I, with more than with a common pain,
'Gainst all the world will rightfully maintain.

Enter PRINCE JOHN of Lancaster, WARWICK,
Lords, and others.

K. Hen. Look, look, here comes my John of Lancaster.

P. John. Health, peace, and happiness, to my royal father!

K. Hen. Thou bring'st me happiness, and peace son John;

But health, alack, with youthful wings is flown
From this bare, wither'd trunk: upon thy sight,
My worldly business makes a period.—
Where is my lord of Warwick?

P. Hen. My lord of Warwick.

K. Hen. Doth any name particular belong
Unto the lodging where I first did swoon?

War. 'Tis call'd Jerusalem, my noble lord.

K. Hen. Laud be to God!—even there my life must end.¹¹

1 The Variorum Shakspeare reads:—

'Let me no more from this obedience rise
(Which my most true and inward duteous spirit
Teacheth,) this prostrate and exterior bending!'

Johnson and others have considered this passage as obscure in the construction; but it was only made so by their wrong pointing. The obvious sense is, 'Let me no more rise from this obseisance, which my most loyal and inwardly duteous spirit teacheth this prostrate and exterior bending.' Obseisance and obedience were formerly used indiscriminately the one for the other. Truth is always used for loyalty.

2 It was long a prevailing opinion that a solution of gold had great medicinal virtues; and that the incorruptibility of the metal might be communicated to the body impregnated with it. Potable gold was one of the panaceas of ancient quacks.

3 Soil is stain, spot, blemish.

4 Supposed peace is imagined peace, counterfeit, not real.

5 Fears are objects of fear; terrors.

6 The mode is the state or form of things.

7 Purchas'd here signifies obtained by eager pursuit. It is from the French pourchas, and was sometimes so spelled when used to signify the obtaining of lands or honours by any other means than by title or descent. See Spelman's Glossary, in purchacia; and Minshew's Guide to the Tongues, in pourchas.

8 I.e. by order of succession. Johnson observes that 'every usurper snatches a claim of hereditary right as soon as he can.' So did Richard Cromwell in his first speech to parliament:—'For my own part being, by the providence of God, and the disposition of the law, my father's successor, and bearing the place in the government that I do,' &c.—Harleian Miscellany, vol. i. p. 21.

9 Mason proposes to read 'I cut some off,' which seems indeed necessary. The sense would then be, 'Some I have cut off, and many I intended to lead to the Holy Land.'

10 This is a true picture of a mind divided between heaven and earth. He prays for the prosperity of guilt, while he deprecates its punishment.

11 'At length he recovered his speech and understanding, and perceiving himself in a strange place, which he knew not, he willed to know if the chamber had any particular name, whereunto answer was made, that it was called Jerusalem. Then said the king, Laud be given to the Father of Heaven, for now I know that I shall die here in this chamber, according to the prophesie,

It hath been prophesied to me many years,
I should not die but in Jerusalem;
Which vainly I supposed, the Holy Land—
But, bear me to that chamber; there I'll lie;
In that Jerusalem shall Harry die. [Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I. Glostershire. A Hall in Shallow's House. Enter SHALLOW, FALSTAFF, BARDOLPH, and Page.

Shal. By cock and pyc,¹ sir, you shall not away to-night.—What, Davy, I say!

Fal. You must excuse me, master Robert Shallow.

Shal. I will not excuse you; you shall not be excused; excuses shall not be admitted; there is no excuse shall serve; you shall not be excused.—Why, Davy!

Enter DAVY.

Davy. Here, sir.

Shal. Davy, Davy, Davy,—let me see, Davy; let me see:—yea, marry, William cook, bid him come hither.—Sir John, you shall not be excused.

Davy. Marry, sir, thus;—those precepts² cannot be served: and, again, sir,—Shall we sow the headland with wheat?

Shal. With red wheat, Davy. But for William cook:—Are there no young pigeons?

Davy. Yes, sir.—Here is now the smith's note, for shoeing, and plough-irons.

Shal. Let it be cast,³ and paid:—Sir John, you shall not be excused.

Davy. Now, sir, a new link to the bucket must needs be had;—And, sir, do you mean to stop any of William's wages, about the sack he lost the other day at Hinckley fair?

Shal. He shall answer it:—Some pigeons, Davy; a couple of short-legged hens; a joint of mutton; and any pretty little tiny kickshaws, tell William cook.

Davy. Doth the man of war stay all night, sir?

Shal. Yes, Davy. I will use him well; A friend i' the court is better than a penny in purse.⁴ Use his men well, Davy; for they are arrant knaves, and will backbite.

Davy. No worse than they are back-bitten, sir; for they have marvellous foul linen.

Shal. Well conceited, Davy. About thy business, Davy.

Davy. I beseech you, sir, to countenance William Visor of Wincot⁵ against Clement Perkes of the hill.

Shal. There are many complaints, Davy, against that Visor; that Visor is an arrant knave on my knowledge.

of me declared, that I should depart this life in Jerusalem.—Holinshed, p. 541.

The late Dr. Vincent pointed out a remarkable coincidence in a passage of Anna Comnena (Alexias, lib. vi. p. 162, ed. Paris, 1658,) relating to the death of Robert Guiscard, king of Sicily, in a place called Jerusalem, at Cephalonia. In Lodge's Devils Conjured is a similar story of Pope Sylvester; but the Pope outwitted the Devil. And Fuller, in his Church History, b. v. p. 178, relates something of the same kind about Cardinal Wolsey, of whom it had been predicted that he should have his end at Kingston. Which was thought to be fulfilled by his dying in the custody of Sir William Kingston.

1 This adjuration, which seems to have been a popular substitute for profane swearing, occurs in several old plays. By cock is supposed to be a corruption or disguise of the name of God in favour of pious ears; but the addition of pie has not yet been satisfactorily accounted for. It has been conjectured that it may be only a ludicrous oath by the common sign of an alehouse, The Cock and Magpie, or Cock and Pie, being a most ancient and favourite sign. It should appear from the following passage, in A Catechisme containing the Summe of Religion, by George Giffard, 1583, that it was not considered as a corruption of the sacred name. 'Men suppose that they do not offend when they do not swear falsely; and because they will not take the name of God to abuse it, they sware by small things;

Davy. I grant your worship, that he is a knave, sir: but yet, God forbid, sir, but a knave should have some countenance at his friend's request. An honest man, sir, is able to speak for himself, when a knave is not. I have served your worship truly, sir, this eight years; and if I cannot once or twice in a quarter bear out a knave against an honest man, I have but a very little credit with your worship.⁶ The knave is mine honest friend, sir; therefore, I beseech your worship, let him be countenanced.

Shal. Go to; I say, he shall have no wrong. Look about, Davy. [Exit DAVY.] Where are you, Sir John? Come, off with your boots.—Give me your hand, master Bardolph.

Bard. I am glad to see your worship.

Shal. I thank thee with all my heart, kind master Bardolph:—and welcome, my tall fellow. [To the Page.] Come, Sir John. [Exit SHALLOW.]

Fal. I'll follow you, good master Robert Shallow. Bardolph, look to our horses. [Exeunt BARDOLPH and Page.] If I were sawed into quantities, I should make four dozen of such bearded hermit's staves as master Shallow. It is a wonderful thing, to see the semblable coherence of his men's spirits and his: They, by observing him, do bear themselves like foolish justices; he, by conversing with them, is turned into a justicelike serving-man; their spirits are so married in conjunction with the participation of society, that they flock together in consent,⁷ like so many wild geese. If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men, with the imputation of being near their master:⁸ if to his men, I would curry with master Shallow, that no man could better command his servants. It is certain, that either wise bearing, or ignorant carriage, is caught, as men take diseases, one of another: therefore, let men take heed of their company. I will devise matter enough out of this Shallow, to keep Prince Harry in continual laughter, the wearing-out of six fashions (which is four terms, or two actions,⁹) and he shall laugh without intervallums. O, it is much, that a lie, with a slight oath, and a jest, with a sad brow,¹⁰ will do with a fellow that never had the ache in his shoulders! O, you shall see him laugh, till his face be like a wet cloak ill laid up.

Shal. [Within.] Sir John!

Fal. I come, master Shallow; I come, master Shallow. [Exit FALSTAFF.]

SCENE II. Westminster. A Room in the Palace. Enter WARWICK and the Lord Chief Justice.

War. How now, my lord chief justice? whither away?

Ch. Just. How doth the king?

as by cock and pie, by the mousefoot, and many such like.¹

2 Precepts are warrants. Davy has almost as many employments as Scrub in the Beaux Stratagem.

3 i.e. cast up, computed.

4 'A friend in court is worth a penny in purse,' is one of Camden's proverbial sentences. See his Remaines, 4to. 1605.

5 Wincote or Wincot, is a village in Warwickshire, near Stratford. The old copies read Wincot.

6 This is no exaggerated picture of the course of justice in Shakspeare's time. Sir Nicholas Bacon, in a speech to parliament, 1559, says, 'Is it not a monstrous disguising to have a justice a maintainer, acquitting some for gain, ending others for malice, bearing with him as his servant, overthrowing the other as his enemy.' D'Eces, p. 34. He repeats the same words again in 1571. Ib. 153. A member of the house of commons, in 1601, says, 'A justice of peace is a living creature, that for half a dozen chickens will dispense with a dozen of penal statutes,' &c.

7 Consent is accord, agreement; a combination for any particular purpose. Baret renders 'secta, a divers consente in sundry wilful opinions.'

8 i.e. admitted to their master's confidence.

9 There is something humorous in making a spendthrift compute time by the operation of an action for debt.

10 i.e. a serious face.

War. Exceeding well; his cares are now all ended.

Ch. Just. I hope, not dead.

War. He's walk'd the way of nature; And, to our purposes, he lives no more.

Ch. Just. I would, his majesty had call'd me with him:

The service that I truly did his life,
Hath left me open to all injuries.

War. Indeed, I think, the young king loves you not.

Ch. Just. I know, he doth not; and do arm myself,

To welcome the condition of the time;
Which cannot look more hideously upon me
Than I have drawn it in my fantasy.

Enter PRINCE JOHN, PRINCE HUMPHREY, CLARENCE, WESTMORELAND, and others.

War. Here come the heavy issue of dead Harry: O, that the living Harry had the temper Of him, the worst of these three gentlemen! How many nobles then should hold their places, That must strike sail to spirits of vile sort!

Ch. Just. Alas! I fear, all will be overturn'd.

P. John. Good morrow, cousin Warwick.

P. Humph. Cl. Good morrow, cousin.

P. John. We meet like men that had forgot to speak.

War. We do remember; but our argument Is all too heavy to admit much talk.

P. John. Well, peace be with him that hath made us heavy!

Ch. Just. Peace be with us, lest we be heavier!

P. Humph. O, good my lord, you have lost a friend, indeed:

And I dare swear, you borrow not that face Of seeming sorrow; it is, sure, your own.

P. John. Though no man be assur'd what grace to find,

You stand in coldest expectation:

I am the sorrier; 'twould, 'twere otherwise.

Cl. Well, you must now speak Sir John Falstaff fair;

Which swims against your stream of quality.

Ch. Just. Sweet princes, what I did, I did in honour,

Led by the impartial conduct of my soul;

And never shall you see, that I will beg

A ragged and forestall'd remission.—¹

If truth and upright innocence fail me,

I'll to the king my master that is dead,

And tell him who hath sent me after him.

War. Here comes the prince.

Enter KING HENRY V.

Ch. Just. Good morrow; and heaven save your majesty!

King. This new and gorgeous garment, majesty, Sits not so easy on me as you think.—

Brothers, you mix your sadness with some fear;

This is the English, not the Turkish court;

Not Amurath an Amurath² succeeds,

But Harry Harry: Yet be sad, good brothers,

For, to speak truth, it very well becomes you;

Sorrow so royally in you appears,

That I will deeply put the fashion on,

¹ 'A ragged and forestall'd remission' is a remission or pardon obtained by beggarly supplication. Forestalling is prevention. In a former scene the prince says to his father:—

'But for my tears, &c.

I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke.'

² Amurath IV. emperor of the Turks, died in 1596; his second son, Amurath, who succeeded him, had all his brothers strangled at a feast, to which he invited them, while yet ignorant of their father's death. It is highly probable that Shakespeare alludes to this transaction. The play may have been written while the fact was still recent.

³ Was this easy? was this a light offence?

⁴ It has already been remarked that Sir William Gascoigne, the chief justice in this play, died in the reign of Henry IV.; and consequently this scene has

And wear it in my heart. Why then, be sad:

But entertain no more of it, good brothers,

Than a joint burden laid upon us all.

For me, by heaven, I bid you be assur'd,

I'll be your father and your brother too;

Let me but bear your love, I'll bear your cares.

Yet weep, that Harry's dead; and so will I:

But Harry lives, that shall convert those tears,

By number, into hours of happiness.

P. John, &c. We hope no other from your majesty.

King. You all look strangely on me;—and you most;

You are, I think, assur'd I love you not.

Ch. Just. I am assur'd, if I be measur'd rightly.

Your majesty hath no just cause to hate me.

King. No!

How might a prince of my great hopes forget

So great indignities you laid upon me?

What! rate, rebuke, and roughly send to prison

The immediate heir of England? Was this easy?

May this be wash'd in Lethe, and forgotten?

Ch. Just. I then did use the person of your father;

The image of his power lay then in me:

And, in the administration of his law,

Whiles I was busy for the commonwealth,

Your highness pleased to forget my place,

The majesty and power of law and justice,

The image of the king whom I presented,

And struck me in my very seat of judgment;

Whereon, as an offender to your father,

I gave bold way to my authority,

And did commit you. If the deed were ill,

Be you contented, wearing now the garland,

To have a son set your decrees at naught;

To pluck down justice from your awful bench;

To trip the course of law, and blunt the sword

That guards the peace and safety of your person,

Nay, more; to spurn at your most royal image,

And mock your workings in a second body.

Question your royal thoughts, make the case yours;

Be now the father, and propose a son:

Hear your own dignity so much profan'd,

See your most dreadful laws so loosely alighted,

Behold yourself so by a son disdain'd;

And then imagine me taking your part,

And, in your power, soft silencing your son:

After this cold consideration, sentence me;

And, as you are a king, speak in your state,

What I have done, that misbecame my place,

My person, or my liege's sovereignty.

King. You are right, justice, and you weigh this well;

Therefore still bear the balance and the sword:

And I do wish your honours may increase,

Till you do live to see a son of mine

Offend you, and obey you, as I did.

So shall I live to speak my father's words;—

Happy am I, that have a man so bold,

That dares do justice on my proper son:

And not less happy, having such a son,

That would deliver up his greatness so

Into the hands of justice.—You did commit me:

For which, I do commit into your hand

The unstaïn'd sword that you have us'd to bear;

With this remembrance.⁵—That you use the same

With the like bold, just, and impartial spirit, no foundation in fact. Shakspeare was misled by Stowe, or probably was careless about the matter. While Gascoigne was at the bar, Henry of Bolingbroke was his client, who appointed him his attorney to sue out his livery in the Court of Wards: but Richard II. defeated his purpose. When Bolingbroke became Henry IV. he appointed Gascoigne chief justice. In that station he acquired the character of a learned, upright, wise, and intrepid judge. The story of his committing the prince is told by Sir Thomas Elyot, in his book entitled The Governor; but Shakspeare followed the Chronicles.

⁵ Treat with contempt your acts executed by a representative.

⁶ i. e. image to yourself that you have a son.

⁷ In your regal character and office.

⁸ Remembrance; that is admonition or warning

As you have done 'gainst me. There is my hand ;
 You shall be as a father to my youth :
 My voice shall sound as you do prompt mine ear ;
 And I will stoop and humble my intents
 To your well practis'd, wise directions.—
 And, princes all, believe me, I beseech you ;—
 My father is gone wild into his grave,¹
 For in his tomb lie my affections ;
 And with his spirit sadly² I survive,
 To mock the expectation of the world ;
 To frustrate prophecies ; and to raze out
 Rotten opinion, who hath writ me down
 After my seeming. The tide of blood in me
 Hath proudly flow'd in vanity, till now :
 Now doth it turn, and ebb back to the sea ;
 Where it shall mingle with the state's³ of floods,
 And flow henceforth in formal majesty.
 Now call we our high court of parliament :
 And let us choose such limbs of noble counsel,
 That the great body of our state may go
 In equal rank with the best-govern'd nation ;
 That war, or peace, or both at once, may be
 As things acquainted and familiar to us ;—
 In which you, father, shall have foremost hand.—

[To the Lord Chief Justice.

Our coronation done, we will accite.⁴
 As I before remember'd, all our state :
 And (God consigning to my good intents,)
 No prince, nor peer, shall have just cause to say,
 Heaven shorten Harry's happy life one day.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III. Gloucestershire. The Garden of Shallow's House. Enter FALSTAFF, SHALLOW, SILENCE, BARDOLPH, the Page, and DAVY.

Shal. Nay, you shall see mine orchard : where, in an hour, we will eat a last year's pippin of my own grafting, with a dish of carraways,⁵ and so forth ;—come, cousin Silence ;—and then to bed.

Fal. 'Fore God, you have here a goodly dwelling, and a rich.

Shal. Barren, barren, barren ; beggars all, beggars all, Sir John :—marry, good air.—Spread, Davy ; spread, Davy ; well said, Davy.

Fal. This Davy serves you for good uses ; he is your serving-man, and your husbandman.

Shal. A good varlet, a good varlet, a very good varlet, Sir John.—By the mass, I have drunk too much sack at supper :—a good varlet. Now sit down, now sit down :—come, cousin.

Sil. Ah, sirrah ! quoth-a,—we shall
 Do nothing but eat, and make good cheer,

[Singing.

And praise heaven for the merry year ;
 When flesh is cheap, and females dear,⁶
 And lusty lads roam here and there,
 So merrily,
 And ever among so merrily.

1 The meaning is, My wild dispositions having ceased on my father's death, and being now as it were buried in his tomb, he and wildness are interred in the same grave.

2 Sadly is soberly, seriously ; sad is opposed to wild.

3 That is, with the majestic dignity of the ocean, the chief of floods.

4 Summons.

5 This passage, which was long a subject of dispute, some pertinaciously maintaining that carraways meant apples of that name, has been at length properly explained by the following quotations from Cogan's Haven of Health, 1599 :—'For the same purpose careway seeds are used to be made in comfits, and to be eaten with apples, and surely very good for that purpose, for all such things as breed wind, would be eaten with other things that break wind.' Again :—'Howbeit we are wont to eat carraways, or biskets, or some other kind of comfits or seedes, together with apples, thereby to break wind ingendred by them ; and surely this is a verie good way for students.' The truth is, that apples and carraways were formerly always eaten together ; and it is said that they are still served up on particular days at Trinity College, Cambridge.

6 The character of Silence is admirably sustained ; he would scarcely speak a word before, and now there is no end to his garrulity. He has a catch for every occasion :—

Fal. There's a merry heart !—Good master Silence, I'll give you a health for that anon.

Shal. Give master Bardolph some wine, Davy.
 Davy. Sweet sir, sit ; [Seating BARDOLPH and the Page at another table.] I'll be with you anon :—most sweet sir, sit.—Master page, good master page, sit : proface !⁷ What you want in meat, we'll have in drink. But you must bear ; The heart's all.

[Exit.

Shal. Be merry, master Bardolph ;—and my little soldier there, be merry.

Sil. Be merry, be merry, my wife has all ;

[Singing.

For women are shrews, both short and tall :
 'Tis merry in hall, when beards wag all,⁸

And welcome merry shrove-tide.⁹

Be merry, be merry, &c.

Fal. I did not think, master Silence had been a man of this mettle.

Sil. Who I ? I have been merry twice and once, ere now.

Re-enter DAVY.

Davy. There is a dish of leather-coats¹⁰ for you.
 [Setting them before BARDOLPH.

Shal. Davy,—

Davy. Your worship ?—I'll be with you straight.
 [To BARD.]—A cup of wine, sir ?

Sil. A cup of wine, that's brisk and fine,
 And drink unto the leman mine ;

[Singing.

And a merry heart lives long-a.

Fal. Well said, master Silence.

Sil. And we shall be merry ;—now comes in the sweet of the night.

Fal. Health and long life to you, master Silence.

Sil. Fill the cup, and let it come ;

I'll pledge you a mile to the bottom.

Shal. Honest Bardolph, welcome : if thou wantest any thing, and wilt not call, beshrew thy heart.—

Welcome, my little tiny thief ; [To the Page.] and welcome, indeed, too.—I'll drink to master Bardolph, and to all the cavaleroes about London.

Davy. I hope to see London once ere I die.

Bard. An I might see you there, Davy,—

Shal. By the mass, you'll crack a quart together. Ha ! will you not, master Bardolph ?

Bard. Yes, sir, in a pottle pot.

Shal. I thank thee :—The knave will stick by thee, I can assure thee that : he will not out ; he is true bred.

Bard. And I'll stick by him, sir.

Shal. Why, there spoke a king. Lack nothing : be merry. [Knocking hard.] Look who's at doo there : Ho ! who knocks ?

[Exit DAVY.

Fal. Why, now you have done me right.

[To SILENCE, who drinks a bumper.

Sil. Do me right,¹¹

[Singing.

'When flesh is cheap and females dear.'

Here the double sense of dear must be remembered.

7 An expression of welcome equivalent to Much good may it do you !

8 This proverbial rhyme is of great antiquity ; it is found in Adam Davie's Life of Alexander :—

'Merrie swithe it is in hall

When the berdes waveth alle.'

9 Shrove-tide was the ancient carnival ; 'In most places where the Romish religion is generally professed, it is a time wherein more than ordinary liberty is tolerated, as it were in recompense of the abstinence (penance which is to be undergone for a time) for the future ; whence by a metaphor it may be taken for any time of rioting or licence.'—Philips's World of Words, T. Waton does not seem to have known that shrove-tide and carnival were the same, or that carnisaprium and carnisaprium were the low Latin terms for the latter. Shrove-tide was a season of such mirth that shroving, or to shrove, signified to be merry.

10 Apples commonly called russetines.

11 To do a man right and to do him reason were formerly the usual expressions in pledging healths ; he who drank a bumper expected that a bumper should be drunk to his toast. To this Bishop Hall alludes in his Quo Vadis :—'Those formes of ceremonious quaffing, in which men have learned to make gods of others and

And dub me knight :'

Samingo.²

Is't not so ?

Fal. 'Tis so.

Sil. Is't so ? Why, then say, an old man can do somewhat.

Re-enter DAVY.

Davy. An it please your worship, there's one Pistol come from the court with news.

Fal. From the court, let him come in.—

Enter PISTOL.

Fal. How now, Pistol ?

Pist. God save you, Sir John !

Fal. What wind blew you hither, Pistol ?

Pist. Not the ill wind which blows no man to good.³—Sweet knight, thou art now one of the greatest men in the realm.

Sil. By'r lady, I think 'a be ; but Goodman Puff of Barson.⁴

Pist. Puff ?

Puff in thy teeth, most recreant coward base !—

Sir John, I am thy Pistol, and thy friend,

And helter-skelter have I rode to thee ;

And tidings do I bring, and lucky joys,

And golden times, and happy news of price.

Fal. I prythee now, deliver them like a man of this world.

Pist. A foutra for the world, and worldlings base ! I speak of Africa, and golden joys.

Fal. O base Assyrian knight, what is thy news ?

Let king Cophetua know the truth thereof.

Sil. And Robin Hood, Scarlet, and John. [Sings.

Pist. Shall dunghill curs confront the Helicons ? And shall good news be baffled ?

Then, Pistol, lay thy head in Furies' lap.

Shal. Honest gentleman, I know not your breeding.

Pist. Why then, lament therefore.

Shal. Give me pardon, sir :—If, sir, you come with news from the court, I take it, there is but two ways ; either to utter them, or to conceal them. I am, sir, under the king, in some authority.

Pist. Under which king, Bezonian ?⁵ speak, or die.

Shal. Under King Harry.

Pist. Harry the Fourth ? or Fifth ?

Shal. Harry the Fourth.

Pist. A foutra for thine office !—

Sir John, thy tender lambkin now is king ;

Harry the Fifth's the man. I speak the truth :

When Pistol lies, do this ; and fig me,⁶ like

The bragging Spaniard.

beasts of themselves : and lose their reason, whiles they pretend to de reason.⁷

1 He who drank a bumper on his knees to the health of his mistresses, was dubbed a knight for the evening.

2 In Nashe's play called Summer's Last Will and Testament, 1600, Bacchus sings the following catch :—

'Monsieur Mingo for quaffing doth surpass

In cup, or can, or glass ;

God Bacchus, do me right,

And dub me knight, Domingo.'

In Rowland's Epigrams, 1600, Monsieur Domingo is celebrated as a toper. It has been supposed that the introduction of Domingo as a burthen to a drinking song was intended as a satire on the luxury of the Dominicans ; but whether the change to Samingo was a blunder of Silence in his cups, or was a real contraction of San Domingo, is uncertain. Why Saint Dominick should be the patron of toppers does not appear.

3 So in Bulleine's Dialogue of the Fever Pestilence, 1564 :—

'No wiude but it doth turn some man to good.'

4 Barston is a village in Warwickshire, lying between Coventry and Solihull.

5 Bezonian, according to Florio a bisogno, is 'a new levied souldier, such as comes needy to the wars.' Cotgrave, in bisogne, says 'a filthy knave, or clowne, a raskall, a bisonian, base humoured scoundrel.' Its original sense is a beggar, a needy person ; it is often met with very differently spelt in the old comedies.

6 An expression of contempt or insult by putting the thumb between the fore and middle finger, and forming a coarse representation of a disease to which the name of zeus has always been given. The custom has been regarded as originally Spanish, but without foundation,

Fal. What! is the old king dead ?

Pist. As nail in door :⁸ The things I speak, are just.

Fal. Away, Bardolph ; saddle my horse.—Master Robert Shallow, choose what office thou wilt in the land, 'tis thine.—Pistol, I will double charge thee with dignities.

Bard. O joyful day !—I would not take a knight-hood for my fortune.

Pist. What ? I do bring good news ?

Fal. Carry master Silence to bed.—Master Shallow, my Lord Shallow, be what thou wilt, I am fortune's steward. Get on thy boots ; we'll ride all night :—O, sweet Pistol :—Away, Bardolph. [Exit BARD.]—Come, Pistol, utter more to me ; and, withal, devise something to do thyself good.—Boot, boot, master Shallow ; I know, the young king is sick for me. Let us take any man's horses ; the laws of England are at my commandment. Happy are they which have been my friends ; and woe to my lord chief justice !

Pist. Let vultures vile seize on his lungs also !

Where is the life that late I led, say they :

Why, here it is ; Welcome these pleasant days.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. London. A Street. Enter Beadles, dragging in Hostess QUICKLY, and DOLL TEAR-SHEET.⁹

Host. No, thou arrant knave ; I would I might die, that I might have thee hanged : thou hast drawn my shoulder out of joint.

1 Bead. The constables have delivered her over to me ; and she shall have whipping-cheer enough, I warrant her : There hath been a man or two lately killed about her.

Doll. Nut-hook, nut-hook,¹⁰ you lie. Come on ; I'll tell thee what, thou damned tripe-visaged rascal ; an the child I now go with do miscarry, thou hadst better thou hadst struck thy mother, thou paper-faced villain.

Host. O the Lord, that Sir John were come ! he would make this a bloody day to somebody. But I pray God, the fruit of her womb miscarry !

1 Bead. If it do, you shall have a dozen of cushions¹¹ again ; you have but eleven now. Come, I charge you both go with me ; for the man is dead, that you and Pistol beat among you.

Doll. I'll tell thee what, thou thin man in a censer !¹² I will have you as soundly swung for this, they most probably had it from the Romans. Pistol seems to accompany the phrase with an appropriate gesticulation. In explaining the higas dar of the Spaniards, Minshew says, after describing it, 'a manner as they use in England to bore the nose with the finger, as in disgrace.' The phrase is amply explained in Mr. Douce's Illustrations of Shakspeare, vol. i. p. 492.

7 Stevens remarks that this proverbial expression is oftener used than understood. The door nail is the nail in ancient doors on which the knocker strikes. It is therefore used as a comparison for one irrecoverably dead, one who has fallen (as Virgil says) multa morte, i. e. with abundant death, such as reiterated strokes on the head would produce.

8 In the quarto, 1600, we have 'Enter Sineklo, and three or four officers.' And the name of Sineklo is prefixed to the Beadle's speeches. Sineklo is also introduced in The Taming of the Shrew, he was an actor in the same company with Shakspeare.

9 It has already been observed (Merry Wives of Windsor, Act i. Sc. 1) that nut-hook was a term of reproach for a bailiff or constable. Cleveland says of a committee-man :—'He is the devil's nut-hook, the sign with him is always in the clutches.'

10 That is to stuff her out, that she might counterfeit pregnancy. In Greene's Dispute between a He Cony-catcher, &c. 1592 :—to wear a cushion under her own kirtle, and to feine herself with child.

11 Doll humorously compares the beadle's spare figure to the embossed figures in the middle of the pierced convex lid of a censer made of thin metal. The sluttish of rush-strewed chambers rendered censers or fire pans in which coarse perfumes were burnt most necessary utensils. In Much Ado About Nothing, Borachio says that he had been entertained for a perfumer to smoke a musty room at Leonato's.

you blue-bottle rogue!¹ you filthy famished correctioner! if you be not swinged, I'll forswear half-kirtles.²

1 Bead. Come, come, you she knight-errant, come.

Host. O, that right should thus overcome might! Well; of sufferance comes ease.

Dol. Come, you rogue, come; bring me to a justice.

Host. Ay; come, you starved blood-hound.

Dol. Goodman death! goodman bones!

Host. Thou atomy³ thou!

Dol. Come, you thin thing; come, you rascal!

1 Bead. Very well. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V. A public Place near Westminster Abbey. Enter Two Grooms, streuing Rushes.

1 Groom. More rushes, more rushes.

2 Groom. The trumpets have sounded twice.

1 Groom. It will be two o'clock ere they come from the coronation: Despatch, despatch.

[Exeunt Grooms.]

Enter FALSTAFF, SHALLOW, PISTOL, BARDOLPH, and the Page.

Fal. Stand here by me, master Robert Shallow; I will make the king do you grace: I will leer upon him, as 'a comes by; and do but mark the countenance that he will give me.

Pist. God bless thy lungs, good knight.

Fal. Come here, Pistol; stand behind me.—O, if I had had time to have made new liveries, I would have bestowed the thousand pound I borrowed of you. [To SHALLOW.] But 'tis no matter; this poor show doth better: this doth infer the zeal I had to see him.

Shal. It doth so.

Fal. It shows my earnestness of affection.

Shal. It doth so.

Fal. My devotion.

Shal. It doth, it doth, it doth.

Fal. As it were, to ride day and night; and not to deliberate, not to remember, not to have patience to shift me.

Shal. It is most certain.

Fal. But to stand stained with travel, and sweating with desire to see him: thinking of nothing else; putting all affairs else in oblivion; as if there were nothing else to be done, but to see him.

Pist. 'Tis semper idem, for absque hoc nihil est: 'Tis all in every part.⁴

Shal. 'Tis so, indeed.

Pist. My knight, I will inflame thy noble liver, And make thee rage.

Thy Doll, and Helen of thy noble thoughts,

Is in base durance, and contagious prison;

Haul'd thither

By most mechanical and dirty hand:—

Rouse up revenge from ebon den with fell Alecto's snake,

For Doll is in; Pistol speaks nought but truth.

Fal. I will deliver her.

[Shouts within, and the Trumpets sound.]

Pist. There roar'd the sea, and trumpet-clangor sounds.

Enter the King and his Train, the Chief Justice among them.

Fal. God save thy grace, King Hal! my royal Hal!⁵

1 Beadles usually wore a blue livery.

2 A half kirtle was a kind of apron or fore part of the dress of a woman. It could not be a cloak, as Malone supposed; nor a short bedgown, as Stevens imagined.

3 The hostess's corruption of atomy.

4 Warburton thought that we should read:—

'Tis all in all and all in every part.

5 A similar scene occurs in the anonymous old play of King Henry V. Falstaff and his companions address the king in the same manner, and are dismissed as in this play.

6 Child, offspring.

7 Profane (says Johnson) in our author often signifies love of talk.

Pist. The heavens thee guard and keep, most royal imp⁶ of fame!

Fal. God save thee, my sweet boy!

King. My lord chief justice, speak to that vain man.

Ch. Just. Have you your wits? know you what 'tis you speak?

Fal. My king! my Jove! I speak to thee, my heart!

King. I know thee not, old man: Fall to thy prayers;

How ill white hairs become a fool, and jester!

I have long dream'd of such a kind of man,

So surfeit-swoll'd, so old, and so profane;⁷

But, being awake, I do despise my dream.

Make less thy body hence,⁸ and more thy grace;

Leave gormandizing; know, the grave doth gape

For thee thrice wider than for other men:—

Reply not to me with a fool-born jest;

Presume not, that I am the thing I was:

For heaven doth know, so shall the world perceive,

That I have turn'd away my former self;

So will I those that kept me company.

When thou dost hear I am as I have been,

Approach me; and thou shalt be as thou wast,

The tutor and the feeder of my riots:

Till then, I banish thee, on pain of death,—

As I have done the rest of my misleaders,—

Not to come near our person by ten mile.

For competence of life, I will allow you,

That lack of means enforce you not to evil:

And, as we hear you do reform yourselves,

We will,—according to your strength, and qualities,—

Give you advancement.⁹—Be it your charge, my lord,

To see perform'd the tenor of our word.

Set on. [Exeunt King, and his Train.]

Fal. Master Shallow, I owe you a thousand pound.

Shal. Ay, marry, Sir John; which I beseech you to let me have home with me.

Fal. That can hardly be, master Shallow. Do not you grieve at this; I shall be sent for in private to him: look you, he must seem thus to the world. Fear not your advancement; I will be the man yet, that shall make you great.

Shal. I cannot perceive how; unless you give me your doublet, and stuff me out with straw. I beseech you, good Sir John, let me have five hundred of my thousand.

Fal. Sir, I will be as good as my word: this that you heard, was but a colour.

Shal. A colour, I fear, that you will die in, Sir John.

Fal. Fear no colours; go with me to dinner. Come, lieutenant Pistol;—come, Bardolph:—I shall be sent for soon at night.

Re-enter PRINCE JOHN, the Chief Justice, Officers, &c.

Ch. Just. Go, carry Sir John Falstaff to the Fleet;¹⁰

Take all his company along with him.

Fal. My lord, my lord,—

Ch. Just. I cannot now speak: I will hear you soon. Take them away.

8 Henceforward.

9 This circumstance Shakspeare may have derived from the old play of King Henry V. But Hall, Holinshed, and Stowe give nearly the same account of the dismissal of Henry's loose companions. Every reader regrets to see Falstaff so hardly used, and Johnson's vindication of the king does not diminish that feeling. Pains, Johnson thinks, ought to have figured in the conclusion of the play, but I do not believe that any one had ever been sensible of the poet's neglect of him until Johnson pointed it out.

10 Johnson confesses that he does not see 'why Falstaff is carried to the Fleet; he has committed no new fault, and therefore incurred no punishment; but the different agitations of fear, anger, and surprise in him and his company, made a good scene to the eye; and our author, who wanted them no longer on the stage, was glad to find this method of sweeping them away.'

Pist. Si fortuna me tormenta, spero me contenta.

[Exeunt FAL. SHAL. PIST. BARD. PAGE, and Officers.]

P. John. I like this fair proceeding of the king's :
He hath intent, his wonted followers
Shall all be very well provided for ;
But all are banish'd, till their conversations
Appear more wise and modest to the world.

Ch. Just. And so they are.

P. John. The king hath call'd his parliament, my lord.

Ch. Just. He hath.

P. John. I will lay odds,—that, ere this year expire,

We bear our civil swords, and native fire,
As far as France : I heard a bird so sing,
Whose music, to my thinking, pleas'd the king.
Come, will you hence ?

[Exeunt.]

EPILOGUE.

Spoken by a Dancer.

FIRST, my fear ; then, my court'sy ; last, my speech.
My fear is, your displeasure ; my court'sy, my duty ;
and my speech, to beg your pardons. If you look for a good speech now, you undo me : for what I have to say, is of mine own making ; and what, indeed,
I should say, will, I doubt, prove mine own marring. But to the purpose, and so to the venture.—
Be it known to you (as it is very well,) I was lately here in the end of a displeasing play, to pray your patience for it, and to promise you a better. I did mean, indeed, to pay you with this :
which, if, like an ill venture, it come unluckily home,
I break, and you, my gentle creditors, lose. Here,
I promised you, I would be, and here I commit my body to your mercies : bate me some, and I will pay you some, and, as most debtors do, promise you infinitely.

If my tongue cannot entreat you to acquit me, will you command me to use my legs ? and yet that were but light payment,—to dance out of your debt.
But a good conscience will make any possible satisfaction, and so will I. All the gentlewomen here have forgiven me ; if the gentlemen will not, then the gentlemen do not agree with the gentlewomen, which was never seen before in such an assembly.

One word more, I beseech you. If you be not too much cloyed with fat meat, our humble author will continue the story, with Sir John in it, and make you merry with fair Katharine of France :
where, for any thing I know, Falstaff shall die of a sweat, unless already he be killed with your hard opinions ; for Oldcastle died a martyr, and this is not the man. My tongue is weary ; when my legs are too, I will bid you good night : and so kneel down before you ;—but, indeed, to pray for the queen.¹

I FANCY every reader, when he ends this play, cries out with Desdemona, ' O most lame and impotent conclusion ! ' As this play was not, to our knowledge, divided into acts by the author, I could be content to conclude it with the death of Henry the Fourth :—

' In that Jerusalem shall Harry die.'

¹ Most of the ancient Interludes conclude with a prayer for the king or queen. Hence perhaps, the Vivant Rex et Regina, at the bottom of our modern play bills.

These scenes, which now make the fifth act of Henry the Fourth, might then be the first of Henry the Fifth ; but the truth is, that they do not unite very commodiously to either play. When these plays were represented, I believe they ended as they are now ended in the books ; but Shakespeare seems to have designed that the whole series of action, from the beginning of Richard the Second to the end of Henry the Fifth, should be considered by the reader as one work upon one plan, only broken into parts by the necessity of exhibition.

None of Shakespeare's plays are more read than the First and Second Parts of Henry the Fourth. Perhaps no author has ever, in two plays, afforded so much delight. The great events are interesting, for the fate of kingdoms depends upon them ; the lighter occurrences are diverting, and, except one or two, sufficiently probable ; the incidents are multiplied with wonderful fertility of invention, and the characters diversified with the utmost nicety of discernment, and the profoundest skill in the nature of man.

The prince, who is the hero both of the comic and tragic part, is a young man of great abilities and violent passions, whose sentiments are right, though his actions are wrong ; whose virtues are obscured by negligence, and whose understanding is dissipated by levity. In his idle hours he is rather loose than wicked ; and when the occasion forces out his latent qualities, he is great without effort, and brave without tumult. The trifle is roused into a hero, and the hero again reposes in the trifle. The character is great, original, and just.

Percy is a rugged soldier, choleric and quarrelsome, and has only the soldier's virtues, generosity and courage.

But Falstaff, unimitated, unimitable Falstaff, how shall I describe thee ? thou compound of sense and vice ; of sense which may be admired, but not esteemed ; of vice which may be despised, but hardly detested. Falstaff is a character loaded with faults, and with those faults which naturally produce contempt. He is a thief and a glutton, a coward and a boaster, always ready to cheat the weak, and prey upon the poor ; to terrify the timorous, and insult the defenceless. At once obsequious and malignant, he satirizes in their absence those whom he lives by flattering. He is familiar with the prince only as an agent of vice, but of this familiarity he is so proud, as not only to be supercilious and haughty with common men, but to think his interest of importance to the Duke of Lancaster. Yet the man thus corrupt, thus despicable, makes himself necessary to the prince that despises him, by the most pleasing of all qualities, perpetual gaiety ; by an unfaultering power of exciting laughter ; which is more frequently indulged, as his wit is not of the splendid or ambitious kind, but consists in easy escapes and sallies of levity, which make sport, but raise no envy. It must be observed, that he is stained with no enormous or sanguinary crimes, so that his licentiousness is not so offensive but that it may be borne for his mirth.

The moral to be drawn from this representation is, that no man is more dangerous than he that with a will to corrupt, hath the power to please ; and that neither wit nor honesty ought to think themselves safe with such a companion, when they see Henry seduced by Falstaff.

Mr. Upton thinks these two plays improperly called the First and Second Parts of Henry the Fourth. The first play ends, he says, with the peaceful settlement of Henry in the kingdom by the defeat of the rebels. This is hardly true ; for the rebels are not yet finally suppressed. The second, he tells us, shows Henry the Fifth in the various lights of a good-natured rake, till, on his father's death, he assumes a more manly character. This is true ; but this representation gives us no idea of a dramatic action. These two plays will appear to every reader, who shall peruse them without ambition of critical discoveries, to be so connected, that the second is merely a sequel to the first ; to be two only because they are too long to be one. JOHNSON.

KING HENRY THE FIFTH.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

THE transactions comprised in this play commence about the latter end of the first, and terminate in the eighth year of this king's reign: when he married Katharine, princess of France, and closed up the differences betwixt England and that crown.

This play, in the quarto edition of 1608, is styled The Chronicle History of Henry, &c. which seems to have been the title appropriated to all Shakspeare's historical dramas. Thus in The Antipodes, a comedy by R. Brome:—

'These lads can act the emperors' lives all over,
And Shakspeare's Chronicle Histories to boot.'

The players, likewise, in the folio of 1623, rank these pieces under the title of Histories.

It is evident that a play on this subject had been performed before the year 1592. Nash, in his Pierce Penitence, dated in that year, says, 'What a glorious thing it is to have Henry the Fifth represented on the stage, leading the French king prisoner, and forcing both him and the Dolphin to swear fealty.' Perhaps this same play was thus entered on the books of the Stationers' Company:—[Thomas Storde] May 2. 1594. A booke entitled The famous Victories of Henry the Fifth, containing the honourable Battle of Agincourt.* There are two more entries of a play of King Henry V. viz. between 1596 and 1615, and one August 14, 1600. Malone had an edition printed in 1598, and Steevens had two copies of this play, one without date, and the other dated 1617, both printed by Bernard Alsop; from one of these it was reprinted in 1778, among six old plays on which Shakspeare founded, &c. published by Mr. Nichols. It is thought that this piece is prior to Shakspeare's King Henry V. and that it is the very 'displeasing play' alluded to in the epilogue to the Second Part of King Henry IV. 'for Oldcastle died a martyr, &c.' Oldcastle is the Falstaff of the piece, which is despicable, and full of ribaldry and impiety. Shakspeare seems to have taken not a few hints from it; for it comprehends, in some measure, the story of the two parts of King Henry IV. as well as of King Henry V. and no ignorance could debase the gold of Shakspeare into such dross, though no chemistry, but that of Shakspeare, could exalt such base metal into gold. This piece must have been performed before the year 1588, Tarlton, the comedian, who played both the parts of the Chief Justice and the Clown in it, having died in that year.

This anonymous play of King Henry V. is neither divided into acts or scenes, is uncommonly short, and has all the appearance of having been imperfectly taken down during the representation.

There is a play called Sir John Oldcastle, published in 1600, with the name of William Shakspeare prefixed to it. The prologue of which serves to show that a former piece, in which the character of Oldcastle was introduced, had given great offence:—

'The doubtful title (gentlemen) prefix
Upon the argument we have in hand,
May breed suspense, and wrongfully disturbe
The peaceful quiet of your settled thoughts.
To stop which scruple, let this breife suffice:
It is no pamper'd glutton we present,
Nor aged counsellour to youngfull sinne;
But one whose vertue shone above the rest,
A valiant martyr and a vertuous peere;
In whose true faith and loyalty expresst
Unto his sovereigne, and his countries weale,
We strive to pay that tribute of our love
Your favours merit: let faire truth be grac'd,
Since forg'd invention former time defac'd.'

Shakspeare's play, according to Malone, seems to have been written in the middle of the year 1599. There are three quarto editions in the poet's lifetime, 1600, 1602, and 1608. In all of them the choruses are omitted, and the play commences with the fourth speech of the second scene.

'King Henry the Fifth is visibly the favourite hero of Shakspeare in English history: he portrays him endowed with every chivalrous and kingly virtue; open, sincere, affable, yet still disposed to innocent raillery, as a sort of reminiscence of his youth, in the intervals between his dangerous and renowned achievements. To bring his life after his ascent to the crown on the stage was, however, attended with great difficulty. The conquests in France were the only distinguished event of his reign: and war is much more an epic than a dramatic object.—If we would have dramatic interest war must only be the means by which something else is accomplished, and not the last aim and substance of the whole.' In King Henry the Fifth, no opportunity was afforded Shakspeare of rendering the issue of the war dramatic; but he has availed himself of other circumstances attending it with peculiar care. 'Before the battle of Agincourt he paints in the most lively colours the light-minded impatience of the French leaders for the moment of battle, which to them seemed infallibly the moment of victory; on the other hand, he paints the uneasiness of the English king and his army, from their desperate situation, coupled with the firm determination, if they are to fall, at least to fall with honour. He applies this as a general contrast between the French and English national characters; a contrast which betrays a partiality for his own nation, certainly excusable in a poet, especially when he is backed with such a glorious document as that of the memorable battle in question. He has surrounded the general events of the war with a fulness of individual characteristic, and even sometimes comic features. A heavy Scotchman, a hot Irishman, a well-meaning, honourable, pedantic Welshman, all speaking in their peculiar dialects. But all this variety still seemed to the poet insufficient to animate a play of which the object was a conquest, and nothing but a conquest. He has therefore tacked a prologue (in the technical language of that day, a chorus) to the beginning of each act. These prologues, which unite epic pomp and solemnity with lyrical sublimity, and among which the description of the two camps before the battle of Agincourt forms a most admirable night piece, are intended to keep the spectators constantly in mind that the peculiar grandeur of the actions there described cannot be developed on a narrow stage; and that they must supply the deficiencies of the representation from their own imaginations. As the subject was not properly dramatic, in the form also Shakspeare chose rather to wander beyond the bounds of the species, and to sing as a poetic herald, what he could not represent to the eye, than to cripple the progress of the action by putting long speeches in the mouths of the persons of the drama.

However much Shakspeare celebrates the French conquest of King Henry, still he has not omitted to hint to us, after his way, the secret springs of this undertaking. Henry was in want of foreign wars to secure himself on the throne; the clergy also wished to keep him employed abroad, and made an offer of rich contributions to prevent the passing of a law which would have deprived them of the half of their revenues. His learned bishops are consequently as ready to prove to him his undisputed right to the crown of France, as he is to allow his conscience to be tranquillized by them. They prove that the Salic law is not, and never was, applicable to France; and the matter is treated in a more succinct and convincing manner than such subjects usually are in manifestoes. After his renowned battles Henry wished to secure his conquests by marriage with a French princess; all that has reference to this is intended for irony in the play. The fruit of this union, from which two nations promised to themselves such happiness in future, was that very feeble Henry the Sixth, under whom every thing was so miserably lost. It must not, therefore, be imagined that it was without the knowledge and will of the poet that an heroic drama turns out a comedy in his hands; and ends, in the manner of comedy, with a marriage of convenience.*

The SCENE, at the beginning of the Play, lies in England; but afterwards wholly in France.

Enter CHORUS.

O, FOR a muse of fire, that would ascend
 The brightest heaven of invention!
 A kingdom for a stage, princes to act,
 And monarchs to behold the swelling scene!
 Then should the warlike Harry, like himself,
 Assume the port of Mars: and, at his heels, Leash'd in like hounds, should famine, sword, and
 fire,
 Crouch for employment. But pardon, gentles all,
 The flat unraised spirit, that hath dar'd,
 On this unworthy scaffold, to bring forth
 So great an object: Can this cockpit hold
 The vasty fields of France? or may we cram
 Within this wooden O, the very casques,¹
 That did affright the air at Agincourt?
 O, pardon! since a crooked figure may
 Attest, in little place, a million;
 And let us, ciphers to this great accompt,
 On your imaginary forces² work:
 Suppose, within the girdle of these walls
 Are now confin'd two mighty monarchies,
 Whose high upreared and abutting fronts
 The perilous, narrow ocean parts asunder.
 Piece out our imperfections with your thoughts;
 Into a thousand parts divide one man,
 And make imaginary puissance:
 Think, when we talk of horses, that you see them
 Printing their proud hoofs i' the receiving earth:
 For 'tis your thoughts that now must deck our
 kings,
 Carry them here and there; jumping o'er times;
 Turning the accomplishment of many years
 Into an hour-glass; For the which supply,
 Admit me chorus to this history;
 Who, prologue like, your humble patience pray
 Gently to hear, kindly to judge, our play.

ACT I.

SCENE I. London.³ *An Antechamber in the King's Palace. Enter the Archbishop of Canterbury, and Bishop of Ely.*⁴

Canterbury.

My lord, I'll tell you,—that self bill is urg'd,

1 O for circle, alluding to the circular form of the heate. The very casques does not mean the identical casques, but the casques alone, or merely the casques.

2 'Imaginary forces.' Imaginary for imaginative, or your powers of fancy. The active and passive are often confounded by old writers.

3 This first scene was added in the folio, together with the choruses, and other amplifications. It appears

Which in the eleventh year o' the last king's reign
 Was like, and had indeed against us pass'd,
 But that the scrambling⁵ and unquiet time
 Did push it out of further question.⁶

Eli. But how, my lord, shall we resist it now?
 Cant. It must be thought on. If it pass against us,
 We lose the better half of our possession:

For all the temporal lands, which men devout
 By testament have given to the church,
 Would they strip from us: being valued thus,—
 As much as would maintain, to the king's honour,
 Full fifteen earls, and fifteen hundred knights:
 Six thousand and two hundred good esquires;
 And, to relief of lazars, and weak age,
 Of indigent faint souls, past corporal toil,
 A hundred alms-houses, right well supplied;
 And to the coffers of the king beside,
 A thousand pounds by the year: Thus runs the bill.

Ely. This would drink deep.

Cant. 'Twould drink the cup and all.

Ely. But what prevention?

Cant. The king is full of grace, and fair regard.

Ely. And a true lover of the holy church.

Cant. The courses of his youth promis'd it not
 The breath no sooner left his father's body,
 But that his wildness, mortified in him,
 Seem'd to die too: yea, at that very moment,
 Consideration like an angel came,
 And whipp'd the offending Adam out of him:
 Leaving his body as a paradise,
 To envelop and contain celestial spirits.
 Never was such a sudden scholar made:
 Never came reformation in a flood,
 With such a heady current, scouring faults;
 Nor never hydra-headed wilfulness
 So soon did lose his seat, and all at once,
 As in this king.

Ely. We are blessed in the change.

Cant. Hear him but reason in divinity
 And, all admiring, with an inward wish from Hall and Hollinshed that the events passed at Leicester, where King Henry V. held a parliament in the second year of his reign. But the chorus at the beginning of the second act shows that the poet intended to make London the place of his first scene.

4 'Canterbury and Ely.' Henry Chicheley, a Carthusian monk, recently promoted to the see of Canterbury. John Fordham, bishop of Ely, consecrated 1368, died 1426.

5 i. e. scrambling.

6 Question is debate.

7 The same thought occurs in the preceding play, where King Henry V. says:—

'My father is gone wild into his grave,
 For in his tomb lie my affections.'

You would desire, the king were made a prelate :
 Hear him debate of commonwealth affairs,
 You would say,—it hath been all in all his study :
 List his discourse of war, and you shall hear
 A fearful battle render'd you in music :
 Turn him to any cause of policy,
 The Gordian knot of it he will unloose,
 Familiar as his garter ; that, when he speaks,
 The air, a charter'd libertine, is still,¹
 And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,
 To steal his sweet and honey'd sentences ;
 So that the art and practic part of life
 Must be the mistress to his theoric :²
 Which is a wonder, how his grace should glean it,
 Since his addiction was to courses vain :
 His companies³ unletter'd, rude, and shallow ;
 His hours fill'd up with riots, banquets, sports ;
 And never noted in him any study,
 Any retirement, any sequestration
 From open haunts and popularity.⁴

Ely. The strawberry grows underneath the nettle ;
 And wholesome berries thrive and ripen best,
 Neighbour'd by fruit of baser quality :
 And so the prince obscur'd his contemplation
 Under the veil of wildness ; which, no doubt,
 Grew like the summer grass, fastest by night,
 Unseen, yet crescent⁵ in his faculty.

Cant. It must be so : for miracles are ceased ;
 And therefore we must needs admit the means,
 How things are perfected.

Ely. But, my good lord,
 How now for mitigation of this bill
 Urg'd by the commons ? Doth his majesty
 Incline to it, or no ?

Cant. He seems indifferent ;
 Or, rather, swaying more upon our part,
 Than cherishing the exhibitors against us ;
 For I have made an offer to his majesty,—
 Upon our spiritual convocation :
 And in regard of causes now in hand,
 Which I have open'd to his grace at large,
 As touching France,—to give a greater sum
 Than ever at one time the clergy yet
 Did to his predecessors part withal.

Ely. How did this offer seem receiv'd, my lord ?

Cant. With good acceptance of his majesty ;
 Save, that there was not time enough to hear
 (As, I perceiv'd, his grace would fain have done)
 The severals, and unhidden passages⁶
 Of his true titles to some certain dukedoms ;
 And, generally, to the crown and seat of France,
 Deriv'd from Edward his great grandfather.

Ely. What was the impediment that broke this off ?

Cant. The French ambassador upon that instant
 Crav'd audience : and the hour I think is come,
 To give him hearing : Is it four o'clock ?

Ely. It is.

Cant. Then go we in, to know his embassy ;
 Which I could, with a ready guess, declare,
 Before the Frenchman speak a word of it.

Ely. I'll wait upon you ; and I long to hear it.
 [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. The same. A Room of State in the same. Enter KING HENRY, GLOSTER, BEDFORD, EXETER, WARWICK, WESTMORELAND, and Attendants.

K. Hen. Where is my gracious lord of Canterbury ?

Exe. Not here in presence.

K. Hen. Send for him, good uncle.⁷

West. Shall we call in the ambassador my liege ?

K. Hen. Not yet, my cousin ; we would be resolv'd,

Before we hear of him, of some things of weight,
 That task our thoughts,⁸ concerning us and France.

Enter the Archbishop of Canterbury, and Bishop of Ely.

Cant. God, and his angels, guard your sacred throne,
 And make you long become it !

K. Hen. Sure, we thank you.

My learned lord, we pray you to proceed ;
 And justly and religiously unfold,
 Why the law Salique, that they have in France,
 Or should, or should not, bar us in our claim.

And God forbid, my dear and faithful lord,
 That you should fashion, wrest, or bow your reading,
 Or nicely charge your understanding soul
 With opening titles miscreate,⁹ whose right

Suits not in native colours with the truth ;
 For God doth know, how many, now in health,
 Shall drop their blood in approbation¹⁰

Of what your reverence shall incite us to :
 Therefore take heed how you impawn our person,¹¹

How you awake the sleeping sword of war ;
 We charge you in the name of God, take heed :

For never two such kingdoms did contend,
 Without much fall of blood ; whose guiltless drops

Are every one a woe, a sore complaint,
 'Gainst him, whose wrongs give edge unto the

swords

That make such waste in brief mortality.

Under this conjuration, speak, my lord :

And we will hear, note, and believe in heart,

That what you speak is in your conscience wash'd
 As pure as sin with baptism.

Cant. Then hear me, gracious sovereign,—and you peers,

That owe your lives, your faith, and services,
 To this imperial throne :—There is no bar¹²

To make against your highness' claim to France,
 But this, which they produce from Pharamond,—

*In terram Salicam mulieres ne succedant,
 No woman shall succeed in Salique land ;*

Which Salique land the French unjustly gloze,¹³
 To be the realm of France, and Pharamond

The founder of this law and female bar.
 Yet their own authors faithfully affirm,

That the land Salique lies in Germany,
 Between the floods of Sala and of Elbe :

Where Charles the Great, having subdued the Saxons,

There left behind and settled certain French ;
 Who, holding in disdain the German women,

Katharine Swynford. He was not made duke of Exeter till the year after the battle of Agincourt, 1416. He was properly now only earl of Dorset. Shakspeare may have confounded this character with John Holland duke of Exeter, who married Elizabeth, the king's aunt. He was executed at Plashey, in 1400. The old play began with the next speech.

⁸ i. e. keep our thoughts busied.
⁹ Or burthen your knowing or conscious soul with displaying false titles in a specious manner or opening pretensions, which, if shown in their native colours, would appear to be false.

¹⁰ ' Shall drop their blood in approbation.' Approbation is used by Shakspeare for proving or establishing by proof.

¹¹ ' Therefore take heed how you impawn our person.' To impawn was to engage or pledge.

¹² ' There is no bar,' &c. The whole speech is taken from Holinshed.

¹³ To gloze is to expound or explain, and sometimes to comment upon.

² ' So that the art and practic part of life

Must be the mistress to his theoric.'

He discourses with so much skill on all subjects, ' that his theory must have been taught by art and practice,' which is strange, since he could see little of the true art or practice among his loose companions, nor ever retired to digest his practice into theory. Practic and theoric, or rather practique and theorique, was the old orthography of practice and theory.

³ Companies, for companions.

⁴ Popularity meant familiarity with the common people, as well as popular favour or applause.

⁵ This expressive word is used by Drant, in his Translation of Horace's Art of Poetry, 1567.

⁶ ' The severals, and unhidden passages.' The particulars and clear un concealed circumstances of his true titles, &c.

⁷ ' Send for him, good uncle.' The person here addressed was Thomas Beaufort, half brother to King Henry IV. being one of the sons of John of Gaunt by

For some dishonest manners of their life,
 Establish'd there this law,—to wit, no female
 Should be inheritrix in Salique land;
 Which Salique, as I said, 'twixt Elbe and Sala,
 Is at this day in Germany call'd—Meisen.
 Thus doth it well appear, the Salique law
 Was not devised for the realm of France:
 Nor did the French possess the Salique land
 Until four hundred one and twenty years
 After defunction of king Pharamond,
 Idly suppos'd the founder of this law;
 Who died with in the year of our redemption
 Four hundred twenty-six; and Charles the Great Subdued the Saxons, and did seat the French
 Beyond the river Sala, in the year
 Eight hundred five. Besides, their writers say,
 King Pepin, which deposed Childerick,
 Did, as their general, being descended
 Of Blithild, which was daughter to King Clothair,
 Make claim and title to the crown of France.
 Hugh Capet also,—that usurp'd the crown
 Of Charles the duke of Lorain, sole heir male
 Of the true line and stock of Charles the Great,—
 To fine¹ his title with some show of truth,
 (Though, in pure truth, it was corrupt and naught,) Convey'd² himself as heir to the Lady Lingare,
 Daughter to Charlemain, who was the son
 To Lewis the emperor, and Lewis the son
 Of Charles the Great. Also King Lewis the Tenth,³
 Who was sole heir to the usurper Capet,
 Could not keep quiet in his conscience,
 Wearing the crown of France, till satisfied
 That fair Queen Isabel, his grandmother,
 Was lineal of the Lady Ermengare,
 Daughter to Charles the foresaid duke of Lorain:
 By the which marriage, the line of Charles the Great

Was reunited to the crown of France.
 So that, as clear as is the summer's sun,
 King Pepin's title, and Hugh Capet's claim,
 King Lewis his satisfaction, all appear
 To hold in right and title of the female:
 So do the kings of France unto this day;
 Howbeit they would hold up this Salique law,
 To bar your highness claiming from the female;
 And rather choose to hide them in a net,
 Than amply to imbare⁴ their crooked titles
 Usurp'd from you and your progenitors.

K. Hen. May I, with right and conscience, make this claim?

Cant. The sin upon my head, dread sovereign!
 For in the book of Numbers is it writ,—
 When the son dies, let the inheritance
 Descend unto the daughter. Gracious lord,
 Stand for your own; unwind your bloody flag;
 Look back unto your mighty ancestors;
 Go, my dread lord, to your great grandsire's tomb,
 From whom you claim: invoke his warlike spirit,
 And your great uncle's, Edward the Black Prince;
 Who on the French ground play'd a tragedy,
 Making defeat on the full power of France;
 Whiles his most mighty father on a hill
 Stood smiling; to behold his lion's whelp
 Forage in blood of French nobility.⁵
 O noble English, that could entertain
 With half their forces the full pride of France;
 And let another half stand laughing by,
 All out of work, and eold for action!⁶

1 'To fine his title with some show of truth.' To fine is to embellish, to trim, to make showy or specious; Limare.

2 'Convey'd himself as heir to the Lady Lingare.' Shakespeare found this expression in Holinshed; and, though it sounds odd to modern ears, it is classical.

3 'Lewis the Tenth.' This should be Lewis the Ninth, as it stands in Hall's Chronicle. Shakespeare has been led into the error by Holinshed, whose Chronicle he followed.

4 'Than amply to imbare their crooked titles.' The folio reads imbarre; the quarto imbace. As there is no other example of such a word, I cannot but think that this is an error of the press for imbare.

5 This alludes to the battle of Cressy; as described by Holinshed, vol. ii. p. 372

Ely. Awake remembrance of these valiant dead,
 And with your puissant arm renew their feats:
 You are their heir, you sit upon their throne;
 The blood and courage that renowned them,
 Runs in your veins; and my thrice-puissant liege
 Is in the very May-morn of his youth,
 Ripe for exploits and mighty enterprises.

Exe. Your brother kings and monarchs of the earth,

Do all expect that you should rouse yourself,
 As did the former lions of your blood.

West. They know, your grace hath cause, and means, and might;

So hath your highness; never king of England
 Had nobles richer, and more loyal subjects;
 Whose hearts have left their bodies here in England,

And lie pavilion'd in the fields of France.

Cant. O, let their bodies follow, my dear liege,
 With blood, and sword, and fire, to win your right:
 In aid whereof, we of the spirituality
 Will raise your highness such a mighty sum,
 As never did the clergy at one time
 Bring in to any of your ancestors.

K. Hen. We must not only arm to invade the French;

But lay down our proportions to defend
 Against the Scot, who will make road upon us
 With all advantages.

Cant. They of those marches,⁷ gracious sovereign, Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
 Our inland from the pilfering borderers.

K. Hen. We do not mean the coursing snatchers only,

But fear the main intendment⁸ of the Scot,
 Who hath been still a giddy neighbour to us;
 For you shall read, that my great grandfather
 Never went with his forces into France,
 But that the Scot on his unfurnish'd kingdom
 Came pouring, like the tide into a breach,
 With ample and brimfulness of his force;
 Galling the gleaned land with hot essays;
 Girding with grievous siege, castles and towns;
 That England, being empty of defence,
 Hath shook and trembled at the ill neighbourhood.⁹

Cant. She hath been then more fear'd¹⁰ than harm'd, my liege:

For hear her but exampled by herself,—
 When all her chivalry hath been in France,
 And she a mourning widow of her nobles,
 She hath herself not only well defended,
 But taken, and impounded as a stray,
 The king of Scots; whom she did send to France,
 To fill King Edward's fame with prisoner kings;
 And make your chronicle as rich with praise,
 As is the ooze and bottom of the sea
 With sunken wreck and sunless treasures.

West. But there's a saying, very old and true,—

If that you will France win,

Then with Scotland first begin:

For once the eagle England being in prey,
 To her unguarded nest the weasel Scot
 Comes sneaking, and so sucks her princely eggs:
 Playing the mouse, in absence of the cat,
 To spoil and havoc more than she can eat.

Exe. It follows, then, the cat must stay at home:
 Yet that is but a crush'd necessity;¹¹

6 'Cold for action,' want of action being the cause of their being cold.

7 i. e. your highness hath indeed what they think and know you have.

8 'They of those marches.' The marches are the borders.

9 'But fear the main intendment of the Scot, Who hath been still a giddy neighbour to us.'

The main intendment is the principal purpose, that he will bend his whole force against us: the Bellum in aliquem intendere, of Livy. A giddy neighbour is an unstable, inconstant one.

10 The quarto reads 'at the bruik thereof.'

11 Fear'd here means frightened.

12 'Yet that is but a crush'd necessity.' This is the reading of the folio. The editors of late editions have adopted the reading of the quarto copy, 'cur'd neces-

Since we have locks to safeguard necessities,
And pretty traps to catch the petty thieves.
While that the armed hand doth fight abroad,
The advised head defends itself at home :
For government, though high, and low, and lower,
Put into parts, doth keep in one consent ;¹
Congruing in a full and natural close,
Like music.

Cant. True : therefore doth heaven divide
The state of man in divers functions,
Setting endeavour in continual motion ;
To which is fixed, as an aim or butt,
Obedience : for so work the honey bees ;
Creatures, that, by a rule in nature, teach
The act² of order to a peopled kingdom.
They have a king, and officers of sorts :³
Where some, like magistrates, correct at home ;
Others, like merchants, venture trade abroad ;
Others, like soldiers, armed in their stings,
Make boot upon the summer's velvet buds ;
Which pillage they with merry march bring home
To the tent-royal of their emperor :
Who, busied in his majesty, surveys
The singing masons building roofs of gold ;
The civil⁴ citizens kneading up the honey ;
The poor mechanic porters crowding in
Their heavy burdens at his narrow gate ;
The sad-eyed justice, with his surly hum,
Delivering o'er to executors⁵ pale
The lazy yawning drone. I this infer,—
That many things, having full reference
To one consent, may work contrariously ;
As many arrows, loosed several ways,
Fly to one mark ;
As many several ways meet in one town ;
As many fresh streams run in one self-sea ;
As many lines close in the dial's centre ;
So may a thousand actions, once afoot,
End in one purpose, and be all well borne
Without defeat.⁶ Therefore to France, my liege.
Divide your happy England into four ;
Whereof take you one quarter into France,
And you withal shall make all Gallia shake.
If we, with thrice that power left at home,
Cannot defend our own door from the dog,
Let us be worried ; and our nation lose
The name of hardiness, and policy.

K. Hen. Call in the messengers sent from the Dauphin.

[Exit an Attendant. The King ascends his Throne.]

Now are we well resolv'd : and by God's help ;
And yours, the noble sinews of our power,—
France being ours, we'll bend it to our awe,
Or break it all to pieces : Or there we'll sit,
Ruling, in large and ample empery,⁷
O'er France, and all her almost kingly dukedoms ;
Or lay these bones in an unworthy urn,
Tombless, with no remembrance over them :

sity,' and by so doing have certainly not rendered the passage more intelligible ; indeed none of the attempts at explanation are satisfactory.

1 Consent is connected harmony in general, and not confined to any specific consonance. Consentio and consensus are both used by Cicero for the union of voices or instruments, in what we should now call a chorus or concert.

2 'The act of order' is the statute or law of order ; as appears from the reading of the quarto. 'Creatures that by awe ordain an act of order to a peopled kingdom.'

3 i. e. of different degrees : if it be not an error of the press for sort, i. e. rank.

4 'The civil citizens kneading up the honey.' Civil is grave. See Twelfth Night, Act iii. Sc. 4. Johnson observes, to knead the honey is not physically true. The bees do, in fact, knead the wax more than the honey.

5 'Executors' for executioners. Thus also Burton, in his Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 38, ed. 1632 :—'Tremble at an executor, and yet not feare hell-fire.'

6 'Without defeat.' The quartos read, 'Without defeat.'

7 'Empery.' This word, which signifies dominion, is now obsolete, though once in general use.

Either our history shall, with full m-uth,
Speak freely of our acts ; or else our grave,
Like Turkish mute, shall have a tongueless mouth,
Not worship'd with a waxen epitaph.⁸

Enter Ambassadors of France.

Now are we well prepar'd to know the pleasure
Of our fair cousin Dauphin ; for, we hear,
Your greeting is from him, not from the king.

Amb. May it please your majesty, to give us leave

Freely to render what we have in charge ;
Or shall we sparingly show you far off
The Dauphin's meaning, and our embassy ?

K. Hen. We are no tyrant, but a Christian king ;
Unto whose grace our passion is as subject,
As are our wretches fetter'd in our prisons :
Therefore, with frank and with uncurbed plainness,
Tell us the Dauphin's mind.

Amb. Thus then, in few
Your highness, lately sending into France,
Did claim some certain dukedoms, in the right
Of your great predecessor, King Edward the Third.
In answer of which claim, the prince our master
Says,—that you savour too much of your youth ;
And bids you be advis'd, there's nought in France,
That can be with a nimble galliard⁹ won ;
You cannot revel into dukedoms there :
He therefore sends you, meeter for your spirit,
This tun of treasure : and, in lieu of this,
Desires you, let the dukedoms, that you claim,
Hear no more of you. This the Dauphin speaks.

K. Hen. What treasure, uncle ?

Ere. Tennis-balls, my liege.¹⁰

K. Hen. We are glad the Dauphin is so pleasant with us ;

His present, and your pains, we thank you for :
When we have match'd our rackets to these balls,
We will, in France, by God's grace, play a set,
Shall strike his father's crown into the hazard :¹¹
Tell him, he hath made a match with such a wrangler,

That all the courts of France will be disturb'd
With chaces.¹² And we understand him well,
How he comes o'er us with our wilder days,
Not measuring what use we made of them.
We never valu'd this poor seat¹³ of England ;
And therefore, living hence,¹⁴ did give ourself
To barbarous license ; As 'tis ever common,
That men are merriest when they are from home.
But tell the Dauphin,—I will keep my state ;
Be like a king, and show my throne of greatness,
When I do rouse me in my throne of France :
For that I have laid by my majesty,¹⁵
And plodded like a man for working-days ;
But I will rise there with so full a glory,
That I will dazzle all the eyes of France,
Yea, strike the Dauphin blind to look on us.

8 'Not worship'd with a waxen epitaph.' The quartos read '—with a paper epitaph.' Either a paper or a waxen epitaph is an epitaph easily destroyed ; one that can confer no lasting honour on the dead. Steevens thinks that the allusion is to waxen tablets, as any thing written upon them was easily effaced. Mr. Gifford says that a waxen epitaph was an epitaph affixed to the hearth or grave with wax. But it appears to me that the expression may be merely metaphorical, and not allusive to either.

9 A galliard was an ancient spritely dance, as its name implies.

10 In the old play of King Henry V. this present consists of a gilded tun of tennis balls, and a carpet.

11 The hazard is a place in the tennis-court, into which the ball is sometimes struck.

12 A chace at tennis is that spot where a ball falls, beyond which the adversary must strike his ball to gain a point or chace. At long tennis it is the spot where the ball leaves off rolling. We see therefore why the king has called himself a wrangler.

13 i. e. the throne.

14 'And therefore living hence ;' that is from hence, away from this seat or throne.

15 'For that I have laid by my majesty.' To qualify myself for this undertaking, I have descended from my station, and studied the arts of life in a lower character.

And tell the pleasant prince,—this mock of his Hath turn'd his balls to gun-stones;¹ and his soul
Shall stand sore charged for the wasteful vengeance
That shall fly with them: for many a thousand widows

Shall this his mock mock out of their dear husbands;

Mock mothers from their sons, mock castles down;
And some are yet unborn, and unborn,
That shall have cause to curse the Dauphin's scorn.
But this lies all within the will of God,
To whom I do appeal; and in whose name,
Tell you the Dauphin, I am coming on,
To venge me as I may, and to put forth
My rightful hand in a well hallow'd cause.
So, get you hence in peace; and tell the Dauphin,
His jest will savour but of shallow wit,
When thousands weep, more than did laugh at it.—
Convey them with safe conduct.—Fare you well.

[Exeunt Ambassadors.]

Ere. This was a merry message.

K. Hen. We hope to make the sender blush at it.

[Descends from his Throne.]

Therefore, my lords, omit no happy hour,
That may give furtherance to our expedition:
For we have now no thought in us but France;
Save those to God, that run before our business.
Therefore, let our proportions for these wars
Be soon collected; and all things thought upon,
That may, with reasonable swiftness, add
More feathers to our wings; for, God before,
We'll chide this Dauphin at his father's door.
Therefore, let every man now task his thought,²
That this fair action may on foot be brought.

[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

Enter CHORUS.

Cho. Now all the youth of England are on fire,
And silken dalliance in the wardrobe lies;
Now thrive the armourers, and honour's thought
Reigns solely in the breast of every man:
They sell the pasture now, to buy the horse;
Following the mirror of all Christian kings,
With winged heels, as English Mercuries.
For now sits Expectation in the air;
And hides a sword, from hilt unto the point,
With crowns imperial, crowns, and coronets,³
Promis'd to Harry, and his followers.
The French, advis'd by good intelligence
Of this most dreadful preparation,
Shake in their fear; and with pale policy
Seek to divert the English purposes.
O England!—model to thy inward greatness,
Like little body with a mighty heart,—
What might'st thou do, that honour would thee do,

1 'Hath turn'd his balls to gun-stones.' When ordnance was first used they discharged balls not of iron but of stone.

2 'Task his thought.' We have this phrase before.

3 Expectation is also personified by Milton:—
—while Expectation stood
In horror.—

In ancient representations of trophies, &c. it is common to see swords encircled with crowns. Shakspeare's image is supposed to be taken from a wood cut in the first edition of Holinshed.

4 'Richard earl of Cambridge' was Richard de Conisbary, younger son of Edmund Langley, duke of York. He was father of Richard duke of York, and grandfather of Edward the Fourth.

5 'Henry Lord Scroop' was a third husband of Joan, duchess of York, mother in law of Richard earl of Cambridge.

6 Gilt for golden money.

7 The old copy reads:—

'Linger your patience on, and we'll digest
The abuse of distance; force a play.'

The alteration was made by Pope.

8 'But till the king come forth, and but till then,
Unto Southampton do we shift our scene.'

The old copy reads:—

'But till the king come forth, and not till then.'

The emendation was proposed by Mr. Roderick, and deserves admission into the text. Malone has plainly

Were all thy children kind and natural!
But see thy fault! France hath in thee found out
A nest of hollow bosoms, which he fills
With treacherous crowns: and three corrupted
men,—

One, Richard earl of Cambridge;⁴ and the second,
Henry Lord Scroop⁵ of Masham; and the third,
Sir Thomas Grey, knight of Northumberland.—
Have, for the gilt⁶ of France, (O guilt, indeed!)
Confirm'd conspiracy with fearful France;
And by their hands this grace of kings must die
(If hell and treason hold their promises,)
Ere he take ship for France, and in Southampton.
Linger your patience on; and well digest
The abuse of distance, while we force a play.
The sum is paid; the traitors are agreed;
The king is set from London; and the scene
Is now transported, gentles, to Southampton:
There is the playhouse now, there must you sit:
And thence to France shall we convey you safe,
And bring you back, charming the narrow seas
To give you gentle pass; for, if we may,
We'll not offend one stomach with our play.
But, till the king come forth, and but till then,
Unto Southampton do we shift our scene." [Exit.]

SCENE I. The same. Eastcheap. Enter Nym and BARDOLPH.

Bard. Well met, Corporal Nym.

Nym. Good morrow, Lieutenant Bardolph.⁹

Bard. What, are ancient Pistol and you friends yet?

Nym. For my part, I care not: I say little: but when time shall serve, there shall be smiles;¹⁰—but that shall be as it may. I dare not fight; but I will wink, and hold out mine iron: it is a simple one: but what though? it will toast cheese; and it will endure cold as another man's sword will: and there's the humour of it.

Bard. I will bestow a breakfast, to make you friends; and we'll be all three sworn brothers¹¹ to France; let it be so, good Corporal Nym.

Nym. 'Faith, I will live so long as I may, that's the certain of it; and when I cannot live any longer, I will do as I may: that is my rest,¹² that is the rendezvous of it.

Bard. It is certain, corporal, that he is married to Nell Quickly: and, certainly, she did you wrong; for you were troth-plight to her.

Nym. I cannot tell; things must be as they may: men may sleep, and they may have their throats about them at that time; and, some say, knives have edges. It must be as it may: though patience be a tired mare, yet she will plod. There must be conclusions. Well, I cannot tell.¹³ shown that it is a common typographical error. The objection is, that a scene in London intervenes; but this may be obviated by transposing that scene to the end of the first act. The division into acts and scenes, it should be recollected, is the arbitrary work of Mr. Rowe and the subsequent editors; and the first act of this play, as it is now divided, is unusually short. This chorus has slipped out of its place.

9 At this scene begins the connexion of this play with the latter part of King Henry IV. The characters would be indistinct and the incidents unintelligible without the knowledge of what passed in the two former plays.

10 'When time shall serve, there shall be smiles.' Dr. Farmer thought that this was an error of the press for smiles, i. e. blows, a word used in the poet's age, and still provincially current. The passage, as it stands, has been explained:—'I care not whether we are friends at present; however, when time shall serve, we shall be in good humour with each other: but be it as it may.'

11 'Sworn brothers.' In the times of adventure it was usual for two or more chiefs to bind themselves to share in each other's fortunes, and divide their acquisitions between them. They were called fratres jurati. These cut-purses set out for France as if they were going to make a conquest of the kingdom.

12 'That is my rest;' that is my determination
13 i. e. I know not what to say or think of it. See this phrase amply illustrated in Mr. Gifford's Ben Jonson, vol. i. p. 125. No phrase is more common in our Enter PISTOL and MRS. QUICKLY.

Bard. Here comes ancient Pistol, and his wife :—good corporal, be patient here.—How now, mine host Pistol?

Pist. Base tike,¹ call'st thou me—host? Now, by this hand I swear, I scorn the term; Nor shall my Nell keep lodgers.

Quick. No, by my troth, not long: for we cannot lodge and board a dozen or fourteen gentlewomen, that live honestly by the prick of their needles, but it will be thought we keep a bawdy-house straight. [Nym draws his sword.] O well-i-day, Lady, if he be not drawn now!² we shall see willful adultery and murder committed. Good Lieutenant Bardolph,—good corporal, offer nothing here.

Nym. Pish!

Pist. Pish for thee, Iceland dog!³ thou prick-eared cur of Iceland!

Quick. Good Corporal Nym, show the valour of a man, and put up thy sword.

Nym. Will you shog off? I would have you solus.

[Sheathing his sword.]

Pist. Solus, egregious dog? O viper vile!

The solus in thy most marvellous face;

The solus in thy teeth, and in thy throat,

And in thy hateful lungs, yea, in thy maw, perdy;

And, which is worse, within thy nasty mouth!

I do retort the solus in thy howls:

For I can take,⁴ and Pistol's cock is up,

And flashing fire will follow.

Nym. I am not Barbason;⁵ you cannot conjure me, I have a humour to knock you indifferently well: If you grow foul with me, Pistol, I will scour you with my rapier, as I may, in fair terms: if you would walk off, I would prick your guts a little, in good terms, as I may; and that's the humour of it.

Pist. O braggart vile, and damned furious wight! The grave doth gape, and doting death is near;

Therefore exhale.⁶ [PISTOL and NYM draw.]

Bard. Hear me, hear me what I say:—he that strikes the first stroke, I'll run him up to the hilts, as I am a soldier. [Draws.]

Pist. An oath of mickle might; and fury shall abate:

Give me thy fist, thy fore-foot to me give;

Thy spirits are most tall.

Nym. I will cut thy throat, one time or other, in fair terms; that is the humour of it.

Pist. Coupe le gorge, that's the word?—I thee defy again.

O hound of Crete, think'st thou my spouse to get?

No; to the spital go,

And from the powdering-tub of infamy

Fetch forth the lazar kite of Cressid's kind,⁷

Doll Tear-sheet she by name, and her espouse:

I have, and I will hold, the *quondam*⁸ Quickly

For the only she; and—Pauca, there's enough.

Enter the Boy.

Boy. Mine host Pistol, you must come to my master, and you, hostess;—he is very sick, and would to bed.—Good Bardolph, put thy nose be-old dramatic writers; yet it had escaped the commentators on Shakespeare.

1. i. e. base fellow. Still used in the north; where a tike is also a dog of a large common breed; as a mastiff, or shepherd's dog.

2 'O well-i-day, Lady, if he be not drawn now!' The folio has 'O well-a-day, Lady, if he be not heven now'; an evident error of the press. The quarto reads 'O Lord! here's Corporal Nym's—now,' &c.

3 'Iceland dogges, curled and rough all over, which, by reason of the length of their heare, make show neither of face nor of body. And yet thes curres, forsoothe, because they are so strange, are greatly set by, esteemed, taken up, and made of, many times instead of the spaniell gentle or comforter.'—Abraham Fleming's translation of Caius de Canibus, 1576, Of English Dogges. Island cur is again used as a term of contempt in 'Epigrams served out in Fifty-two several Dishes' no date:—

'He wears a gown lac'd round, laid down with furre,
Or, miser-like, a pouch where never man
Could thrust his finger, but this island cur.'

tween his sheets, and do the office of a warming-pan: 'faith, he's very ill.

Bard. Away, you rogue.

Quick. By my troth, he'll yield the crow a pudding one of these days: the king has killed his heart.—Good husband, come home presently.

[Exeunt MRS. QUICKLY and BOY.]

Bard. Come, shall I make you two friends? We must to France together; Why, the devil, should we keep knives to cut one another's throats?

Pist. Let floods o'erswell, and fiends for food howl on!

Nym. You'll pay me the eight shillings I won of you at betting?

Pist. Base is the slave that pays.

Nym. That now I will have; that's the humour of it.

Pist. As manhood shall compound; Push home.

Bard. By this sword, he that makes the first thrust, I'll kill him; by this sword, I will.

Pist. Sword is an oath, and oaths must have their course.

Bard. Corporal Nym, an thou wilt be friends, be friends: an thou wilt not, why then be enemies with me too. Pr'ythee, put up.

Nym. I shall have my eight shillings, I won of you at betting?

Pist. A noble⁹ shalt thou have, and present pay; And liquor likewise will I give to thee,

And friendship shall combine, and brotherhood,

I'll live by Nym, and Nym shall live by me;—

Is not this just?—for I shall suter be

Unto the camp, and profits will accrue.

Give me thy hand.

Nym. I shall have my noble?

Pist. In cash most justly paid.

Nym. Well then, that's the humour of it.

Re-enter MRS. QUICKLY.

Quick. As ever you came of women, come in quickly to Sir John: Ah, poor heart! he is so shaken of a burning quotidian tertian, that it is most lamentable to behold. Sweet men, come to him.

Nym. The king hath run bad humours on the knight, that's the even of it.

Pist. Nym, thou hast spoke the right;

His heart is fractured and corroborate.

Nym. The king is a good king: but it must be as it may; he passes some humours, and careers.

Pist. Let us condole the knight; for, lambkins, we will live. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. Southampton. A Council Chamber.

Enter EXETER, BEDFORD, and WESTMORELAND.

Bed. 'Fore God, his grace is bold, to trust these traitors.

Exe. They shall be apprehended by and by.

West. How smooth and even they do bear themselves!

As if allegiance in their bosoms sat,

Crowned with faith, and constant loyalty.

Bed. The king hath note of all that they intend,

By interception which they dream not of.

Exe. Nay, but the man that was his bedfellow,¹⁰

4 'For I can take.' Malone would change this, without necessity, to 'I can talk.' Pistol only means, 'I can understand, or comprehend you.' It is still common in the plebeian phrase: 'Do you take me?' for Do you know my meaning?

5 Barbason is the name of a demon mentioned in The Merry Wives of Windsor. The unmeaning tumour of Pistol's speech very naturally reminds Nym of the sounding nonsense uttered by conjurers.

6 By exhale, Pistol, in his fantastic language, probably means die or breathe your last. Malone suggests that he may only mean 'draw, haul, or lug out.'

7 'The lazar kite of Cressid's kind.' Of Cressida's nature, see the play of Troilus and Cressida.

8 Formerly.

9 The noble was worth six shillings and eight-pence.

10 'That was his bedfellow.' Thus Holliushed:—

'The said Lord Scrop was in such favour with the king, that he admitted him sometimes to be his bedfellow.' This familiar appellation of bedfellow was common among the ancient nobility. This custom, which now appears so strange and unseemly to us, continued to Whom he hath cloy'd¹ and grac'd with princely favours,—

That he should, for a foreign purse, so sell
His sovereign's life to death and treachery!

Trumpet sounds. Enter KING HENRY, SCROOP, CAMBRIDGE, GREY, Lords, and Attendants.

K. Hen. Now sits the wind fair, and we will aboard.
My lord of Cambridge,—and my kind lord of Masham,—

And you, my gentle knight,—give me your thoughts;

Think you not, that the powers we bear with us,
Will cut their passage through the force of France;
Doing the execution, and the act,
For which we have in head² assembled them?

Scroop. No doubt, my liege, if each man do his best.

K. Hen. I doubt not that: since we are well persnaded,

We carry not a heart with us from hence,
That grows not in a fair consent³ with ours;
Nor leave not one behind, that doth not wish
Success and conquest to attend on us.

Cam. Never was monarch better fear'd, and lov'd,
Than is your majesty; there's not, I think, a subject,
That sits in heart-grief and uneasiness
Under the sweet shade of your government.

Grey. Even those that were your father's enemies,
Have steep'd their galls in honey; and do serve you
With hearts create⁴ of duty and of zeal.

K. Hen. We therefore have great cause of thankfulness;

And shall forget the office of our hand,
Sooner than quittance of desert and merit,
According to the weight and worthiness.

Scroop. So service shall with steeld sinews toil;
And labour shall refresh itself with hope,
To do your grace incessant services.

K. Hen. We judge no less.—Uncle of Exeter,
Enlarge the man committed yesterday,
That rail'd against our person: we consider,
It was excess of wine that set him on;
And, on his more advice,⁵ we pardon him.

Scroop. That's mercy, but too much security:
Let him be punish'd, sovereign; lest example
Breeds, by his sufferance, more of such a kind.

K. Hen. O, let us yet be merciful.

Cam. So may your highness, and yet punish too.

Grey. Sir, you show great mercy, if you give him life,

After the taste of much correction.

K. Hen. Alas, your too much love and care of me
Are heavy orisons 'gainst this poor wretch.

If little faults, proceeding on distemper,⁶
Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye,
When capital crimes, chew'd, swallow'd, and digested,

Appear before us?—We'll yet enlarge that man,
Though Cambridge, Scroop, and Grey,—in their dear care,

And tender preservation of our person,—

Would have him punish'd. And now to our French causes;

Who are the late⁷ commissioners?

Cam. I one, my lord;

Your highness bade me ask for it to-day.

Scroop. So did you me, my liege.

the middle of the seventeenth century, if not later. Cromwell obtained much of his intelligence during the civil wars from the mean men with whom he slept.

1 'Whom he hath cloy'd and grac'd.' The quarto reads 'dul'd and cloy'd.'

2 'For which we have in head assembled them.' In head seems equivalent to the modern military term in force.

3 'Consent' is accord, agreement.

4 'I. e. hearts compounded or made up of duty and zeal.'

5 I. e. his better consideration, or more circumspect behaviour.

6 'Distemper' here put for intemperance, or riotous excess.

Grey. And me, my royal sovereign.

K. Hen. Then, Richard, earl of Cambridge, there is yours;—

There yours, Lord Scroop of Masham;—and, air knight,

Grey of Northumberland, this same is yours:—

Read them; and know, I know your worthiness.—

My lord of Westmoreland,—and uncle Exeter,—

We will aboard to-night.—Why, how now, gentlemen?

What see you in those papers, that you lose
So much complexion?—look ye, how they change
Their cheeks are paper.—Why, what read you there,
That hath so cowarded and chased your blood
Out of appearance?

Cam. I do confess my fault;

And do submit me to your highness' mercy.

Grey. Scroop. To which we all appeal.

K. Hen. The mercy, that was quick⁸ in us but late,

By your own counsel is suppress'd and kill'd:

You must not dare, for shame, to talk of mercy;

For your own reasons turn into your bosoms,

As dogs upon their masters, worrying them.—

See you, my princes, and my noble peers,

These English monsters! My lord of Cambridge here,—

You know, how apt our love was, to accord

To furnish him with all appertinents

Belonging to his honour; and this man

Hath, for a few light crowns, lightly conspir'd,

And sworn unto the practices of France,

To kill us here in Hampton: to the which,

This knight, no less for bounty bound to us

Than Cambridge is,—hath likewise sworn.—But O!

What shall I say to thee, Lord Scroop; thou cruel,

Ingrateful, savage, and inhuman creature!

Thou, that didst bear the key of all my counsels,

That knew'st the very bottom of my soul,

That almost might'st have coin'd me into gold,

Would'st thou have practis'd on me for thy use?

May it be possible, that foreign hire

Could out of thee extract one spark of evil

That might annoy my finger? 'tis so strange,

That, though the truth of it stands off as gross

As black from white,⁹ my eye will scarcely see it.

Treason and murder, ever kept together,

As two yoke-devils swore to either's purpose,

Working so grossly¹⁰ in a natural cause,

That admiration did not whoop at them:¹¹

But thou, 'gainst all proportion, didst bring in

Wonder, to wait on treason, and on murder:

And whatsoever cunning fiend it was,

That wrought upon thee so preposterously,

Hath got the voice in hell for excellence:

And other devils, that suggest by treasons,

Do botch and bungle up damnation

With patches, colours, and with forms being fetch'd

From glistening semblances of piety;

But he, that temper'd thee,¹² bade thee stand up,

Gave thee no instance why thou should'st do treason,

Unless to dub thee with the name of traitor.

If that same demon, that hath gul'd thee thus,

Should with his lion gait walk the whole world,

He might return to vasty Tartar¹³ back,

And tell the legions—I can never win

A soul so easy as that Englishman's.

O, how hast thou with jealousy infected

7 i. e. those lately appointed.

8 i. e. living.

9 'Though the truth of it stands off as gross

As black from white.'

Though the truth be as apparent and visible as black and white contiguous to each other. To stand off is to be prominent.

10 i. e. plainly, evidently.

11 'Did not whoop at them.' That they excited no exclamation of surprise.

12 'He that temper'd thee.' That is, he that ruled thee. 'Temperator, he that tempereth, or moderateth; he that knoweth how to rule and order.'—Cooper.

13 i. e. Tartarus, the fabled place of future punishment.

The sweetness of affiance!¹ Show men dutiful?
 Why, so didst thou: Seem they grave and learned?
 Why, so didst thou: Come they of noble family?
 Why, so didst thou: Seem they religious?
 Why, so didst thou: Or are they spare in diet;
 Free from gross passion, or of mirth, or anger;
 Constant in spirit, not swerving with the blood;
 Garnish'd and deck'd in modest complement;²
 Not working with the eye, without the ear,
 And, but in purged judgment, trusting neither?
 Such, and so finely bolted,³ didst thou seem:
 And thus thy fall hath left a kind of blot,
 To mark the full-fraught man, and best indued,⁴
 With some suspicion. I will weep for thee;
 For this revolt of thine, methinks, is like
 Another fall of man.—Their faults are open,
 Arrest them to the answer of the law;—
 And God acquit them of their practices!

Eze. I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Richard earl of Cambridge.

I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Henry Lord Scroop of Masham.

I arrest thee of high treason, by the name of Thomas Grey, knight of Northumberland.

Scroop. Our purposes God justly hath discover'd;
 And I repent my fault more than my death;
 Which I beseech your highness to forgive,
 Although my body pay the price of it.

Cam. For me,—the gold of France did not seduce;⁵

Although I did admit it as a motive,
 The sooner to effect what I intended;
 But God be thanked for prevention;
 Which I in suffrance heartily will rejoice,⁶
 Beseeching God and you to pardon me.

Grey. Never did faithful subject more rejoice
 At the discovery of most dangerous treason,
 Than I do at this hour joy o'er myself,
 Prevented from a damned enterprise:
 My fault, but not my body, pardon, sovereign.

K. Hen. God quit you in his mercy! Hear your sentence.

You have conspir'd against our royal person, Join'd with an enemy proclaim'd, and from his coffers

Receiv'd the golden earnest of our death;
 Wherein you would have sold your king to slaughter,
 His princes and his peers to servitude,
 His subjects to oppression and contempt,
 And his whole kingdom into desolation.

Touching our person, seek we no revenge;
 But we our kingdom's safety must so tender,
 Whose ruin you three sought, that to her laws
 We do deliver you. Get you therefore hence,
 Poor miserable wretches, to your death:
 The taste whereof, God, of his mercy, give you
 Patience to endure, and true repentance
 Of all your dear offences!—Bear them hence.

[Exeunt Conspirators, guarded.]

1 'The sweetness of affiance!' Shakspeare uses this aggravation of the guilt of treachery with great judgment. One of the worst consequences of breach of trust is the diminution of that confidence which makes the happiness of life, and the dissemination of suspicion, which is the poison of society.—Johnson.

2 'Complement' has here the same meaning as in Love's Labour's Lost, Act I. Sc. 1. Bullokar defines it,
 'Court ship, [i.e. courtiership] fulness, perfection, fine behaviour.' The gradual change of this word, to its meaning of ceremonious words, may be traced in Blount's Glossography.

3 Bolted is the same as sifted, and has consequently the meaning of refined.

4 i. e. endowed, or gifted.

5 'For me, the gold of France did not seduce.'— diverse write that Richard earl of Cambridge did not conspire with the Lord Scroope, &c. for the murdering of King Haurie, to please the French king withall, but onlie to the intent to exalt the crowne to his brother-in-law Edmund earle of Marche, as heir to Lionel duke of Clarence, who being for diverse secret impediments not able to have issue, the earl of Cambridge was sure that the crowne should come to him by his wife, and to his children of her begotten. And therefore (as was thought) he rather confessed himselfe for neede of money to be

Now, lords, for France; the enterpriso whereof Shali be to you, as us, like glorious
 We doubt not of a fair and lucky war:
 Since God so graciously hath brought to light
 This dangerous treason, lurking in our way,
 To hinder our beginnings, we doubt not now,
 But every rub is smoothened on our way.
 Then, forth, dear countrymen; let us deliver
 Our puissiance into the hand of God,
 Putting it straight in expedition.
 Cheerly to sea; the signs of war advance.⁷
 No king of England, if not king of France.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. London. Mrs. Quickly's House in Eastcheap. Enter PISTOL, Mrs. QUICKLY,
 NYM, BARDOLPH, and BOY.

Quick. Prythee, honey-sweet husband, let me bring⁸ thee to Staines.

Pist. No; for my manly heart doth yearn.—
 Bardolph, be blithe;—Nym, rouse thy vaunting veins.

Boy, bristle thy courage up: for Falstaff he is dead,
 And we must yearn therefore.

Bard. Would, I were with him, wheresome'er he is, either in heaven, or hell!

Quick. Nay, sure, he's not in hell; he's in Arthur's bosom, if ever man went to Arthur's bosom.
 'A made a finer end, and went away, an it had been any christom⁹ child; 'a parted even just between twelve and one, e'en at turning o' the tide;¹⁰ for after I saw him fumble with the sheets, and play with flowers, and smile upon his fingers' ends,
 I knew there was but one way; for his nose was as sharp as a pen, and 'a babbled of green fields.¹¹
 How now, Sir John? quoth I: what, man! be of good cheer. So 'a cried out—God, God, God!
 three or four times: now I, to comfort him, bid him,
 'a should not think of God; I hoped, there was no need to trouble himself with any such thoughts yet: So 'a bade me lay more clothes on his feet:
 I put my hand into the bed, and felt them, and they were as cold as any stone; then I felt to his knees, and so upward, and upward, and all was as cold as any stone.

Nym. They say, he cried out of sack.

Quick. Ay, that 'a did.

Bard. And of women.

Quick. Nay, that 'a did not.

Boy. Yes, that 'a did; and said, they were devils incarnate.

Quick. 'A could never abide carnation; 'twas a colour he never liked.

Boy. 'A said once, the devil would have him about women.

Quick. 'A did in some sort, indeed, handle women: but then he was rheumatic;¹² and talked of the whore of Babylon.

corrupted by the French king, lest the earl of Marche should have tasted of the same cuppe that he had drunk en, and what should have come to his own children he much doubted, &c.—Holinshed.

6 i. e. 'at which prevention, in suffering, I will heartily rejoice.'

7 'The signs of war advance.' Phœr, in rendering the first line of the eighth Æneid, 'Ut belle signum, &c. has

'When signe of war from Laurent townes, &c.

8 i. e. let me accompany thee.

9 i. e. christom child: which was one that died within the month of birth, because during that time they wore the christom cloth, a white cloth put upon a child newly christened, wherewith women used to shroud the child if dying within the month; otherwise it was brought to church at the day of purification.

10 'Even at the turning o' the tide.' It has been a very old opinion, which Mead, De Imperio Solis, quotes, as if he believed it, that nobody dies but in the time of ebb.

11 'And 'a babbled of green fields.' The first folio reads 'For his nose was as sharp as a pen, and a Table of green fields.' Theobald gave the present reading of the text, which, though entirely conjectural, is better than any thing which has been offered in the idle babble of the numerous notes on this passage.

12 Rheumatic. Mrs. Quickly means lunatic.

Boy. Do you not remember, 'a saw a flea stick upon Bardolph's nose; and 'a said, it was a black soul burning in hell-fire?

Bard. Well, the fuel is gone, that maintained that fire; that's all the riches I got in his service.

Nym. Shall we shog off? the king will be gone from Southampton.

Pist. Come, let's away.—My love, give me thy lips.

Look to my chattels, and my moveables:
Let senses rule; the word is, Pitch and Pay;

Trust none;

For oaths are straws, men's faiths are wafer-cakes,
And hold-fast is the only dog, my duck;¹

Therefore, caveto he thy counsellor.

Go, clear thy crystals.²—Yoke-fellows in arms,

Let us to France! like horse-leeches, my boys;

To suck, to suck, the very blood to suck!

Boy. And that is but unwholesome food, they say.

Pist. Touch her soft mouth, and march.

Bard. Farewell, hostess.

[Kissing her.]

Nym. I cannot kiss, that is the humour of it; but adieu.

Pist. Let housewifery appear; keep close,³ I thee command.

Quick. Farewell; adieu.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. France. A Room in the French King's Palace. Enter the French King attended: the Dauphin, the DUKE of BURGUNDY, the Constable, and others.

Fr. King. Thus come the English with full power upon us;

And more than carefully it us concerns,

To answer royally in our defences.

Therefore the dukes of Berry and of Bretagne,

Of Brabant, and of Orleans, shall make forth,—

And you, Prince Dauphin, with all swift despatch,

To line, and new repair, our towns of war,

With men of courage, and with means defendant:

For England his approaches makes as fierce,

As waters to the sucking of a gulf.

It fits us then, to be as provident

As fear may teach us, out of late examples

Left by the fatal and neglected English

Upon our fields.

Dau. My most doubted father,

It is most meet we arm us 'gainst the foe:

For peace itself should not so dull⁴ a kingdom

(Though war, nor no known quarrel, were in question.)

But that defences, musters, preparations,

Should be maintain'd, assembled, and collected,

As were a war in expectation.

Therefore, I say, 'tis meet we all go forth,

To view the sick and feeble parts of France:

And let us do it with no show of fear:

No, with no more, than if we heard that England

Were busied with a Whitsun morris-dance:

For, my good liege, she is so idly king'd,

Her sceptre so fantastically borne

By a vain, giddy, shallow, humorous youth,
That fear attends her not.

Con. O peace, Prince Dauphin!

You are too much mistaken in this king:

Question your grace the late ambassadors,—

With what great state he heard their embassy,

How well supplied with noble counsellors,

How modest in exception,⁵ and, withal,

How terrible in constant resolution,—

And you shall find, his vanities fore-spent

Were but the outside of the Roman Brutus,⁶

Covering discretion with a coat of folly;

As gardeners do with ordure hide those roots

That shall first spring, and be most delicate.

Dau. Well, 'tis not so, my lord high constable,

But though we think it so, it is no matter:

In cases of defence, 'tis best to weigh

The enemy more mighty than he seems,

So the proportions of defence are fill'd;

Which, of a weak and niggardly projection,⁷

Doth, like a miser, spoil his coat, with scanting

A little cloth.

Fr. King. Think we King Harry strong;

And, princes, look, you strongly arm to meet him:

The kindred of him hath been flesh'd upon us;

And he is bred out of that bloody strain,⁸

That haunted us in our familiar paths:

Witness our too much memorable shame,

When Cressy battle fatally was struck,

And all our princes captiv'd, by the hand

Of that black name, Edward, Black Prince of Wales;

Whiles that his mountain sire,—on mountain standing,

Up in the air, crown'd with the golden sun,—⁹

Saw his heroidal seed, and smil'd to see him

Mangle the work of nature, and deface

The patterns that by God and by French fathers

Had twenty years been made. 'This is a stem

Of that victorious stock: and let us fear

The native mightiness and fate of him.¹⁰

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Ambassadors from Henry king of England

Do crave admittance to your majesty.

Fr. King. We'll give them present audience.

Go, and bring them.

[Exeunt Mess. and certain Lords.]

You see, this chase is hotly follow'd, friends.

Dau. Turn head, and stop pursuit; for coward dogs

Most spend their mouths,¹¹ when what they seem to threaten,

Runs far before them. Good my sovereign,

Take up the English short; and let them know

Of what a monarchy you are the head;

Self-love, my liege, is not so vile a sin

As self-neglecting.

Re-enter Lords, with EXETER and Train.

Fr. King. From our brother England?

Exe. From him; and thus he greets your majesty.

Began to clothe his wit in state and pride,

Burying in Lucrece' wound his folly's shew.

— he throws that shallow habit by.

7 'Which, of a weak and niggardly projection,'

The construction of this passage is perplexed, and the grammatical concord not according to our present notions; but its meaning appears to be, 'So the proportions of defence are filled; which, to make of a weak and niggardly projection (i. e. contrivance), is to do like a miser who spoils his coat with scanting a little cloth.

8 Strain is lineage.

9 'Whiles that his mountain sire,—on mountain standing,

Up in the air, crown'd with the golden sun.

There is much childish misunderstanding of this passage in the notes. Stevens is right when he says that, divested of its poetical finery, it means that the king stood upon a hill, with the sun shining over his head, to see the battle; as before described in the first scene of the play.

10 i. e. what is allotted him by destiny.

11 i. e. a bark; the sportsman's term.

1 Pistol puts forth a string of proverbs. 'Pitch and play, and go your way,' is one in Florio's Collection; 'Brag is a good dog, and Holdfast a better,' is one of the others to which he alludes.

2 i. e. dry thine eyes.

3 The Quartos read 'Keep fast thy bugle boc.' The meaning of which may be gathered from the following passage in Shirley's Gentleman of Venice:—

— the courtisans of Venice

Shall keep their bugle bows for thee, dear uncle.'

4 'For peace itself should not so dull a kingdom.'

To dull is to render torpid, insensible, or inactive; to dispirit. 'In idleness to wax dull and without spirit: Torpescere.'—Baret.

5 'How modest in exception.' How diffident and decent in making objections.

6 '— the outside of the Roman Brutus.' Warburton has a strained explanation of this passage. Shakspeare's meaning is explained by the following lines in the Rape of Lucrece:—

'Brutus, who pluck'd the knife from Lucrece' side,
Seeing such emulation in their woe,

He wills you, in the name of God Almighty,
That you divest yourself, and lay apart
The borrow'd glories, that, by gift of heaven,
By law of nature, and of nations, long
To him, and to his heirs: namely, the crown,
And all wide-stretched honours that pertain,
By custom and the ordinance of times,
Unto the crown of France. That you may know,
'Tis no sinister, nor no awkward claim,
Pick'd from the worm-holes of long varnish'd days,
Nor from the dust of old oblivion rak'd,
He sends you this most memorable line,¹

[Gives a Paper.]

In every branch truly demonstrative:

Willing you, overlook this pedigree:

And, when you find him evenly derived

From his most fam'd of famous ancestors,

Edward the Third, he bids you then resign

Your crown and kingdom, indirectly held

From him the native and true challenger.

Fr. King. Or else what follows?

Exe. Bloody constraint; for it you hide the crown

Even in your hearts, there will he rake for it;

And therefore in fierce tempest is he coming,

In thunder, and in earthquake, like a Jove:

(That, if requiring fail, he will compel:)

And bids you, in the bowels of the Lord,

Deliver up the crown; and to take mercy

On the poor souls, for whom this hungry war

Opens his vasty jaws: and on your head

Turns he the widows' tears, the orphans' cries,

The dead men's blood, the pining maidens' groans,

For husbands, fathers, and betrothed lovers,

That shall be swallow'd in this controversy.

This is his claim, his threat'ning, and my message:

Unless the Dauphin be in presence here,

To whom expressly I bring greeting too.

Fr. King. For us, we will consider of this further:

To-morrow shall you hear our full intent

Back to our brother England.

Dau. For the Dauphin,

I stand here for him; What to him from England?

Exe. Scorn, and defiance; slight regard, contempt,

And any thing that may not misbecome

The mighty sender, doth he prize you at.

Thus says my king: and, if your father's highness

Do not, in grant of all demands at large,

Sweeten the bitter mock you sent his majesty,

He'll call you to so hot an answer for it,

That caves and wombly vaultages of France

Shall chide² your trespass, and return your mock

In second accent of his ordinance.

Dau. Say, if my father render fair reply,

It is against my will: for I desire

Nothing but odds with England; to that end,

As matching to his youth and vanity,

I did present him with those Paris balls.

Exe. He'll make your Paris Louvre shake for it,

Were it the mistress court of mighty Europe:

And, be assur'd, you'll find a difference

(As we, his subjects, have in wonder found,)

Between the promise of his greener days,

And these he masters now; now he weighs time,

Even to the utmost grain; which you shall read

In your own losses, if he stay in France.

Fr. King. To-morrow shall you know our mind at full.

1 'Memorable line': this genealogy, this deduction of his lineage.

2 Shall chide your trespass.' To chide is to resound, to echo.

3 'The well-appointed king at Hampton pier.' 'Well-appointed,' that is, well furnished with all necessities of war. The old copies read 'Dover pier:' but the poet himself, and all accounts, and even the Chronicles which he followed, say that the king embarked at Southampton. A minute account still exists among the records of the town; and it is remarkable that a low level plain where the army encamped is now covered by the sea, and called Westport.

Exe. Despatch us with all speed, lest that our king

Come here himself to question our delay;

For he is footed in this land already.

Fr. King. You shall be soon despatch'd, with fair conditions:

A night is but small breath, and little pause,

To answer matters of this consequence. [Exeunt.]

ACT III.

Enter CHORUS.

Chor. Thus with imagin'd wing our swift scene flies,

In motion of no less celerity

Than that of thought. Suppose, that you have seen

The well-appointed king at Hampton pier³

Embark his royalty; and his brave fleet

With silken streamers the young Phœbus fanning.

Play with your fancies; and in them behold,

Upon the hempen tackle, ship-boys climbing:

Hear the shrill whistle, which doth order give

To sounds confus'd: behold the threaden sails,

Borne with the invisible and creeping wind,

Draw the huge bottoms through the furrow'd sea,

Breasting the lofty surge: O, do but think,

You stand upon the rivage,⁴ and behold

A city on the inconstant billows dancing;

For so appears this fleet majestical,

Holding due course to Harfleur. Follow, follow!

Grapple your minds to sternage of this navy;⁵

And leave your England, as dead midnight, still,

Guarded with grandsires, babies, and old women,

Either past or not arrived to, pith and puissance:

For who is he, whose chin is but enrich'd

With one appearing hair, that will not follow

These cull'd and choice-drawn cavaliers to France?

Work, work, your thoughts, and therein see a siege:

Behold the ordnance on their carriages,

With fatal mouths gaping on girded Harfleur.

Suppose the ambassador from the French come back;

Tells Harry—that the king doth offer him

Katharine his daughter; and with her, to dowry

Some petty and unprofitable dukedoms.

The offer likes not; and the nimble gunner

With linstock⁶ now the devilish cannon touches,

[Alarum; and Chambers' go off.]

And down goes all before them. Still be kind,

And eke out our performance with your mind.

[Exit.]

SCENE I. The same. Before Harfleur. Alar-

ums. Enter KING HENRY, EXETER, BED-

FORD, GLOSTER, and Soldiers, with Scaling Ladders.

K. Hen. Once more unto the breach, dear friends,

once more;

Or close the wall up with our English dead?

In peace, there's nothing so becomes a man,

As modest stillness and humility:

But when the blast of war blows in our ears,

Then imitate the action of the tiger;

Stiffen the sinews, summon up the blood,

Disguise fair nature with hard-favour'd rage;

Then lend the eye a terrible aspect;

Let it pry through the portage of the head,⁸

Like the brass cannon: let the brow o'erwhelm it,

As fearfully, as doth a galled rock

4 Rivage, the bank, or shore; rivage, Fr.

5 'To sternage of this navy.' The stern, or sternage, being the hinder part of the ship. The meaning of this passage is, 'Let your minds follow this navy.' The stern was anciently synonymous to rudder. 'The sterne of a ship, gubernaculum.'—Baret.

6 'Linstock' is here put for a match; but it was, strictly speaking, the staff to which the match for firing ordnance was fixed.

7 'Chambers,' small pieces of ordnance.

8 'The portage of the head.' Shakespeare uses portage for loop-holes or port-holes.

O'erhang and jutt¹ his confounded base,
Swill'd with the wild and wasteful ocean.
Now set the teeth, and stretch the nostril wide;
Hold hard the breath, and bend up every spirit:
To his full height!—On, on, you noble English,²
Whose blood is fet³ from fathers of war-proof!
Fathers, that, like so many Alexanders,
Have, in these parts, from morn till even fought,
And sheath'd their swords for lack of argument;⁴
Dishonour not your mothers; now attest,
That those, whom you call'd fathers, did beget you!
Be copy now to men of grosser blood,
And teach them how to war!—And you, good yeo-
men,

Whose limbs were made in England, show us here
The mettle of your pasture; let us swear
That you are worth your breeding: which I doubt
not;

For there is none of you so mean and base,
That hath not noble lustre in your eyes.
I see you stand like greyhounds in the slips,⁵ Straining upon the start. The game's afoot;
Follow your spirit: and, upon this charge,
Cry—God for Harry! England! and Saint George!
[Exeunt. Alarum, and Chambers go off.]

SCENE II. The same. Forces pass over; then enter NYM, BARDOLPH, PISTOL, and BOY.

Bard. On, on, on, on, on! to the breach! to the breach!

Nym. 'Pray thee, corporal,⁶ stay; the knocks are too hot; and, for mine own part, I have not a case of lives:⁷ the humour of it is too hot, that is the very plain-song of it.

Pist. The plain-song is most just; for humours do abound;

Knocks go and come; God's vassals drop and die;
And sword and shield,
In bloody field,
Doth win immortal fame.

Boy. 'Would I were in an alehouse in London! I would give all my fame for a pot of ale, and safety.

Pist. And I:
If wishes would prevail with me,
My purpose should not fail with me,
But thither would I hie.

Boy. As duly, but not as truly,
As bird doth sing on bough.

*Enter FLUELLEN.

Flu. Got's plood!—Up to the preaches, you rascals! will you not up to the preaches?

[Driving them forward.]

Pist. Be merciful, great duke, to men of mould!¹⁰
Abate thy rage, abate thy manly rage!

Abate thy rage, great duke!
Good bawcock, bate thy rage! use lenity, sweet chuck!

Nym. These be good humours!—your honour wins bad humours.

[Exeunt NYM, PISTOL, and BARDOLPH, followed by FLUELLEN.]

Boy. As young as I am, I have observed these

1 'O'erhang and jutt^y his confounded base, Swill'd with the wild and wasteful ocean.'

To jutt^y is to project; juttes, or juttes, are projecting moles to break the force of the waves. Confounded is neither worn, or wasted, as Johnson tells us; nor destroyed, as Malone infers; but reared, or troubled. Swill'd anciently was used for 'washed much, or long, drowned, surrounded by water: Prolutus.'

2 'You noble English.' The folio reads nobliss, by mistake; the compositor having taken twice the final syllable ish. Steevens reads nobliss. This speech is not in the quartos.

3 'Whose blood is fet from fathers of war-proof.' Mr. Pope took the liberty of altering this word to fetch'd. The sacred writings afford us many instances of its use. 'Ascita et accepta a Græcis, Fet and taken out of Greece.' It is often coupled with far, as in the expressions 'far-fet and dear bought,' 'affected and far-fet.'

4 'Argument is matter, subject.'

5 Slips are contrivances of leather to start two dogs at the same time.

three swashers. I am boy to them all three: but all they three, though they would serve me, could not be man to me: for, indeed, three such antics do not amount to a man. For Bardolph,—he is white-liver'd, and red-face'd; by the means whereof, 'a faces it out, but fights not. For Pistol,—he hath a killing tongue, and a quiet sword; by the means whereof 'a breaks words, and keeps whole weapons. For Nym,—he hath heard, that men of few words are the best men:¹⁰ and therefore he scorns to say his prayers, lest 'a should be thought a coward: but his few bad words are match'd with as few good deeds; for 'a never broke any man's head but his own; and that was against a post when he was drunk. They will steal any thing, and call it,—purchase.¹¹ Bardolph stole a lute case: bore it twelve leagues, and sold it for three half-pence. Nym, and Bardolph, are sworn brothers in filching; and in Calais they stole a fire-shovel: I knew, by that piece of service the men would carry coals.¹² They would have me as familiar with men's pockets as their gloves or their handkerchiefs; which makes much against my manhood, if I should take from another's pocket to put into mine; for it is plain pocketing up of wrongs. I must leave them and seek some better service: their villany goes against my weak stomach, and therefore I must cast it up.

[Exit Boy.]

Re-enter FLUELLEN, GOWER following.

Gow. Captain Fluellen, you must come presently to the mines; the duke of Gloster would speak with you.

Flu. To the mines! tell you the duke, it is not so good to come to the mines: For, look you, the mines is not according to the disciplines of the war; the concavities of it is not sufficient; for, look you, th' adversary (you may discuss unto the duke, look you,) is dight himself four yards under the countermines:¹³ by Cheshu, I think, 'a will plow up all, if there is not better directions.

Gow. The duke of Gloster, to whom the order of the siege is given, is altogether directed by an Irishman; a very valiant gentleman, 'a faith.

Flu. It is captain Macmorris, is it not?

Gow. I think it be.

Flu. By Cheshu, he is an ass, as in the 'orld: I will verify as much in his pèard: he has no more directions in the true disciplines of the wars, look you, of the Roman disciplines, than is a puppy dog.

Enter MACMORRIS and JAMY, at a distance.

Gow. Here 'a comes; and the Scots captains, Captain Jamy, with him.

Flu. Captain Jamy is a marvellous valorous gentleman, that is certain: and of great expedition, and knowledge, in the ancient wars, upon my particular knowledge of his directions: by Cheshu, he will maintain his argument as well as any military man in the 'orld, in the disciplines of the pristine wars of the Romans.

Jamy. I say, gud-day, Captain Fluellen.

Flu. God-den to your worship, goot Captain Jamy.

6 'Corporal.' Bardolph is called lieutenant in 'a former scene; so that there is a lapse of memory in the poet in one or other of these instances.

7 'A case of lives'; that is, a 'pair of lives': as a 'case of pistols,' a 'case of poniards,' 'a case of masks.'

8 Fluellen is merely the Welsh pronunciation of Lluellyn, as Floyd is of Lloyd.

9 i. e. 'be merciful, great commander, to men of earth, to poor mortal men.' Duke is only a translation of the Roman dux. Sylvester, in his Du Bartas, calls Moses 'a great duke.'

10 'The best men'; that is, bravest. So, in the next line, good deeds are brave actions.

11 Purchase, which anciently signified gain, profit, was the cant term used for any thing obtained by cheating; as appears by Green's Art of Cony-catching.

12 'Carry coals.' See note on the first scene of Romeo and Juliet.

13 'Is dight himself'; that is, the enemy had digged four yards under the countermines.

Gow. How now, Captain Macmarris? have you quit the mines? have the pioneers given o'er?

Mac. By Chrish la, tish ill done: the work ish give over, the trumpet sound the retreat. By my nand, I swear, and by my father's soul, the work ish ill done; it ish give over: I would have blowed up the town, so Chrish save me, la, in an hour. O, tish ill done, tish ill done; by my hand, tish ill done!

Ftu. Captain Macmarris, I pescech you now, will you vouchsafe me, look you, a few disputations with you, as partly touching or concerning the disciplines of the war, the Roman wars, in the way of argument, look you, and friendly communication; partly, to satisfy my opinion, and partly, for the satisfaction, look you, of my mind, as touching the direction of the military discipline; that is the point.

Jamy. It sall be very gud, gud feith, gud captains bath: and I sall quit! you with gud leve, as I may pick occasion; that sall I, marry.

Mac. It is no time to discourse, so Chrish save me, the day is hot, and the weather, and the wars, and the king, and the dukes; it is no time to discourse. The town is beseeched, and the trumpet calls us to the breach; and we talk, and, by Chrish, do nothing; 'tis shame for us all: so God sa' nie, 'tis shame to stand still; it is shame, by my hand: and there is throats to be cut, and works to be done: and there ish nothing done, so Chrish sa' me, la.

Jamy. By the mess, ere these eyes of mine take themselves to slumber, aile do gude service, or aile ligge i' the grund for it; ay, or go to death: and aile pay it as valorously as I may, that sall I surely do, that is the breff and the long: Mary, I wad full fain heard some question 'tween you 'tway.

Ftu. Captain Macmarris, I think, look you, under your correction, there is not many of your nation—

Mac. Of my nation? What ish my nation? ish a villain, and a bastard, and a knave, and a rascal? What ish my nation? Who talks of my nation?

Ftu. Look you, if you take the matter otherwise than is meant, Captain Macmarris, peradventure, I shall think you do not use me with that affability as in discretion you ought to use me, look you; being as goot a man as yourself, both in the disciplines of wars, and in the derivation of my birth, and in other particularities.

Mac. I do not know you so good a man as myself: so Chrish save me, I will cut off your head.

Gow. Gentlemen both, you will mistake each other.

Jamy. Au! that's a foul fault.

[A Parley sounded.]

Gow. The town sounds a parley.

Ftu. Captain Macmarris, when there is more better opportunity to be required, look you, I will be so bold as to tell you, I know the disciplines of war; and there is an end.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The same. Before, the Gates of Harfleur. The Governor and some Citizens on the Walls; the English Forces below. Enter KING HENRY and his Train.

K. Hen. How yet resolves the governor of the town?

This is the latest parle we will admit: Therefore, to our best mercy give yourselves; Or, like to men proud of destruction,

1 'I shall quit you;' that is, I shall, with your permission, requite you; that is, answer you, or interpose with my arguments, as I shall find opportunity.

2 'The gates of mercy shall be all shut up.' Gray has borrowed this thought in his Elegy—

'And shut the gates of mercy on mankind.'

3 'Whiles yet the cool and temperate wind of grace O'erblows the filthy and contagious clouds.' To overblow is to drive away, to keep off. Johnson observes that this is a very harsh metaphor.

4 'Whom of succour we entreated.' See A Midsummer Night's Dream, Act iii. Sc. 1, in a note on the passage:—'I shall desire you of more acquaintance.'

5 l. e. prepared

Defy us to our worst; for, as I am a soldier (A name, that, in my thoughts, becomes me best,) If I begin the battery once again, I will not leave the half-achieved Harfleur Till in her ashes she lie buried.

The gates of mercy shall be all shut up;² And the flesh'd soldier,—rough and hard of heart,—

In liberty of bloody hand, shall range With conscience wide as hell; mowing like grass

Your fresh-fair virgins, and your flowering infants. What is it then to me, if impious war,—

Array'd in flames, like to the prince of fiends,— Do, with his smirch'd complexion, all fell feats Enlink'd to waste and desolation? What is't to me, when you yourselves are cause,

If your pure maidens fall into the hand Of hot and forcing violation?

What rein can hold licentious wickedness, When down the hill he holds his fierce career?

We may as bootless spend our vain command Upon the enraged soldiers in their spoil,

As send precepts to the Leviathan To come ashore. Therefore, you men of Harfleur,

Take pity of your town, and of your people, Whiles yet my soldiers are in my command;

Whiles yet the cool and temperate wind of grace O'erblows the filthy and contagious clouds²

Of deadly murder, spoil, and villany. If not, why, in a moment, look to see

The blind and bloody soldier with foul hand Defile the locks of your shrill-shrieking daughters;

Your fathers taken by the silver beards, And their most reverend heads dash'd to the walls;

Your naked infants spitted upon pikes; Whiles the mad mothers with their howls confus'd

Do break the clouds, as did the wives of Jewry At Herod's bloody-hunting slaughtermen.

What say you? will you yield, and this avoid? Or, guilty in defence, be thus destroy'd?

Gow. Our expectation hath this day an end: The Dauphin, whom of succour we entreated,⁴ Returns us—that his powers are not yet ready To raise so great a siege. Therefore, dread king,

We yield our town, and lives, to thy soft mercy: Enter our gates; dispose of us, and ours;

For we no longer are defensible.

K. Henry. Open your gates.—Come, uncle Exeter,

Go you and enter Harfleur; there remain, And fortify it strongly 'gainst the French:

Use mercy to them all. For us, dear uncle,— The winter coming on, and sickness growing

Upon our soldiers,—we'll retire to Calais. To-night in Harfleur will we be your guest;

To-morrow for the march are we address'd.⁵

[Flourish. The King, &c. enter the Town.]

SCENE IV.⁶ Rouen. A Room in the Palace. Enter KATHARINE and ALICE.

Kath. Alice, tu as esté en Angleterre, et tu parles bien le langage.

Alice. Un peu, madame.

Kath. Je te prie, m'enseigne; il faut que j'apprenne à parler. Comment appelez vous la main, en Anglois?

Alice. La main? elle est appelée, de hand.

Kath. De hand. Et les doigts?

Alice. Les doigts? ma foy, j'oublie les doigts,

6 Every one must wish with Warburton and Farmer to believe that this scene is an interpolation. Yet as Johnson remarks, the grimaces of the two Frenchwomen, and the odd accent with which they uttered the English, might divert an audience more refined than could be found in the poet's time. There is in it not only the French language, but the French spirit. Alice compliments the princess upon the knowledge of four words, and tells her that she pronounces like the English themselves. The princess suspects no deficiency in her instructress, nor the instructress in herself. The extraordinary circumstance of introducing a character speaking French in an English drama was no novelty to our early stage.

mais je me souviendray. Les doigts ? je pense, qu'ils sont appellé de fingers ; ouy, de fingers.

Kath. La main, de hand ; les doigts, de fingers. Je pense, que je suis le bon escolier. J'ay gagné deux mots d'Anglois vistement. Comment appelez vous les ongles ?

Alice. Les ongles ? les appellons, de nails.

Kath. De nails. Escoutez ; dites moy, si je parle bien : de hand, de fingers, de nails.

Alice. C'est bien dit, madame ; il est fort bon Anglois.

Kath. Dites moy en Anglois, le bras.

Alice. De arm, madame.

Kath. Et le coude.

Alice. De elbow.

Kath. De elbow. Je m'en fais la répétition de tous les mots, que vous m'avez appris d'a à present.

Alice. Il est trop difficile, madame, comme je pense.

Kath. Excusez moy, Alice ; escoutez : De hand, de fingre, de nails, de arm, de bilbow.

Alice. De elbow, madame.

Kath. O Seigneur Dieu ! je m'en oublie ; De elbow. Comment appelez vous le col ?

Alice. De neck, madame.

Kath. De neck : Et le menton ?

Alice. De chin.

Kath. De sin. Le col, de neck : le menton, de sin.

Alice. Ouy. Sauf vostre honneur ; en vérité, vous prononcez les mots aussi droict que les natifs d'Angleterre.

Kath. Je ne doute point d'apprendre par la grace de Dieu ; et en peu de temps.

Alice. N'avez vous pas déjà oublié ce que je vous ay enseigné ?

Kath. Non, je réciteray à vous promptement. De hand, de fingre, de mails,—

Alice. De nails, madame.

Kath. De nails, de arme, de ilbow.

Alice. Sauf vostre honneur, de elbow.

Kath. Ainsi di je ; de elbow, de neck, et de sin ; Comment appelez vous le pieds et la robe ?

Alice. De foot, madame ; et de con.

Kath. De foot et de con ? O Seigneur Dieu ! ces sont mots de son mauvais, corruptible, grosse, et impudique, et non pour les dames d'honneur d'user ; Je ne voudrois prononcer ces mots devant les Seigneurs de France, pour tout le monde. Il faut de foot, et de con, neant-moins. Je réciterai une autre fois ma leçon ensemble : De hand, de fingre, de nails, de arm, de elbow, de neck, de sin, de foot, de con.

Alice. Excellent, madame !

Kath. C'est assez pour une fois ; allons nous à diner. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V. The same. Another Room in the same. Enter the French King, the Dauphin, Duke of Bourbon, the Constable of France, and others.

Fr. King. 'Tis certain, he hath pass'd the river Some.

Con. And if he be not fought withal, my lord, Let us not live in Franco ; let us quit all, And give our vineyards to a barbarous people.

Dau. O Dieu vivant ! snail a few sprays of us, The emptying of our fathers' luxury, Our scions, put in wild and savage stock, Spirt up so suddenly into the clouds, And overlook their grafters ?

Bour. Normans, but bastard Normans, Norman bastards !

Mort de ma vie ! if they march along. Unfought withal, but I will sell my dukedom, To buy a slobbery and a dirty farm In that nook-shotten² isle of Albion.

Con. Dieu de batailles ! where have they this mettle ?

Is not their climate foggy, raw, and dull ?

On whom, as in despite, the sun looks pale, Killing their fruit with frowns ? Can sodden water, A drench for sur-rein'd³ jades, their barley broth, Decoit their cold blood to such valiant heat ?

And shall our quick blood, spirited with wine, Seem frosty ? O, for honour of our land, Let us not hang like roping icicles

Upon our houses' thatch, whiles a more frosty people

Sweat drops of gallant youth in our rich fields ; Poor—we may call them, in their native lords.

Dau. By faith and honour, Our madams mock at us ; and plainly say, Our mettle is bred out ; and they will give Their bodies to the lust of English youth,

To new-store France with bastard warriors.

Bour. They bid us—to the English dancing-schools,

And teach lavoltas⁴ high, and swift corantos ; Saying, our grace is only in our heels,

And that we are most lofty runaways.

Fr. King. Where is Montjoy, the herald ? speed him hence ;

Let him greet England with our sharp defiance. Up, princes ; and, with spirit of honour edg'd, More sharper than your swords, hie to the field :

Charles De-la-bret,⁵ high constable of France ; You dukes of Orleans, Bourbon, and of Berry,

Alengon, Brabant, Bar, and Burgundy ;

Jacques Châtillon, Rambures, Vaudemont,

Beaumont, Grandpre, Roussi, and Fauconberg,

Foix, Lestrale, Bouciquail, and Charolois ;

High dukes, great princes, barons, lords, and knights,

For your great seats, now quit you of great shames.

Bar Harry England, that sweeps through our land :

With pennons⁶ painted in the blood of Harfleur !

Rush on his host, as doth the melted snow

Upon the valleys ; whose low vassal seat

The Alps doth spit and void his rheum upon :

Go down upon him,—you have power enough,—

And in a captive chariot, into Rouen

Bring him our prisoner.

Con. This becomes the great.

Sorry am I, his numbers are so few,

His soldiers sick, and famish'd in their march ;

For, I am sure, when he shall see our army,

He'll drop his heart into the sink of fear,

And, for achievement, offer us his ransom.

Fr. King. Therefore, lord constable, haste on Montjoy :

And let him say to England, that we send

1 Luxury for lust.

2 Toit, Luxury, pellmell, for I lack soldiers.—Lear.

3 'Nook-shotten isle.' Shotten signifies any thing projected : so nook-shotten isle is an isle that shoots out into capes, promontories, and necks of land, the very figure of Great Britain. Randle Holme, in his Accedence of Armory, p. 353, has 'Querke, a nook-shotten pane' [of glass.]

4 'A drench for sur-rein'd jades.' Sur-rein'd is probably over-riden or over-strained. Steevens observes that it is common to give horses, over-riden or feverish, ground malt and hot water mixed, which is called a mash. To this the Constable alludes.

5 'Lavoltas high.' The lavolta, or volta, 'a kind of turning French dance,' says Florio ; in which the man turns the woman round several times, and then assists her in making a high spring or cabriole. The reader will find a very curious and amusing article on the subject in Mr. Douce's Illustrations of Shakspeare, vol. i. p. 439.

6 This should be Charles D'Albret ; but the metre would not admit of the change. Shakspeare followed Hollinshed, who calls him Delabreth. The other French names have been corrected.

7 Pennons were flags or streamers, upon which the arms, device, and motto of a knight were painted. 'A pennon must be tow yarde and a halfe long, made round at the end, and conteyneth the armes of the owner, and serveth for the conduct of fifty men.'—MSS. Harl. No. 2413. A banneret was created by cutting off the point of the pennon, and making it a banner, which was peculiar to the nobility.

8 'And for achievement offer us his ransom.' That is, instead of achieving a victory over us, make a proposal to pay us a sum as ransom.

To know what willing ransom he will give.—
Prince Dauphin, you shall stay with us in Rouen.¹

Dau. Not so, I do beseech your majesty.

Fr. King. Be patient, for you shall remain with us.—

Now, forth, lord constable, and princes all;
And quickly bring us word of England's fall.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. The English Camp in Picardy.
Enter GOWER and FLUELLEN.

Gow. How now, Captain Fluellen, come you from the bridge?

Flu. I assure you, there is very excellent service committed at the bridge.

Gow. Is the duke of Exeter safe?

Flu. The duke of Exeter is as magnanimous as Agamemnon; and a man that I love and honour with my soul, and my heart, and my duty, and my life, and my livings, and my uttermost powers: he is not (God be praised, and blessed!) any hurt in the world; but keeps the bridge most valiantly,² with excellent discipline. There is an ensign there at the bridge,—I think, in my very conscience, he is as valiant as Mark Antony; and he is a man of no estimation in the world: but I did see him do gallant service.

Gow. What do you call him?

Flu. He is called—ancient Pistol.

Gow. I know him not.

Enter Pistol.

Flu. Do you not know him? Here comes the man.

Pist. Captain, I thee beseech to do me favours: The duke of Exeter doth love thee well.

Flu. Ay, I praise God; and I have merited some love at his hands.

Pist. Bardolph, a soldier, firm and sound of heart, Of buxom valour,³ hath,—by cruel fate, And giddy fortune's furious fickle wheel, That goddess blind, That stands upon the rolling restless stone.—

Flu. By your patience, ancient Pistol. Fortune is painted blind, with a muffler⁴ before her eyes, to signify to you that fortune is blind: And she is painted also with a wheel; to signify to you, which is the moral of it, that she is turning, and inconstant, and variations, and mutabilities: and her foot, look you, is fixed upon a spherical stone, which rolls, and rolls, and rolls;—In good truth,

¹ Rouen is spelt Roan in the old copy. It was pronounced as a monosyllable.

² But keeps the bridge most valiantly? After Henry had passed the Somme, the French endeavoured to intercept him in his passage to Calais; and for that purpose attempted to break down the only bridge that there was over the small river of Ternois, at Blangy, over which it was necessary for Henry to pass. But Henry having notice of their design, sent a part of his troops before him, who attacking and putting the French to flight, preserved the bridge till the whole English army arrived and passed over it.

³ 'Buxom valour.' It is true that, in the Saxon and our elder English, buxom meant pliant, yielding, obedient; and in this sense Spenser uses it: but as we know it was also used for lusty, rampant, however mistakenly, it was surely very absurd to give the older meaning to it here, as Stevens did. Pistol would be much more likely to take the popular sense, than one founded on etymology. Blount, after giving the old legitimate meaning of buxomness, says, 'It is now mistaken for lustiness or rampancy.'

⁴ A muffler was a fold of linen used for concealing the face of a woman.

⁵ 'A pix.' The folio reads par: but Hollinshed, whom Shakespeare followed, says, 'A foolish soldier stole a pix out of a church, for which cause he was apprehended, and the king would not once more remove till the box was restored, and the offender strangled.' It was the box in which the consecrated wafers were kept, originally so named from being made of box; but in later times it was made of gold, silver, and other costly materials.

⁶ 'And figo for thy friendship.' See note on King Henry IV. Part 2. The Spanish fig probably alludes to the poet is make a most excellent description of fortune: fortune, look you, is an excellent moral.

Pist. Fortune is Bardolph's foe, and frowns on him;

For he hath stolen a pix,⁵ and hanged must 'a be. A damned death!

Let gallows gape for dog, let man go free,

And let not hemp his windpipe suffocate:

But Exeter hath given the doom of death,

For pix of little price.

Therefore, go speak, the duke will hear thy voice;

And let not Bardolph's vital thread be cut

With edge of penny cord, and vile reproach:

Speak, captain, for his life, and I will thee requite.

Flu. Ancient Pistol, I do partly understand your meaning.

Pist. Why then rejoice therefore.

Flu. Certainly, ancient, it is not a thing to rejoice at; for if, look you, he were my brother, I would desire the duke to use his good pleasure, and put him to executions; for disciplines ought to be used.

Pist. Die and be damn'd; and *figo*⁶ for thy friendship!

Flu. It is well.

Pist. The fig of Spain!

[Exit Pistol.]

Flu. Very good.

Gow. Why, this is an arrant counterfeit rascal; I remember him now; a bawd; a cutpurse.

Flu. I'll assure you, 'a utter'd as prave words at the bridge, as you shall see in a summer's day: But it is very well; what he has spoke to me, that is well. I warrant you, when time is serve.

Gow. Why, 'tis a gull, a fool, a rogue; that now and then goes to the wars, to grace himself, at his return into London, under the form of a soldier. And such fellows are perfect in great commanders' names: and they will learn you by rote, where services were done:—at such and such a scone,⁸ at such a breach, at such a convoy; who came off bravely, who was shot, who disgraced, what terms the enemy stood on; and this they can perfectly in the phrase of war, which they trick up with new-tuned oaths: And what a beard of the general's cut,⁹ and a horrid suit of the camp, will do among foaming bottles, and ale-washed wits, is wonderful to be thought on! but you must learn to know such slanders of the age,¹⁰ or else you may be marvellous mistook.

Flu. I tell you what, Captain Gower;—I do perceive, he is not the man that he would gladly make show to the world he is; if I find a hole in his coat, I will tell him my mind. [Drum heard.] Hark to the custom of giving poisoned figs to those who were the objects of either Spanish or Italian revenge; to which custom there are numerous allusions in our old dramas. In the quarto copies of this play we have:—

'The fig of Spain within thy jaw.' And afterwards:—

'The fig of Spain within thy bowels and thy dirty maw.'

⁷ 'Very good.' In the quartos, instead of these two words, we have:—

'Captain Gower, cannot you hear it lighten and thunder?'

¹⁰ 'Such slanders of the age.' Nothing was more common than such huffcap pretending braggarts as Pistol in the poet's age: they are the continual subject of satire in his contemporaries. To the reader who has any acquaintance with our early writers it would be superfluous to cite instances. Stevens mentions Basilisco, in Solyman and Perseda, as likely to have given the hint of Pistol's character to Shakespeare.

you, the king is coming; and I must speak with him from the bridge.'

Enter KING HENRY, GLOSTER, and Soldiers.

Flu. Got pless your majesty!

K. Hen. How now, Fluellen? camest thou from the bridge?

Flu. Ay, so please your majesty. The duke of Exeter has very gallantly maintained the bridge: the French is gone off, look you; and there is gallant and most brave passages: Marry, th'adversary was have possession of the bridge; but he is enforced to retire, and the duke of Exeter is master of the bridge; I can tell your majesty, the duke is a brave man.

K. Hen. What men have you lost, Fluellen?

Flu. The perdition of th'adversary hath been very great, very reasonable great: marry, for my part, I think the duke hath lost never a man, but one that is like to be executed for robbing a church, one Bardolph, if your majesty know the man: his face is all bubukles, and welks,² and knobs, and flames of fire; and his lips plows at his nose, and it is like a coal of fire, sometimes blue, and sometimes red; but his nose is executed, and his fire's out.

K. Hen. We would have all such offenders so cut off:—and we give express charge, that in our marches through the country, there be nothing compelled from the villages, nothing taken but paid for; none of the French unbraided, or abused in disdainful language; For when lenity and cruelty play for a kingdom, the gentler gamester is the soonest winner.

Tucket sounds. Enter MONTJOY.

Mont. You know me by my habit.³

K. Hen. Well then, I know thee; What shall I know of thee?

Mont. My master's mind.

K. Hen. Unfold it.

Mont. Thus says my king:—Say thou to Harry of England, Though we seemed dead, we did but sleep; Advantage is a better soldier than rashness. Tell him, we could have rebuked him at Harfleur; but that we thought not good to bruise an injury, till it were full ripe:—now we speak upon our cue,⁴ and our voice is imperial! England shall repent his folly, see his weakness, and admire our suzerance. Bid him, therefore, consider of his ransom; which must proportion the losses we have borne, the subjects we have lost, the disgrace we have digested; which, in weight to re-answer, his pettiness would bow under. For our losses, his exchequer is too poor; for the effusion of our blood, the muster of his kingdom too faint a number; and for our disgrace, his own person, kneeling at our feet, but a weak and worthless satisfaction. To this add—defiance: and tell him, for conclusion, he hath betrayed his followers, whose condemnation is pronounced. So far my king and master; so much my office.

1 'From the bridge.' These words are not in the quarto. If not a mistake of the compositor, who may have caught them from the king's speech, they must mean about the bridge, or concerning it.

2 'His face is all bubukles, and welks, and knobs.' Welks are not stripes, as Mr. Nares interprets the word; but pimples, or blotches: Papula. 'A pimple, a welke; Bourion ou bubbe qui vient en face.' Mr. Steevens remarks that Chaucer's Sompnour may have afforded Shakespeare a hint for Bardolph's face. He also had 'A fire red cherubines face,' with 'welkes white, and knobbes situling on his cheekes.'—Cant. Tales, v. 628.

3 'You know me by my habit.' That is, by his herald's coat. The person of a herald being inviolable was distinguished by a richly emblazoned dress. Montjoie is the title of the first king at arms in France, as Garter is in this country.

4 I. e. in our turn. This theatrical phrase has been already noticed.

5 I. e. without impediment. Empêchement, Fr. See Cotgrave's Dictionary

K. Hen. What is thy name? I know thy quality. Mont. Montjoy.

K. Hen. Thou dost thy office fairly. Turn thee back,

And tell thy king,—I do not seek him now; But could be willing to march on to Calais Without impeachment: for, to say the sooth, (Though 'tis no wisdom to confess so much Unto an enemy of craft and vantage,) My people are with sickness much enfeebled, My numbers lessen'd; and those few I have, Almost no better than so many French; Who, when they were in health, I tell thee, herald, I thought, upon one pair of English legs Did march three Frenchmen.—Yet, forgive me, God,

That I do brag thus!—this your air of France Hath blown that vice in me; I must repent. Go, therefore, tell thy master, here I am; My ransom, is this frail and worthless trunk; My army, but a weak and sickly guard; Yet, God before,⁶ tell him we will come on, Though France himself, and such another neighbour,

Stand in our way. There's for thy labour, Montjoy. Go, bid thy master well advise himself:

If we may pass, we will; if we be hinder'd, We shall your tawny ground with your red blood Discolour:⁷ and so, Montjoy, fare you well.

The sum of all our answer is but this: We would not seek a battle, as we are; Nor, as we are, we say, we will not shun it; So tell your master.

Mont. I shall deliver so. Thanks to your highness. [Exit MONTJOY.]

Glo. I hope they will not come upon us now.

K. Hen. We are in God's hand, brother, not in theirs.

March to the bridge; it now draws toward night:—Beyond the river we'll encamp ourselves; And on to-morrow bid them march away.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VII. The French Camp, near Agincourt.

Enter the Constable of France, the LORD RAMBURES, the DUKE OF ORLEANS, Dauphin, and others.

Con. Tut! I have the best armour of the world.—Would, it were day!

Orl. You have an excellent armour; but let my horse have his due.

Con. It is the best horse of Europe.

Orl. Will it never be morning?

Dau. My lord of Orleans, and my lord high constable, you talk of horse and armour,—

Orl. You are as well provided of both, as any prince in the world.

Dau. What a long night is this!—I will not change my horse with any that treads but on four pasterns. Ca, ha! He bounds from the earth, as if his entrails were hairs;⁸ le cheval volant, the Pegasus, qui a les narines de feu! When I bestride him, I soar, I am a hawk: he trots the air; the 6 God before was then used for God being my guide.

7 'We shall your tawny ground with your red blood Discolour.'

This is from Holinshed. 'My desire is, that none of you be so unadvised as to be the occasion that I in my defence shall colour and make red your tawny ground with the effusion of Christian blood. When he had thus answered the herald he gave him a great reward, and licenced him to depart.' It was always customary to give a reward, or largess, to the herald, whether he brought a message of defiance or congratulation. I will just observe by the way, that the heralds do not appear to have been held in the highest esteem formerly; I find them, in a very curious passage of Robert Rolle's Speculum Vitæ, classed with all the other infamous itinerant professions, as courtizans, jugglers, minstrels, thieves, and hangmen.

8 'He bounds from the earth, as if his entrails were hairs.' Alluding to the bounding of tennis-balls, which were stuffed with hair.

earth sings when he touches it; the basest horn of his hoof is more musical than the pipe of Hermes.

Orl. He's of the colour of the nutmeg.

Dau. And of the heat of the ginger. It is a beast for Perseus: he is pure air and fire;¹ and the dull elements of earth and water never appear in him, but only in patient stillness, while his rider mounts him: he is, indeed, a horse; and all other jades you may call—beasts.²

Con. Indeed, my lord, it is a most absolute and excellent horse.

Dau. It is the prince of palfreys; his neigh is like the bidding of a monarch, and his countenance enforces homage.

Orl. No more, cousin.

Dau. Nay, the man hath no wit, that cannot, from the rising of the lark to the lodging of the lamb, vary deserved praise on my palfrey: it is a theme as fluent as the sea; turn the sands into eloquent tongues, and my horse is argument for them all: 'tis a subject for a sovereign to reason on, and for a sovereign's sovereign to ride on; and for the world (familiar to us, and unknown,) to lay apart their particular functions, and wonder at him. I once wrote a sonnet in his praise, and began thus: Wonder of nature,—

Orl. I have heard a sonnet begin so to one's mistress.

Dau. Then did they imitate that which I composed to my courser; for my horse is my mistress.

Orl. Your mistress bears well.

Dau. Me well; which is the prescript praise and perfection of a good and particular mistress.

Con. Ma foy! the other day, methought, your mistress shrewdly shook your back.

Dau. So, perhaps, did yours.

Con. Mine was not bridled.

Dau. O! then, belike, she was old and gentle; and you rode like a Kerne of Ireland, your French hose off, and in your strait trossers.³

Con. You have good judgment in horsemanship.

Dau. Be warned by me then: they that ride so, and ride not warily, fall into foul bogs; I had rather have my horse to my mistress.

Con. I had as lief have my mistress a jade.

Dau. I tell thee, constable, my mistress wears her own hair.

Con. I could make as true a boast as that, if I had a sow to my mistress.

Dau. *Le chien est retourné à son propre vomissement, et la truie lavée au boubier:*⁴ thou makest use of any thing.

Con. Yet do I not use my horse for my mistress; or any such proverb, so little kin to the purpose.

Ram. My lord constable, the armour, that I saw in your tent to-night, are those stars, or suns, upon it?

Con. Stars, my lord.

Dau. Some of them will fall to-morrow, I hope.

Con. And yet my sky shall not want.

1 'He is pure air and fire.' Thus Cleopatra, speaking of herself:—

I am air and fire; my other elements
I give to baser life.

2 'He is, indeed, a horse; and all other jades you may call—beasts.' There has been much foolish contention about this passage; the sense of which is plain enough. I have elsewhere observed that jade is not always used for a tired or contemptible horse. The Dauphin means 'that his charger is indeed a horse, and alone worthy of that name; all others may be called beasts in comparison of him.' Beast is here used in the sense of the Latin jumentum, contemptuously to signify an animal only fit for the cart or packsaddle.

3 'Like a Kerne of Ireland, your French hose off, and in your strait trossers.' This expression is here merely figurative, as Theobald long since observed, for fermibus denudatis. But it is certain that the Irish trossers, or trowsers, were anciently the direct contrary to the modern garments of that name. 'Their trosses, commonly spelt trossers, were thin pantaloons exactly fitted to the shape.' Bulwer, in his Pedigree of the English Gallant, 1653, says, 'Now our hose are made so close to our breeches that, like the Irish trossers, they too manifestly discover the dimensions of every part.'—

Dau. That may be, for you bear a many superfluously! and 'twere more honour, some were away

Con. Even as your horse bears your praises; who would trot as well, were some of your brags dismounted.

Dau. 'Would, I were able to load him with his desert! Will it never be day? I will trot to-morrow a mile, and my way shall be paved with English faces.

Con. I will not say so, for fear I should be faced out of my way: But I would it were morning, for I would fain be about the ears of the English.

Ram. Who will go to hazard with me for twenty English prisoners?

Con. You must first go yourself to hazard, ere you have them.

Dau. 'Tis midnight, I'll go arm myself. [Exit.]

Orl. The Dauphin longs for morning.

Ram. He longs to eat the English.

Con. I think, he will eat all he kills.

Orl. By the white hand of my lady, he's a gallant prince.

Con. Swear by her foot, that she may tread out the oath.

Orl. He is, simply, the most active gentleman of France.

Con. Doing is activity: and he will still be doing.

Orl. He never did harm, that I heard of.

Con. Nor will do none to-morrow; he will keep that good name still.

Orl. I know him to be valiant.

Con. I was told that, by one that knows him better than you.

Orl. What's he?

Con. Marry, he told me so himself; and he said, he cared not who knew it.

Orl. He needs not, it is no hidden virtue in him.

Con. By my faith, sir, but it is; never any body saw it, but his lackey: 'tis a hooded valour; and, when it appears, it will bate.⁵

Orl. Ill will never said well.

Con. I will cap that proverb with—There is flattery in friendship.

Orl. And I will take up that with—Give the devil his due.

Con. Well placed; there stands your friend for the devil: have at the very eye of that proverb, with—a pox of the devil.

Orl. You are the better at proverbs, by how much—a fool's bolt is soon shot.

Con. You have shot over.

Orl. 'Tis not the first time you were overshot.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord high constable, the English lie within fifteen hundred paces of your tent.

Con. Who hath measured the ground?

Mess. The Lord Grandpre.

Con. A valiant and most expert gentleman.—'Would, it were day!—Alas, poor Harry of England!—He longs not for the dawning, as we do.

I will add that Spenser says Chaucer's description of Sir Thopas gives 'the very manner and fashion of the Irish horseman,—in his long hose, his riding shoes of costly cordwaine, his hacqueton, and his habergeon,' &c.—State of Ireland, p. 115; Ed. Dublin, 1809.

4 It has been remarked that Shakespeare was habitually conversant with his bible: we have here a strong presumptive proof that he read it, at least occasionally, in French. This passage will be found almost literally in the Geneva Bible, 1588. 2 Peter ii. 22.

5 'Tis a hooded valour; and, when it appears, it will bate.' This poor pun depends upon the equivocal use of bate. When a hawk is unhooded, her first action is to bate (i. e. beat her wings, or flutter.) The hawk wants no courage, but invariably bates upon the removal of her hood. The Constable would insinuate by his double entendre that the Dauphin's courage, when it appears (i. e. when he prepares for encounter,) will bate; i. e. soon diminish or evaporate.

6 Instead of this and the succeeding speeches, the quartos conclude this scene with a couplet:—

—Come, come away;

The sun is high, and we war out the day!

Orl. What a wretched and peevish¹ fellow is this king of England, to mope with his fat-brained followers so far out of his knowledge!

Con. If the English had any apprehension, they would run away.

Orl. That they lack; for if their heads had any intellectual armour, they could never wear such heavy head-pieces.

Ram. That island of England breeds very valiant creatures; their mastiffs are of unmatchable courage.

Orl. Foolish curs! that run winking into the mouth of a Russian bear, and have their heads crushed like rotten apples: You may as well say,—that's a valiant flea, that dare eat his breakfast on the lip of a lion.

Con. Just, just; and the men do sympathise with the mastiffs, in robustious and rough coming on, leaving their wits with their wives; and then give them great meals of beef, and iron and steel, they will eat like wolves, and fight like devils.

Orl. Ay, but these English are shrewdly out of beef.

Con. Then we shall find to-morrow—they have only stomachs to eat, and none to fight. Now is it time to arm: Come, shall we about it?

Orl. It is now two o'clock: but, let me see,—by ten,
We shall have each a hundred Englishmen.

[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

Enter CHORUS.

Chor. Now entertain conjecture of a time,
When creeping murmur, and the poring dark,
Fills the wide vessel of the universe;²
From camp to camp, through the foul womb of
night,

The hum of either army stilly sounds,³
That the fix'd sentinels almost receive
The secret whispers of each other's watch:⁴
Fire answers fire; and through their paly flames
Each battle sees the other's umber'd⁵ face:
Steeds threaten steeds in high and boastful neighs,
Piercing the night's dull ear; and from the tents,
The armourers, accomplishing the knights,
With busy hammers closing rivets up,⁶
Give dreadful note of preparation.
The country cocks do crow, the clocks do toll,
And the third hour of drowsy morning name.
Proud of their numbers, and secure in soul,

² 'Fills the wide vessel of the universe.' Warburton says universe for horizon. Upon which Johnson remarks:—'The universe, in its original sense, no more means this globe singly than the circuit of the horizon; but however large in its philosophical sense, it may be poetically used for as much of the world as falls under observation.'

³ 'The hum of either army stilly sounds.' This expression applied to sound is not peculiar to Shakespeare; we have 'a still small voice' in the sacred writings, and Florio's Dictionary in the word sussura, has 'a buzzing, a murmuring, a charming, a humming, a soft, gentle, still noise, as of running water falling with a gentle stream, or as trees make with the wind, &c.' It is the 'murmure tacito' of Ovid.

⁴ 'The secret whispers of each other's watch.' Holinshed says that the distance between the two armies was but two hundred and fifty paces: and again, 'at their coming into the village, fires were made (by the English) to give light on every side, as there were likewise by the French hosts.'

⁶ 'The armourers, accomplishing the knights, With busy hammers closing rivets up.' This does not solely refer to the riveting the plate armour before it was put on, out as to part when it was on. The top of the cuirass had a little projecting bit of

The confident and over-lusty⁷ French
Do the low-rated English play at dice;
And chide the cripple tardy-gaited night,
Who, like a foul and ugly witch, doth limp
So tediously away. The poor condemned English,
Like sacrifices, by their watchful fires
Sit patiently, and inly ruminate
The morning's danger; and their gestures sad,
Investing lank-lean cheeks,⁸ and war-worn coats,
Presenteth them unto the gazing moon
So many horrid ghosts. O, now, who will behold
The royal captain of this ruin'd band,
Walking from watch to watch, from tent to tent,
Let him cry—Praise and glory on his head!
For forth he goes, and visits all his host;
Bids them good morrow, with a modest smile;
And calls them—brothers, friends, and countrymen,
Upon his royal face there is no note,
How dread an army hath enrouned him:
Nor doth he dedicate one jot of colour
Unto the weary and all-watched night;
But freshly looks, and over-bears attaint,
With cheerful semblance, and sweet majesty;
That every wretch, pining and pale before,
Beholding him, plucks comfort from his looks
A largess universal, like the sun,
His liberal eye doth give to every one,
Thawing cold fear. Then, mean and gentle all,
Behold, as may unworthiness define,
A little touch of Harry in the night:
And so our scene must to the battle fly:
Where (O for pity!) we shall much disgrace—
With four or five most vile and ragged foils,
Right ill-dispos'd, in brawl ridiculous,—
The name of Agincourt: Yet, sit and see;
Minding⁹ true things, by what their mockeries be.
[Exit.]

SCENE I. The English Camp at Agincourt.
Enter KING HENRY, BEDFORD, and GLOSTER.

K. Hen. Gloster, 'tis true, that we are in great danger;
The greater therefore should our courage be.—
Good morrow, brother Bedford.—God Almighty!
There is some soul of goodness in things evil,
Would men observingly distil it out;
For our bad neighbour makes us early stirrers,
Which is both healthful, and good husbandry:
Besides, they are our outward consciences,
And preachers to us all; admonishing,
That we should dress us fairly for our end.¹⁰

iron that passed through a hole pierced through the bottom of the casque. When both were put on, the smith or armourer presented himself, with his riveting hammer, to close the rivet up; so that the party's head should remain steady, notwithstanding the force of any blow that might be given on the cuirass or helmet. This custom prevailed more particularly in tournaments. See Varietes Historiques, 1753, 12mo. tom. ii. p. 73. Douce.

⁷ 'The confident and over-lusty French Do the low-rated English play at dice.'
Over-lusty, i. e. over-saucy. Thus in North's Plutarch:—'Cassius's soldiers did shew themselves verie stubborn and lustie in the camp.' This is Steevens's explanation; the word lusty, however, was synonymous with lively. 'To be lively or lustie, to be in his force or strength, Vigeo.' It is also meant 'in good plight, jolly.' By 'Do the low-rated English play at dice' is meant 'do play them away, or play for them at dice.' The circumstance is from Holinshed.

⁸ '—their gestures sad, Investing lank-lean cheeks.'
Thus Sidney, in Astrophel, song 2, has:—
'Anger invests the face with a lovely grace.'

⁹ 'Minding true things.' To mind is the same as to call to remembrance. Thus Baret:—'I minde this matter, and thinke still that it is before my eyes; in oculis animoque versatur mihi hac res.'

¹⁰ 'That we should dress us fairly for our end.' Malone took this for an abbreviation of address us, and printed it thus, 'dress us. Steevens very reasonably doubted the propriety of the elision, but would take dress in its ordinary acceptation. 'To dress is to make ready. to prepare. Paro, Lat.'

Thus may we gather honey from the weed,
And make a moral of the devil himself.

*Enter ERPINGHAM.*¹

Good morrow, old Sir Thomas Erpingham:
A good soft pillow for that good white head
Were better than a churlish turf of France.

Erp. Not so, my liege; this lodging likes me better,

Since I may say—now lie I like a king.

K. Hen. 'Tis good for men to love their present pains,

Upon example; so the spirit is eased;
And, when the mind is quicken'd, out of doubt,
The organs, though defunct and dead before,
Break up their drowsy grave, and newly move
With casted slough and fresh legerity.²

Lend me thy cloak, Sir Thomas.—Brothers both,
Commend me to the princes in our camp;
Do my good morrow to them; and, anon,
Desire them all to my pavilion.

Glo. We shall, my liege.

Erp. Shall I attend your grace?
[Exeunt GLOSTER and BEDFORD.]

K. Hen. No, my good knight;
Go with my brothers to my lords of England:
I and my bosom must debate awhile,
And then I would no other company.

Erp. The Lord in heaven bless thee, noble Harry!
[Exit ERPINGHAM.]

K. Hen. God-a-mercy, old heart! thou speakest cheerfully.

Enter PISTOL.

Pist. Qui va la?

K. Hen. A friend.

Pist. Discuss unto me; Art thou officer;

Or art thou base, common, and popular?

K. Hen. I am a gentleman of a company.

Pist. Trailest thou the puissant pike?

K. Hen. Even so: What are you?

Pist. As good a gentleman as the emperor.

K. Hen. Then you are a better than the king.

Pist. The king's a bawcock, and a heart of gold,
A lad of life, an imp³ of fame;

Of parents good, of fist most valiant:

I kiss his dirty shoe, and from my heart-strings

I love the lovely bully. What's thy name?

K. Hen. Harry le Roy.

Pist. Le Roy! a Cornish name: art thou of Cornish crew?

K. Hen. No, I am a Welshman.

Pist. Knowest thou Fluellen.

K. Hen. Yes.

Pist. Tell him, I'll knock his leek about his pate,
Upon Saint Davy's day.

K. Hen. Do not you wear your dagger in your cap that day, lest he knock that about yours.

Pist. Art thou his friend?

K. Hen. And his kinsman too.

Pist. The figo for thee then!

K. Hen. I thank you: God be with you!

Pist. My name is Pistol called. [Exit.]

K. Hen. It sorts⁴ well with your fierceness.

Enter FLUELLEN and GOWER, severally.

Gow. Captain Fluellen!

Flu. So! in the name of Cheshu Christ, speak lower. It is the greatest admiration in the universal world, when the true and auncient prerogatives and laws of the wars is not kept: if you would take the pains but to examine the wars of Pompey the Great, you shall find, I warrant you, that there is no tiddle taddle, or piddle paddle, in Pompey's camp; I warrant you, you shall find the ceremonies of the wars, and the cares of it, and the forms of it, and the sobriety of it, and the modesty of it, to be otherwise.

Gow. Why, the enemy is loud; you heard him all night.

Flu. If the enemy is an ass, and a fool, and a prating coxcomb, is it meet, think you, that we should also, look you, be an ass, and a fool, and a prating coxcomb; in your own conscience now?

Gow. I will speak lower.

Flu. I pray you, and beseech you, that you will.

[Exeunt GOWER and FLUELLEN.]
K. Hen. Though it appear a little out of fashion,
There is much care and valour in this Welshman.

Enter BATES, COURT, and WILLIAMS.

Court. Brother John Bates, is not that the morning which breaks yonder?

Bates. I think it be: but we have no great cause to desire the approach of day.

Will. We see yonder the beginning of the day, but, I think, we shall never see the end of it.—Who goes there?

K. Hen. A friend.

Will. Under what captain serve you?

K. Hen. Under Sir Thomas Erpingham.

Will. A good old commander, and a most kind gentleman: I pray you, what thinks he of our estate?

K. Hen. Even as men wrecked upon a sand, that look to be washed off the next tide.

Bates. He hath not told his thought to the king?

K. Hen. No; nor it is not meet he should. For, though I speak it to you, I think, the king is but a man, as I am: the violet smells to him, as it doth to me; the element shows to him, as it doth to me; all his senses have but human conditions: his ceremonies laid by, in his nakedness he appears but a man; and though his affections are higher mounted than ours, yet, when they stoop, they stoop with the like wing;⁵ therefore when he sees reason of fears, as we do, his fears, out of doubt, be of the same relish as ours are: Yet, in reason, no man should possess him with any appearance of fear, lest he, by showing it, should dishearten his army.

Bates. He may show what outward courage he will: but, I believe, as cold a night as 'tis, he could wish himself in the Thames up to the neck; and so I would he were, and I by him, at all adventures, so we were quit here.

K. Hen. By my troth, I will speak my conscience of the king; I think, he would not wish himself any where but where he is.

Bates. Then, would he were here alone; so should he be sure to be ransom'd, and a many poor men's lives saved.

K. Hen. I dare say, you love him not so ill, to wish him here alone; howsoever you speak this, to feel other men's minds: Methinks, I could not die any where so contented, as in the king's company; his cause being just, and his quarrel honourable.

Will. That's more than we know.

Bates. Ay, or more than we should seek after; for we know enough, if we know we are the king's subjects; if his cause be wrong, our obedience to the king wipes the crime of it out of us.

Will. But, if the cause be not good, the king himself hath a heavy reckoning to make; when all those legs, and arms, and heads, chopped off in a battle, shall join together at the latter day, and cry all—We died at such a place; some, swearing; some, crying for a surgeon; some, upon their wives left poor behind them; some, upon the debts they

⁴ I. e. agrees, accords.

⁵ I. e. but human qualities.

⁶ — though his affections are higher mounted than ours, when they stoop, they stoop with like wing. This passage alludes to the ancient sport of falconry. When the hawk, after soaring aloft, or mounting high, descended in its flight, it was said to stoop.

¹ Sir Thomas Erpingham came over with Bolingbroke from Bretagne, and was one of the commissioners to receive King Richard's abdication. He was at this time warden of Dover Castle, and his arms are still visible on the side of the Roman Pharos.

² 'With casted slough and fresh legerity.' The allusion is to the casting of the slough or skin of the snake annually, by which act he is supposed to regain new vigour and fresh youth. Legerity is lightness, nimbleness.

owe; some, upon their children rawly¹ left. I am afraid there are few die well, that die in battle; for how can they charitably dispose of any thing, when blood is their argument? Now, if these men do not die well, it will be a black matter for the king that led them to it; whom to disobey were against all proportion of subjection.

K. Hen. So, if a son, that is by his father sent about merchandise, do sinfully miscarry upon the sea, the imputation of his wickedness, by your rule, should be imposed upon his father that sent him: or if a servant, under his master's command, transporting a sum of money, be assailed by robbers, and die in many irreconcilable iniquities, you may call the business of the master the author of the servant's damnation:—But this is not so: the king is not bound to answer the particular endings of his soldiers, the father of his son, nor the master of his servant; for they purpose not their death, when they purpose their services. Besides, there is no king, be his cause never so spotless, if it come to the arbitrement of swords, can try it out with all unspotted soldiers. Some, peradventure, have on them the guilt of premeditated and contrived murder; some, of beguiling virgins with the broken seals of perjury;² some, making the wars their bulwark, that have before gored the gentle bosom of peace with pillage and robbery. Now, if these men have defeated the law, and outrun native punishment,³ though they can outstrip men, they have no wings to fly from God: war is his beadle, war is his vengeance; so that here men are punished, for before-breach of the king's laws, in now the king's quarrel: where they feared the death, they have borne life away; and where they would be safe, they perish: Then if they die unprovided, no more is the king guilty of their damnation, than he was before guilty of those impieties for the which they are now visited. Every subject's duty is the king's;⁴ but every subject's soul is his own. Therefore should every soldier in the wars do as every sick man in his bed, wash every mote out of his conscience: and dying so, death is to him advantage; or not dying, the time was blessedly lost, wherein such preparation was gained: and, in him that escapes, it were not sin to think, that making God so free an offer, he let him outlive that day to see his greatness, and to teach others how they should prepare.

Will. 'Tis certain, every man that dies ill, the ill is upon his own head, the king is not to answer for it.

Bates. I do not desire he should answer for me; and yet I determine to fight lustily for him.

K. Hen. I myself heard the king say, he would not be ransomed.

Will. Ay, he said so, to make us fight cheerfully: but, when our throats are cut, he may be ransomed, and we ne'er the wiser.

K. Hen. If I live to see it, I will never trust his word after.

Will. 'Mass, you'll pay⁵ him then! That's a perilous shot out of an elder gun,⁶ that a poor and private displeasure can do against a monarch! you may as well go about to turn the sun to ice, with fanning in his face with a peacock's feather. You'll never trust his word after! come, 'tis a foolish saying.

1 i. e. their children left immaturely, left young and helpless.

2 — beguiling virgins with the broken seals of perjury. Thus in the song at the beginning of the fourth act of Measure for Measure:—

'That so sweetly were forsworn—

Seals of love, but seal'd in vain.'

3 i. e. the punishment they are born to.

4 'Every subject's duty is the king's.' This is a very just distinction, and the whole argument is well followed and properly concluded.—Johnson.

5 To pay here signifies to bring to account, to punish.

6 'That's a perilous shot out of an elder gun.' In the quarto the thought is more opened—It is a great displeasure that an elder gun can do against a cannon, or a subject against a monarch.

7 'Too round' is too rough, too unceremonious.

K. Hen. Your reproof is something too round; I should be angry with you, if the time were convenient.

Will. Let it be a quarrel between us, if you live.

K. Hen. I embrace it.

Will. How shall I know thee again?

K. Hen. Give me any gage of thine, and I will wear it in my bonnet: then, if ever thou dar'st acknowledge it, I will make it my quarrel.

Will. Here's my glove, give me another of thine.

K. Hen. There.

Will. This will I also wear in my cap: if ever thou come to me and say, after to-morrow, This is my glove, by this hand, I will take thee a box on the ear.

K. Hen. If ever I live to see it, I will challenge it.

Will. Thou dar'st as well be hanged.

K. Hen. Well, I will do it, though I take thee in the king's company.

Will. Keep thy word: fare thee well.

Bates. Be friends, you English fools, be friends: we have French quarrels enough, if you could tell how to reckon.

K. Hen. Indeed, the French may lay twenty French crowns to one, they will beat us; for they bear them on their shoulders: But it is no English treason to cut French crowns; and, to-morrow, the king himself will be a clipper. [Exeunt Soldiers. Upon the king!⁸ let us our lives, our souls,

Our debts, our careful wives, our children, and Our sins, lay on the king;—we must bear all. O hard condition! twin-born with greatness, Subjected to the breath of every fool, Whose sense no more can feel but his own wringing.

What infinite heart's ease must kings neglect, That private men enjoy?

And what have kings, that privates have not too, Save ceremony, save general ceremony?

And what art thou, thou idol ceremony?

What kind of god art thou, that suffer'st more Of mortal griefs, than do thy worshippers?

What are thy rents? what are thy comings in?

O ceremony, show me but thy worth!

What is thy soul of adoration?⁹

Art thouught else but place, degree, and form, Creating awe and fear in other men?

Wherein thou art less happy, being fear'd, Than they in fearing.

What drink'st thou oft, instead of homage sweet, But poison'd flattery? O, be sick, great greatness, And bid thy ceremony give thee cure!

Think'st thou, the fiery fever will go out With titles blown from adulation?

Will it give place to flexure and low bending?

Canst thou, when thou command'st the beggar's knee,

Command the health of it? No, thou proud dream, That play'st so subtly with a king's repose:

I am a king, that find thee; and I know, 'Tis not the balm, the sceptre, and the ball,

The sword, the mace, the crown imperial, The inter-tissued robe of gold and pearl,

The farced¹⁰ title running 'fore the king, The throne he sits on, nor the tide of pomp

That beats upon the high shore of this world,

8 'Upon the king.' There is something very striking and solemn in the soliloquy into which the king breaks immediately as soon as he is left alone. Something like this every breast has felt. Reflection and seriousness rush upon the mind upon the separation of gay company and especially after forced and unwilling merriment.—Johnson. This beautiful speech was added after the first edition.

9 'What is thy soul of adoration?' This is the reading of the old copy, which Malone changed to:—

'What is the soul of adoration?'

I think erroneously. The present reading is sufficiently intelligible, 'O ceremony, show me what value thou art of? What is thy soul or essence of external worship or adoration? Art thou, &c. If Malone's reading is adopted, it would be necessary to read 'Are they, &c. because ceremony and adoration are then both personified.

10 Farced is stuffed. The timid puffy titles with which a king's name is intruded.

No, not all these, thrice-gorgeous ceremony,
Not all these, laid in bed majestical,
Can sleep so soundly as the wretched slave;
Who, with a body fill'd, and vacant mind,
Gets him to rest, cramm'd with distressful bread;¹
Never sees horrid night, the child of hell;
But, like a lackey, from the rise to set,
Sweats in the eye of Phœbus, and all night
Sleeps in Elysium; next day, after dawn,
Doth rise, and help Hyperion² to his horse;
And follows so the ever-running year
With profitable labour, to his grave:
And, but for ceremony, such a wretch,
Winding up days with toil, and nights with sleep,
Had the fore-hand and vantage of a king.
The slave, a member of the country's peace,
Enjoys it; but in gross brain little wots,
What watch the king keeps to maintain the peace,
Whose hours the peasant best advantages.³

Enter ERPINGHAM.

Erp. My lord, your nobles, jealous of your absence,
Seek through your camp to find you.
K. Hen. Good old knight,
Collect them all together at my tent:
I'll be before thee.

Erp. I shall do't, my lord. [Exit.
K. Hen. O God of battles! steel my soldiers' hearts!

Possess them not with fear: take from them now⁴
The sense of reckoning of the opposed numbers:
Pluck their hearts from them not to-day, O Lord!
O not to-day! Think not upon the fault
My father made in compassing the crown!
I Richard's body have interred new;
And on it have bestow'd more contrite tears,
Than from it issued forced drops of blood.
Five hundred poor I have in yearly pay,
Who twice a day their wither'd hands hold up
Toward heaven, to pardon blood; and I have built
Two chantries,⁵ where the sad and solemn priests
Sing still for Richard's soul. More will I do:
Though all that I can do, is nothing worth;
Since that my penitence comes after all,
Imploping pardon.

Enter GLOSTER.

Glo. My liege!

K. Hen. My brother Gloster's voice?—Ay;
I know thy errand, I will go with thee:—
The day, my friends, and all things stay for me.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II. The French Camp. Enter Dauphin, ORLEANS, RAMBURES, and others.

Orl. The sun doth gild our armour; up, my lords.

1 '—cramm'd with distressful bread.' However oddly this may sound to modern ears, it was sufficiently intelligible to our ancestors. Distressful bread is the bread or food of poverty; Mensa angusta. Johnson observes that these lines are exquisitely pleasing. 'To sweat in the eye of Phœbus,' and 'to sleep in Elysium,' are expressions very poetical.

2 Apollo. See Hamlet, Act i. Sc. 2.

3 He little knows at the expense of how much royal vigilance that peace, which brings most advantage to the peasant, is maintained. To advantage is a verb used by Shakespeare in other places. It was formerly in general use.

4 The late editions exhibit the passage thus:—

—take from them now

The sense of reckoning, if the opposed numbers
Pluck their hearts from them!—Not to-day, O Lord,
O not to-day, think not upon, &c.

5 'Two chantries.' One of these was for Carthusian monks, and was called Bethlehem; the other was for religious men and women of the order of Saint Bridget, and was named Sion. They were on opposite sides of the Thames, and adjoined the royal manor of Sheen, now called Richmond.

6 Via, an exclamation of encouragement, on, away; of Italian origin.

7 'That their hot blood may spin in English eyes, And doubt them with superfluous courage.' This is the reading of the folio which Malone has altered to dour, i. e. do out in provincial language. It appears to me that there is no reason for the substitution.

Dau. Montez a cheval:—My horse! valet! lacquay? ha!

Orl. O brave spirit!

Dau. Via!—les caux et la terre—

Orl. Rien puis? l'air et le feu—

Dau. Ciel! cousin Orleans.—

Enter Constable.

Now, my lord Constable.

Con. Hark, how our steeds for present service neigh.

Dau. Mount them, and make incision in their hides;

That their hot blood may spin in English eyes, And doubt⁷ them with superfluous courage: Ha!

Ram. What, will you have them weep our horses' blood?

How shall we then behold their natural tears?

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The English are embattled, you French peers.

Con. To horse, you gallant princes! straight to horse!

Do but behold yon poor and starved band,
And your fair show shall suck away their souls,
Leaving them but the shales and husks of men.
There is not work enough for all our hands;
Scarce blood enough in all their sickly veins,
To give each naked cartle-ax a stain,
That our French gallants shall to-day draw out,
And sheath for lack of sport: let us but blow on them,
The vapour of our valour will o'erturn them.
'Tis positive 'gainst all exceptions, lords,
That our superfluous lackeys, and our peasants,—
Who in unnecessary action swarm
About our squares of battle,⁸—were enough
To purge this field of such a hilding⁹ foe;
Though we, upon this mountain's basis by
Took stand for idle speculation:
But that our honours must not. What's to say?
A very little little let us do,
And all is done. Then let the trumpets sound
The tucket-sonance,¹⁰ and the note to mount:
For our approach shall so much dare the field,
That England shall couch down in fear, and yield.

Enter GRANDPRE.

Grand. Why do you stay so long, my lords of France?

Yon island carrions,¹¹ desperate of their bones,
Ill-favour'dly become the morning field:
Their ragged curtains¹² poorly are let loose,
And our air shakes them passing scornfully.
Big Mars seems bankrupt in their beggar'd host,
And faintly through a rusty beaver peeps.

8 'About our squares of battle.' Thus in Antony and Cleopatra:—

—no practice had

In the brave squares of battle.

9 'A hilding foe' is a paltry, cowardly, base foe. Thus in All's Well that Ends Well, the French lords call Bertram 'a hilding.'

10 'The tucket sonance,' &c. He uses the terms of the field as if they were going out only to chase for sport. To dare the field is a phrase in falconry. Birds are dared when by the falcon in the air they are terrified from rising so as to be taken by hand. Such an easy capture the lords expected to make of the English. The tucket-sonance was a flourish on the trumpet as a signal to prepare to march. The phrase is derived from the Italian locata, a prelude or flourish, and suonanza, a sound, a resounding. Thus in the Devil's Law Case, 1623, two tuckets by two several trumpets.

11 'Yon island carrions.' The description of the English is founded on Holinshed's melancholy account, speaking of the march from Harfleur to Agincourt:—'The Englishmen were brought into great misery in this journey; their victual was in a manner all spent, and now could they get none.—rest none could they take, for their enemies were ever at hand to give them allarmes: daily it rained, and nightly it froze; of fewel there was great scarcity, but of fluxes great plenty; money they had enough, but wares to bestow it upon for their reliefe or comforte, had they little or none.'

12 Their ragged curtains are their colours.

Their horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,¹
 With torch-staves in their hand: and their poor jades
 Lob down their heads, dropping the hides and hips;
 The gum down-roping from their pale-dead eyes;
 And in their pale dull mouths the gimmel² bit
 Lies foul with chew'd grass, still and motionless;
 And their executors, the knavish crows,
 Fly o'er them all, impatient for their hour.
 Description cannot suit itself in words,
 'To demonstrate the life of such a battle.'
 In life so lifeless as it shows itself.

Con. They have said their prayers, and they stay for death.

Dau. Shall we go send them dinners, and fresh suits,
 And give their fasting horses provender,
 And after fight with them?

Con. I stay but for my guard;³ On, to the field:
 I will the banner from a trumpet take,
 And use it for my haste. Come, come, away!
 The sun is high, and we outwear the day. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The English Camp. Enter the English Host; GLOSTER, BEDFORD, EXETER, SALISBURY, and WESTMORELAND.

Glo. Where is the king?

Bed. The king himself is rode to view their battle.

West. Of fighting men they have full threescore thousand.

Exe. There's five to one; besides, they all are fresh.

Sal. God's arm strike with us! 'tis a fearful odds.
 —God be with you, princes all; I'll to my charge;
 If we no more meet, till we meet in heaven,
 Then, joyfully,—my noble lord of Bedford,—
 My dear lord Gloster,—and my good lord Exeter,
 And my kind kinsman,⁴—warriors all, adieu!

Bed. Farewell, good Salisbury; and good luck go with thee!

Exe. Farewell, kind lord; fight valiantly to-day:
 And yet I do thee wrong, to mind thee of it,
 For thou art fram'd of the firm truth of valour.

[Exit SALISBURY.]

Bed. He is as full of valour, as of kindness;
 Princely in both.

West. O that we now had here

Enter KING HENRY.

But one ten thousand of those men in England,
 That do no work to-day!

K. Hen. What's he, that wishes so?
 My cousin Westmoreland?⁵—No, my fair cousin:
 If we are mark'd to die, we are enough
 To do our country loss; and if to live,
 The fewer men, the greater share of honour.
 God's will! I pray thee, wish not one man more.
 By Jove, I am not covetous for gold;
 Nor care I, who doth feed upon my cost;

1 Ancient candlesticks were often in the form of human figures, holding the socket for the lights, in their extended hands.

2 The gimmel bit was probably a bit in which two parts or links were united, as in the gimmel ring, so called because they were double linked, from gemellus, Lat.

3 'I stay but for my guard.' Dr. Johnson and Mr. Steevens were of opinion that guard here means rather something of ornament, than an attendant or attendants.

4 'And my kind kinsman.' This is addressed to Westmoreland by the speaker, who was Thomas Montacute, earl of Salisbury: he was not in point of fact related to Westmoreland, there was only a kind of connection by marriage between their families.

5 In the quarto this speech is addressed to Warwick. The incongruity of praying like a Christian and swearing like a heathen, which Johnson objects against, arose from the necessary conformation to the statute 3 James I. c. xxi. against introducing the sacred name on the stage. The players omitted it where they could, and where the metre would not allow of the omission they substituted some other word in its place.

6 To yearn is to grieve or vex.

7 'The feast of Crispian.' The battle of Agincourt was fought upon the 25th of October, 1415.

It yearns⁶ me not, if men my garments wear;
 Such outward things dwell not in my desires:
 But, if it be a sin to covet honour,
 I am the most offending soul alive.

No, 'faith, my coz, wish not a man from England:
 God's peace! I would not lose so great an honour,
 As one man more; methinks, would share from me,
 For the best hope I have. O, do not wish one more.
 Rather proclaim it, Westmoreland, through my host,
 That he, which hath no stomach to this fight,
 Let him depart; his passport shall be made,
 And crowns for convoy put into his purse:

We would not die in that man's company
 That fears his fellowship to die with us.

This day is call'd—the feast of Crispian:⁷
 He, that outlives this day, and comes safe home,
 Will stand a tip-toe when this day is nam'd,
 And rouse him at the name of Crispian.

He, that shall live this day, and see old age,
 Will yearly on the vigil feast his friends,
 And say—to morrow is Saint Crispian:

Then will he strip his sleeve, and show his scars,
 And say, these wounds I had on Crispin's day.
 Old men forget; yet all shall be forgot,
 But he'll remember, with advantages,⁸

What feats he did that day; Then shall our names,
 Familiar in their mouths as household words—
 Harry the King, Bedford and Exeter,
 Warwick and Talbot, Salisbury and Gloster,

Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd:
 This story shall the good man teach his son;
 And Crispin Crispian shall ne'er go by,
 From this day to the ending of the world,⁹
 But we in it shall be remembered:

We few, we happy few, we band of brothers;
 For he, to-day that sheds his blood with me,
 Shall be my brother; be he ne'er so vile
 This day shall gentle his condition:¹⁰
 And gentlemen in England, now a bed, Shall think themselves accurs'd, they were not
 here:

And hold their manhoods cheap, while any speaks,
 That fought with us upon Saint Crispian's day.

Enter SALISBURY.

Sal. My sovereign lord, bestow yourself with speed;
 The French are bravely¹¹ in their battles set,
 And will with all expedience¹² charge on us.

K. Hen. All things are ready, if our minds be so.
West. Perish the man, whose mind is backward
 now!

K. Hen. Thou dost not wish more help from England, cousin?

West. God's will, my liege, 'would you and I alone,

Without more help, might fight this battle out!

K. Hen. Why, now thou hast unwish'd five thousand men;¹³

8 'With advantages.' Old men, notwithstanding the natural forgetfulness of old age, shall remember their feats of this day, and remember to tell them with advantage. Age is commonly boastful, and inclined to magnify past acts and past times.

9 'From this day to the ending,' &c. Johnson has a note on this passage, which concludes by saying that 'the civil wars have left in the nation scarcely any tradition of more ancient history.'

10 I. e. shall advance him to the rank of a gentleman. King Henry V. inhibited any person but such as had a right by inheritance or grant, from bearing coats of arms, except those who fought with him at the battle of Agincourt; and these last were allowed the chief seats at all feasts and public meetings.

11 I. e. in a braving manner. 'To go bravely is to look aloft; and to go gaily, desiring to have the pre-eminence: Speciose ingredit; faire le brave.'

12 I. e. expedition.

13 '—thou hast unwish'd five thousand men.' By wishing only thyself and me, thou hast wish'd five thousand men away. The poet, inattentive to numbers, puts five thousand, but in the last scene the French are said to be full three score thousand, which Exeter declares to be five to one; the numbers of the English are variously stated; Holinshed makes them fifteen thousand, others but nine thousand.

BATTLE OF AGINCOURT.

Which likes me better, than to wish us one.—
You know your places: God be with you all!

Tucket. Enter MONTJOY.

Mont. Once more I come to know of thee, King Harry,
If for thy ransom thou wilt now compound,
Before thy most assured overthrow:
For, certainly, thou art so near the gulf,
Thou needs must be englutted. Besides, in mercy,
The Constable desires thee—thou wilt mind!
Thy followers of repentance; that their souls
May make a peaceful and a sweet retire
From off these fields, where (wretches) their poor bodies

Must lie and fester.

K. Hen. Who hath sent thee now?
Mont. The Constable of France.

K. Hen. I pray thee, bear my former answer
back;

Bid them achieve me, and then sell my bones.
Good God! why should they mock poor fellows
thus?

The man, that once did sell the lion's skin
While the beast liv'd, was kill'd with hunting him.
A many of our bodies shall, no doubt,
Find native graves; upon the which, I trust,
Shall witness live in brass² of this day's work:
And those that leave their valiant bones in France,
Dying like men, though buried in your dunghills,
They shall be fam'd; for there the sun shall greet
them,

And draw their honours reeking up to heaven;
Leaving their earthly parts to choke your clime,
The smell whereof shall breed a plague in France.
Mark then abounding valour in our English;³
That, being dead, like to the bullet's grazing,
Break out into a second course of mischief,
Killing in relapse of mortality.

Let me speak proudly;—Tell the Constable,
We are but warriors for the working-day:
Our gayness, and our gilt,⁴ are all besmirch'd
With rainy marching in the painful field;
There's not a piece of feather in our host,
(Good argument, I hope, we shall not fly,)
And time hath worn us into slovenry:
But, by the mass, our hearts are in the trim:
And my poor soldiers tell me—yet ere night
They'll be in fresher robes; or they will pluck
The gay new coats o'er the French soldiers' heads,
And turn them out of service. If they do this (As, if God please, they shall,) my ransom then Will soon be levied. Herald, save thou thy labour;
Come thou no more for ransom, gentle herald;
They shall have none, I swear, but these my joints;

1 i. e. remind.

2 i. e. In brazen plates, anciently let into tombstones.

3 'Mark then abounding valour in our English;
That being dead, like to the bullet's grazing,
Break out into a second course of mischief,
Killing in relapse of mortality.'

Theobald, with over busy zeal for emendation, changed abounding into a bounding, and found the allusion exceedingly beautiful, comparing the revival of the English valour to the rebounding of a cannon ball. There is, as usual, an idle controversy between Malone and Steevens, the one preferring the old reading; and the other, from a spirit of opposition to his rival, which ever guided him, supporting Theobald's alteration.

4 i. e. golden show, superficial gilding.

5 'The Duke of York.' This Edward duke of York has already appeared in King Richard II. under the title of duke of Aumerte. He was the son of Edmond Langley, the duke of York of the same play, who was the fifth son of King Edward III. Richard, earl of Cambridge, who appears in the second act of this play, was younger brother to this Edward duke of York.

6 The vaward is the vanguard.

7 'Callino, castore me!' The jargon of the old copies where these words are printed Qualitie calmie casture me—was changed by former editors into 'Quality, call you me? construe me.' Malone found Calen o casture me, mentioned as the burthen of a song in 'A Handful of Pleasant Delities,' 1584. And Mr.

Which if they have, as I will leave 'em to them,
Shall yield them little, tell the Constable.

Mont. I shall, King Harry. And so fare thee
well:

Thou never shalt hear herald any more. [Exit.

K. Hen. I fear, thou'lt once more come again for ransom.

*Enter the Duke of York.*⁵

York. My lord, most humbly on my knee I beg
The leading of the vaward.⁶

K. Hen. Take it, brave York.—Now, soldiers, march away:—

And how thou pleasest, God, dispose the day!

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV. The Field of Battle. Alarums: Excursions. Enter French Soldier, Pistol, and Boy.

Pist. Yield, cur.

Fr. Sol. Je pense, que vous estes le gentilhomme de bonne qualite.

Pist. Quality? Callino, castore me!⁷ art thou a gentleman? What is thy name? discuss.

Fr. Sol. O seigneur Dieu!

Pist. O, signieur Dew should be a gentleman:—
Perpend my words, O signieur Dew, and mark;—
O signieur Dew, thou diest on point of fox,⁸ Except, O signieur, thou do give to me
Egregious ransom.

Fr. Sol. O, prenez misericorde! ayez pitie de moy!
Pist. Moy shall not serve, I will have forty moys;
For I will fetch thy rim⁹ out at throat,
In drops of crimson blood.

Fr. Sol. Est-il impossible d'eschapper la force de ton bras?

Pist. Brass, cur!

Thou damned and luxurious mountain goat,

Offer'st me brass?

Fr. Sol. O pardonnez moy!

Pist. Say'st thou me so? is that a ton of moys?¹⁰

Come hither, boy; Ask me this slave, in French,
What is his name.

Boy. Ecoutez; Comment estes-vous appelle?

Fr. Sol. Monsieur le Fer.

Boy. He says, his name is—master Fer.

Pist. Master Fer! I'll fer him, and fir¹¹ him, and ferret him:—discuss the same in French unto him.

Boy. I do not know the French for fer, and fer ret, and fir.

Pist. Bid him prepare, for I will cut his throat.

Fr. Sol. Que dit-il, monsieur?

Boy. Il me commande de vous dire que vous faites

Boswell discovered that it was an old Irish song, which is printed in Playford's Musical Companion, 1667 or 1673:—

'Callino, Callino, Callino, castore me,
Eva ee, eva ee, loo, loo, loo lee.'

The words are said to mean 'Little girl of my heart for ever and ever.' 'They have, it is true (says Mr. Boswell,) no great connection with the poor Frenchman's supplications, nor were they meant to have any; Pistol, instead of attending to him, contemptuously hums a tune.'

8 '—thou diest on point of fox.' Fox is an old cant word for a sword. Generally old fox; it was applied to the old English broadsword.

9 'For I will fetch thy rim out at thy throat.' Pistol is not very scrupulous in the nicety of his language, he uses rim (ryhme) for the intestines generally. It is not very clear what our ancestors meant by it; Bishop Wilkins defines it 'the membrane of the belly;' Florio makes it the omentum, 'a fat pannicle, caule, sewet, rim, or kell, wherein the bowels are lapt.' Holmes, in his Acad. of Armory, calls the peritonaeum 'the paunch or rim of the belly.' Which is defined by others to be the 'inner rine of the belly.' It was not therefore the diaphragm or midriff, as Steevens supposed.

10 Pistol's moy is probably a vulgar corruption of moydore (itself a corruption of moeda d'oro), at least we have no better solution to offer. The moydore was current in England for about 27s

11 To fir is to beat or scourge; fouetter, to yerk and to jerk are words of the same import.

vous prest; car ce soldat icy est disposé tout à cette heure de couper vostre gorge.

Pist. Ouy, couper gorge, par ma foy, pesant, Unless thou give me crowns, brave crowns; Or mangled shalt thou be by this my sword.

Fr. Sol. O, je vous supplie pour l'amour de Dieu, me pardonner ! Je suis gentilhomme de bonne maison : gardez ma vie, et je vous donneray deux cents escus.

Pist. What are his words ?

Boy. He prays you to save his life : he is a gentleman of a good house ; and, for his ransom, he will give you two hundred crowns.

Pist. Tell him—my fury shall abate, and I The crowns will take.

Fr. Sol. Petit monsieur, que dit-il ?

Boy. Encore qu'il est contre son jurement, de pardonner aucun prisonnier ; neantmoins, pour les escus que vous l'avez promis, il est content de vous donner la liberté, le franchisement.

Fr. Sol. Sur mes genoux, je vous donne mille remerciemens : et je m'estime heureux que je suis tombé entre les mains d'un chevalier, je pense, le plus brave, vaillant, et très distingué seigneur d'Angleterre.

Pist. Expound unto me, boy.

Boy. He gives you, upon his knees, a thousand thanks : and he esteems himself happy that he hath fallen into the hands of (as he thinks) the most brave, valorous, and thrice worthy signieur of England.

Pist. As I suck blood, I will some mercy show.— Follow me, cur. [Exit PISTOL.]

Boy. Suivez-vous le grand capitaine.

[Exit French Soldier.]

I did never know so full a voice issue from so empty a heart : but the saying is true,—The empty vessel makes the greatest sound. Bardolph, and Nym, had ten times more valour than this roaring devil ! The old play, that every one may pare his nails with a wooden dagger ;¹ and they are both hanged ; and so would this be, if he durst steal any thing adventurously. I must stay with the lackeys, with the luggage of our camp : the French might have a good prey of us, if he knew of it ; for there is none to guard it but boys. [Exit.]

SCENE V. Another Part of the Field of Battle.

Alarums. Enter Dauphin, ORLEANS, BOURBON, Constable, RAMBURES, and others.

Con. O diable !

Orl. O seigneur !—Le jour est perdu, tout est perdu !

Dau. Mort de ma vie ! all is confounded, all !

Reproach and everlasting shame

Sits mocking in our plumes.—O meschante fortune !— Do not run away. [A short Alarum.]

Con. Why, all our ranks are broke.

Dau. O perdurable shame !—let's stab ourselves.

Be these the wretches that we play'd at dice for ?

Orl. Is this the king we sent to for his ransom ?

Bour. Shame, and eternal shame, nothing but shame !

Let us die in fight :² Once more back again ;

And he that will not follow Bourbon now,

Let him go hence, and with his cap in hand,

Like a base pander, hold the chamber-door,

Whilst by a slave, no gentler than my dog,³

His fairest daughter is contaminate.

Con. Disorder, that hath spoild us, friend us now !

Let us, in heaps, go offer up our lives

Unto these English, or else die with fame.⁴

1 '—this roaring devil !' the old play, that every one may pare his nails with a wooden dagger.' See note on Twelfth Night, Act iv. Sc. 2. In the old play of The Taming of a Shrew, one of the players says, 'My lord, we must have a little vinegar to make our devil roar.' Ho ! ho ! and Ah ! ha ! seem to have been the exclamations constantly given to the devil, who is, in the old mysteries, as turbulent and vainglorious as Pistol. The Vice or fool, among other indignities, used to threaten to pare his nails with his dagger of lath ; the devil being supposed from choice to keep his claws long and sharp. 2 The old copy wants the word fight, which was supplied by Malone. Theobald proposed 'let us die instant,' which Stevens adopted.

Orl. We are enough, yet living in the field, To smother up the English in our throngs, If any order might be thought upon.

Bour. The devil take order now ! I'll to the throng ; Let life be short ; else, shame will be too long.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. Another Part of the Field. Alarums. Enter KING HENRY and Forces ; EXETER, and others.

K. Hen. Well have we done, thrice-valiant countrymen :

But all's not done, yet keep the French the field.

Exe. The duke of York commends him to your majesty.

K. Hen. Lives he, good uncle ? thrice, within this hour,

I saw him down ; thrice up again, and fighting ; From helmet to the spur, all blood he was.

Exe. In which array (brave soldier) doth he lie, Larding the plain : and by his bloody side, (Yoke-fellow to his honour-owing wounds) The noble earl of Suffolk also lies.

Suffolk first died, and York, all haggled over, Comes to him, where in gore he lay insteep'd,

And takes him by the beard ; kisses the gashes,

That bloodily did yawn upon his face ;

And cries aloud,—Tarry, dear cousin Suffolk !

My soul shall thine keep company to heaven :

Tarry, sweet soul, for mine, then fly abreast ;

As, in this glorious and well-foughten field,

We kept together in our chivalry !

Upon these words I came, and cheer'd him up :

He smil'd me in the face, caught me his hand,

And, with a feeble gripe, says,—Dear my lord,

Commend my service to my sovereign.

So did he turn, and over Suffolk's neck

He threw his wounded arm, and kiss'd his lips :

And so, espous'd to death, with blood he seal'd

A testament of noble-ending love.

The pretty and sweet manner of it forc'd

Those waters from me, which I would have stopp'd :

But I had not so much of man in me,

But⁵ all my mother came into mine eyes,

And gave me up to tears.

K. Hen. I blame you not ;

For, hearing this, I must perforce compound

With mistful eyes, or they will issue too.—

[Alarum.]

But, hark ! what new alarum is this same ?—

The French have reinforc'd their scatter'd men :

Then every soldier kill his prisoners ;

Give the word through. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII. Another Part of the Field. Alarums. Enter FLEELLEN and GOWER.

Flu. Kill the boys and the luggage ! 'tis expressly against the law of arms : 'tis as arrant a piece of knavery, mark you now, as can be offered in the world : In your conscience now, is it not ?

Gow. 'Tis certain, there's not a boy left alive ; and the cowardly rascals, that ran from the battle, have done this slaughter : besides, they have burned and carried away all that was in the king's tent ; wherefore the king, most worthily, hath caused every soldier to cut his prisoner's throat.⁶ O, 'tis a gallant king !

Flu. Ay, he was porn at Monmouth, captain Gower : What call you the town's name, where Alexander the pig was born ?

3 I. e. who has no more gentility.

4 This line is from the quartos. 5 I. e. reached.

6 'But all my mother came into my eyes,

And gave me up to tears.'

Thus the quarto. The folio reads 'And all,' &c. But has here the force of but that.

7 'Caused every soldier to cut his prisoner's throat. The king killed his prisoners (says Johnson) because he expected another battle, and he had not sufficient men to guard one army and fight another. Gower's reason is, as we see, different. Shakespeare followed Holinshed, who gives both reasons for Henry's conduct, but has chosen to make the king mention one of them and Gower the other.

Gow. Alexander the great.

Flu. Why, I pray you, is not pig, great? The pig, or the great, or the mighty, or the huge, or the magnanimous, are all one reckonings, save the phrase is a little variations.

Gow. I think, Alexander the great was born in Macedon; his father was called—Philip of Macedon, as I take it.

Flu. I think, it is in Macedon, where Alexander is born. I tell you, captain,—If you look in the maps of the world, I warrant, you shall find, in the comparisons between Macedon and Monmouth, that the situations, look you, is both alike. There is a river in Macedon; and there is also moreover a river at Monmouth: it is called Wye, at Monmouth: but it is out of my prains, what is the name of the other river; but 'tis all one, 'tis so like as my fingers is to my fingers, and there is salmons in both. If you mark Alexander's life well, Harry of Monmouth's life is come after it indifferent well; for there is figures in all things. Alexander (God knows, and you know,) in his rages, and his furies, and his wraths, and his cholers, and his moods, and his displeasures, and his indignations, and also heing a little intoxicates in his prains, did, in his ales and his angers, look you, kill his pest friend, Clytus.

Gow. Our king is not like him in that; he never killed any of his friends.

Flu. It is not well done, mark you now, to take tales out of my mouth, ere it is made an end and finished. I speak but in the figures and comparisons of it: As Alexander¹ is kill his friend Clytus, being in his ales and his cups; so also Harry Monmouth, being in his right wits and his good judgments, is turn away the fat knight with the great pelly-doublet: he was full of jests, and gipes, and knaveries, and mocks; I am forgot his name.²

Gow. Sir John Falstaff.

Flu. That is he: I can tell you, there is good men porn at Monmouth.

Gow. Here comes his majesty.

Alarum. Enter KING HENRY, with a Part of the English Forces; WARWICK,³ GLOSTER, EXETER, and others.

K. Hen. I was not angry since I came to France Until this instant.—Take a trumpet, herald; Ride thou unto the horsemen on yon hill; If they will fight with us, bid them come down, Or void the field; they do offend our sight: If they'll do neither, we will come to them; And make them skirr⁴ away, as swift as stones Enforced from the old Assyrian slings:

1 'As Alexander,' &c. Steevens thinks that Shakspeare here ridicules the parallels of Plutarch: he appears to have been well read in Sir Thomas North's Translation.

2 Johnson observes, that this is the last time Falstaff can make sport. The poet was loath to part with him, and has continued his memory as long as he could.

3 Richard Beauchamp, earl of Warwick. He did not, however, obtain that title till 1417, two years after the era of this play.

4 i. e. scour away. To run swiftly in various directions. It has the same meaning in Macbeth, Act. v. Sc. iii. 'Skirr the country round.'

5 'Besides, we'll cut the throats of those we have.' Johnson accuses the poet of having made the king cut the throats of his prisoners twice over. Malone replies that the incongruity, if it be one, is Holinshed's, for thus the matter is stated by him: 'While the battle was yet going on, about six hundred horsemen, who were the first that fled, hearing that the English tents were a good way distant from the army, without a sufficient guard, entered and pillaged the king's camp. "When the outcry of the lackies and boys which ran away for fear of the Frenchmen, thus spoiling the camp, came to the king's ears, he doubting lest his enemies should gather together again and begin a new field, and mistrusting further that the prisoners would either be an aide to his enemies, or very enemies to their takers indeed, if they were suffered to live, contrary to his accustomed gentleness, commanded by sound of trumpet that every man upon pain of death should incontinently slay his prisoner.' This was the first transaction. Holinshed proceeds, 'When this lamentable slaughter

Besides, we'll cut the throats of those we have; And not a man of them, that we shall take, Shall taste our mercy:—Go, and tell them so.

Enter MONTJOY.

Exc. Here comes the herald of the French, my liege.

Glo. His eyes are humbler than they us'd to be.
K. Hen. How now, what means this, herald? know'st thou not,

That I have fin'd these bones of mine for ransom? Com'st thou again for ransom?

Mont. No, great king!

I come to thee for charitable licence,
That we may wander o'er this bloody field,
To book our dead, and then to bury them;
To sort our nobles from our common men;
For many of our princes (woe the while!)
Lie drown'd and soak'd in mercenary blood
(So do our vulgar drench their peasant limbs
In blood of princes;) and their wounded steeds
Fret fetlock deep in gore, and, with wild rage,
Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters,
Killing them twice. O, give us leave, great king,
To view the field in safety, and dispose
Of their dead bodies.

K. Hen. I tell thee truly, herald,
I know not, if the day be ours, or no;
For yet a many of your horsemen peer,
And gallop o'er the field.

Mont. The day is yours.

K. Hen. Praised be God, and not our strength, for it!—

What is this castle call'd, that stands hard by?

Mont. They call it—Aguincourt.

K. Hen. Then call we this—the field of Agincourt,

Fought on the day of Crispin Crispianus.

Flu. Your grandfather of famous memory, an't please your majesty, and your great-uncle Edward the plack prince of Wales, as I have read in the chronicles, fought a most prave pattle here in France.

K. Hen. They did, Fluellen.

Flu. Your majesty says very true: If your majesties is remember'd of it, the Welshmen did goot service in a garden where leeks did grow, wearing leeks in their Monmouth caps; which, your majesty knows, to this hour is an honourable padge of the service; and, I do believe, your majesty takes no scorn to wear the leek upon Saint Tavy's day.

K. Hen. I wear it for a memorable honour:
For I am Welsh, you know, good countryman.

Flu. All the water in Wye cannot wash your was ended, the Englishmen disposed themselves in order of battayle, ready to abide a new field, and also to invade and newly set on their enemies.—Some write, that the king perceiving his enemies in one part to assemble together, as though they meant to give a new battle for preservation of the prisoners, sent to them a herald, commanding them either to depart out of his sight, or else to come forward at once and give battaille; promising herewith, that, if they did offer to fight agayne, not only those prisoners which his people already had taken, but also so many of them as in this new conflicte, which they thus attempted, should fall into his hands, should die the death without redemption.' The fact is, that notwithstanding the first order concerning the prisoners, they were not all put to death, as appears from a subsequent passage, and the concurrent testimony of various historians, upon whose authority Hume says that Henry, on discovering that his danger was not so great as he at first apprehended from the attack on his camp, 'stopped the slaughter, and was still able to save a great number.' It was policy in Henry to intimidate the French by threatening to kill his prisoners, and occasioned them, in fact, to lay down their arms.

6 Monmouth, according to Fuller, was celebrated for its caps, which were particularly worn by soldiers. The best caps were formerly made at Monmouth, where the capper's chapel still remains. He adds, 'If at this day the phrase of wearing a Monmouth cap be taken in a bad acceptioun, I hope the inhabitants of that town will endeavour to disprove the occasion.' Worthies of England, 1660, p. 50.

majesty's Welsh plood out of your pody, I can tell you that: Got pless it and preserve it, as long as it pleases his grace, and his majesty too!

K. Hen. Thanks, good my countryman.

Flu. By Chesu, I am your majesty's countryman, I care not who know it; I will confess it to all the world: I need not to be ashamed of your majesty, praised be Got, so long as your majesty is an honest man.

K. Hen. God keep me so!—Our heralds go with him;

Bring me just notice of the numbers dead
On both our parts.—Call yonder fellow hither.

[Points to WILLIAMS. Exit MONTJOY and others.]

Ere. Soldier, you must come to the king.

K. Hen. Soldier, why wear'st thou that glove in thy cap?

Will. An't please your majesty, 'tis the gage of one that I should fight withal, if he be alive.

K. Hen. An Englishman?

Will. An't please your majesty, a rascal, that swagger'd with me last night: who, if 'a live, and ever dare to challenge this glove, I have sworn to take him a box o' the ear: or, if I can see my glove in his cap (which he swore, as he was a soldier, he would wear, if alive,) I will strike it out soundly.

K. Hen. What think you, captain Fluellen? is it fit this soldier keep his oath?

Flu. He is a craven¹ and a villain else, an't please your majesty, in my conscience.

K. Hen. It may be his enemy is a gentleman of great sort, quite from the answer of his degree.²

Flu. Though he be as good a gentleman as the devil is, as Lucifer and Belzebub himself, it is necessary, look your grace, that he keep his vow and his oath: if he be perjured, see you now, his reputation is as arrant a villain, and a Jack-sauce,³ as ever his plack shoe trod upon Got's ground and his earth, in my conscience, la.

K. Hen. Then keep thy vow, sirrah, when thou meet'st the fellow.

Will. So I will, my liege, as I live.

K. Hen. Who servest thou under?

Will. Under captain Gower, my liege.

Flu. Gower is a good captain; and is good knowledge and literature in the wars.

K. Hen. Call him hither to me, soldier.

Will. I will, my liege.

[Exit.]

K. Hen. Here, Fluellen: wear thou this favour for me, and stick it in thy cap: When Alençon and myself were down together,⁴ I plucked this glove from his helm: if any man challenge this, he is a friend to Alençon and an enemy to our person; if thou encounter any such, apprehend him, an thou dost love me.

Flu. Your grace does me as great honours, as can be desired in the hearts of his subjects: I would fain see the man, that has but two legs, that shall find himself aggrieved at this glove, that is all; but I would fain see it once; an please Got of his grace, that I might see it.

K. Hen. Knowest thou Gower?

Flu. He is my dear friend, an please you.

K. Hen. Pray thee, go seek him, and bring him to my tent.

Flu. I will fetch him.

[Exit.]

K. Hen. My lord of Warwick,—and my brother Gloster,

Follow Fluellen closely at the heels:
The glove, which I have given him for a favour,
May, haply, purchase him a box o' the ear;

² 'Of great sort, quite from the answer of his degree.' Great sort is high rank. A man of such rank is not bound to answer to the challenge from one of the soldier's low degree.

³ Jack-sauce for saucy Jack.

⁴ Henry was felled to the ground by the duke of Alençon, but recovered and slew two of the duke's attendants. Alençon was afterwards killed by the king's

It is the soldier's; I, by bargain, should wear it myself. Follow, good cousin, Warwick: If that soldier strike him (as, I judge By his blunt bearing, he will keep his word,) Some sudden mischief may arise of it; For I do know Fluellen valiant, And, touch'd with choler, hot as gunpowder, And quickly will return an injury: Follow, and see there be no harm between them.—Go you with me, uncle of Exeter. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VIII. Before King Henry's Pavilion.
Enter GOWER and WILLIAMS.

Will. I warrant it is to knight you, captain.

Enter FLUELLEN.

Flu. Got's will and his pleasure, captain, I beseech you now, come apace to the king: there is more good toward you, peradventure, than is in your knowledge to dream of.

Will. Sir, know you this glove?

Flu. Know the glove? I know, the glove is a glove.

Will. I know this; and thus I challenge it.

[Strikes him.]

Flu. 'Sblud, an arrant traitor, as any's in the universal world, or in France, or in England.

Gow. How now, sir? you villain!

Will. Do you think I'll be forsworn?

Flu. Stand away, captain Gower; I will give treason his payment into plows,⁵ I warrant you.

Will. I am no traitor.

Flu. That's a lie in thy throat.—I charge you in his majesty's name, apprehend him; he's a friend of the duke Alençon's.

Enter WARWICK and GLOSTER.

War. How now, how now! what's the matter?

Flu. My lord of Warwick, here is (praised be Got for it!) a most contagious treason come to light, look you, as you shall desire in a summer's day. Here is his majesty.

Enter KING HENRY and EXETER.

K. Hen. How now! what's the matter?

Flu. My liege, here is a villain, and a traitor, that, look your grace, has struck the glove which your majesty is take out of the helmet of Alençon.

Will. My liege, this was my glove; here is the fellow of it: and he, that I gave it to in change, promised to wear it in his cap; I promised to strike him, if he did: I met this man with my glove in his cap, and I have been as good as my word.

Flu. Your majesty hear now (saving your majesty's manhood,) what an arrant, rascally, beggarly, lowsy knave it is: I hope, your majesty is pear me testimony, and witness, and avouchments, that this is the glove of Alençon, that your majesty is give me, in your conscience now.

K. Hen. Give me thy glove,⁶ soldier; look, here is the fellow of it. 'Twas I, indeed, thou promised'st to strike; and thou hast given me most bitter terms.

Flu. An please your majesty let his neck answer for it, if there is any martial law in the world.

K. Hen. How canst thou make me satisfaction?

Will. All offences, my liege, come from the heart: never came any from mine, that might offend your majesty.

K. Hen. It was ourself thou didst abuse.

Will. Your majesty came not like yourself: you appeared to me but as a common man; witness the night, your garments, your lowliness; and what your highness suffered under that shape, I beseech you, take it for your own fault, and not guard, contrary to Henry's intention, who wished to have saved him.

⁵ 'Into plows.' It has been suggested that we should read 'in plows,' but it was not intended that Fluellen should speak very correctly, and into for in is still used in Scotland.

⁶ I. e. the glove that thou hast now in thy cap; it was the king's glove, which he had given to Williams mine; for had you been as I took you for, I made no offence; therefore, I beseech your highness, pardon me.

K. Hen. Here, uncle Exeter, fill this glove with crowns,

And give it to this fellow.—Keep it, fellow;
And wear it for an honour in thy cap,
Till I do challenge it.—Give him the crowns:—
And, captain, you must needs be friends with him.

Flu. By this day and this light, the fellow has mettle enough in his pelly;—Hold, there is twelve pence for you, and I pray you to serve God, and keep you out of prawls, and prabbles, and quarrels, and dissensions, and, I warrant you, it is the petter for you.

Will. I will none of your money.

Flu. It is with a goot will; I can tell you, it will serve you to mend your shoes: Come, wherefore should you be so pashful? your shoes is not so goot: 'tis a goot silling, I warrant you, or I will change it.

Enter an English Herald.

K. Hen. Now, Herald: are the dead numbered?

Her. Here is the number of the slaughter'd French. [Delivers a Paper.]

K. Hen. What prisoners of good sort are taken, uncle?

Exe. Charles duke of Orleans, nephew to the king;

John duke of Bourbon, and Lord Bouciquault:
Of other lords, and barons, knights, and squires,
Full fifteen hundred, besides common men.

K. Hen. This note doth tell me of ten thousand French,

That in the field lie slain: of princes, in this number,
And nobles bearing banners, there lie dead

One hundred twenty-six: added to these,
Of knights, esquires, and gallant gentlemen,

Eight thousand and four hundred; of the which,
Five hundred were but yesterday dubb'd knights:¹

So that, in these ten thousand they have lost,
There are but sixteen hundred mercenaries;

The rest are—princes, barons, lords, knights,
squires,

And gentlemen of blood and quality.
The names of those their nobles that lie dead,—

Charles De-la-bret, high constable of France;
Jaques of Chatillon, admiral of France;

The master of the cross-bows, lord Rambures;
Great-master of France, the brave Sir Guischart

Dauphin;
John duke of Alençon; Antony duke of Brabant,

The brother to the duke of Burgundy;
And Edward duke of Bar: of lusty carls,

Grandpre, and Roussi, Fauconberg, and Foix,
Beaumont, and Marle, Vaudemont, and Lestrale.

Here was a royal fellowship of death!—
Where is the number of our English dead?

[Herald presents another Paper.]

Edward the duke of York, the earl of Suffolk,
Sir Richard Ketley, York Gam, esquire:²

² 'Davy Gam, esquire.' This gentleman being sent out by Henry, before the battle, to reconnoitre the enemy, and to find out their strength, made this report:—'May it please you, my liege, there are enough to be killed, enough to be taken prisoners, and enough to run away.' He saved the king's life in the field. Had the poet been apprized of this circumstance, the brave Welshman would probably have been more particularly noticed, and not have been merely a name in a muster roll.—See Drayton's Battle of Agincourt, 1637, p. 50 and 54; and Dunster's Edition of Phillips's Cyder, a poem, p. 74.

³ 'Do we all holy rites.' 'The king, when he saw no appearance of enemies, caused the retreat to be blown; and, gathering his army together, gave thanks to Almighty God for so happy a victorie, causing his prelates and chapeleins to sing this psalme.—In exitu Israel de Egypto; and commanding every man to kuese down on the grounde at this verse—Non nobis,

None else of name; and, of all other men,
But five and twenty. O God, thy arm was here,
And not to us, but to thy arm alone
Ascribe we all.—When, without stratagem,
But in plain shock, and even play of battle,
Was ever known so great and little loss,
On one part and on the other?—Take it, God,
For it is only thine!

Exe. 'Tis wonderful!

K. Hen. Come, go we in procession to the village:

And be it death proclaimed through our host,
To boast of this, or take that praise from God
Which is his only.

Flu. Is it not lawful, an please your majesty, to tell how many is killed?

K. Hen. Yes, captain; but with this acknowledgment,
That God fought for us.

Flu. Yes, my conscience, he did us great goot.

K. Hen. Do we all holy rites;³

Let there be sung Non nobis, and Te Deum.

The dead with charity enclos'd in clay,

We'll then to Calais; and to England then;

Where ne'er from France arriv'd more happy men.
[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

Enter CHORUS.

Cho. Vouchsafe to those that have not read the story,

That I may prompt them: and of such as have,
I humbly pray them to admit the excuse

Of time, of numbers, and due course of things,
Which cannot in their huge and proper life

Be here presented. Now we bear the king Toward Calais: grant him there; there seen,⁴

Heave him away upon your winged thoughts,
Athwart the sea: Behold, the English beach

Pales in the flood with men, with wives, and boys, Whose shouts and claps outvoice the deep-mouth'd sea,

Which, like a mighty whiffler⁵ 'fore the king,

Seems to prepare his way: so let him land;
And, solemnly, see him set on to London.

So swift a pace hath thought, that even now
You may imagine him upon Blackheath:

Where that his lords desire him, to have borne
His bruised helmet, and his bended sword,

Before him, through the city: he forbids it,
Being free from vainness and self-glorious pride;

Giving full trophy, signal, and ostent,
Quite from himself, to God.⁶ But now behold,

In the quick forge and workinghouse of thought,
How London doth pour out her citizens!

The mayor, and all his brethren, in best sort,—
Like to the senators of the antique Rome,

With the plebeians swarming at their heels,—
Go forth, and fetch their conquering Cæsar in:

As, by a lower, but by loving likelihood,⁷
Were now the general of our gracious empress⁸

Domine, non nobis sed nomini tuo da gloriam; which done, he caused Te Deum and certain anthems to be sung, giving laud and praise to God, and not boasting of his own force or any humane power.—Holinshed.

⁴ 'Toward Calais: grant him there; there seen awhile.' Steevens proposes, in order to complete the metre, that we should read—

'Toward Calais: grant him there; there seen awhile.'

⁵ 'Which, like a mighty whiffler 'fore the king, Seems to prepare his way.'

Whifflers were persons going before a great personage or procession, furnished with staves or wands to clear the way. The junior liverymen of the city companies, who walk first in processions, are still called whifflers, from the circumstance of their going before.

⁶ 'I. e. transferring all the honours of conquest from himself to God.'

⁷ I. e. similitude.

⁸ I. e. the earl of Essex. Shakspeare grounded his anticipation of such a reception for Essex on his return from Ireland, upon what had already occurred at his setting forth, when he was accompanied by an immense

(As, in good time, he may,) from Ireland coming,
Bringing rebellion broached¹ on his sword,
How many would the peaceful city quit,
To welcome him? much more, and much more cause.

Did they this Harry. Now in London place him;
(As yet the lamentation of the French
Invites the king of England's stay at home :)
The emperor's coming² in behalf of France,
To order peace between them, we omit,
And all the occurrences, whatever chanc'd,
Till Harry's back-return again to France;
There must we bring him; and myself have play'd
The interim, by remembering you—'tis past.
Then brook abridgement; and your eyes advance
After your thoughts, straight back again to France.
[Exit.]

SCENE I. France. An English Court of Guard.
Enter FLUELLEN and GOWER.

Gow. Nay, that's right; but why wear you your leek to-day? Saint Davy's day is past.

Flu. There is occasions and causes why and wherefore in all things: I will tell you, as my friend, Captain Gower; The rascally, scald, beg-garly, lowsy, praggling knave, Pistol,—which you and yourself, and all the 'orld, know to be no petter than a fellow, look you now, of no merits,—he is come to me, and prings me pread and salt yesterday, look you, and bid me eat my leek: it was in a place where I could not breed no contentions with him; but I will be so sold as to wear it in my cap till I see him once again, and then I will tell him a little piece of my desires.

Enter PISTOL.

Gow. Why, here he comes, swelling like a turkey-cock.

Flu. 'Tis no matter for his swellings, nor his turkey-cocks.—Got pless you, ancient Pistol! you scurvy, lowsy knave, Got pless you!

Pist. Ha! art thou Bedlam? dost thou thirst, base Trojan,

To have me fold up Parca's fatal web?³
Hence! I am qualmish at the smell of leek.

Flu. I pseech you heartily, scurvy lowsy knave, at my desires, and my requests, and my petitions, to eat, look you, this leek; because, look you, you do not love it, nor your affections, and your appetites, and your digestions, does not agree with it, I would desire you to eat it.

Pist. Not for Cadwallader, and all his goats.

Flu. There is one goat for you. [Strikes him.]
Will you be so good, scald knave, as eat it?

Pist. Base Trojan, thou shalt die.

Flu. You say very true, scald knave, when Got's will is: I will desire you to live in the mean time, and eat your vituals; come, there is sauce for it.
[Strikes him again.] You called me yesterday mountain-squire; but I will make you to-day a squire of low degree. I pray you, fall to; if you can mock a leek, you can eat a leek.

Gow. Enough, captain; you have astonish'd⁴ him.

concourse of all ranks, showering blessings upon his head. The continuator of Stowe's Chronicle gives us a long account of it. But how unfortunately different his return was from what the poet predicted, may be seen in the Sydney Papers, vol. ii. p. 127.

1 Broached is spitted, transfixed.

2 'The emperor's coming.' The Emperor Sigismund, who was married to Henry's second cousin. This passage stands in the following embarrassed and obscure manner in the folio:—

—Now in London place him.

As yet the lamentation of the French

Invites the king of England's stay at home :

The emperor's coming in behalf of France,

To order peace between them : and omit

All the occurrences; &c.

The liberty I have taken is to transpose the word and,
and substitute see in its place.

3 'To have me fold up Parca's fatal web?' 'Dost thou desire to have me put thee to death?'

Flu. I say, I will make him eat some part of my leek, or I will peat his pate four days:—Pite, I pray you; it is goot for your green wound, and your ploddy coxcomb.

Pist. Must I bite?

Flu. Yes, certainly; and out of doubt, and out of questions too, and ambiguities.

Pist. By this leek, I will most horribly revenge;
I eat, and eke I swear.

Flu. Eat, I pray you: Will you have some more sauce to your leek? there is not enough leek to swear by.

Pist. Quiet thy cudgel; thou dost see, I eat.

Flu. Much goot do you, scald knave, heartily.
Nay, 'pray you, throw none away; the skin is goot for your proken coxcomb. When you take occasions to see leeks hereafter, I pray you, mock at them! that is all.

Pist. Good.

Flu. Ay, leeks is goot:—Hold you, there is a groat to heal your pate.

Pist. Me a groat?

Flu. Yes, verily, and in truth, you shall take it;
or I have another leek in my pocket, which you shall eat.

Pist. I take thy groat, in earnest of revenge.

Flu. If I owe you any thing, I will pay you in cudgels; you shall be a woodmonger, and buy nothing of me but cudgels. God be wi' you, and keep you, and heal your pate. [Exit.]

Pist. All hell shall stir for this.

Gow. Go, go; you are a counterfeit cowardly knave. Will you mock at an ancient tradition,— begun upon an honourable respect, and worn as a memorable trophy of predeceased valour,—and dare not avouch in your deeds any of your words?
I have seen you gleeking⁶ and galling at this gentleman twice or thrice. You thought, because he could not speak English in the native garb, he could not therefore handle an English cudgel: you find it otherwise; and, henceforth, let a Welsh correction teach you a good English condition.
Fare you well. [Exit.]

Pist. Doth fortune play the huswife⁸ with me
now?

News have I, that my Nell is dead i' the spital
Of malady of France;

And there my rendezvous is quite cut off.

Old I do wax; and from my weary limbs

Honour is cudgel'd. Well, bawd will I turn,

And something lean to cut-purse of quick hand,

To England will I steal, and there I'll steal:

And patches will I get unto these scars,

And swear, I got them in the Gallia wars. [Exit.]

SCENE II. Troyes in Champagne. An Apartment in the French King's Palace. Enter, at one Door, KING HENRY, BEDFORD, GLOSTER, Ex-ETER, WARWICK, WESTMORELAND, and other
Lords; at another the French King, QUEEN ISA-BEL, the PRINCESS KATHARINE, Lords, Ladies,
&c. the DUKE of BURGUNDY, and his Train.

K. Hen. Peace to this meeting, wherefore we are met!¹⁰

4 Stunned.

5 'I eat, and eke I swear.' The folio has 'eat I swear.'

6 Gleeking is scoffing, sneering.

7 i. e. disposition.

8 Huswife, for jilt, or hussy, as we have it still in vulgar speech.

9 [Exit.] 'The comic scenes of these plays are now at an end, and all the comic personages are now dismissed. Falstaff and Mrs. Quickly are dead; Nym and Bardolph are hanged; Gadshill was lost immediately after the robbery; Poinc and Peto have vanished since, one knows not how; and Pistol is now beaten into obscurity. I believe every reader regrets their departsure.'—Johnson.

10 'Peace to this meeting, wherefore we are met?'
Peace, for which we are here met, be to this meeting.
Here, Johnson thought, that the chorus should have been prefixed, and the fifth act begin,

Unto our brother France,—and to our sister,
Health and fair time of day :—joy and good wishes
To our most fair and princely cousin Katharine ;
And (as a branch and member of this royalty,
By whom this great assembly is contriv'd,)
We do salute you, Duke of Burgundy :—
And, princes French, and peers, health to you all !
Fr. King. Right joyous are we to behold your face,

Most worthy brother England ; fairly met :—
So are you, princes English, every one.

Q. Isa. So happy be the issue, brother England,
Of this good day, and of this gracious meeting,
As we are now glad to behold your eyes ;
Your eyes, which hitherto have borne in them
Against the French, that met them in their bent,
The fatal balls of murdering basilisks :¹
The venom of such looks, we fairly hope,
Have lost their quality ; and that this day
Shall change all griefs, and quarrels, into love.

K. Hen. To cry amen to that, thus we appear.

Q. Isa. You English princes all, I do salute you.
Bur. My duty to you both, on equal love,
Great kings of France and England ! That I have labour'd

With all my wits, my pains, and strong endeavours,
To bring your most imperial majesties
Unto this bar² and royal interview,
Your mightiness on both parts best can witness.
Since then my office hath so far prevail'd,
That, face to face, and royal eye to eye,
You have congregated ; let it not disgrace me,
If I demand, before this royal view,
What rub, or what impediment, there is,
Why that the naked, poor, and mangled peace,
Dear nurse of arts, pieties, and joyful births,
Should not, in this best garden of the world,
Our fertile France, put up her lovely visage ?
Alas ! she hath from France too long been chas'd ;
And all her husbandry doth lie on heaps,
Corrupting in its own fertility.

Her vine, the merry cheerer of the heart,
Unpruned dies : her hedges even-pleached,—
Like prisoners wildly overgrown with hair,
Put forth disorder'd twigs : her fallow leas
The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory,
Doth root upon ; while that the coulter rusts,
That should deracinate³ such savagery :
The even mead, that erst brought sweetly forth
The freckled crowslip, burnet, and green clover,
Wanting the scythe, all uncorrected, rank,
Conceives by idleness ; and nothing teems,
But hateful docks, rough thistles, kecksies, burs,
Losing both beauty and utility.

And as our vineyards, fallows, meads, and hedges,
Defective in their natures,⁴ grow to wildness ;
Even so our houses, and ourselves, and children,
Have lost, or do not learn, for want of time,
The sciences that should become our country ;
But grow, like savages,—as soldiers will,
That nothing do but meditate on blood,—
To swearing and stern looks, diffus'd⁵ attire,
And every thing that seems unnatural,
Which to reduce into our former favour,⁶
You are assembled : and my speech entreats,
That I may know the let, why gentle peace

Should not expel these inconveniences,
And bless us with her former qualities.

K. Hen. If, duke of Burgundy, you would the peace,

Whose want gives growth to the imperfections
Which you have cited, you must buy that peace
With full accord to all our just demands ;
Whose tenours and particular effects
You have, enschedul'd briefly, in your hands.

Bur. The king hath heard them ; to the which,
as yet,

There is no answer made.

K. Hen. Well then, the peace,
Which you before so urg'd, lies in his answer.

Fr. King. I have but with a cursory eye
O'erglanc'd the articles : pleaseth your grace
To appoint some of your council presently
To sit with us once more, with better heed
To survey them, we will, suddenly,
Pass our accept, and peremptory answer.⁷

K. Hen. Brother, we shall.—Go, uncle Exeter,—
And brother Clarence,—and you, brother Gloster,
Warwick,—and Huntingdon,⁸—go with the king :
And take with you free power, to ratify,
Augment, or alter, as your wisdoms best
Shall see advantageous to our dignity,
Any thing in, or out of, our demands ;
And we'll consign thereto.—Will you, fair sister,
Go with the princes, or stay here with us ?

Q. Isa. Our gracious brother, I will go with them ;
Haply, a woman's voice may do some good,
When articles, too nicely urg'd, be stood on.

K. Hen. Yet leave our cousin Katharine here with us ;
She is our capital demand, compris'd
Within the fore-rank of our articles.

Q. Isa. She hath good leave.

[Exeunt all but HENRY, KATHARINE, and her Gentlewoman.]

K. Hen. Fair Katharine, and most fair !
Will you vouchsafe to teach a soldier terms,
Such as will enter at a lady's ear,
And plead his lovesuit to her gentle heart ?

Kath. Your majesty shall mock at me ; I cannot speak your English.

K. Hen. O fair Katharine, if you will love me soundly with your French heart, I will be glad to hear you confess it brokenly with your English tongue. Do you like me, Kate ?

Kath. Pardonnez moy, I cannot tell vat is—like
me.

K. Hen. An angel is like you, Kate ; and you are like an angel.

Kath. Que dit il ? que je suis semblable à les anges.
Alice. Ouy, vrayment, (sauf vostre grace,) ainsi dit il.

K. Hen. I said so, dear Katharine ; and I must not blush to affirm it.

Kath. O bon Dieu ! les langues des hommes sont pleines de tromperies.

K. Hen. What says she, fair one ? that the tongues of men are full of deceits ?

Alice. Ouy ; dat de tongues of de mans is be full of deceits : dat is de princess.

K. Hen. The princess is the better Englishwoto wildness ; but they were defective in their proper and favourable nature, which was to bring forth food for man.¹

⁵ 'Diffused attire.' I have observed, in a note on The Merry Wives of Windsor, Act iv. Sc. 4, that diffuse was used for obscure, confused. I find, from Florio's Dictionary, that diffused, or defused, were used for con- fused. Diffused attire is therefore disordered or dish- celled attire.

⁶ Favour here means comeliness of appearance. We still say well or ill favoured for well or ill looking.

⁷ 'Pass our accept, and peremptory answer.' To pass here signifies 'to finish, end, or agree upon the acceptance which we shall give them, and return our peremptory answer.'

⁸ 'Huntingdon.' John Holland, earl of Huntingdon, who afterwards married the widow of Edmund Mort-mer, earl of March. Neither Huntingdon nor Clarence are in the list of Dramatis Personæ, as neither of them speak a word.

¹ The basilisk was a serpent which, it was anciently supposed, could destroy the object of his vengeance by merely looking at it.

² 'This bar ;' that is, this barrier, this place of congress. The Chronicles represent a former interview in a field near Melun, with a barre or barrier of separation between the pavilions of the French and English ; but the treaty was then broken off. It was now renewed at Troyes, but the scene of conference was St. Peter's church in that town, a place inconvenient for Shakspere's action ; his editors have therefore laid it in a palace.

³ To deracinate is to force up by the roots.

⁴ 'Defective in their natures.' It has been proposed to read nurtures, i. e. culture, as I think, very plausibly. But Stevens concurs in Upton's opinion, that change is unnecessary. 'Sua deficiunt natura : They were not defective in their erective nature, for they grew man. P'faith, Kate, my wooing is fit for thy understanding: I am glad, thou canst speak no better English; for if thou could'st, thou would'st find me such a plain king, that thou would'st think, I had sold my farm to buy my crown.¹ I know no ways to mince it in love, but directly to say—I love you: then, if you urge me further than to say—Do you in faith? I wear out my suit. Give me your answer; i'faith, do; and so clap hands and a bargain: How say you, lady?

Kath. Sauf vostre honneur, me understand well.

K. Hen. Marry, if you would put me to verses, or to dance for your sake, Kate, why you undid me: for the one, I have neither words nor measure; and for the other, I have no strength in measure,² yet a reasonable measure in strength. If I could win a lady at leap-frog, or by vaulting into my saddle with my armour on my back, under the correction of bragging be it spoken, I should quickly leap into a wife. Or, if I might buffet for my love, or bound my horse for her favours, I could lay on like a butcher, and sit like a jack-an-apes, never off: but, before God, I cannot look greenly,³ nor gasp out my eloquence, nor I have no cunning in protestation; only downright oaths, which I never use till urged, nor never break for urging. If thou canst love a fellow of this temper, Kate, whose face is not worth sun-burning, that never looks in his glass for love of any thing he sees there, let thine eye be thy cook. I speak to thee plain soldier: If thou canst love me for this, take me: if not, to say to thee—that I shall die, is true: but—for thy love, by the Lord, no; yet I love thee too. And while thou livest, dear Kate, take a fellow of plain and uncoined⁴ constancy; for he perforce must do thee right, because he hath not the gift to woo in other places: for these fellows of infinite tongue, that can rhyme themselves into ladies' favours,—they do always reason themselves out again. What! a speaker is but a prater; a rhyme is but a ballad. A good leg will fall;⁵ a straight back will stoop; a black beard will turn white; a curled pate will grow bald; fair face will wither; a full eye will wax hollow: but a good heart, Kate, is the sun and moon; or, rather, the sun, and not the moon; for it shines bright, and never changes, but keeps his course truly. If thou would have such a one, take me: And take me, take a soldier; take a soldier, take a king: And what sayest thou then to my love? speak, my fair, and fairly, I pray thee.

Kath. Is it possible that I should love the enemy of France?

K. Hen. No; it is not possible you should love the enemy of France, Kate: but, in loving me, you should love the friend of France; for I love France so well, that I will not part with a village of it; I will have it all mine: and, Kate, when France is mine, and I am yours, then yours is France, and you are mine.

Kath. I cannot tell what is dat.

K. Hen. No, Kate? I will tell thee in French; which, I am sure, will hang upon my tongue like a new-married wife about her husband's neck, hardly to be shook off. Quand j'ay la possession de France, et quand vous avez le possession de moi (let me see, what then? Saint Dennis be my speed!)—donec vostre est France, et vous estes mienne. It is as easy for me, Kate, to conquer the kingdom, as to speak so much more French: I shall never move thee in French, unless it be to laugh at me.

Kath. Sauf vostre honneur, le François que vous parlez est meilleur que l'Anglois lequel je parle.

K. Hen. No, 'faith, is't not, Kate: but thy speaking of my tongue, and I thine, most truly falsely, must needs be granted to me much at one. But, Kate, dost thou understand thus much English? Canst thou love me?

Kath. I cannot tell.

K. Hen. Can any of your neighbours tell, Kate? I'll ask them. Come, I know, thou lovest me: and at night when you come into your closet, you'll question this gentlewoman about me; and I know, Kate, you will, to her, dispraise those parts in me, that you love with your heart; but, good Kate, mock me mercifully; the rather, gentle princess, because I love thee cruelly. If ever thou be'st mine, Kate, (as I have a saving faith within me, tells me,—thou shalt,) I get thee with scrambling, and thou must therefore needs prove a good soldier-breeder: Shall not thou and I, between Saint Dennis and Saint George, compound a boy, half French half English, that shall go to Constantinople, and take the Turk by the beard?⁶ shall we not? what savest thou, my fair flower-de-luce?

Kath. I do not know dat.

K. Hen. No; 'tis hereafter to know, but now to promise: do but now promise, Kate, you will endeavour for your French part of such a boy; and, for my English moiety, take the word of a king and a bachelor. How answer you, la plus belle Katharine du monde, mon très cher et divine déesse?

Kath. Your majesté 'ave fausse French enough to deceive the most sage damoiselle dat is en France.

K. Hen. Now, fy upon my false French! By mine honour, in true English, I love thee, Kate: by which honour I dare not swear, thou lovest me; yet my blood begins to flatter me that thou dost, notwithstanding the poor and untempering effect of my visage.⁷ Now beshrew my father's ambition! he was thinking of civil wars when he got me; therefore was I created with a stubborn outside, with an aspect of iron, that, when I come to woo ladies, I fright them. But, in faith, Kate, the elder I wax, the better I shall appear: my comfort is, that old age, that ill layer-up of beauty, can do no more spoil upon my face; thou hast me, if thou hast me, at the worst; and thou shalt wear me, if thou wear me, better and better; And therefore tell me, most fair Katharine, will you have me? Put off your maiden blushes; avouch the thoughts of your heart with the looks of an empress; take me by the hand, and say,—Harry of England, I am thine: which word thou shalt no sooner bless mine ear withal, but I will tell thee aloud—England is thine, Ireland is thine, France is thine, and Henry Plantagenet is thine; who, though I speak it before his face, if he be not fellow with the best king, thou shalt find the best king of good fellows. Come, your answer in broken music; for thy voice is music, and thy English broken: therefore, queen of all, Katharine, break thy mind to me in broken English,—Wilt thou have me?

Kath. Dat is, as it shall please de roy mon pere.

1 'That thou would'st think I had sold my farm to buy my crown.' Johnson thinks this blunt honest kind of English wooing is inconsistent with the previous character of the king, and quotes the Dauphin's opinion of him, 'that he was fitter for a ball-room than the field.' This opinion however was erroneous. Shakspeare only meant to characterise English downright sincerity; and surely the previous habits of Henry, as represented in former scenes, do not make us expect great refinement or polish in him upon this occasion, especially as fine speeches would be lost upon the princess from her imperfect comprehension of his language.

2 l. e. in dancing.

3 l. e. like a young lover, awkwardly.

4 'A fellow of plain and uncoined constancy.' This passage has been sadly misunderstood. The prince evidently means to say, 'Take a fellow of blunt unadorned courage or purpose, because he hath not the gift to woo in other places like these fellows of infinite tongue.' Constancy is most frequently used for courage, or resolution, by Shakspeare.

5 l. e. shrink, fall away.

6 'Take the Turk by the beard.' This is one of the poet's anachronisms. The Turks had not possession of Constantinople until the year 1453; when Henry had been dead thirty-one years.

7 'The poor and untempering effect of my visage.' Untempering is unsoftening, unmitigating. I am surprised that Stevens should not have objected to this word as he did to seasoning. It is of the same formation. 'To temper or mitigate sorrow with mirth. Condire per translationem, ut condire tristitiam hilaritate. Cicero.'—Baret.

K. Hen. Nay, it will please him well, Kate; it shall please him, Kato.

Kath. Den it shall also content me.

K. Hen. Upon that I will kiss your hand, and I call you—my queen.

Kath. Laissez, mon seigneur, laissez, laissez : ma foy, je ne veux point que vous abaissiez vostre grandeur, en baisant la main d'une vostre indigne serviteuse ; excusez moy, je vous supplie, mon très puissant seigneur.

K. Hen. Then I will kiss your lips, Kate.

Kath. Les dames, et damoiselles, pour estre baisées devant leur nopces, il n'est pas le coûtume de France.

K. Hen. Madam, my interpreter, what says she?

Alice. Dat it is not de fashion pour les ladies of France,—I cannot tell what is, baiser, en English.

K. Hen. To kiss.

Alice. Your majesty entendre better que may.

K. Hen. It is not the fashion for the maids in France to kiss before they are married, would she say?

Alice. Ouy, vrayment.

K. Hen. O Kate, nice customs curt'sy to great kings. Dear Kate, you and I cannot be confined within the weak list¹ of a country's fashion: we are the makers of manners, Kate; and the liberty that follows our places, stops the mouths of all find-faults; as I will do yours, for upholding the nice fashion of your country, in denying me a kiss: therefore, patiently, and yielding. [Kissing her.] You have witchcraft in your lips, Kate; there is more eloquence in a sugar touch of them, than in the tongues of the French council; and they should sooner persuade Harry of England, than a general petition of monarchs. Here comes your father.

Enter the French King and Queen, BURGUNDY, BEDFORD, GLOSTER, EXETER, WESTMORELAND, and other French and English Lords.

Bur. God save your majesty! my royal cousin, teach you our princess English?

K. Hen. I would have her learn, my fair cousin, how perfectly I love her; and that is good English.

Bur. Is she not apt?

K. Hen. Our tongue is rough, coz; and my condition is not smooth: so that, having neither the voice nor the heart of flattery about me, I cannot so conjure up the spirit of love in her, that he will appear in his true likeness.

Bur. Pardon the frankness of my mirth, if I answer you for that. If you would conjure in her, you must make a circle: if conjure up love in her in his true likeness, he must appear naked, and blind; Can you blame her then, being a maid yet rosed over with the virgin crimson of modesty, if she deny the appearance of a naked blind boy in her naked seeing self? It were, my lord, a hard condition for a maid to consign to.

K. Hen. Yet they do wink, and yield; as love is blind, and enforces.

Bur. They are then excused, my lord, when they see not what they do.

K. Hen. Then, good my lord, teach your cousin to consent to winking.

Bur. I will wink on her to consent, my lord, if you will teach her to know my meaning: for maids, well summered and warm kept, are like flies at Bartholomew-tide, blind, though they have their eyes; and then they will endure handling, which before would not abide looking on.

K. Hen. This moral² ties me over to time, and a hot summer; and so I will catch the fly, your cousin, in the latter end, and she must be blind too.

² A moral is the meaning or application of a fable.

³ 'Yes, my lord, you see them perspectively, the cities turned into a maid.' See note on Twelfth Night, Act v Sc. 1.

⁴ Præclarissimus for Præclarissimus. Shakespeare followed Holinshed⁵, in whose Chronicle it stands thus. Indeed all the old historians have the same blunder. In

Bur. As love is, my lord, before it loves.

K. Hen. It is so: and you may, some of you, thank love for my blindness; who cannot see many a fair French city, for one fair French maid that stands in my way.

Fr. King. Yes, my lord, you see them perspectively, the cities turned into a maid;³ for they are all girdled with maiden walls, that war hath never entered.

K. Hen. Shall Kate be my wife?

Fr. King. So please you.

K. Hen. I am content; so the maiden cities you talk of, may wait on her: so the maid, that stood in the way of my wish, shall show me the way to my will.

Fr. King. We have consented to all terms of reason.

K. Hen. Is't so, my lords of England?

West. The king hath granted every article:

His daughter, first; and then, in sequel, all, According to their firm proposed natures.

Exe. Only, he hath not yet subscribed this:—Where your majesty demands,—That the king of France, having any occasion to write for matter of grant, shall name your highness in this form, and with this addition, in French,—Notre très cher filz Henry roy d'Angleterre, héritier de France; and thus in Latin,—Præclarissimus⁴ filius noster Henricus rex Anglie, et hæres Francie.

Fr. King. Nor this I have not, brother, so denied,

But your request shall make me let it pass.

K. Hen. I pray you then, in love and dear alliance,

Let that one article rank with the rest:

And, thereupon, give me your daughter.

Fr. King. Take her, fair son; and from her blood raise up

Issue to me: that the contending kingdoms Of France and England, whose very shores look pale

With envy of each other's happiness, May cease their hatred: in this dear conjunction

Plant neighbourhood and christianlike accord In their sweet bosoms, that never war advance His bleeding sword 'twixt England and fair France All. Amen!

K. Hen. Now welcome, Kate:—and bear me witness all,

That here I kiss her as my sovereign queen.

[Flourish.]

Q. Isa. God, the best maker of all marriages, Combine your hearts in one, your realms in one! As man and wife, being two, are one in love, So be there 'twixt your kingdoms such a spousal, That never may ill office, or fell jealousy, Which troubles oft the bed of blessed marriage, Thrust in between the paction of these kingdoms,

To make divorce of their incorporate league; That English may as French, French Englishmen Receive each other!—God speak this Amen!

All. Amen!

K. Hen. Prepare we for our marriage:—on which day,

My lord of Burgundy, we'll take your oath, And all the peers', for surety of our leagues.—Then shall I swear to Kate, and you to me; And may our oaths well kept and prosperous be!

[Exeunt.]

Enter CHORUS.

Thus far, with rough, and all unable pen,
Our bending⁵ author hath pursued the story;

the original treaty of Troyes, printed in Rymer, it is præclarissimus.

⁵ 'Our bending author.' That is, unequal to the weight of his subject, and bending beneath it. Thus Milton, in his Apology for Smectymnus, speaking of Bishop Hall:—'In a strain as pitiful—manifested a presumptuous undertaking with weak and unassumed shoulders.'

In little room confining mighty men,
 Mangling by starts the full course of their glory.¹
 Small time, but, in that small, most greatly liv'd
 This star of England: fortune made his sword;
 By which the world's best garden² he achiev'd,
 And of it left his son imperial lord.
 Henry the Sixth, in infant bands crown'd king
 Of France and England, did this king succeed;
 Whose state so many had the managing,
 That they lost France, and made his England
 bleed:
 Which oft our stage hath shown; and, for their sake,
 In your fair minds let this acceptance take. [Exit.]

 That is, by touching only on select parts.

THIS play has many scenes of high dignity, and many of easy merriment. The character of the king is well supported, except in his courtship, where he has neither the vivacity of Hal, nor the grandeur of Henry. The humour of Pistol is very happily continued: his character has perhaps been the model of all the bullies that have yet appeared on the English stage.

The lines given to the Chorus have many admirers; but the truth is, that in them a little may be praised, and much must be forgiven; nor can it be easily discovered why the intelligence given by the Chorus is more necessary in this play than in many others where it is omitted. The great defect of this play is the emptiness and narrowness of the last act, which a very little diligence might have easily avoided. JOHNSON.

² I. e. France. A similar distinction is bestowed on Lombardy in The Taming of The Shrew —

'The pleasant garden of great Italy!'

FIRST PART OF KING HENRY THE SIXTH.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

THE historical transactions in this play take in the compass of above thirty years. In the three parts of King Henry VI. there is no very precise attention to the date and disposition of facts; they are shuffled backwards and forwards out of time. For instance, the Lord Talbot is killed at the end of the fourth act of this play, who in reality did not fall till the 13th of July, 1453: and the Second Part of King Henry VI. opens with the marriage of the king, which was solemnized eight years before Talbot's death, in the year 1445. Again, in the second part, dame Eleanor Cobham is introduced to insult Queen Margaret: though her penance and banishment for sorcery happened three years before that princess came over to England. There are other transgressions against history, as far as the order of time is concerned.

Mr. Malone has written a dissertation to prove that the First Part of King Henry VI. was not written by Shakespeare: and that the Second and Third Parts were only altered by him from the old play, entitled 'The Contention of the Two famous Houses of Yorke and Lancaster,' printed in two parts, in quarto, in 1594 and 1595. The substance of his argument, as far as regards this play, is as follows:—

1. The diction, versification, and allusions in it, are all different from the diction, versification, and allusions of Shakespeare, and corresponding with those of Greene, Peele, Lodge, Marlowe, and others who preceded him: there are more allusions to mythology, to classical authors, and to ancient and modern history, than are found in any one piece of Shakespeare's written on an English story: they are such as do not naturally rise out of the subject, but seem to be inserted merely to show the writer's learning. These allusions, and many particular expressions, seem more likely to have been used by the authors already named than by Shakespeare.—He points out many of the allusions, and instances the words proditor and immanity, which are not to be found in any of the poet's undisputed works.—The versification he thinks clearly of a different colour from that of Shakespeare's genuine dramas: while at the same time it resembles that of many of the plays produced before his time. The sense concludes or pauses almost uniformly at the end of every line; and the verse has scarcely ever a redundant syllable. He produces numerous instances from the works of Lodge, Peele, Greene, and others, of similar versification.

A passage in a pamphlet written by Thomas Nashe, an intimate friend of Greene, Peele, Marlowe, &c. shows that the First Part of King Henry VI. had been on the stage before 1592; and his favourable mention of the piece may induce a belief that it was written by a friend of his. 'How would it have joyed brave Talbot, the terror of the French, to thinke that, after he had lyen two hundred yeare in his tombe, he should triumph again on the stage; and have his bones new embalmed with the teares of ten thousand spectators at least (at several times,) who in the tragedian that represents his person behold him fresh bleeding.'—Pierce Penniless, his Supplication to the Devil, 1592.

That this passage related to the old play of King Henry VI. or, as it is now called, the First Part of King Henry VI. can hardly be doubted. Talbot appears in the First Part, and not in the Second or Third Part, and is expressly spoken of in the play, as well as in Hall's Chronicle, as 'the terror of the French.' Holinshed, who was Shakespeare's guide, omits the passage in Hall, in which Talbot is thus described; and this is an additional proof that this play was not the production of our great poet.

There are other internal proofs of this:—

1. The author does not seem to have known precisely how old Henry VI. was at the time of his father's death. He supposed him to have passed the state of infancy before he lost his father, and even to have remembered some of his sayings. In the Fourth Act, Sc. 4, speaking of the famous Talbot, he says:—

When I was young (as yet I am not old,)

I do remember how my father said,

A stouter champion never handled sword.

But Shakespeare knew that Henry VI. could not possibly remember any thing of his father:—

'No sooner was I crept out of my cradle,
But I was made a king at nine months old.'

King Henry VI. Part II. Act iv. Sc. 9

'When I was crown'd I was but nine months old.'

King Henry VI. Part III. Act i. Sc. 1

The first of these passages is among the additions made by Shakespeare to the old play, according to Mr. Malone's hypothesis. The other passage does occur in the True Tragedie of Richard Duke of York; and therefore it is natural to conclude that neither Shakespeare nor the author of that piece could have written the First Part of King Henry VI.

2. In Act ii. Sc. 5. of this play, it is said that the earl of Cambridge raised an army against his sovereign. But Shakespeare, in his play of King Henry V. has represented the matter truly as it was: the earl being in that piece, Act ii., condemned at Southampton for conspiring to assassinate Henry.

3. The author of this play knew the true pronunciation of the word Hecate, as it is used by the Roman writers:—

'I speak not to that railing Hecate.'

But Shakespeare, in Macbeth, always uses Hecate as a dissyllable.

The second speech in this play ascertains the author to have been very familiar with Hall's Chronicle:—

'What should I say? his deeds exceed all speech.'

This phrase is introduced upon almost every occasion by Hall when he means to be eloquent. Holinshed, not Hall, was Shakespeare's historian. Here then is an additional minute proof that this play was not Shakespeare's.

This is the sum of Malone's argument, which Steevens has but feebly combated in notes appended to it; and I am disposed to think more out of a spirit of opposition than from any other cause. Malone conjectured that this piece which we now call the First Part of King Henry VI. was, when first performed, called The Play of King Henry VI.; and he afterwards found his conjecture confirmed by an entry in the accounts of Henslowe, the proprietor of the Rose Theatre on the Bank Side. It must have been very popular, having been played no less than thirteen times in one season: the first entry of its performance by the Lord Strange's company, at the Rose, is dated March 3, 1591. It is worthy of remark that Shakespeare does not appear at any time to have had the smallest connexion with that theatre, or the companies playing there; which affords additional argument in favour of Malone's position, that the play could not be his. 'By whom it was written (says Malone,) it is now, I fear, difficult to ascertain. It was not entered on the Stationers' books, nor printed till the year 1623; when it was reiterated with Shakespeare's undisputed plays by the editors of the first folio, and improperly entitled the Third* Part of King Henry VI. In one sense it might be called so; for two plays on the subject of that reign had been printed before. But considering the history of that king, and the period of time which the piece comprehends, it ought to have been called, what in fact it is, The First Part of King Henry VI. At this distance of time it is impossible to ascertain on what principle it was that Heminge and Condell admitted it into their volume; but I suspect that they gave it a place as a necessary introduction to the two other parts; and because Shakespeare had made some slight alterations, and written a few lines in it.'

Mr. Malone's arguments have made many converts to his opinion; and perhaps Mr. Morgann, in his elegant Essay on the Dramatic Character of Falstaff, led the way, when he pronounced it 'That-drum-and-trumpet thing,—written doubtless, or rather exhibited long before Shakespeare was born, though afterwards repaired and furnished up by him with here and there a little sentiment and diction.'

* This applies only to the title in the Register of the Stationers' Company: in the first folio it was called the First Part of King Henry VI.

ACT I.

SCENE I. Westminster Abbey. Dead March.
Corps of King Henry the Fifth discovered, lying in state; attended on by the DUKES of BEDFORD, GLOSTER, and EXETER; the EARL of WARWICK, the BISHOP of WINCHESTER, Heralds, &c.

Bedford.

HUNG be the heavens with black,¹ yield day to night!

Comets, importing change of times and states,
Brandish your crystal² tresses in the sky,
And with them scourge the bad revolting stars,
That have consented³ unto Henry's death!
Henry the Fifth, too famous to live long!
England ne'er lost a king of so much worth.

Glo. England ne'er had a king, until his time.
Virtue he had, deserving to command:
His brandish'd sword did blind men with his beams;
His arms spread wider than a dragon's wings;
His sparkling eyes, replete with wrathful fire,
More dazzled and drove back his enemies,
Than midday sun force bent against their faces.
What should I say? his deeds exceed all speech:
He ne'er lift up his hand, but conquer'd.

Exe. We mourn in black; Why mourn we not in blood?

Henry is dead, and never shall revive;
Upon a wooden coffin we attend;
And death's dishonourable victory
We with our stately presence glorify,

Like captives bound to a triumphant car.
What? shall we curse the planets of mishap,
That plotted thus our glory's overthrow?
Or shall we think the subtle-witted French
Conjurers and sorcerers, that, afraid of him,
By magic verses⁴ have contriv'd his end?

Win. He was a king bless'd of the King of kings.
Unto the French the dreadful judgment day
So dreadful will not be, as was his sight.

The battles of the Lord of Hosts he fought:
The church's prayers made him so prosperous.

Glo. The church! where is it? Had not church men pray'd,

His thread of life had not so soon decay'd:
None do you like but an effeminate prince,
Whom, like a schoolboy, you may overawe.

Win. Gloster, whate'er we like, thou art protector;

And lookest to command the prince, and realm.
Thy wife is proud; she holdeth thee in awe,
More than God, or religious churchmen, may.

Glo. Name not religion, for thou lov'st the flesh;
And ne'er throughout the year to church thou go'st,
Except it be to pray against thy foes.

Bed. Cease, cease these jars, and rest your minds in peace!

Let's to the altar:—Heralds, wait on us:—
Instead of gold, we'll offer up our arms;
Since arms avail not, now that Henry's dead.—
Posterity, await for wretched years,
When at their mothers' moist eyes babes shall suck
Our isle be made a nourish⁵ of salt tears,
And none but women left to wail the dead.—

² Alluding to the ancient practice of hanging the stage with black when a tragedy was to be acted.

³ Crystal is an epithet repeatedly bestowed on comets by our ancient writers.

⁴ Consented here means conspired together to promote the death of Henry by their malignant influence on human events. Our ancestors had but one word to express consent, and consent, which meant accord and agreement, whether of persons or things.

⁵ There was a notion long prevalent that life might be taken away by metrical charms.

⁶ Nourish, was anciently epithet nourryce and nouryshe and, by Lydgate, even nourish.

Henry the Fifth! thy ghost I invoke;
Prosper this realm, keep it from civil broils!
Combat with adverse planets in the heavens!
A far more glorious star thy soul will make,
Than Julius Cæsar, or bright ——!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My honourable lords, health to you all!
Sad tidings bring I to you out of France,
Of loss, of slaughter, and discomfiture:
Guienne, Champagne, Rheims, Orleans,
Paris, Guysors, Poitiers, are all quite lost.²

Bed. What say'st thou, man, before dead Henry's corse?

Speak softly; or the loss of those great towns
Will make him burst his lead, and rise from death.

Glo. Is Paris lost? is Rouen yielded up?

If Henry were recall'd to life again,
These news would cause him once more yield the ghost.

Exe. How were they lost? what treachery was us'd?

Mess. No treachery; but want of men and money.
Among the soldiers this is mutter'd,—

That here you maintain several factions;
And, whilst a field should be despatch'd and fought,
You are disputing of your generals.

One would have ling'ring wars, with little cost;

Another would fly swift, but wanteth wings;

A third man thinks, without expense at all,

By guileful fair words peace may be obtain'd.

Awake, awake, English nobility!

Let not sloth dim your honours, new begot:

Cropp'd are the flower-de-luces in your arms;

Of England's coat one half is cut away.

Exe. Were our tears wanting to this funeral,

These tidings would call forth her flowing tides.³

Bed. Me they concern; regent I am of France:—

Give me my steeled coat, I'll fight for France.—

Away with these disgraceful wailing robes!

Wounds I will lend the French, instead of eyes,

To weep their intermissive miseries.⁴

Enter another Messenger.

2 Mess. Lords, view these letters, full of bad
mischance,

France is revolted from the English quite;

Except some petty towns of no import:

The Dauphin Charles is crowned king in Rheims;

The bastard of Orleans with him is join'd;

Reignier, duke of Anjou, doth take his part;

The duke of Alencon flieth to his side.

Exe. The Dauphin is crowned king! all fly to him!

O, whither shall we fly from this reproach?

Glo. We will not fly, but to our enemies' throats;

Bedford, if thou be slack, I'll fight it out.

Bed. Gloster, why doubt'st thou of my forwardness?

An army have I muster'd in my thoughts,
Wherewith already France is overrun.

Enter a third Messenger.

3 Mess. My gracious lords, to add to your laments,
Wherewith you now bedew King Henry's hearse,—

I must inform you of a dismal fight,

Between the stout Lord Talbot and the French.

Win. What! wherein Talbot overcame? is't so?

3 Mess. O, no; wherein Lord Talbot was o'er-thrown:

The circumstance I'll tell you more at large.

The tenth of August last, this dreadful lord,

Retiring from the siege of Orleans,
Having full scarce six thousand in his troop,
By three and twenty thousand of the French
Was round encompassed and set upon:
No leisure had he to enrank his men;
He wanted pikes to set before his archers;
Instead whereof, sharp stakes, pluck'd out of hedges,
They pitched in the ground confusedly,
To keep the horsemen off from breaking in.
More than three hours the fight continued;
Where valiant Talbot, above human thought,
Enacted wonders with his sword and lance.
Hundreds he sent to hell, and none durst stand him;
Here, there, and every where, enrag'd he slew:
The French exclaim'd, The devil was in arms;
All the whole army stood amaz'd on him:
His soldiers, spying his undaunted spirit,
A Talbot! a Talbot! cried out amain,
And rush'd into the bowels of the battle.
Here had the conquest fully been seal'd up,
If Sir John Fastolfe⁵ had not play'd the coward;
He being in the vaward (plac'd behind,
With purpose to relieve and follow them,)
Cowardly fled, not having struck one stroke.
Hence grew the general wreck and massacre;
Enclosed were they with their enemies:
A base Wallon, to win the Dauphin's grace,
Thrust Talbot with a spear into the back;
Whom all France, with their chief assembled strength,

Durst not presume to look once in the face.

Bed. Is Talbot slain? then I will slay myself,

For living idly here, in pomp and ease,

Whilst such a worthy leader, wanting aid,

Unto his dastard foeman is betray'd.

3 Mess. O no, he lives; but is took prisoner,

And Lord Scales with him, and Lord Hungerford

Most of the rest slaughter'd, or took, likewise.

Bed. His ransom there is none but I shall pay:

I'll hale the Dauphin headlong from his throne,

His crown shall be the ransom of my friend;

Four of their lords I'll change for one of ours.—

Farewell, my masters; to my task will I;

Bonfires in France forthwith I am to make,

And Lord Scales with him, and Lord Hungerford:

Ten thousand soldiers with me I will take,

Whose bloody deeds shall make all Europe quake.

3 Mess. So you had need; for Orleans is be-sieg'd;

The English army is grown weak and faint:

The earl of Salisbury craveth supply,

And hardly keeps his men from mutiny,

Since they, so few, watch such a multitude.

Exe. Remember, lords, your oaths to Henry sworn;

Either to quell the Dauphin utterly,

Or bring him in obedience to your yoke.

Bed. I do remember it; and here take leave,
To go about my preparation. [Exit.

Glo. I'll to the Tower, with all the haste I can,
To view the artillery and munition;

And then I will proclaim young Henry king. [Exit.

Exe. To Eltham will I, where the young king is,
Being ordain'd his special governor;

And for his safety there I'll best devise. [Exit.

Win. Each hath his place and function to attend:

I am left out: for me nothing remains.

But long I will not be Jack-out-of-office;

The king from Eltham I intend to steal,⁶

And sit at chiefest stern of public weal.

[Exit. Scene closes.

1 Pope conjectured that this blank had been supplied by the name of Francis Drake, which, though a glaring anachronism, might have been a popular, though not judicious, mode of attracting plaudits in the theatre. Part of the arms of Drake was two blazing stars.

2 Capel proposed to complete this defective verse by the insertion of Rouen among the places lost, as Gloster infers that it had been mentioned with the rest.

3 i. e. England's flowing tides.

4 i. e. their miseries which have only a short intermission.

5 For an account of this Sir John Fastolfe, vide Biographia Britannica, by Kippis, vol. v.; in which is his life, written by Mr. Gough.

6 The old copy reads send, the present reading was proposed by Mason, who observes that the king was not at this time in the power of the cardinal, but under the care of the duke of Exeter. The second article of accusation brought against the bishop by the duke of Gloucester is 'that he purposed and disposed him to set hand on the king's person, and to have removed him from Eltham to Windsor, to the intent to put him in governance as him list.' Holinshed vol. iii. p. 891.

SCENE II. France. Before Orleans. Enter CHARLES, with his Forces; ALENCON, REIGNIER, and others.

Char. Mars his true moving,¹ even as in the heavens,

So in the earth, to this day is not known:

Late did he shine upon the English side;

Now we are victors, upon us he smiles.

What towns of any moment, but we have?

At pleasure here we lie, near Orleans; Otherwhiles, the famish'd English, like pale ghosts, faintly besiege us one hour in a month.

Alen. They want their porridge, and their fat bull-beeves:

Either they must be dieted like mules, And have their provender tied to their mouths, Or piteous they will look, like drowned mice.

Reig. Let's raise the siege; Why live we idly here?

Talbot is taken, whom we wont to fear: Remaineth none but mad-brain'd Salisbury; And he may well in fretting spend his gall, Nor men, nor money, hath he to make war.

Char. Sound, sound alarm; we will rush on them. Now for the honour of the forlorn French:— Him I forgive my death, that killeth me, When he sees me go back one foot, or fly. [Exeunt.

Alarums: Excursions: afterwards a Retreat.

Re-enter CHARLES, ALENCON, REIGNIER, and others.

Char. Who ever saw the like? what men have I?— Dogs! cowards! dastards!—I would ne'er have fled, But that they left me 'midst my enemies.

Reig. Salisbury is a desperate homicide; He fighteth as one weary of his life. The other lords, like lions wanting food, Do rush upon us as their hungry prey.²

Alen. Froissard, a countryman of ours, records, England all Olivers and Rowlands' bred, During the time Edward the Third did reign. More truly now may this be verified; For none but Samsons, and Goliasses It sendeth forth to skirmish. One to ten! Lean raw-bon'd rascals; who would e'er suppose They had such courage and audacity?

Char. Let's leave this town; for they are hair-brain'd slaves,

And hunger will enforce them to be more eager: Of old I know them; rather with their teeth The walls they'll tear down, than forsake the siege.

Reig. I think, by some odd gimmals⁴ or device, Their arms are set, like clocks, still to strike on; Else ne'er could they hold out so as they do. By my consent, we'll e'en let them alone.

Alen. Be it so.

Enter the Bastard of Orleans.

Bast. Where's the prince Dauphin, I have news for him.

Char. Bastard⁵ of Orleans, thrice welcome to us.

Bast. Methinks, your looks are sad, your cheer⁶ appall'd:

Hath the late overthrow wrought this offence?

Be not dismay'd, for succour is at hand:

A holy maid hither with me I bring,

Which, by a vision sent to her from heaven,

Ordained is to raise this tedious siege,

And drive the English forth the bounds of France.

The spirit of deep prophecy she hath,

Exceeding the nine sibyls of old Rome;⁷

What's past, and what's to come, she can descry.

¹ 'You are as ignorant in the true movings of my muse as the astronomers are in the true movings of Mars, which to this day they could never attain to.' Gabriel Harvey's Hunt is up, by Nash, 1596, Preface.

² I. e. the prey for which they are hungry.

³ These were two of the most famous in the list of Charlemagne's twelve peers; and their exploits are the theme of the old romances. From the equally doughty and unheard of exploits of these champions, arose the saying of Giving a Rowland for an Oliver, for giving a person as good as he brings.

Speak, shall I call her in? Believe my words, For they are certain and infallible.

Char. Go, call her in: [Exit Bastard.] But, first to try her skill,

Reignier, stand thou as Dauphin in my place:

Question her proudly, let thy looks be stern:—

By this mean shall we sound what skill she hath.

[Retires.

Enter LA PUCELLE, Bastard of Orleans, and others.

Reig. Fair maid, is't thou wilt do these wondrous feats?

Puc. Reignier, is't thou that thinkest to beguile me?—

Where is the Dauphin?—come, come from behind;

I know thee well, though never seen before.

Be not amaz'd, there's nothing hid from me:

In private will I talk with thee apart:—

Stand back, you lords, and give us leave a while.

Reig. She takes upon her bravely at first dash.

Puc. Dauphin, I am by birth a shepherd's daughter.

My wit untrain'd in any kind of art.

Heaven, and our Lady gracious, hath it pleas'd

To shine on my contemptible estate:

Lo, whilst I waited on my tender lambs,

And to sun's parching heat display'd my cheeks,

God's mother deign'd to appear to me;

And, in a vision full of majesty,

Will'd me to leave my base vocation,

And free my country from calamity:

Her aid she promis'd, and assur'd success:

In complete glory she reveal'd herself;

And, whereas I was black and swart before,

With those clear rays which she infus'd on me,

That beauty am I bless'd with, which you see.

Ask me what question thou canst possible,

And I will answer unpremeditated:

My courage try by combat, if thou dar'st,

And thou shalt find that I exceed my sex.

Resolve on this:⁸ Thou shalt be fortunate,

If thou receive me for thy warlike mate.

Char. Thou hast astonish'd me with thy high terms;

Only this proof I'll of thy valour make,—

In single combat thou shalt buckle with me:

And, if thou vanquishest, thy words are true;

Otherwise, I renounce all confidence.

Puc. I am prepar'd: here is my keen-edged sword,

Deck'd with five flower-de-luces on each side:

The which at Touraine, in Saint Katharine's churchyard,

Out of a great deal of old iron I chose forth.

Char. Then come o' God's name, I fear no woman.

Puc. And, while I live, I'll ne'er fly from a man.

[They fight.]

Char. Stay, stay thy hands; thou art an Amazon,

And fightest with the sword of Deborah.

Puc. Christ's mother helps me, else I were too weak.

Char. Whoe'er helps thee, 'tis thou that must help me:

Impatiently I burn with thy desire;

My heart and hands thou hast at once subdu'd,

Excellent Pucelle, if thy name be so,

Let me thy servant, and not sovereign, be;

'Tis the French Dauphin sueth thus to thee.

Puc. I must not yield to any rites of love;

For my profession's sacred from above:

When I have chased all thy foes from hence,

Then will I think upon a recompense.

⁴ By gimmals, gimbols, gimmers, or gimotees, any kind of device or machinery producing motion was meant. Baret has 'the gimew or hinge of a door.'

⁵ Bastard was not in former times a title of reproach.

⁶ Cheer in this instance means heart or courage, as in the expression 'be of good cheer.'

⁷ Warburton says that, 'there were no nine sibyls of Rome, it is a mistake for the nine Sibylline Oracles brought to one of the Tarquins.' But the poet followed the popular books of his day, which say that 'the ten sibyls were women that had the spirit of prophecy (sum-mering them) and that they prophesied of Christ.'

⁸ I. e. be convinced of it.

Char. Mean tin e, look gracious on thy prostrate thrall.

Reig. My lord, methinks, is very long in talk.

Alen. Doubtless he shrives this woman to her smock;

Else ne'er could he so long protract his speech.

Reig. Shall we disturb him, since he keeps no mean?

Alen. He may mean more than we poor men do know:

These women are shew'd tempters with their tongues.

Reig. My lord, where are you? what devise you on?

Shall we give over Orleans, or no?

Puc. Why, no, I sav. distrustful recreants!

Fight till the last gasp, I will be your guard.

Char. What she says, I'll confirm; we'll fight it out.

Puc. Assign'd am I to be the English scourge.

This night the siege assuredly I'll raise:

Expect Saint Martin's summer,¹ halcyon days,

Since I have entered into these wars.

Glory is like a circle in the water,

Which never ceaseth to enlarge itself,

Till, by broad spreading, it disperse to nought.²

With Henry's death, the English circle ends;

Dispersed are the glories it included.

Now am I like that proud insulting ship,

Which Cæsar and his fortune bare at once.

Char. Was Mahomet inspired with a dove?³

Thou with an eagle art inspired then.

Helen, the mother of great Constantine,

Nor yet Saint Philip's daughters,⁴ were like thee.

Bright star of Venus, fall'n down on the earth,

How may I reverently worship thee enough?

Alen. Leave off delays, and let us raise the siege.

Reig. Woman, do what thou canst to save our honours;

Drive them from Orleans, and he immortaliz'd.

Char. Presently we'll try:—Come let's away about it:

No prophet will I trust, if she prove false. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. London. Hill before the Tower.

Enter, at the Gates, the Duke of GLOSTER, with his Serving-men in blue Coats.

Glo. I am come to survey the Tower this day;

Since Henry's death, I fear there is conveyance.⁵

Where be these warders, that they wait not here?

Open the gates; Gloster it is that calls.

[Servants knock.]

1 Ward. [Within.] Who is there that knocks so imperiously?

1 Serv. It is the noble duke of Gloster.

2 Ward. [Within.] Whoe'er he be, you may not be let in.

1 Serv. Answer you so the lord protector, villains?

1 Ward. [Within.] The Lord protect him! so we answer him:

We do no otherwise than we are will'd.

Glo. Who will'd you? or whose will stands, but mine?

There's none protector of the realm, but I.—

Break up⁶ the gates, I'll be your warrantize:

Shall I be flouted thus by dunghill grooms?

Servants rush at the Tower Gates. Enter, to the Gates, WOODVILLE, the Lieutenant.

Wood. [Within.] What noise is this? what traitors have we here?

Glo. Lieutenant, is it you, whose voice I hear?

Open the gates; here's Gloster, that would enter.

Wood. [Within.] Have patience, noble duke: I may not open;

The cardinal of Winchester forbids:

From him I have express commandment,

That thou, nor none of thine, shall be let in.

Glo. Faint-hearted Woodville, prizest him 'fore me?

Arrogant Winchester? that haughty prelate, Whom Henry, our late sovereign, ne'er could brook?

Thou art no friend to God, or to the king:

Open the gates, or I'll shut thee out shortly.

1 Serv. Open the gates unto the lord protector; Or we'll burst them open, if that you come not quickly.

Enter WINCHESTER, attended by a Train of Servants in tawny Coats.

Win. How now, ambitious Humphry? what means this?

Glo. Piel'd priest,⁷ dost thou command me to be shut out?

Win. I do, thou most usurping proditor,⁸

And not protector of the king or realm.

Glo. Stand back, thou manifest conspirator;

Thou, that contriv'dst to murder our dead lord;

Thou, that giv'st whores indulgences to sing:⁹

I'll canvas¹⁰ thee in thy broad cardinal's hat,

If thou proceed in this thy insolence.

Win. Nay, stand thou back, I will not budge a foot;

This be Damascus, be thou curs'd Cain,

To slay thy brother Abel, if thou wilt.

Glo. I will not slay thee, but I'll drive thee back:

Thy scarlet robes, as a child's bearing-cloth

I'll use, to carry thee out of this place.

Win. Do what thou dar'st: I heard thee to thy face.

Glo. What? am I dar'd, and bearded to my face?—

Draw, men, for all this privileged place;

Blue-coats to tawny-coats. Priest, beware your beard;

[GLOSTER and his men attack the Bishop.]

I mean to tug it, and to cuff you soundly:

Under my feet I stamp thy cardinal's hat;

In spite of pope or dignities of church,

Here by the cheeks I'll drag thee up and down.

Win. Gloster, thou'lt answer this before the pope.

Glo. Winchester goose,¹² I cry—a rope! a rope!

Now beat them hence: Why do you let them stay?

Thee I'll chase hence, thou wolf in sheep's array.

Out, tawny coats!—out scarlet!¹³ hypocrite!

Here a great Tumult. In the midst of it, Enter the Mayor of London,¹⁴ and Officers.

May. Fye, lords! that you, being supreme magistrates,

Thus contumeliously should break the peace!

Glo. Peace, mayor: thou know'st little of my wrongs:

⁹ Traitor.

¹⁰ The public stews in Southwark were under the jurisdiction of the bishop of Winchester. Upton had seen the office book of the court leet, in which was entered the fees paid by, and the customs and regulations of these brothels.

¹¹ To canvas was 'to toss in a sieve; a punishment (says Cotgrave) inflicted on such as commit gross aburdities.'

¹² A Winchester goose was a particular stage of the disease contracted in the stews, hence Gloucester bestows the epithet on the bishop in derision and scorn.

¹³ In King Henry VIII. the earl of Surrey, with a similar allusion to Cardinal Wolsey's habit, calls him 'scarlet sin.'

¹⁴ It appears from Pennant's London that this mayor was John Coventry, an opulent mercer, from whom the present earl of Coventry is descended.

² This is a favourite image with poets.

³ Mahomet had a dove 'which he used to feed with wheat out of his ear; which dove when it was hungry, lighted on Mahomet's shoulder, and thrust its bill in to find its breakfast, Mahomet persuading the rude and simple Arabians that it was the Holy Ghost.' Raleigh's Hist. of the World, part i. c. vi.

⁴ Meaning the four daughters of Philip mentioned in Acts, xxi. 9.

⁵ Conveyance anciently signified any kind of furtive knavery, or privy stealing.

⁶ To break up was the same as to break open.

⁷ It appears that the attendants upon ecclesiastical courts, and a bishop's servants, were then, as now, distinguished by clothing of a sombre colour.

⁸ i. e. bald, alluding to his shaven crown.

Here's Beaufort, that regards nor God nor king,
Hath here distract'd the Tower to his use.

Win. Here's Gloster too, a foe to citizens;
One that still motions war, and never peace,
O'ercharging your free purses with large fines;
That seeks to overthrow religion,
Because he is protector of the realm;
And would have armour here out of the Tower,
To crown himself king, and suppress the prince.

Glo. I will not answer thee with words, but blows.
[Here they skirmish again.]

May. Nought rests for me, in this tumultuous strife,

But to make open proclamation:—

Come, officer; as loud as e'er thou can'st.

Off. All manner of men, assembled here in arms this day against God's peace and the king's, we charge and command you, in his highness' name, to repair to your several dwelling-places; and not to wear, handle, or use, any sword, weapon, or dagger, henceforward, upon pain of death.

Glo. Cardinal, I'll be no breaker of the law:
But we shall meet, and break our minds at large.

Win. Gloster, we'll meet; to thy dear cost, be sure:

Thy heart-blood I will have, for this day's work.

May. I'll call for clubs,¹ if you will not away:
This cardinal is more naughty than the devil.

Glo. Mayor, farewell: thou dost but what thou may'st.

Win. Abominable Gloster! guard thy head;
For I intend to have it, ere long. [Exeunt.]

May. See the coast clear'd, and then we will depart.—

Good God! that nobles should such stomachs² bear!

I myself fight not once in forty year. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. France. Before Orleans. Enter, on the Walls, the Master Gunner and his Son.

M. Gun. Sirrah, thou know'st how Orleans is besieg'd:

And how the English have the suburbs won.

Son. Father, I know; and oft have shot at them, Howe'er, unfortunate, I miss'd my aim.

M. Gun. But now thou shalt not. Be thou rul'd by me:

Chief master-gunner am I of this town;
Something I must do, to procure me grace:³

The prince's espials⁴ have inform'd me,

How the English, in the suburbs close intrench'd,

Wont,⁵ through a secret grate of iron bars

In yonder tower, to overpeer the city;

And thence discover how, with most advantage,

They may vex us, with shot, or with assault.

To intercept this inconvenience,

A piece of ordnance 'gainst it I have plac'd:

And fully even these three days have I watch'd,

If I could see them. Now, boy, do thou watch,

For I can stay no longer.

If thou spy'st at any, run and bring me word;

And thou shalt find me at the governor's. [Exit.]

Son. Father, I warrant you; take you no care:
I'll never trouble you, if I may spy them.

Enter, in an upper Chamber of a Tower, the LORDS SALISBURY and TALBOT, SIR WILLIAM GLANSDALE, SIR THOMAS GARGRAVE, and others.

Sal. Talbot, my life, my joy, again return'd!
How wert thou handled, being prisoner?

¹ Malone erroneously thinks the mayor cries out for peace-officers armed with clubs or staves. The practice of calling out Clubs! clubs! to call out the London apprentices upon the occasion of any affray in the streets, has been before explained, see As You Like It, Act v. Sc. 2.

² Stomach is pride, a haughty spirit of resentment

³ Favour.

⁴ Spies. Vide note on Hamlet, Act iii. Sc. 1.

⁵ The old copy reads went; the emendation is Mr.

Tyrwhitt's

The old copy reads 'pit'd esteem'd.'

⁷ This man [Talbot] was to the French people a

Or by what means gott'st thou to be releas'd?⁷
Discourse, I prythee, on this turret's top.

Tal. The duke of Bedford had a prisoner,
Called—the brave Lord Ponton de Santrailles;

For him I was exchang'd and ransomed.

But with a baser man of arms by far,

Once, in contempt, they would have barter'd me

Which I, disdainingly, scorn'd; and craved death

Rather than I would be so vile esteem'd.⁸

In fine, redeem'd I was as I desir'd.

But, O! the treacherous Fastolfe wounds my heart

Whom with my bare fists I would execute,

If I now had him brought into my power.

Sal. Yet tell'st thou not, how thou wert entertain'd.

Tal. With scoffs, and scorns, and contumelious taunts.

In open market-place produc'd they me,

To be a public spectacle to all;

Here, said they, is the terror of the French,⁹

The scare-crow that affrights our children so.

Then broke I from the officers that led me;

And with my nails digg'd stones out of the ground

To hurl at the beholders of my shame.

My grisly countenance made others fly;

None durst come near for fear of sudden death.

In iron walls they deem'd me not secure;

So great fear of my name 'mongst them was spread

That they suppos'd, I could rend bars of steel,

And spurn in pieces posts of adamant:

Wherefore a guard of chosen shot I had,

That walk'd about me every minute-while;

And if I did but stir out of my bed,

Ready they were to shoot me to the heart.

Sal. I grieve to hear what torments you endur'd:

But we will be reveng'd sufficiently.

Now it is supper-time in Orleans:

Here, through this grate, I can count every one,

And view the Frenchmen how they fortify;

Let us look in, the sight will much delight thee.—

Sir Thomas Gargrave, and Sir William Glansdale

Let me have your express opinions,

Where is best place to make our battery next.

Gar. I think, at the north gate, for there stand lords.

Glan. And I, here, at the bulwark of the bridge.

Tal. For aught I see, this city must be famish'd,

Or with light skirmishes enfeebled.

[Shot from the Town. SALISBURY and SIR

THO. GARGRAVE fall.]

Sal. O Lord, have mercy on us, wretched sinners.

Gar. O Lord, have mercy on me, woeful man!

Tal. What chance is this, that suddenly hath cross'd us?

Speak, Salisbury: at least, if thou canst speak;

How far'st thou, mirror of all martial men?

One of thy eyes, and thy cheek's side struck off!¹⁰—

Accurs'd tower! accurs'd fatal hand,

That hath contriv'd this woeful tragedy!

In thirteen battles Salisbury o'ercame;

Henry the Fifth he first train'd to the wars;

Whilst any trumpet did sound, or drum struck up,

His sword did ne'er leave striking in the field.—

Yet liv'st thou, Salisbury? though thy speech doth fail,

One eye thou hast to look to heaven for grace:

The sun with one eye vieweth all the world.—

Heaven, be thou gracious to none alive,

If Salisbury wants mercy at thy hands!—

Bear hence his body, I will help to bury it.—

Sir Thomas Gargrave, hast thou any life?

Speak unto Talbot; nay, look up to him.

very scourge and a daily terror, insomuch that as his person was fearful and terrible to his adversaries present, so his name and fame was spiteful and dreadful to the common people absent; insomuch that women in France, to spare their young children, would cry the Talbot cometh. Hall's Chronicle.

⁸ Camden says, in his Remaines, that the French scarce knew the use of great ordnance till the siege of Mans in 1455, when a breach was made in the walls of that town by the English, under the conduct of this earl of Salisbury; and that he was the first English gentle man that was slain by a cannon ball.

Salisbury, cheer thy spirit with this comfort ;
Thou shalt not die, whiles——
He beckons with his hand, and smiles on me ;
As who should say, When I am dead and gone,
Remember to avenge me on the French.—
Plantagenet, I will ; and like thee, Nero,
Play on the lute, beholding the towns burn :
Wretched shall France be only in my name.

[Thunder heard ; afterwards an Alarum.
What stir is this ? What tumult's in the heavens ?
Whence cometh this alarum, and the noise ?

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. My lord, my lord, the French have gather'd
head :

The Dauphin, with one Joan la Pucelle join'd,—
A holy prophetess, new risen up,—
Is come with a great power to raise the siege.

[SALISBURY groans.

Tal. Hear, hear, how dying Salisbury doth groan !
It irks his heart, he cannot be revenged.—
Frenchmen, I'll be a Salisbury to you :—
Pucelle or puzzel,¹ dolphin or dogfish,
Your hearts I'll stamp out with my horse's heels,
And make a quagmire of your mingled brains.—
Convey me Salisbury into his tent,
And then we'll try what these dastard Frenchmen dare. [Exeunt, bearing out the bodies.

SCENE V. The same. Before one of the Gates.
Alarum. Skirmishings. TALBOT pursueth the Dauphin, and driveth him in : then enter JOAN LA PUCELLE, driving Englishmen before her. Then enter TALBOT.

Tal. Where is my strength, my valour, and my force ?

Our English troops retire, I cannot stay them :
A woman, clad in armour, chaseth them.

Enter LA PUCELLE.

Here, here she comes :—I'll have a bout with
thee ;
Devil, or devil's dam, I'll conjure thee :
Blood will I draw on thee,² thou art a witch,
And straightway give thy soul to him thou serv'st.

Puc. Come, come, 'tis only I that must disgrace thee. [They fight.

Tal. Heavens, can you suffer hell so to prevail ?
My breast I'll burst with straining of my courage,
And from my shoulders crack my arms asunder,
And I will chastise this high-minded strumpet.

Puc. Talbot, farewell ; thy hour is not yet come :
I must go victual Orleans forthwith.
O'ertake me, if thou canst ; I scorn thy strength.
Go, go, cheer up thy hungry, starved men ;
Help Salisbury to make his testament :
This day is ours, as many more shall be.

[PUCELLE enters the Town, with Soldiers.
Tal. My thoughts are whirled like a potter's wheel ;

I know not where I am, nor what I do :
A witch, by fear, not force, like Hannibal,³
Drives back our troops, and conquers as she lists :
So bees with smoke, and doves with noisome stench,
Are from their hives, and houses, driven away.
They call'd us, for our fierceness, English dogs ;
Now, like to whelps, we crying run away.

[A short Alarum.
Hark, countrymen ! either renew the fight,
Or tear the lions out of England's coat ;
Renounce your soil, give sheep in lions' stead :

¹ Puzzel means a dirty wench or a drab, 'from puzz-za, i. e. malus factor,' says Minshew.

² The superstition of those times taught that he who could draw a witch's blood was free from her power.

³ Alluding to Hannibal's stratagem to escape, by fixing bundles of lighted twigs on the horns of oxen, recorded by Livy, lib. xxij. c. xvj.

⁴ Old copy treacherous. Corrected by Pope.

⁵ Wolves. Thus the second folio, the first omits that word, and the epithet bright prefixed to Astrea in the next line but one. Malone follows the reading of the first folio, and contends that by a licentious pronunciation a syllable was added, thus English, Astreea.

Sheep run not half so timorous* from the wolf,
Or horse, or oxen, from the leopard,
As you fly from your oft-subdued slaves.

[Alarum. Another Skirmish.

It will not be :—Retire into your trenches :
You all consented unto Salisbury's death,
For none would strike a stroke in his revenge.—
Pucelle is entered into Orleans,
In spite of us, or aught that we could do.
O, would I were to die with Salisbury !
The shame hereof will make me hide my head.

[Alarum. Retreat. Exeunt TALBOT and his Forces, &c.

SCENE VI. The same. Enter, on the Walls,
PUCELLE, CHARLES, REIGNIER, ALENÇON, and Soldiers.

Puc. Advance our waving colours on the walls ;
Rescu'd is Orleans from the English wolves :—
Thus Joan la Pucelle hath perform'd her word.

Char. Divinest creature, bright Astrea's daughter,
How shall I honour thee for this success ?
Thy promises are like Adonis' gardens,
That one day bloom'd, and fruitful were the next.—
France, triumph in thy glorious prophetess !—
Recover'd is the town of Orleans :
More blessed hap did ne'er befall our state.

Reig. Why ring not out the bells throughout the town ?

Dauphin, command the citizens make bonfires,
And feast and banquet in the open streets,
To celebrate the joy that God hath given us.

Alen. All France will be replete with mirth and
joy,

When they shall hear how we have play'd the men.

Cha. 'Tis Joan, not we, by whom the day is won ;
For which, I will divide my crown with her :

And all the priests and friars in my realm
Shall, in procession, sing her endless praise.

A stately pyramid to her I'll rear,
Than Rhodope's, of Memphis, ever was :⁶

In memory of her, when she is dead,
Her ashes, in an urn more precious

Than the rich-jewel'd coffer of Darius,⁷
Transported shall be at high festivals

Before the kings and queens of France.
No longer on Saint Dennis will we cry,

But Joan la Pucelle shall be France's saint.
Come in ; and let us banquet royally,

After this golden day of victory. [Flourish. Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I. The same. Enter to the Gates, a French
Sergeant, and Two Sentinels.

Serg. Sirs, take your places, and be vigilant :
If any noise, or soldier, you perceive,

Near to the walls, by some apparent sign,
Let us have knowledge at the court of guard.⁸

I Sent. Sergeant, you shall. [Exit Sergeant.]
Thus are poor servitors

(When others sleep upon their quiet beds)
Constrain'd to watch in darkness, rain, and cold.

Enter TALBOT, BEDFORD, BURGUNDY, and Forces, with Scaling Ladders ; their Drums beating a dead
March.

Tal. Lord Regent,—and redoubted Burgundy,—
By whose approach, the regions of Artois,
Walloon, and Picardy, are friends to us,—
This happy night the Frenchmen are secure,
Having all day carous'd and banqueted :

⁶ The Adonis horti were nothing but portable earthen pots, with some lettuce or fennel growing in them.

⁷ The old copy reads :—

'Than Rhodope's or Memphis ever was.'

Rhodope, or Rhodopis, a celebrated courtesan, who was a slave in the same service with Æsop, at Samos.

⁸ 'In what price the noble poems of Homer were bought by Alexander the Great, inasmuch that everie night they were layd under his pillow, and by day were carried in the rich jewel coffer of Darius, lately before vanquished by him.' Puttenham's Arte of English
Poesie, 1589.

⁹ The same as guard-room.

Embrace we then this opportunity ;
As fitting best to quittance their deceit,
Contriv'd by art, and baleful sorcery.

Bed. Coward of France ?—how much he wrongs his fame,

Despairing of his own arm's fortitude,
To join with witches, and the help of hell.

Bur. Traitors have never other company.—

But what's that Pucelle, whom they term so pure ?
Tal. A maid, they say.

Bed. A maid ! and be so martial !

Bur. Pray God, she prove not masculine ere long ;
If underneath the standard of the French,
She carry armour as she hath begun.

Tal. Well, let them practise and converse with spirits :

God is our fortress ; in whose conquering name,
Let us resolve to scale their flinty bulwarks.

Bed. Ascend, brave Talbot ; we will follow thee.

Tal. Not all together : better far, I guess,
That we do make our entrance several ways ;
That, if it chance the one of us do fail,
The other yet may rise against their force.

Bed. Agreed ; I'll to yon corner.

Bur. And I to this.

Tal. And here will Talbot mount, or make his grave.—

Now, Salisbury ! for thee, and for the right
Of English Henry, shall this night appear
How much in duty I am bound to both.

[*The English scale the Walls, crying St. George !
a Talbot ! and all enter by the Town.*]

Sent. [Within.] Arm, arm ! the enemy doth make assault !

The French leap over the Walls in their shirts. Enter, several ways, BASTARD, ALENÇON, REIGNIER, half ready, and half unready.

Alen. How now, my lords ? what all unready 's ?

Bast. Unready ? ay, and glad we 'scap'd so well.

Reig. 'Twas time, I trow, to wake and leave our beds,

Hearing alarums at our chamber doors.

Alen. Of all exploits, since first I follow'd arms,
Never heard I of a warlike enterprise

More venturous, or desperate than this.

Bast. I think, this Talbot be a fiend of hell.

Reig. If not of hell, the heavens, sure, favour him.

Alen. Here cometh Charles ; I marvel how he sped,

Enter CHARLES and LA PUCELLE.

Bast. Tut ! holy Joan was his defensive guard.

Char. Is this thy cunning, thou deceitful dame ?

Didst thou at first, to flatter us withal,

Make us partakers of a little gain,

That now our loss might be ten times so much ?

Puc. Wherefore is Charles impatient with his friend ?

At all times will you have my power alike ?

Sleeping, or waking, must I still prevail,

Or will you blame and lay the fault on me ?—

Improvident soldiers ! had your watch been good,

This sudden mischief never could have fall'n.

Char. Duke of Alençon, this was your default ;

That, being captain of the watch to-night,

Did look no better to that weighty charge.

Alen. Had all your quarters been as safely kept,

As that whereof I had the government,

We had not been thus shamefully surpris'd.

Bast. Mine was secure,

Reig. And so was mine, my lord.

Char. And for myself, most part of all this night,

Within her quarter, and mine own precinct,

I was employ'd in passing to and fro,

About relieving of the sentinels :

Then how, or which way, should they first break in ?

Puc. Question, my lords, no further of the case,

How, or which way : 'tis sure, they found some place

But weakly guarded, where the breach was made,
And now there rests no other shift but this,—
To gather our soldiers, scatter'd and dispers'd,
And lay new platforms² to endanger them.

Alarm. Enter an English Soldier, crying a Talbot ! a Talbot ! They fly, leaving their Clothes behind.

Sold. I'll be so bold to take what they have left,
The cry of Talbot serves me for a sword ;
For I have loaden me with many spoils,
Using no other weapon but his name. [Exit.]

SCENE II. Orleans. Within the Town. Enter TALBOT, BEDFORD, BURGUNDY, a Captain, and others.

Bed. The day begins to break, and night is fled,
Whose pitchy mantle over-veil'd the earth.
Here sound retreat, and cease our hot pursuit.

[Retreat sounded.]

Tal. Bring forth the body of old Salisbury ;
And here advance it in the market-place,
The middle centre of this cursed town.—

Now have I paid my vow unto his soul ;
For every drop of blood was drawn from him,
There hath at least five Frenchmen died to-night.

And, that hereafter ages may behold

What ruin happen'd in revenge of him,

Within their chiefest temple I'll erect

A tomb, wherein his corpse shall be interr'd :

Upon the which, that every one may read,

Shall be engrav'd the sack of Orleans ;

The treacherous manner of his mournful death,

And what a terror he had been to France.

But, lords, in all our bloody massacre,

I muse,³ we met not with the Dauphin's grace ;

His new-come champion, virtuous Joan of Arc ;

Nor any of his false confederates.

Bed. 'Tis thought, Lord Talbot, when the fight began,

Rous'd on the sudden from their drowsy beds,

They did amongst the troops of armed men,

Leap o'er the walls for refuge in the field.

Bur. Myself (as far as I could well discern,

For smoke, and dusky vapours of the night)

Am sure I scar'd the Dauphin, and his trull ;

When arm in arm they both came swiftly running,

Like to a pair of loving turtle-doves,

That could not live asunder day or night.

After that things are set in order here,

We'll follow them with all the power we have.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. All hail, my lords ! which of this princely train

Call ye the warlike Talbot, for his acts

So much applauded through the realm of France ?

Tal. Here is the Talbot ; who would speak with him ?

Mess. The virtuous lady, countess of Auvergne,

With modesty admiring thy renown,

By me entreats, good lord, thou wouldst vouchsafe

To visit her poor castle where she lies ;⁴

That she may boast she hath beheld the man

Whose glory fills the world with loud report.

Bur. Is it even so ? Nay, then, I see our wars

Will turn unto a peaceful comic sport,

When ladies crave to be encounter'd with.—

You may not, my lord, despise her gentle suit.

Tal. Ne'er trust me thou ; for, when a world of
men

Could not prevail with all their oratory,

Yet hath a woman's kindness overrul'd :—

And therefore tell her, I return great thanks ;

And in submission will attend on her.—

Will not your honours bear me company ?

Bed. No, truly ; it is more than manners will :

And I have heard it said,—Unbidden guests

Are often welcomest when they are gone.

1 Unready is undressed.

2 Plans, schemes.

3 Wonder.

4 i. e. where she dwells.

Tal. Well then, alone, since there's no remedy,
I mean to prove this lady's courtesy.
Come hither, captain. [Whispers.]—You perceive my mind.

Capt. I do, my lord; and mean accordingly.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. Auvergne. Court of the Castle.
Enter the Countess and her Porter.

Count. Porter, remember what I gave in charge;
And, when you have done so, bring the keys to me.

Port. Madam, I will.

[Exit.]

Count. The plot is laid: if all things fall out right,

I shall as famous be by this exploit,
As Scythian Thomyris by Cyrus' death.
Great is the rumour of this dreadful knight,
And his achievements of no less account:
Fain would mine eyes be witness with mine ears,
To give their censure¹ of these rare reports.

Enter Messenger and TALBOT.

Mess. Madam,
According as your ladyship desir'd,
By message crav'd, so is Lord Talbot come.

Count. And he is welcome. What! is this the man?

Mess. Madam, it is.

Count. Is this the scourge of France?
Is this the Talbot, so much fear'd abroad,
That with his name the mothers still their babes?²
I see report is fabulous and false:
I thought I should have seen some Hercules,
A second Hector, for his grim aspect,
And large proportion of his strong-knit limbs.
Alas! this is a child, a silly dwarf:
It cannot be, this weak and writhled³ shrimp
Should strike such terror to his enemies.

Tal. Madam, I have been bold to trouble you:
But, since your ladyship is not at leisure,
I'll sort some other time to visit you.

Count. What means he now?—Go ask him, whither he goes.

Mess. Stay, my Lord Talbot; for my lady craves
To know the cause of your abrupt departure.

Tal. Marry, for that she's in a wrong belief,
I go to certify her, Talbot's here.

Re-enter Porter, with Keys.

Count. If thou be he, then art thou prisoner.

Tal. Prisoner! to whom?

Count. To me, blood-thirsty lord;
And for that cause I train'd thee to my house.
Long time thy shadow hath been thrall to me,
For in my gallery thy picture hangs;
But now the substance shall endure the like;
And I will chain these legs and arms of thine,
That hast by tyranny, these many years,
Wasted our country, slain our citizens,
And sent our sons and husbands captive.⁴

Tal. Ha, ha, ha!

Count. Laughest thou, wretch? thy mirth shall turn to moan.

Tal. I laugh to see your ladyship so fond,⁵
To think that you have aught but Talbot's shadow,
Whereon to practise your severity.

Count. Why, art not thou the man?

Tal.

I am indeed.

Count. Then have I substance too.

Tal. No, no, I am but shadow of myself:

You are deceiv'd, my substance is not here;
For what you see, is but the smallest part
And least proportion of humanity:
I tell you, madam, were the whole frame here,
It is of such a spacious lofty pitch,
Your roof were not sufficient to contain it.
Count. This is a riddling merchant for the nonce;⁶
He will be here, and yet he is not here:
How can these contraries agree?

Tal. That will I show you presently.

He winds a Horn. Drums heard; then a Peal of Ordinance. The Gates being forced, enter Soldiers.

How say you, madam? are you now persuaded,
That Talbot is but shadow of himself?
These are his substance, sinews, arms, and strength,
With which he yoketh your rebellious necks;
Razeth your cities, and subverts your towns,
And in a moment makes them desolate.

Count. Victorious Talbot! pardon my abuse:
I find, thou art no less than fame hath bruited,⁷
And more than may be gather'd by thy shape.
Let my presumption not provoke thy wrath;
For I am sorry, that with reverence
I did not entertain thee as thou art.

Tal. Be not dismay'd, fair lady; nor misconstrue
The mind of Talbot, as you did mistake
The outward composition of his body.
What you have done, hath not offended me;
No other satisfaction do I crave,
But only (with your patience) that we may Taste of your wine, and see what cates you have;
For soldiers' stomachs always serve them well.

Count. With all my heart: and think me honoured
To feast so great a warrior in my house. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. London. The Temple Garden. Enter the Earls of SOMERSET, SUFFOLK, and WAR-WICK; RICHARD PLANTAGENET, VERNON, and another Lawyer.

Plan. Great lords, and gentlemen, what means this silence?

Dare no man answer in a case of truth?

Suff. Within the Temple hall we were too loud:
The garden here is more convenient.

Plan. Then say at once, if I maintain'd the truth;
Or, else, was wrangling Somerset in the error?⁸

Suff. 'Faith, I have been a truant in the law;
And never yet could frame my will to it;
And, therefore, frame the law unto my will.

Som. Judge you, my lord of Warwick, then between us.

War. Between two hawks, which flies the higher pitch,

Between two dogs, which hath the deeper mouth,
Between two blades, which bears the better temper,
Between two horses, which doth bear him best,¹⁰
Between two girls, which hath the merriest eye,
I have, perhaps, some shallow spirit of judgment:
But in these nice sharp quillets of the law,
Good faith, I am no wiser than a daw.

Plan. Tut, tut, here is a mannerly forbearance;
The truth appears so naked on my side,
That any purblind eye may find it out.

Som. And on my side it is so well apparell'd,
So clear, so shining, and so evident,
That it will glimmer through a blind man's eye.

Plan. Since you are tongue-ty'd, and so loath to speak,
In dumb significants¹¹ proclaim your thoughts;

1 i. e. judgment, opinion.
2 Dryden has transplanted this idea into his Don Sebastian :—

'Nor shall Sebastian's formidable name
Be longer used, to lull the crying babe.'

3 Writhled for wrinkled.

4 Thus in Solyman and Persida :—

'If not destroy'd and bound and captive,
If captive, then forc'd from holy faith.'

5 i. e. foolish, silly, weak.

6 This is a riddling merchant for the nonce.³ The term merchant, which was, and even now is, frequently applied to the lowest kind of dealers, seems anciently to have been used on these familiar occasions in contradisinction to gentleman; signifying that the person showed by his behaviour he was a low fellow.

7 Bruited is reported, loudly announced.

8 We should read a lawyer. This lawyer was probably Roger Nevile, who was afterwards hanged. See W. Wyrester, p. 473.

9 Johnson observes that 'there is apparently a want of opposition between the two questions here,' but there is no reason to suspect that the text is corrupt.

10 i. e. regulate his motions most adroitly. We still say that a horse carries himself well.

11 Dumb significants, which Malone would have changed to significance, is nothing more than signs or tokens.

Let him, that is a true-born gentleman,
And stands upon the honour of his birth,
If he suppose that I have pleaded truth,
From off this brier pluck a white rose with me.

Som. Let him that is no coward, nor no flatterer,
But dare maintain the party of the truth,
Pluck a red rose from off this thorn with me.

War. I love no colours;¹ and, without all colour
Of base insinuating flattery,
I pluck this white rose with Plantagenet.

Suff. I pluck this red rose, with young Somerset;
And say withal, I think he held the right.

Ver. Stay, lords and gentlemen: and pluck no
more,

Till you conclude—that he, upon whose side
The fewest roses are cropp'd from the tree,
Shall yield the other in the right opinion.

Som. Good master Vernon, it is well objected;²
If I have fewest, I subscribe in silence.

Plan. And I.

[case,

Ver. Then, for the truth and plainness of the
I pluck this pale, and maiden blossom here,
Giving my verdict on the white rose side.

Som. Prick not your finger as you pluck it off;
Lest, bleeding, you do paint the white rose red,
And fall on my side so against your will.

Ver. If I, my lord, for my opinion bleed,
Opinion shall be surgeon to my hurt,
And keep me on the side where still I am.

Som. Well, well, come on: Who else?

Law. Unless my study and my books be false,
The argument you held, was wrong in you;

[To SOMERSET.

In sign whereof, I pluck a white rose too.

Plan. Now, Somerset, where is your argument?

Som. Here, in my scabbard; meditating that,
Shall dye your white rose in a bloody red.

Plan. Mean time, your cheeks do counterfeit our roses;

For pale they look with fear, as witnessing
The truth on our side.

Som. No, Plantagenet,

'Tis not for fear; but anger,—that thy cheeks
Blush for pure shame, to counterfeit our roses;³
And yet thy tongue will not confess thy error.

Plan. Hath not thy rose a canker, Somerset?

Som. Hath not thy rose a thorn, Plantagenet?

Plan. Ay, sharp and piercing, to maintain his truth;

Whiles thy consuming canker eats his falsehood.

Som. Well, I'll find friends to wear my bleeding rosas,

That shall maintain what I have said is true,
Where false Plantagenet dare not be seen.

Plan. Now, by this maiden blossom in my hand,
I scorn thee and thy faction,⁴ peevish boy.

Suff. Turn not thy scorns this way, Plantagenet.

Plan. Proud Poole, I will; and scorn both him and thee.

Suff. I'll turn my part thereof into thy throat.

Som. Away, away, good William De-la-Poole!
We grace the yeoman, by conversing with him.

War. Now, by God's will, thou wrong'st him,
Somerset;

His grandfather was Lionel, duke of Clarence?⁵
Third son to the third Edward, king of England;
Spring crestless yeomen⁶ from so deep a root?

Plan. He bears him on the place's privilege,
Or durst not, for his craven heart, say thus.

Som. By him that made me, I'll maintain my words

On and plot of ground in Christendom:
Was not thy father, Richard, earl of Cambridge,

For treason executed in our late king's day?
And, by his treason, stand'st not thou attainted,
Corrupted, and exempt⁷ from ancient gentry?

His trespass yet lives guilty in thy blood;
And, till thou be restor'd, thou art a yeoman.

Plan. My father was attached, not attainted;
Condemn'd to die for treason, but no traitor;

And that I'll prove on better men than Somerset,
Were growing time once ripen'd to my will.

For your partaker⁸ Poole, and you yourself,
I'll note you in my book of memory;⁹

To scourge you for this apprehension:¹⁰
Look to it well; and say you are well warn'd.

Som. Ay, thou shalt find us ready for thee still:
And know us, by these colours, for thy foes;

For these my friends, in spite of thee, shall wear.

Plan. And, by my soul, this pale and angry rose,
As cognizance¹¹ of my blood-drinking hate,

Will I for ever, and my faction, wear;
Until it wither with me to my grave,

Or flourish to the height of my degree.

Suff. Go forward, and be chok'd with thy ambition!
And so farewell, until I meet thee next. [Exit.

Som. Have with thee, Poole.—Farewell, ambitious Richard. [Exit.

Plan. How I am brav'd, and must perforce endure it! [house,

War. This blot, that they object against your
Shall be wip'd out in the next parliament,

Call'd for the truce of Winchester and Gloster:
And, if thou be not then created York,

I will not live to be accounted Warwick.
Mean time, in signal of my love to thee,

Against proud Somerset, and William Poole,
Will I upon thy party wear this rose:

And here I prophesy,—This brawl to-day,
Grown to this faction, in the Temple garden,

Shall send, between the red rose and the white,
A thousand souls to death and deadly night.

Plan. Good master Vernon, I am bound to you,
That you on my behalf would pluck a flower.

Ver. In your behalf still will I wear the same

Law. And so will I.

Plan. Thanks, gentle sir.

Come, let us four to dinner: I dare say,
This quarrel will drink blood another day. [Exeunt.

SCENE V. The same. A Room in the Tower.
Enter MORTIMER,¹² brought in a Chair by two Keepers.

Mor. Kind keepers of my weak decaying age,
Let dying Mortimer here rest himself,— have derived some such privilege from the knights templars, or knights hospitaliers, both religious orders, its former inhabitants. It is true, blows may have been prohibited by the regulations of the society: the author perhaps did not much consider the matter, but represents it as suited his purpose.

⁸ Exempt for excluded.

⁹ Partaker, in ancient language, signifies one who takes part with another; an accomplice, a confederate.
'A partaker, or coparcener; particeps, consors, con-socius.'—Baret.

¹⁰ So in Hamlet:—

— the table of my memory.

Again:—

— shall live

Within the book and volume of my brain.

¹¹ Theobald changed this to reprehension: and Warburton explains it by opinion. It rather means conception, or a conceit taken that matters are different from what the truth warrants.

¹² A cognizance is a badge.

¹³ This is at variance with the strict truth of history,

deccits.

² Well objected is properly proposed, properly thrown in our way

³ It is not for fear that my cheeks look pale, but for anger: anger produced by this circumstance—namely, that thy cheeks blush, &c.

⁴ Theobald altered fashion, which is the reading of the old copy, to faction. Warburton contends that 'by fashion is meant the badge of the red rose, which Somerset said that he and his friends would be distinguished by.'

⁵ The poet mistakes. Plantagenet's paternal grandfather was Edmund of Langley, duke of York. His maternal grandfather was Roger Mortimer, earl of March, who was the son of Philippa, the daughter of Lionel, duke of Clarence. The duke therefore was his maternal great great grandfather.

⁶ I. e. those who have no right to arms.

⁷ It does not appear that the temple had any privilege of sanctuary at this time, being then, as now, the residence of law students. The author might imagine it to

MORTIMER & PLANTAGENET.

First Part of King Henry 6 th. Act 2. Scene 5.

Even like a man new haled from the rack,
So fare my limbs with long imprisonment !
And these gray locks, the pursuivants of death,¹
Nestor-like aged, in an age of care,
Argue the end of Edmund Mortimer.
These eyes,—like lamps whose wasting oil is spent,—

Wax dim, as drawing to their exigent :²
Weak shoulders, overcome with burd'ning grief,
And pithless³ arms, like to a wither'd vine
That droops his sapless branches to the ground :—
Yet are these feet—whose strengthless stay is numb,
Unable to support this lump of clay,—
Swift-winged with desire to get a grave,
As witting I no other comfort have.—
But tell me, keeper, will my nephew come ?

I Keep. Richard Plantagenet, my lord, will come :
We sent unto the Temple, to his chamber ;
And answer was return'd that he will come.

Mor. Enough ; my soul shall then be satisfied.—
Poor gentleman ! his wrong doth equal mine.
Since Henry Monmouth first began to reign
(Before whose glory I was great in arms,) ⁴
This loathsome sequestration have I had ;
And even since then hath Richard been obscur'd,
Deprived of honour and inheritance :
But now, the arbitrator of despairs,
Just death, kind umpire⁵ of men's miseries,
With sweet enlargement doth dismiss me hence ;
I would, his troubles likewise were expir'd,
That so he might recover what was lost.

Enter RICHARD PLANTAGENET.

I Keep. My lord, your loving nephew now is come.

Mor. Richard Plantagenet, my friend ? Is he come ?

Plan. Ay, noble uncle, thus ignobly us'd,
Your nephew, late-despised⁶ Richard, comes.

Mor. Direct mine arms, I may embrace his neck,
And in his bosom spend my latter gasp :
O, tell me, when my lips do touch his cheeks,
That I may kindly give one fainting kiss.—
And now declare, sweet stem from York's great stock,

Why didst thou say—of late thou wert despis'd ?

Plan. First, lean thine aged back against mine arm ;

And, in that case, I'll tell thee my disease.⁷
This day, in argument upon a case,
Some words there grew 'twixt Somerset and me :
Among which terms he used his lavish tongue,
And did upbraid me with my father's death ;
Which obloquy set bars before my tongue,
Else with the like I had requited him :
Therefore, good uncle,—for my father's sake,
In honour of a true Plantagenet,
And for alliance⁸ sake,—declare the cause
My father, earl of Cambridge, lost his head.

Mor. That cause, fair nephew, that imprison'd me,
And hath detain'd me, all my flow'ring youth,
Within a loathsome dungeon, there to pine,
Was cursed instrument of his decease.

Plan. Discover more at large what cause that was ;
For I am ignorant, and cannot guess.

Mor. I will ; if that my fading breath permit,

Edmund Mortimer, who was trusted and employed by Henry V. throughout his reign, died of the plague in his own castle at Trim, in Ireland, in 1424-5 ; being then only thirty-two years old.

1 The heralds that, fore-running death, proclaim its approach.

2 Exigent is here used for end.

3 Pith is used figuratively for strength.

4 That is, he who terminates or concludes misery.

5 Lately despised.

6 Disease for uneasiness, trouble, or grief. It is used in this sense by other ancient writers.

7 Nephew has sometimes the power of the Latin ne-pos, signifying grandchild, and is used with great laxity among our ancient English writers. It is here used instead of cousin.

8 Haughty is high, lofty.

9 i. e. thinking. This is another falsification of history. Cambridge levied no army ; but was apprehended

And death approach not ere my tale be done.
Henry the Fourth, grandfather to this king,
Depos'd his nephew⁷ Richard ; Edward's son,
The first-begotten, and the lawful heir
Of Edward king, the third of that descent :
During whose reign, the Percies of the north,
Finding his usurpation most unjust,
Endeavour'd my advancement to the throne :
The reason mov'd these warlike lords to this,
Was—for that (young King Richard thus remov'd, Leaving no heir begotten of his body)
I was the next by birth and parentage ;
For by my mother I deriv'd am
From Lionel duke of Clarence, the third son
To King Edward the Third, whereas he,
From John of Gaunt doth bring his pedigree,
Being but fourth of that heroic line.
But mark ; as, in this haughty⁸ great attempt,
They labour'd to plant the rightful heir,
I lost my liberty, and they their lives.
Long after this, when Henry the Fifth,— Succeeding his father Bolingbroke,—did reign,
Thy father, earl of Cambridge,—then deriv'd
From famous Edmund Langley, duke of York,— Marrying my sister, that thy mother was,
Again, in pity of my hard distress,
Levied an army ; weening⁹ to redeem,
And have install'd me in the diadem :
But, as the rest, so fell that noble earl,
And was beheaded. Thus the Mortimers,
In whom the title rested, were suppress'd.

Plan. Of which, my lord, your honour is the last.

Mor. True ; and thou seest, that I no issue have ;
And that my fainting words do warrant death :
Thou art my heir ; the rest, I wish thee gather :¹⁰
But yet be wary in thy studious care.

Plan. Thy grave admonishments prevail with me :
But yet, methinks, my father's execution
Was nothing less than bloody tyranny.

Mor. With silence, nephew, be thou politic ;
Strong-fixed is the house of Lancaster,
And, like a mountain, not to be remov'd.¹¹
But now thy uncle is removing hence ;
As princes do their courts, when they are cloy'd
With long continuance in a settled place.

Plan. O, uncle, 'would, some part of my young years

Might but redeem the passage of your age !¹²

Mor. Thou dost then wrong me ; as the slaught' er doth,

Which giveth many wounds, when one will kill.
Mourn not, except thou sorrow for my good ;
Only, give order for my funeral ;
And so farewell : and fair be all thy hopes !
And prosperous be thy life, in peace and war !

[Dies.]

Plan. And peace, no war, befall thy parting soul !
In prison hast thou spent a pilgrimage,
And like a hermit overpass'd thy days.—
Well, I will lock his counsel in my breast ;
And what I do imagine, let that rest.—
Keepers, convey him hence ; and I myself
Will see his burial better than his life.—

[Exeunt Keepers, bearing out MORTIMER.]

Here dies the dusky torch of Mortimer, Chok'd with ambition of the meaner sort :¹³—

at Southampton, the night before Henry sailed from that town for France, on the information of this very earl of March.

10 i. e. I acknowledge thee to be my heir ; the consequences which may be collected from thence I recommend it thee to draw.

11 Thus Milton, Paradise Lost, book iv. :—

'Like Teneriffe or Atlas unremov'd.'

12 The same thought occurs in the celebrated dialogue between Horace and Lydia. There is some resemblance to it in the following lines, supposed to be addressed by a married lady, who died very young, to her husband. Malone thinks that the inscription is in the church of Trent :—

'Immatura peri ; sed tu diuturnior annos
Vive meos, conjux optime, vive tuos.'

13 i. e. oppressed by those whose right to the crown was not so good as his own.

And, for those wrongs, those bitter injuries,
Which Somerset hath offer'd to my house,—
I doubt not, but with honour to redress:
And therefore haste I to the parliament;
Either to be restored to my blood,
Or make my ill¹ the advantage of my good.

[Exit.]

ACT III.

SCENE I. *The same. The Parliament House.*²

*Flourish. Enter KING HENRY, EXETER, GLOSTER, WARWICK, SOMERSET, and SUFFOLK; the Bishop of Winchester, RICHARD PLANTAGENET, and others. GLOSTER offers to put up a Bill:*³ Winchester snatches it and tears it.

Win. Com'st thou with deep premeditated lines,
With written pamphlets studiously devis'd,
Humphrey of Gloster? if thou canst accuse,
Or aught intend'st to lay unto my charge,
Do it without invention suddenly;
As I with sudden and extemporal speech
Purpose to answer what thou canst object.

Glo. Presumptuous priest! this place commands
my patience,

Or thou should'st find thou hast dishonour'd me.
Think not, although in writing I prefer'd

The manner of thy vile outrageous crimes,
That therefore I have forg'd, or am not able Verbatim to rehearse the method of my pen:
No, prelate; such is thy audacious wickedness,
Thy lewd, pestiferous, and dissensious pranks,
As very infants prattle of thy pride.

Thou art a most pernicious usurer;
Froward by nature, enemy to peace;
Lascivious, wanton, more than well beseems
A man of thy profession and degree;
And for thy treachery, What's more manifest?
In that thou laid'st a trap to take my life,
As well at London Bridge, as at the Tower?
Beside, I fear me, if thy thoughts were sifted,
The king, thy sovereign, is not quite exempt
From envious malice of thy swelling heart.

Win. Gloster, I do defy thee.—Lords, vouchsafe
To give me hearing what I shall reply.

If I were covetous, ambitious, or perverse,
As he will have me, How am I so poor?
Or how haps it, I seek not to advance
Or raise myself, but keep my wonted calling?
And for dissension, Who preferreth peace
More than I do,—except I be provok'd?
No, my good lords, it is not that offends;
It is not that, that hath incens'd the duke:
It is, because no one should sway but he;
No one, but he, should be about the king;
And that engenders thunder in his breast,
And makes him roar these accusations forth.
But he shall know, I am as good——

Glo. As good? Thou bastard of my grandfather!⁴

Win. Ay, lordly sir; For what are you, I pray,
But one imperious in another's throne?

Glo. Am I not the protector, saucy priest?

Win. And am I not a prelate of the church?

Glo. Yes, as an outlaw in a castle keeps,
And useth it to patronage his theft.

Win. Unreverent Gloster!

Glo. Thou art reverent
Touching thy spiritual function, not thy life.

¹ My ill is my ill usage. This sentiment resembles another of Falstaff, in the Second Part of King Henry IV. — "I will turn diseases to commodity."

² This parliament was held in 1426 at Leicester, though here represented to have been held in London. King Henry was now in the fifth year of his age. In the first parliament, which was held at London shortly after his father's death, his mother Queen Katharine brought the young king from Windsor to the metropolis, and sat on the throne with the infant in her lap.

³ I. e. articles of accusation.

⁴ The bishop of Winchester was an illegitimate son

Win. This Rome shall remedy.

War.

Roam¹ thither then

Som. My lord, it were your duty to forbear.

War. Ay, see the bishop be not overborne.

Som. Methinks, my lord should be religious,
And know the office that belongs to such.

War. Methinks, his lordship should be humbler,
It fitteth not a prelate so to plead.

Som. Yes, when his holy state is touch'd so near.

War. State holy, or unhallow'd, what of that?
Is not his grace protector to the king?

Plan. Plantagenet, I see, must hold his tongue;
Lest it be said, Speak, sirrah, when you should;
Must your bold verdict enter talk with lords?

Else would I have a fling at Winchester. [Aside.]

K. Hen. Uncles of Gloster, and of Winchester,
The special watchmen of our English weal;

I would prevail, if prayers might prevail,
To join your hearts in love and amity.

O, what a scandal is it to our crown,
That two such noble peers as ye, should jar!

Believe me, lords, my tender years can tell,
Civil dissension is a viperous worm,

That gnaws the bowels of the commonwealth.—

[A noise within; Down with the tawny coats!
What tumult's this?

War. An uproar, I dare warrant,
Begun through malice of the bishop's men.

[A noise again; Stones! Stones!

Enter the Mayor of London, attended.

May. O, my good lords,—and virtuous Henry,— Pity the city of London, pity us!

The bishop and the duke of Gloster's men,
Forbidden late to carry any weapon,

Have fill'd their pockets full of pebble-stones;
And, banding themselves in contrary parts,

Do pelt so fast at one another's pate,
That many have their giddy brains knock'd out:

Our windows are broke down in every street,
And we, for fear, compell'd to shut our shops.

Enter, skirmishing, the Retainers of GLOSTER and WINCHESTER, with bloody pates.

K. Hen. We charge you, on alligiance to ourself,

To hold your slaughter'ing hands, and keep the peace.
Pray, uncle Gloster, mitigate this strife.

1 Serv. Nay, if we be Forbidden stones, we'll fall to it with our teeth.

2 Serv. Do what ye dare, we are as resolute.
[Skirmish again.]

Glo. You of my household, leave this peevish
broil,

And set this unaccustom'd⁶ fight aside.

3 Serv. My lord, we know your grace to be a man
Just and upright; and, for your royal birth,

Inferior to none, but his majesty:
And ere that we will suffer such a prince,

So kind a father of the commonweal,
To be disgraced by an inhorn mate,

We, and our wives, and children, all will fight,
And have our bodies slaughter'd by thy foes.

1 Serv. Ay, and the very parings of our nails
Shall pitch a field, when we are dead.

[Skirmish again.]
Glo. Slay, stay, I say!

And, if you love me, as you say you do,
Let me persuade you to forbear a while.

K. Hen. O, how this discord doth afflict my soul!—

of John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster, by Katharine Swynford, whom the duke afterwards married.

⁵ The jingle between roam and Rome is common to other writers.

⁶ Johnson explains unaccustomed by unseemly, indecent; and in a note on Romeo and Juliet he says that he thinks he has observed it used in old books for wonderful, powerful, efficacious. But he could find no instances of either of these strange uses of the word when he compiled his dictionary.

⁷ I. e. a bookish person, a pedant, applied in contempt to a scholar. Inhornisms and inhorn-terms were common expressions.

Can you, my lord of Winchester, behold
My sighs and tears, and will not once relent?
Who should be pitiful, if you be not?
Or who should study to prefer a peace,
If holy churchmen take delight in broils?

War. My lord protector, yield;—yield, Winchester;

Except you mean, with obstinate repulse,
To slay your sovereign, and destroy the realm.
You see what mischief, and what murder too,
Hath been enacted through your enmity;
Then be at peace, except ye thirst for blood.

Win. He shall submit, or I will never yield.

Glo. Compassion on the king commands me stoop;
Or, I would see his heart out, ere the priest
Should ever get that privilege of me.

War. Behold, my lord of Winchester, the duke
Hath banish'd moody discontented fury,
As by his smoothed brows it doth appear:
Why look you still so stern, and tragical?

Glo. Here, Winchester, I offer thee my hand.

K. Hen. Fye, uncle Beaufort! I have heard you preach,

That malice was a great and grievous sin:
And will not you maintain the thing you teach,
But prove a chief offender in the same?

War. Sweet king!—the bishop hath a kindly gird.¹

For shame, my lord of Winchester! relent;
What, shall a child instruct you what to do?

Win. Well, duke of Gloster, I will yield to thee;
Love for thy love, and hand for hand I give.

Glo. Ay: but, I fear me, with a hollow heart.—
See here, my friends, and loving countrymen;
This token serveth for a flag of truce,
Betwixt ourselves, and all our followers:
So help me God, as I dissemble not!

Win. So help me God, as I intend it not!

K. Hen. O, loving uncle, kind duke of Gloster,
How joyful am I made by this contract!—
Away, my masters! trouble us no more;
But join in friendship, as your lords have done.

1 Serv. Content; I'll to the surgeon's.

2 Serv. And so will I.

3 Serv. And I will see what physic the tavern affords.

War. Accept this scroll, most gracious sovereign;
Which, in the right of Richard Plantagenet,
We do exhibit to your majesty.

Glo. Well urg'd, my lord of Warwick;—for, sweet prince,

And if your grace mark every circumstance,
You have great reason to do Richard right:
Especially, for those occasions
At Eltham-place I told your majesty.

K. Hen. And those occasions, uncle, were of force:

Therefore, my loving lords, our pleasure is,
That Richard be restored to his blood.

War. Let Richard be restored to his blood;
So shall his father's wrongs be recompens'd.

Win. As will the rest, so willesh Winchester.

K. Hen. If Richard will be true, not that alone,
But all the whole inheritance I give,
That doth belong unto the house of York,
From whence you spring by lineal descent.

Plan. Thy humble servant vows obedience,
And humble service, till the point of death.

K. Hen. Stoop then, and set your knee against my foot;

And, in *reguerdon*² of that duty done,
I girt thee with the valiant sword of York:
Rise, Richard, like a true Plantagenet;
And rise created princely duke of York.

¹ A kindly gird is a kind or gentle reproof. A gird, properly, is a cutting reply, a sarcasm, or taunting speech.

² Reguerdon is recompense, reward. It is perhaps a corruption of regardum, Latin of the middle ages.

³ Ignes suppositos cineri doloso.—Hor.

⁴ i. e. so will the malignity of this discord propagate itself, and advance

Plan. And so thrive Richard, as thy foes may fall!
And as my duty springs, so perish they
That grudge one thought against your majesty!

All. Welcome, high prince, the mighty duke of York!

Som. Perish, base prince, ignoble duke of York!
[Aside.]

Glo. Now will it best avail your majesty,
To cross the seas, and to be crown'd in France:
The presence of a king engenders love
Amongst his subjects, and his loyal friends;
As it disanimates his enemies.

K. Hen. When Gloster says the word, King Henry goes;

For friendly counsel cuts off many foes.

Glo. Your ships already are in readiness.

[Exeunt all but EXETER.]

Exe. Ay, we may march in England, or in France,
Not seeing what is likely to ensue;
This late dissension, grown betwixt the peers,
Burns under feigned ashes of forg'd love,³
And will at last break out into a flame:
As fester'd members rot but by degrees,
Till bones, and flesh, and sinews, fall away,
So will this base and envious discord breed.⁴
And now I fear that fatal prophecy,
Which in the time of Henry, nam'd the fifth,
Was in the mouth of every sucking babe,—
That Henry, born at Monmouth, should win all;
And Henry, born at Windsor, should lose all:
Which is so plain, that Exeter doth wish
His days may finish ere that hapless time. [Exit.]

SCENE II. France. Before Rouen. Enter LA PUCELLE disguised, and Soldiers dressed like Countrymen, with Sacks upon their Backs.

Puc. These are the city gates, the gates of Rouen,
Through which our policy must make a breach:
Take heed, be wary how you place your words;
Talk like the vulgar sort of market-men,
That come to gather money for their corn.
If we have entrance (as, I hope, we shall),
And that we find the slothful watch but weak,
I'll by a sign give notice to our friends,
That Charles the Dauphin may encounter them.

1 Sold. Our sacks shall be a mean to sack the city,
And we be lords and rulers over Rouen;
Therefore we'll knock. [Knocks.]

Guard. [Within.] Qui est la?

Puc. Paisans, pauvres gens de France:

Poor market-folks, that come to sell their corn.

Guard. Enter, go in; the market-bell is rung.

Puc. Now, Rouen,⁵ I'll shake thy bulwarks to the ground. [PUCELLE, &c. enter the City.]

Enter CHARLES, Bastard of Orleans, ALENÇON and Forces.

Char. Saint Dennis bless this happy stratagem!
And once again we'll sleep secure in Rouen.

Bast. Here enter'd Pucelle, and her practisants;⁷
Now she is there, how will she specify
Where is the best and safest passage in?

Alen. By thrushing out a torch from yonder tower;

Which, once discern'd, shows, that her meaning is,—
No way to that,⁸ for weakness, which she enter'd.

Enter LA PUCELLE on a Battlement; holding out a Torch burning.

Puc. Behold, this is the happy wedding torch,
That joineth Rouen unto her countrymen:
But burning fatal to the Talbotites.

Bast. See, noble Charles! the beacon of our friend,
The burning torch in yonder turret stands.

⁵ The duke of Exeter died shortly after the meeting of this parliament, and the earl of Warwick was appointed governor or tutor to the king in his room.

⁶ Rouen was anciently written and pronounced Roaen.

⁷ Practice, in the language of the time, was treachery or insidious stratagem. Practisants are therefore confederates in treachery.

⁸ i. e. no way like or compared to that.

Char. Now shine it like a comet of revenge,
A prophet to the fall of all our foes!

Alen. Defer no time, delays have dangerous ends;
Enter, and cry—The Dauphin!—presently,
And then do execution on the watch. [They enter.]

Alarums. Enter TALBOT, and certain English.

Tal. France, thou shalt rue this treason with thy tears,

If Talbot but survive thy treachery.—

Pucelle, that witch, that damned sorceress,
Hath wrought this hellish mischief unawares,
That hardly we escaped the pride¹ of France.

[Exeunt to the Town.]

Alarum: Excursions. Enter from the Town, BEDFORD, brought in sick in a Chair, with TALBOT, BURGUNDY, and the English Forces. Then, enter on the Walls, LA PUCELLE, CHARLES, Bastard, ALENÇON, and others.

Puc. Good morrow, gallants! want ye corn for bread?

I think, the duke of Burgundy will fast,
Before he'll buy again at such a rate:

'Twas full of darnel;² Do you like the taste?

Bur. Scoff on, vile fiend, and shameless courtesan!

I trust, ere long, to choke thee with thine own,
And make thee curse the harvest of that corn.

Char. Your grace may starve, perhaps, before that time.

Bed. O, let no words, but deeds, revenge this treason!

Puc. What will you do, good gray-beard? break a lance,

And run a tilt at death within a chair?

Tal. Foul fiend of France, and hag of all despite,
Encompass'd with thy lustful paramours!

Becomes it thee to taunt his valiant age,
And twit with cowardice a man half dead?

Damsel, I'll have a bout with you again,
Or else let Talbot perish with this shame.

Puc. Are you so hot, sir?—Yet, Pucelle, hold thy peace;

If Talbot do but thunder, rain will follow.—

[TALBOT, and the rest, consult together.]

God speed the parliament! who shall be the speaker?
Tal. Dare ye come forth and meet us in the field?

Puc. Belike, your lordship takes us then for fools,
To try if that our own be ours, or no.

Tal. I speak not to that railing Hecate,

But unto thee, Alençon, and the rest;

Will ye, like soldiers, come and fight it out?

Alen. Signior, no.

Tal. Signior, hang!—base muleteers of France!
Like peasant footboys do they keep the walls;
And dare not take up arms like gentlemen.

Puc. Captains, away: let's get us from the walls;
For Talbot means no goodness, by his looks.—
God be wi' you, my lord! we came, sir, but to tell you
That we are here.

[Exeunt LA PUCELLE, &c. from the Walls.]

Tal. And there will we be too, ere it be long,
Or else reproach be Talbot's greatest fame!—

Vow, Burgundy, by honour of thy house,
(Prick'd on by public wrongs, sustain'd in Franco,) Either to get the town again, or die:
And I—as sure as English Henry lives,
And as his father here was conqueror;
As sure as in this late-betrayed town

Great Cœur-de-lion's heart was buried;
So sure I swear, to get the town, or die.

Bur. My vows are equal partners with thy vows.

Tal. But, ere we go, regard this dying prince,
The valiant duke of Bedford:—Come, my lord,
We will bestow you in some better place,
Fitter for sickness, and for crazy age.

Bed. Lord Talbot, do not so dishonour me:

Here will I sit before the walls of Rouen,

And will be partner of your weal, or woe.

Bur. Courageous Bedford, let us now persuade you.

Bed. Not to be gone from hence; for once I read,
That stout Pendragon, in his litter, sick,³
Came to the field, and vanquished his foes:
Methinks, I should revive the soldiers' hearts,
Because I ever found them as myself.

Tal. Undaunted spirit in a dying breast!—
Then be it so:—Heavens keep old Bedford safe!—
And now no more ado, brave Burgundy,
But gather we our forces out of hand,
And set upon our boasting enemy.

[Exeunt BURGUNDY, TALBOT, and Forces, leaving BEDFORD, and others.]

Alarums: Excursions. Enter SIR JOHN FASTOLFE and a Captain.

Cap. Whither away, Sir John Fastolfe, in such haste?

Fast. Whither away? to save myself by flight;
We are like to have the overthrow again.

Cap. What! will you fly, and leave Lord Talbot?

Fast. Ay,

All the Talbotts in the world to save my life. [Exit.]

Cap. Cowardly knight! ill fortune follow thee. [Exit.]

Retreat: Excursions. Enter, from the Town, LA PUCELLE, ALENÇON, CHARLES, &c. and exeunt, flying.

Bed. Now, quiet soul, depart when heaven please;
For I have seen our enemies' overthrow.

What is the trust or strength of foolish man?
They, that of late were daring with their scoffs,
Are glad and fain by flight to save themselves.

[Dies, and is carried off in his Chair.]

Alarum: Enter TALBOT, BURGUNDY, and others.

Tal. Lost, and recover'd in a day again!

'This is a double honour, Burgundy:

Yet, heavens have glory for this victory!

Bur. Warlike and martial Talbot, Burgundy
Enshrines thee in his heart; and there erects
Thy noble deeds, as valour's monument.

Tal. Thanks, gentle duke. But where is Pucelle now?

I think, her old familiar is asleep:

Now where's the Bastard's braves, and Charles his gleeks?⁵

What, all a-mort?⁶ Rouen hangs her head for grief,

That such a valiant company are fled.

Now will we take some order⁷ in the town,

Placing therein some expert officers;

And then depart to Paris, to the king;

For there young Harry, with his nobles, lies.

Bur. What wills Lord Talbot, pleaseth Burgundy.

Tal. But yet, before we go, let's not forget

The noble duke of Bedford, late deceas'd,

But see his exequies fulfill'd in Rouen;

A braver soldier never couched lance,

¹ Pride signifies haughty power. The same speaker afterwards says, in Act. iv. :—

"And from the pride of Gallia rescued thee."

² Darnel (says Gerard, in his Herbal) hurteth the eyes, and maketh them dim, if it happen either in corn for bread, or drinke.³ Hence the old proverb—Lolium victitare, applied to such as were dim-sighted. Thus also Ovid. Fast. i. 691 :—

"Et careant lolis oculos vitantibus agri."

La Pucelle means to intimate that the corn she carried with her had produced the same effect on the guards of Rouen; otherwise they would have seen through her disguise, and defeated her stratagem.

³ This is from Harding's Chronicle, who gives this account of Uther Pendragon:—

"For which the king ordained a horse-litter

To bear him so then unto Verolame,

Where Occa lay and Oysa also in feer,

That Saynt Albons, now hight of noble fame,

Bet downe the walles, but to him forthe thei came

Wher in battayl Occa and Oysa were alayne,

The felde he had, and thereof was ful fayne."

⁴ The Duke of Bedford died at Rouen in September

1435; but not in any action before that town.

⁵ Scoffe

⁶ i. e. what quite cast down, or dispirited.

⁷ Make some necessary dispositions.

A gentler heart did never sway in court :
But kings and mightiest potentates must die ;
For that's the end of human misery. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The same. The Plains near the City.
Enter CHARLES, the Bastard, ALENÇON, LA
PUCELLE, and Forces.

Puc. Dismay not, princes, at this accident,
Nor grieve that Rouen is so recovered ;
Care is no cure, but rather corrosive,
For things that are not to be remedied.
Let frantic Talbot triumph for a while,
And like a peacock sweep along his tail :
We'll pull his plumes, and take away his train,
If Dauphin, and the rest, will be but rul'd.

Char. We have been guided by thee hitherto,
And of thy cunning had no diffidence ;
One sudden foil shall never breed distrust.

Bast. Search out thy wit for secret policies,
And we will make thee famous through the world.

Alen. We'll set thy statue in some holy place,
And have thee reverenc'd like a blessed saint ;
Employ thee then, sweet virgin, for our good.

Puc. Then thus it must be ; this doth Joan devise :
By fair persuasions, mix'd with sugar'd words,
We will entice the duke of Burgundy
To leave the Talbot, and to follow us.

Char. Ay, marry, sweeting, if we could do that,
France were no place for Henry's warriors ;
Nor should that nation boast it so with us,
But be extirp'd¹ from our provinces.

Alen. For ever should they be expul's² from France,

And not have title to an earldom here.

Puc. Your honours shall perceive how I will work,
To bring this matter to the wished end.

[Drums heard.]
Hark ! by the sound of drum, you may perceive
Their powers are marching unto Paris-ward.

An English March. Enter, and pass over at a distance, TALBOT and his Forces.

There goes the Talbot with his colours spread ;
And all the troops of English after him.

A French March. Enter the DUKE of BURGUNDY and Forces.

Now, in the rearward, comes the duke, and his ;
Fortune, in favour, makes him lag behind.
Summon a parley, we will talk with him.

[A Parley sounded.]

Char. A parley with the duke of Burgundy.

Bur. Who craves a parley with the Burgundy ?

Puc. The princely Charles of France, thy countryman.

Bur. What say'st thou, Charles ? for I am marching hence.

Char. Speak, Pucelle ; and enchant him with thy words.

Puc. Brave Burgundy, undoubted hope of France !
Stay, let thy humble handmaid speak to thee.

Bur. Speak on ; but be not over-tedious.

Puc. Look on thy country, look on fertile France,
And see the cities and the towns defac'd
By wasting ruin of the cruel foe !

As looks the mother on her lowly babe,
When death doth close his tender dying eyes,
See, see, the pining malady of France ;
Behold the wounds, the most unnatural wounds,
Which thou thyself hast given her woeful breast !
O, turn thy edged sword another way ;
Strike those that hurt, and hurt not those that help !
One drop of blood, drawn from thy country's bosom,

² Expul's² is expell'd.

³ Another mistake. The duke was not liberated till after Burgundy's decline to the French interest ; which did not happen, by the way, till some years after the execution of La Pucelle ; nor was that during the regency of York, but of Bedford.

⁴ Haughty does not mean disdainful, or violent, as Johnson supposed ; but elevated, high-spirited.

⁵ The inconstancy of the French was always the subject of satire. 'I have read (says Johnson) a disserta-

Should grieve thee more than streams of foreign gore ;
Return thee, therefore, with a flood of tears,
And wash away thy country's stained spots !

Bur. Either she hath bewitch'd me with her words,
Or nature makes me suddenly relent.

Puc. Besides, all French and France exclaims on thee,

Doubting thy birth and lawful progeny.

Who join'st thou with, but with a lordly nation,

That will not trust thee, but for profit's sake ?

When Talbot hath set footing once in France,

And fashion'd thee that instrument of ill,

Who then but English Henry will be lord,

And thou be thrust out, like a fugitive ?

Call we to mind,—and mark but this, for proof ;—

Was not the duke of Orleans thy foe ?

And was he not in England prisoner ?

But, when they heard he was thine enemy,

They set him free,³ without his ransom paid

In spite of Burgundy, and all his friends.

See then ! thou fightest against thy countrymen,

And join'st with them will be thy slaughter-men.

Come, come, return ; return, thou wand'ring lord,

Charles, and the rest, will take thee in their arms.

Bur. I am vanquished : these haughty⁴ words of hers

Have batter'd me like roaring cannon shot,

And made me almost yield upon my knees.—

Forgive me, country, and sweet countrymen !

And, lords, accept this hearty kind embrace :

My forces and my power of men are yours ;

So, farewell, Talbot ; I'll no longer trust thee.

Puc. Done like a Frenchman, turn, and turn again !⁵

Char. Welcome, brave duke ! thy friendship makes us fresh.

Bast. And doth beget new courage in our breasts.

Alen. Pucelle hath bravely played her part in this,

And doth deserve a coronet of gold.

Char. Now let us on, my lords, and join our powers ;

And seek how we may prejudice the foe. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. Paris. A Room in the Palace. Enter KING HENRY, GLOSTER, and other Lords, VERNON, BASSET, &c. To them TALBOT, and some of his Officers.

Tal. My gracious prince,—and honourable peers,— Hearing of your arrival in this realm,

I have a while given truce unto my wars,

To do my duty to my sovereign :

In sign whereof, this arm—that hath reclaim'd

To your obedience fifty fortresses,

Twelve cities, and seven walled towns of strength,

Beside five hundred prisoners of esteem,—

Lets fall his sword before your highness' feet ;

And, with submissive loyalty of heart,

Ascribes the glory of his conquest got,

First to my God, and next unto your grace.

K. Hen. Is this the Lord Talbot, uncle Gloster,⁶

That hath so long been resident in France ?

Glo. Yes, if it please your majesty, my liege.

K. Hen. Welcome, brave captain, and victorious lord !

When I was young (as yet I am not old),

I do remember how my father said,⁷

A stouter champion never handled sword.

Long since we were resolv'd⁸ of your truth,

Your faithful service, and your toil in war ;

Yet never have you tasted our reward,

Or been requerd⁹ with so much as thanks,

Because till now we never saw your face :

Therefore, stand up ; and, for these good deserts,

tion writen to prove that the index of the wind upon our steeples was made in form of a cock to ridicule the French for their frequent changes.¹

⁶ Hamner supplied the apparent deficiency in this line, by reading—

'Is this the fam'd Lord Talbot,' &c.

⁷ Malone remarks that 'Henry was but nine months old when his father died, and never saw him.' The poet did not perhaps deem historical accuracy necessary.

⁸ Convinced.

⁹ Rewarded

We here create you earl of Shrewsbury;
And in our coronation take your place.

[Exeunt KING HENRY, GLOSTER, TALBOT, and Nobles.]

Ver. Now, sir, to you, that were so hot at sea,
Disgracing of these colours! that I wear
In honour of my noble lord of York.—
Dar'st thou maintain the former words thou spak'st?

Bas. Yes, sir; as well as you dare patronage
The envious barking of your saucy tongue
Against my lord the duke of Somerset.

Ver. Sirrah, thy lord I honour as he is.

Bas. Why, what is he? as good a man as York.

Ver. Hark ye; not so: in witness, take ye that.

[Strikes him.]

Bas. Villain, thou knowest the law of arms is such,

That whoso draws a sword, 'tis present death;²
Or else this blow should broach thy dearest blood.
But I'll unto his majesty, and crave

I may have liberty to venge this wrong;
When thou shalt see, I'll meet thee to thy cost.

Ver. Well, miscreant, I'll be there as soon as you;
And, after, meet you sooner than you would.

[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. The same. A Room of State. Enter

KING HENRY, GLOSTER, EXETER, YORK, SURFOLK, SOMERSET, WINCHESTER, WARWICK, TALBOT, the Governor of Paris, and others.

Glo. Lord bishop, set the crown upon his head.

Win. God save King Henry, of that name the sixth!

Glo. Now, governor of Paris, take your oath,
[Governor kneels.]

That you elect no other king but him:
Esteem none friends, but such as are his friends;
And none your foes, but such as shall pretend³
Malicious practices against his state:
This shall ye do, so help you righteous God!

[Exeunt Gov. and his Train.]

Enter SIR JOHN FASTOLFE.

Fast. My gracious sovereign, as I rode from Calais,

To haste unto your coronation,
A letter was deliver'd to my hands,
Writ to your grace from the duke of Burgundy.

Tal. Shame to the duke of Burgundy, and thee!
I vow'd base knight, when I did meet thee next,
To tear the garter from thy craven⁴ leg,

[Plucking it off.]

(Which I have done,) because unworthily
Thou wast installed in that high degree.—

Pardon me, princely Henry, and the rest:

This dastard, at the battle of Patay,⁵

When but in all I was six thousand strong,
And that the French were almost ten to one,—

Before we met, or that a stroke was given,

Like to a trusty squire, did run away;

In which assault we lost twelve hundred men;

Myself, and divers gentlemen beside,

Were there surpris'd and taken prisoners.

Then judge, great lords, if I have done amiss;

1 l. e. the badge of a rose.

2 By the ancient law before the conquest, fighting in the king's palace, or before the king's judges, was punished with death. And still by the Stat. 33 Hen. VIII. c. xii. maliciously striking in the king's palace, whereby blood is drawn, is punishable by perpetual imprisonment and fine, at the king's pleasure, and also with loss of the offender's right hand. Stowe gives a circumstantial account of Sir Edmond Knevet being found guilty of this offence, with the ceremonials for carrying the sentence into execution. He petitioned the king to take his left hand instead of his right; and the king was pleased to pardon him altogether.—Annals, edit. 1605, p. 978.

3 To pretend is to intend, to design.

4 Warburton would read 'thy craven leg.' Craven is mean, dastardly.

Or whether that such cowards ought to wear
This ornament of knighthood, yea, or no.

Glo. To say the truth, this fact was infamous,
And ill beseming any common man;

Much more a knight, a captain, and a leader.

Tal. When first this order was ordain'd, my lords,

Knights of the garter were of noble birth:

Valiant, and virtuous, full of haughty⁶ courage,

Such as were grown to credit by the wars;

Not fearing death, nor shrinking for distress,

But always resolute in most extremes.⁷

He then, that is not furnish'd in this sort,

Doth but usurp the sacred name of knight,

Profaning this most honourable order;

And should, (if I were worthy to be judge,)

Be quite degraded, like a hedge-born swain

That doth presume to boast of gentle blood.

K. Hen. Stain to thy countrymen! thou hear'st thy doom:

Be packing therefore, thou that wast a knight;

Henceforth we banish thee, on pain of death.—

[Exit FASTOLFE.]

And now, my lord protector, view the letter

Sent from our uncle duke of Burgundy.

Glo. What means his grace, that he hath chang'd his style? [Viewing the superscription.]

No more but, plain and bluntly,—To the king?

Hath he forgot, he is his sovereign?

Or doth this churlish superscription

Pretend⁸ some alteration in good will?

What's here?—I have upon especial cause,—

[Reads.]

Mov'd with compassion of my country's wreck,

Together with the pitiful complaints

Of such as your oppression feeds upon,—

Forsaken your pernicious faction,

And join'd with Charles, the rightful king of France.

O monstrous treachery! Can this be so;

That in alliance, amity, and oaths,

There should be found such false dissembling guile?

K. Hen. What! doth my uncle Burgundy revolt?

Glo. He doth, my lord; and is become your foe.

K. Hen. Is that the worst this letter doth contain?

Glo. It is the worst, and all, my lord, he writes.

K. Hen. Why then, Lord Talbot there shall talk
with him,

And give him chastisement for this abuse:—

My lord, how say you? are you not content?

Tal. Content, my liege? Yes; but that I am prevented,⁹

I should have begg'd I might have been employ'd.

K. Hen. Then gather strength, and march unto him straight:

Let him perceive how ill we brook his treason;

And what offence it is, to flout his friends.

Tal. I go, my lord; in heart desiring still,

You may behold confusion of your foes. [Exit.]

Enter VERNON and BASSET.

Ver. Grant me the combat, gracious sovereign!

Bas. And me, my lord, grant me the combat too!

York. This is my servant; hear him, noble prince!

Som. And this is mine; Sweet Henry, favour him!

K. Hen. Be patient, lords; and give them leave to speak.—

Say, gentlemen, What makes you thus exclaim?

And wherefore crave you combat? or with whom?

5 The old copy has Poitiers instead of Patay. The battle of Poitiers was fought in 1357, the 31st of King Edward III. and the scene now lies in the 7th of King Henry VI. viz. 1428. The action happened (according to Holinshed) 'neere unto a village in Beausse, called Pataye.—From this battle departed, without any stroke stricken, Sir John Fastolfe, the same yeere by his valiantness elected into the order of the garter. But for doubt of misdealing at this brunt, the duke of Bedford tooke from him the image of St. George and his garter,' &c.

6 Vide note 8 on p. 13; and note 4 on p. 17.

7 l. e. in greatest extremities. More and most were used by our ancestors for greater and greatest.

8 See note 3.

9 Prevented is anticipated.

Ver. With him, my lord, for he hath done me wrong.

Bas. And I with him; for he hath done me wrong.

K. Hen. What is that wrong whereof you both complain?

First let me know, and then I'll answer you.

Bas. Crossing the sea, from England into France, This fellow here, with envious, carping tongue, Upbraided me about the rose I wear; Saying—the sanguine colour of the leaves Did represent my master's blushing cheeks, When stubbornly he did repugn¹ the truth, About a certain question in the law, Argu'd betwixt the duke of York and him; With other vile and ignominious terms: In confutation of which rude reproach, And in defence of my lord's worthiness, I crave the benefit of law of arms.

Ver. And that is my petition, noble lord; For though he seem, with forged quaint conceit, To set a gloss upon his bold intent, Yet know, my lord, I was provok'd by him; And he first took exceptions at this badge, Pronouncing—that the paleness of this flower Bewray'd² the faintness of my master's heart.

York. Will not this malice, Somerset, be left?

Som. Your private grudge, my lord of York, will out,

Though ne'er so cunningly you smother it.

K. Hen. Good lord! what madness rules in brain-sick men;

When, for so slight and frivolous a cause,

Such factious emulations shall arise!—

Good cousins both, of York and Somerset,

Quiet yourselves, I pray, and be at peace,

York. Let this dissension first be tried by fight,

And then your highness shall command a peace.

Som. The quarrel toucheth none but us alone;

Between ourselves let us decide it then.

York. There is my pledge; accept it, Somerset.

Ver. Nay, let it rest where it began at first.

Bas. Confirm it so, mine honourable lord.

Glo. Confirm it so? Confounded be your strife!

And perish ye, with your audacious prate!

Presumptuous vassals! are you not asham'd,

With this immodest, clamorous outrage,

To trouble and disturb the king and us?

And you, my lords,—methinks you do not well,

To bear with their perverse objections;

Much less, to take occasion from their mouths

To raise a mutiny betwixt yourselves;

Let me persuade you take a better course.

Exe. It grieves his highness;—Good my lords, be friends.

K. Hen. Come hither, you that would be combatants:

Henceforth, I charge you, as you love our favour,

Quite to forget this quarrel and the cause.—

And you, my lords,—remember where we are:

In France, amongst a fickle wavering nation:

If they perceive dissension in our looks,

And that within ourselves we disagree,

How will their grudging stomachs be provok'd

To wilful disobedience, and rebel?

Beside, What infamy will there arise,

When foreign princes shall be certified,

That, for a toy, a thing of no regard,

King Henry's peers, and chief nobility,

Destroy'd themselves, and lost the realm of France?

O, think upon the conquest of my father,

My tender years; and let us not forego

That for a trifle, that was bought with blood!

Let me be umpire in this doubtful strife.

I see no reason, if I wear this rose,

[Putting on a red Rose.

That any one should therefore be suspicious

I more incline to Somerset than York:

Both are my kinsmen, and I love them both:

As well may they upbraid me with my crown,

Because, forsooth, the king of Scots is crown'd.

But your discretions better can persuade,

Than I am able to instruct or teach:

And therefore, as we hither came in peace,

So let us still continue peace and love.—

Cousin of York, we institute your grace

To be our regent in these parts of France:

And good my lord of Somerset, unite

Your troops of horsemen with his bands of foot;—

And, like true subjects, sons of your progenitors,

Go cheerfully together, and digest

Your angry choler on your enemies.

Ourselves, my lord protector, and the rest,

After some respite, will return to Calais;

From thence to England; where I hope ere long

To be presented by your victories,

With Charles, Alençon, and that traitorous rout.

[Flourish. Exeunt K. HEN. GLO. SOM.

WIN. SUF. and BASSET.

War. My lord of York, I promise you, the king

Prettily, methought, did play the orator.

York. And so he did; but yet I like it not,

In that he wears the badge of Somerset.

War. Tush! that was but his fancy, blame him

not;

I dare presume, sweet prince, he thought no harm.

York. And if I wist he did,³—But let it rest;

Other affairs must now be managed.

[Exeunt YORK, WARWICK, and VERNON.

Exe. Well didst thou, Richard, to suppress thy voice:

For, had the passions of thy heart burst out,

I fear we should have seen decider⁴ there

More rancorous spite, more furious raging broils,

Than yet can be imagin'd or suppos'd.

But howsoever, no simple man that sees

This jarring discord of nobility,

This should'ring of each other in the court,

This factious bandying of their favourites,

But that it doth presage some ill event.

'Tis much,⁵ when sceptres are in children's hands;

But more, when envy⁶ breeds unkind⁷ division;

There comes the ruin, there begins confusion.

[Exit.

SCENE II. France. Before Bordeaux. Enter

TALBOT, with his Forces.

Tal. Go to the gates of Bordeaux, trumpeter,

Summon their general unto the wall.

Trumpet sounds a Parley. Enter, on the Walls, the General of the French Forces, and others.

English John Talbot, captains, calls you forth,

Servant in arms to Harry king of England;

And thus he would,—Open your city gates,

Be humble to us; call my sovereign yours,

And do him homage as obedient subjects,

And I'll withdraw me and my bloody power:

But, if you frown upon this proffer'd peace,

You tempt the fury of my three attendants,

Lean famine, quartering steel, and climbing fire;

Who, in a moment, even with the earth

Shall lay your stately and air-braving towers,

If you forsake the offer of our love.

Gen. Thou ominous and fearful owl of death,

Our nation's terror, and their bloody scourge!

he instantly checks his threat with, let it rest. It is an example of a rhetorical figure not uncommon.

⁴ 'Tis an alarming circumstance, a thing of great consequence, or much weight.

⁵ Envy, in old English writers, frequently means malice, enmity.

⁶ Unkind is unnatural.

⁷ The old editions read 'their love.' Sir Thomas

Hanmer altered it to 'our love;' and I think, with Steevens, that the alteration should be adopted.

² i. e. discovered.

³ The old copy reads 'And if I wish he did;' an evident typographical error. York says that he is not pleased that the king should prefer the red rose, the badge of Somerset, his enemy; Warwick desires him not to be offended at it, as he dares say the king meant no harm. To which York, yet unsatisfied, hastily replies, in a menacing tone, 'If I thought he did;'—but

The period of thy tyranny approacheth.
On us thou canst not enter, but by death:
For, I protest, we are well fortified,
And strong enough to issue out and fight:
If thou retire, the Dauphin, well appointed,
Stands with the snares of war to tangle thee:
On either hand thee there are squadrons pitch'd,
To wall thee from the liberty of flight;
And no way canst thou turn thee for redress,
But death doth front thee with apparent spoil,
And pale destruction meets thee in the face.
Ten thousand French have ta'en the sacrament,
To rive their dangerous artillery!
Upon no Christian soul but English Talbot.
Lo! there thou stand'st, a breathing valiant man,
Of an invincible unconquer'd spirit:
This is the latest glory of thy praise,
That I, thy enemy, due² thee withal;
For ere the glass, that now begins to run,
Finish the process of his sandy hour,
These eyes, that see thee now well coloured,
Shall see thee wither'd, bloody, pale, and dead.

[Drum afar off.
Hark! hark! the Dauphin's drum, a warning bell,
Sings heavy music to thy timorous soul;
And mine shall ring thy dire departure out.

[Exeunt General, &c. from the Walls.
Tal. He fables not,³ I hear the enemy;—
Out, some light horsemen, and peruse their wings.—
O, negligent and heedless discipline!
How are we park'd, and bounded in a pale;
A little herd of England's timorous deer,
Maz'd with a yelping kennel of French curs!
If we be English deer, be then in blood:⁴
Not rascal-like, to fall down with a pinch;
But rather moody-mad, and desperate stags,
Turn on the bloody hounds with heads of steel,
And make the cowards stand aloof at bay:
Sell every man his life as dear as mine,
And they shall find dear dear of us, my friends.—
God, and Saint George! Talbot, and England's right!
Prosper our colours in this dangerous fight!

[Exeunt.
SCENE III. Plains in Gascony. Enter York, with Forces; to him a Messenger.

York. Are not the speedy scouts return'd again,
That dogg'd the mighty army of the Dauphin?
Mess. They are return'd, my lord; and give it out,
That he is march'd to Bordeaux with his power,
To fight with Talbot: As he march'd along,
By your espials⁵ were discovered,
Two mightier troops than that the Dauphin led;
Which join'd with him, and made their march for Bordeaux.

York. A plague upon that villain Somerset;
That thus delays my promised supply
Of horsemen, that were levied for this siege!
Renowned Talbot doth expect my aid;
And I am louted⁶ by a traitor villain,
And cannot help the noble chevalier:
God comfort him in this necessity!
If he miscarry, farewell wars in France.

Enter SIR WILLIAM LUCY.

Lucy. Thou princely leader of our English
strength,

Never so needful on the earth of France,
Spur to the rescue of the noble Talbot;
Who now is girdled with a waist of iron,
And hemm'd about with grim destruction:
To Bordeaux, warlike duke! to Bordeaux, York!
Else, farewell Talbot, France, and England's honour.

York. O God! that Somerset—who in proud
heart
Doth stop my cornets—were in Talbot's place!
So should we save a valiant gentleman,
By forfeiting a traitor and a coward.
Mad ire, and wrathful fury, make me weep,
That thus we die, while remiss traitors sleep.

Lucy. O, send some succour to the distress'd
lord!

York. He dies, we lose; I break my warlike word;
We mourn, France smiles; we lose, they daily get;
All 'long of this vile traitor Somerset.

Lucy. Then, God take mercy on brave Talbot's soul!

And on his son, young John; whom, two hours
since,

I met in travel toward his warlike father!
This seven years did not Talbot see his son;
And now they meet where both their lives are done.*

York. Alas! what joys shall noble Talbot have,
To bid his young son welcome to his grave?
Away! vexation almost stops my breath,
That sunder'd friends greet in the hour of death.—
Lucy, farewell: no more my fortune can,
But curse the cause I cannot aid the man.—
Maine, Blois, Poitiers, and Tours, are won away,
'Long all of Somerset, and his delay. [Exit.

Lucy. Thus, while the vulture⁷ of sedition
Feeds in the bosom of such great commanders,
Sleeping neglect doth betray to loss
The conquest of our scarce-cold conqueror,
That ever-living man of memory,
Henry the Fifth:—Whiles they each other cross,
Lives, honours, lands, and all, hurry to loss. [Exit.

SCENE IV. Other Plains of Gascony. Enter
SOMERSET, with his Forces; an Officer of TAL-
BOT's with him.

Som. It is too late; I cannot send them now:
This expedition was by York, and Talbot,
Too rashly plotted; all our general force
Might with a sally of the very town
Be buckled with: the over-daring Talbot
Hath sullied all his gloss of former honour,
By this unheedful, desperate, wild adventure:
York set him on to fight, and die in shame,
That, Talbot dead, great York might bear the name.
Off. Here is Sir William Lucy, who with me
Set from our o'ermatch'd forces forth for aid.

Enter SIR WILLIAM LUCY.

Som. How now, Sir William? whither were you sent?

Lucy. Whither, my lord? from bought and sold
Lord Talbot;¹⁰

Who, ring'd about¹¹ with bold adversity,
Cries out for noble York and Somerset,
To beat assailing death from his weak legions.

or baffled.¹ 'To be treated with contempt like a lout or country fellow,' says Malone. But the meaning of the word here is evidently loitered, retarded: and the following quotation from Cotgrave will show that this was sometimes the sense of to lout:—'Loricarder, to luske, lout, or lubber it; to loyter about like a master less man.'

7 — those sleeping stones
That as a waist do girdle you about.'

King John.

S. l. e. expended, consumed. Malone says that the word is still used in this sense in the western counties.

9 Alluding to the tale of Prometheus.

10 l. e. from one utterly ruined by the treacherous practices of others. The expression seems to have been proverbial; intimating that foul play had been used.

11 Encircled, environed.

1 'To rive their dangerous artillery' is merely a figurative way of expressing to discharge it. To rive is to burst; and burst is applied by Shakespeare more than once to thunder, or to a similar sound.

2 Due for endue, or giving due and merited praise.

3 So Milton's Comus:—

'She fables not, I feel that I do fear.'

4 In blood is a term of the forest; a deer was said to be in blood when in vigour or in good condition, and full of courage, here put in opposition to rascal, which was the term for the same animal when lean and out of condition.

5 Spies

6 'To lout may signify to depress, to lower, to dishonour,' says Johnson: but in his Dictionary he explains it to overpower. Steevens knows not what to make of it. 'to let down, to be subdued, or vanquished,

And whiles the honourable captain there
Drops bloody sweat from his war-wearied limbs,
And, in advantage ling'ring,¹ looks for rescue,
You, his false hopes, the trust of England's honour,
Keep off aloof with worthless emulation.²
Let not your private discord keep away
The levied succours that should lend him aid,
While he, renowned noble gentleman,
Yields up his life unto a world of odds:
Orleans the Bastard, Charles, and Burgundy,
Alençon, Reignier, compass him about,
And Talbot perisheth by your default.

Som. York set him on, York should have sent him aid.

Lucy. And York as fast upon your grace exclaims;

Swearing that you withhold his levied host,
Collected for this expedition.

Som. York lies; he might have sent and had the horse:

I owe him little duty, and less love;
And take foul scorn, to fawn on him by sending.

Lucy. The fraud of England, not the force of France,

Hath now entrapp'd the noble-minded Talbot:
Never to England shall he bear his life;
But dies, betrayed to fortune by your strife.

Som. Come, go; I will despatch the horsemen straight:

Within six hours they will be at his aid.

Lucy. Too late comes rescue; he is ta'en, or slain;
For fly he could not, if he would have fled;
And fly would Talbot never, though he might.

Som. If he be dead, brave Talbot, then adieu!

Lucy. His fame lives in the world, his shame in you. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V. The English Camp, near Bordeaux.
Enter TALBOT and JOHN his Son.

Tal. O young John Talbot! I did send for thee,
To tutor thee in stratagems of war;
That Talbot's name might be in thee reviv'd,
When sapless age, and weak unable limbs,
Should bring thy father to his drooping chair.
But,—O malignant and ill boding stars!—
Now thou art come unto a feast of death,³
A terrible and unavoided⁴ danger:

Therefore, dear boy, mount on my swiftest horse;
And I'll direct thee how thou shalt escape
By sudden flight: come, dally not, begone.

John. Is my name Talbot? and am I your son?
And shall I fly? O, if you love my mother,
Dishonour not her honourable name,
To make a bastard, and a slave of me:
The world will say—He is not Talbot's blood,
That basely fled, when noble Talbot stood.⁵

Tal. Fly, to revenge my death, if I be slain.

John. He, that flies so, will ne'er return again.

Tal. If we both stay, we both are sure to die.

John. Then let me stay; and, father, do you fly:
Your loss is great, so your regard⁶ should be;
My worth unknown, no loss is known in me.
Upon my death the French can little boast;
In yours they will, in you all hopes are lost.
Flight cannot stain the honour you have won;
But mine it will, that no exploit have done:
You fled for vantage every one will swear;
But, if I bow, they'll say—it was for fear.

There is no hope that ever I will stay,
If, the first hour, I shrink, and run away.

Here, on my knee, I beg mortality,
Rather than life preserv'd with infamy.

Tal. Shall all thy mother's hopes lie in one tomb?

² Emulation, here, signifies envious rivalry, not struggle for superior excellence.

³ To a field where death will be feasted with slaughter.

⁴ Unavoided for unavoidable.

⁵ For what reason this scene is written in rhyme (says Dr. Johnson) I cannot guess. If Shakespeare had not in other plays mingled his rhymes and blank verses

John. Ay, rather than I'll shame my mother's womb.

Tal. Upon my blessing I command thee go.

John. To fight I will, but not to fly the foe.

Tal. Part of thy father may be sav'd in thee.

John. No part of him, but will be shame in me
Tal. Thou never hadst renown, nor canst not lose it.

John. Yes, your renowned name: Shall flight abuse it?

Tal. Thy father's charge shall clear thee from that stain.

John. You cannot witness for me, being slain,
If death be so apparent, then both fly.

Tal. And leave my followers here, to fight, and die?

My age was never tainted with such shame.

John. And shall my youth be guilty of such blame?

No more can I be sever'd from your side,
Than can yourself yourself in twain divide:

Stay, go, do what you will, the like do I;

For live I will not, if my father die.

Tal. Then here I take my leave of thee, fair son,
Born to eclipse thy life this afternoon.

Come, side by side together live and die;

And soul with soul from France to heaven fly.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. A Field of Battle. Alarm: Excursions, wherein TALBOT's Son is hemmed about, and TALBOT rescues him.

Tal. Saint George and victory! fight, soldiers, fight!

The regent hath with Talbot broke his word,
And left us to the rage of France his sword.

Where is John Talbot?—pause, and take thy breath;
I gave thee life, and rescu'd thee from death.

John. O twice my father! twice am I thy son:

The life, thou gav'st me first, was lost and done;

Till with thy warlike sword, despite of fate,

To my determin'd⁷ time thou gav'st new date.

Tal. When from the Dauphin's crest thy sword struck fire,

It warm'd thy father's heart with proud desire

Of bold-fac'd victory. Then leaden age,

Quicken'd with youthful spleen, and warlike rage,

Beat down Alençon, Orleans, Burgundy,

And from the pride of Gallia rescu'd thee.

The ireful bastard Orleans—that drew blood

From thee, my boy; and had the maidenhood

Of thy first fight—I soon encountered;

And, interchanging blows, I quickly shed

Some of his bastard blood; and, in disgrace,

Bespoke him thus: Contaminated, base,

And misbegotten blood! I spill of thine,

Mean and right poor; for that pure blood of mine,

Which thou didst force from Talbot, my brave boy:—

Here, purposing the Bastard to destroy,

Came in strong rescue. Speak, thy father's care;

Art thou not weary, John? How dost thou fare?

Wilt thou yet leave the battle, boy, and fly,

Now thou art seal'd the son of chivalry?

Fly, to revenge my death, when I am dead;

The help of one stands me in little stead.

O, too much folly is it, well I wot,

To hazard all our lives in one small boat.

If I to-day die not with Frenchmen's rage,

To-morrow I shall die with mickle age:

By me they nothing gain, an if I stay,

'Tis but the short'ning of my life one day:

In thee thy mother dies, our household's name, in the same manner, I should have suspected that this dialogue had been part of some other poem, which was never finished, and that being loath to throw his labour away, he inserted it here.⁷ Mr. Boswell remarks that it was a practice common to all Shakespeare's contemporaries.

⁶ Your care of your own safety.

⁷ Determined here must signify prescribed, limited, appointed; and not ended, as Steevens and Malone account in explaining it. John could not be meant to say that his time of life was actually ended.

My death's revenge, thy youth, and England's fame:
All these, and more, we hazard by thy stay;
All these are sav'd, if thou wilt fly away.

John. The sword of Orleans hath not made me smart,

These words of yours draw life-blood from my
On that advantage, bought with such a shame
(To save a paltry life, and slay bright fame,)
Before young Talbot from old Talbot fly,
The coward horse, that bears me, fall and die:
And, like² me to the peasant boys of France;
To be shame's scorn, and subject of mischance!
Surely, by all the glory you have won,
An if I fly, I am not Talbot's son:
Then talk no more of flight, it is no boot;³
If son to Talbot, die at Talbot's foot.

Tal. Then follow thou thy desperate sire of Crete,⁴

Thou Icarus; thy life to me is sweet:
If thou wilt fight, fight by thy father's side;
And, commendable prov'd, let's die in pride.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VII. Another Part of the same. Alarum; Excursions. Enter TALBOT wounded, supported by a Servant.

Tal. Where is my other life?—mine own is gone;—

O, where's young Talbot?—where is valiant John?—
Triumphant death, smear'd with captivity!⁵
Young Talbot's valour makes me smile at thee:—
When he perceiv'd me shrink, and on my knee,
His bloody sword he brandish'd over me,
And, like a hungry lion, did commence
Rough deeds of rage, and stern impatience;
But when my angry guardant stood alone,
Tend'ring my ruin,⁶ and assail'd of none,
Dizzy-ey'd fury, and great rage of heart,
Suddenly made him from my side to start
Into the clust'ring battle of the French:
And in that sea of blood my boy did drench
His overmounting spirit; and there died
My Icarus, my blossom, in his pride.

Enter Soldiers, bearing the Body of JOHN TALBOT.

Serv. O my dear lord! lo, where your son is borne!

Tal. Thou antic death, which laugh'st us here to scorn,⁷

Anon, from thy insulting tyranny,
Coupled in bonds of perpetuity,
O Talbots, winged through the liether⁸ sky,
In thy despite shall 'scape mortality.—
O thou, whose wounds become hard-favour'd death,
Speak to thy father, ere thou yield thy breath:
Brave death by speaking, whether he will, or no;
Imagine him a Frenchman, and thy foe.—
Poor boy! he smiles, methinks; as who should say—
Had death been French, then death had died to-day.
Come, come, and lay him in his father's arms;
My spirit can no longer bear these harms.
Soldiers, adieu! I have what I would have,
Now my old arms are young John Talbot's grave.

[Dies.]

1 Prior has borrowed this thought in his Henry and Emma:—

2 Are there not poisons, racks, and flames, and swords,
That Emma thus must die by Henry's words?

3 i. e. compare me, reduce me to a level by comparison.

3 See note on King Richard II. Act I. Sc. 1.

4 Thus in the Third Part of King Henry VI. —

What a peevish fool was that of Crete.

5 Triumphant death, though thy presence is made more terrible, on account of the stain of dying in captivity, yet young Talbot's valour makes me smile at thee.

6 Watch me with tenderness in my fall.

7 In King Richard II. we have the same image:—

— within the hollow crown

That rounds the mortal temples of a king
Keeps death his court: and there the antic sits Scorning his state, and grinning at his pomp.

8 Lither is flexible, pliant, yielding.

Alarums. Exeunt Soldiers and Servant, leaving the two Bodies. Enter CHARLES, ALENÇON, BURGUNDY, Bastard, LA PUCELLE, and Forces.

Char. Had York and Somerset brought rescue in,
We should have found a bloody day of this.

Bast. How the young whelp of Talbot's, raging-wood,⁹

Did flesh his puny sword in Frenchmen's blood!

Puc. Once I encounter'd him, and thus I said,

Thou maiden youth, be vanquish'd by a maid:

But—with a proud, majestical high scorn,—

He answer'd thus; Young Talbot was not born

To be the pillage of a giglot¹⁰ wench:

So, rustling in the bowels of the French,¹¹

He left me proudly, as unworthy fight.

Bur. Doubtless, he would have made a noble
knight:

See, where he lies inhearsed in the arms

Of the most bloody nurser of his harms.

Bas. How them to pieces, hack their bones
asunder;

Whose life was England's glory, Gallia's wonder.

Char. O, no; forbear: for that which we have fled
During the life, let us not wrong it dead.

Enter SIR WILLIAM LUCY, attended, a French Herald preceding.

Lucy. Herald,

Conduct me to the Dauphin's tent; to know¹²

Who hath obtain'd the glory of the day.

Char. On what submissive message art thou sent?

Lucy. Submission, Dauphin? 'tis a mere French
word;

We English warriors wot not what it means.

I come to know what prisoners thou hast ta'en,

And to survey the bodies of the dead.

Char. For prisoners ask'st thou? hell our prison is.

But tell me whom thou seek'st?

Lucy. Where is the great Alcides of the field,

Valiant Lord Talbot, earl of Shrewsbury?

Created, for his rare success in arms,

Great earl of Washford,¹³ Waterford, and Valence;

Lord Talbot of Goodrig and Urchinfield,

Lord Strange of Blackmere, Lord Verdun of Alton,

Lord Cromwell of Wingfield, Lord Furnival of Sheffield,

The thrice victorious lord of Falconbridge;

Knight of the noble order of Saint George,

Worthy Saint Michael, and the Golden Fleece;

Great marshal to Henry the Sixth,

Of all his wars within the realm of France?

Puc. Here is a silly stuffy style indeed!

The Turk, that two and fifty kingdoms bath,

Writes not so tedious a style as this.—

Him, that thou magnificest with all these titles,

Sinking and flyblown, lies here at our feet.

Lucy. Is Talbot slain; the Frenchman's only scurge,

Your kingdom's terror and black Nemesis?

O, were mine eyeballs into bullets turn'd,

That I, in rage, might shoot them at your faces!

O, that I could but call these dead to life!

It were enough to fright the realm of France:

Were but his picture left among you here,

9 Wood signified furious as well as mad: raging-wood is certainly here furiously raging.

10 A giglot is a wanton wench. 'A minx, gicle (or giglet), flirt, callet, or gixle,' says Cotgrave.

11 We have a similar expression in the First Part of Jerónimo, 1605:—

'Meet, Don Andrea! yes, in the battle's bowels.'

12 Lucy's message implied that he knew who had obtained the victory: therefore Hamner reads:—

Herald, conduct me to the Dauphin's tent.

13 Wesford, in Ireland, was anciently called Wes-ford. In Crompton's Mansion of Magnanimities, 1599, it is written as here, Washford. This long list of titles is from the epitaph formerly existent on Lord Talbot's tomb at Rouen. It is to be found in the work above cited, with one other, 'Lord Loveloft of Worsop,' which would not easily fall into the verse. It concludes as here, and adds, 'who died in the battle of Burdeaux, 1453.'

It would amaze¹ the proudest of you all.
Give me their bodies; that I may bear them hence,
And give them burial as becometh their worth.

Puc. I think, this upstart is old Talbot's ghost,
He speaks with such a proud commanding spirit.
For God's sake, let him have 'em: to keep them
here,

They would but stink, and putrefy the air.

Char. Go, take their bodies hence.

Lucy. I'll bear them hence:

But from their ashes shall be reard²

A phoenix that shall make all France afear'd.

Char. So we be rid of them, do with 'em what thou wilt.

And now to Paris, in this conquering vein;

All will be ours, now bloody Talbot's slain.

[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I. London. A Room in the Palace. Enter
KING HENRY, GLOSTER, and EXETER.

K. Hen. Have you perus'd the letters from the pope,

The emperor, and the earl of Armagnac?

Glo. I have, my lord; and their intent is this,—

They humbly sue unto your excellence,

To have a godly peace concluded of,

Between the realms of England and of France.

K. Hen. How deth your grace affect their motion?

Glo. Well, my good lord; and as the only means

To stop effusion of our Christian blood,

And 'tablish quietness on every side.

K. Hen. Ay, marry, uncle; for I always thought,

It was both impious and unnatural,

That such immanity³ and bloody strife

Should reign among professors of one faith.

Glo. Beside, my lord—the sooner to effect,

And surer bind, this knot of amity,—

The earl of Armagnac—near knit to Charles,

A man of great authority in France,— Proffers his only daughter to your grace

In marriage, with a large and sumptuous dowry.

K. Hen. Marriage, uncle! alas! my years are young;⁴

And fitter is my study and my books,

Than wanton dalliance with a paramour.

Yet, call the ambassadors; and, as you please,

So let them have their answers every one:

I shall be well content with any choice,

Tends to God's glory, and my country's weal.

Enter a Legate, and Two Ambassadors, with WIN-

CHESTER, in a Cardinal's Habit.

Exe. What! is my lord of Winchester install'd,

And call'd unto a cardinal's degree?⁵

Then, I perceive, that will be verified,

Henry the Fifth did sometime prophesy,—

If once he come to be a cardinal,

He'll make his cap co-equal with the crown.

K. Hen. My lords ambassadors, your several suits

Have been consider'd and debated on.

Your purpose is both good and reasonable:

And, therefore, are we certainly resolv'd

To draw conditions of a friendly peace;

Which, by my lord of Winchester, we mean

Shall be transported presently to France.

Glo. And for the proffer of my lord your master,—

I have inform'd his highness so at large,

¹ To amaze is to dismay, to throw into consternation.
'A citie amazed or astonied with feare. Urbs lymphata horroribus.' Baret.

² A word is wanting to complete the metre, which Hammer thus supplied:—

'But from their ashes, Dauphin, shall be reard.'

³ Immanity (immanitas, Lat.) outrageousness, cruelty, excess. Biount. 'A belluine kind of immanity never rag'd so amongst men.' Howell's Letters, iii. 15.

⁴ The king was, however, twenty-four years old.

⁵ The poet has here forgot himself. In the first act
Gloster says:—

'I'll canvas thee in thy broad cardinal's hat.'

And it is strange that Exeter should not know of his

As—liking of the lady's virtuous gifts,
Her beauty, and the value of her dower,—
He doth intend she shall be England's queen.

K. Hen. In argument and proof of which contract, Bear her this jewel, [To the Amb.] pledge of my affection.

And so, my lord protector, see them guarded,
And safely brought to Dover; where, inshipp'd,
Commit them to the fortune of the sea.

[Exeunt KING HENRY and Train; GLOSTER,

EXETER, and Ambassadors.

Win. Stay, my lord legate; you shall first receiv

The sum of money, which I promised

Should be deliver'd to his holiness

For clothing me in these grave ornaments

Leg. I will attend upon your lordship's leisure.

Win. Now, Winchester will not submit, I trow,

Or be inferior to the proudest peer.

Humphrey of Gloster, thou shalt well perceive.

That, neither in birth, or for authority,

The bishop will be overcome by thee:

I'll either make thee stoop, and bend thy knee,

Or sack this country with a mutiny. [Exeunt.

SCENE II. France. Plains in Anjou. Enter

CHARLES, BURGUNDY, ALENÇON, LA PU-

CELLE, and Forces, marching.

Char. These news, my lords, may cheer our drooping spirits:

'Tis said, the stout Parisians do revolt,

And turn again unto the warlike French.

Alen. Then march to Paris, royal Charles of

France,

And keep not back your powers in dalliance.

Puc. Peace be amongst them, if they turn to us;

Else, ruin combat with their palaces!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Success unto our valiant general,

And happiness to his accomplices!

Char. What tidings send our scouts? I pr'ythee

speak.

Mess. The English army, that divided was

Into two parts, is now conjoin'd in one;

And means to give you battle presently.

Char. Somewhat too sudden, sirs, the warning is;

But we will presently provide for them.

Bur. I trust the ghost of Talbot is not there;

Now he is gone, my lord, you need not fear.

Puc. Of all base passions, fear is most accurs'd:—

Command the conquest, Charles, it shall be thine;

Let Henry fret, and all the world repine.

Char. Then on, my lords; and France be fortunate! [Exeunt.

SCENE III. The same. Before Angiers. Ala-

rum: Excursions. Enter LA PUCELLE.

Puc. The regent conquers, and the Frenchmen

fly.—

Now help, ye charming spells, and periapts;⁶

And ye choice spirits that admonish me,

And give me signs of future accidents! [Thunder.

You speedy helpers, that are substitutes

Under the lordly monarch of the north,⁷

Appear, and aid me in this enterprise!

Enter Fiends.

This speedy quick appearance argues proof

Of your accustom'd diligence to me.

Now, ye familiar spirits, that are cull'd advancement. It appears that he would imply that Winchester obtained his hat only just before his present entry. He in fact obtained it in the fifth year of Henry's reign.

⁶ Periapts were certain written charms worn about the person as preservatives from disease and danger.
Of these the first chapter of St. John's Gospel was deemed the most efficacious. See Scott's Discovery of Witchcraft, 1584, p. 218, &c.

⁷ The monarch of the north was Zimmar, one of the four principal devils invoked by witches. The north was supposed to be the particular habitation of bad spirits. Milton assembles the rebel angels in the north,

Out of the powerful regions¹ under earth,
Help me this once, that France may get the field.
[They walk about, and speak not.]

O, hold me not with silence over-long!
Where² I was wont to feed you with my blood,
I'll lop a member off, and give it you,
In earnest of a further benefit;
So you do condescend to help me now.—
[They hang their heads.]

No hope to have redress?—My body shall Pay recompense, if you will grant my suit.
[They shake their heads.]

Cannot my body, nor blood-sacrifice,
Entreat you to your wonted furtherance?
Then take my soul; my body, soul, and all,
Before that England give the French the foil.
[They depart.]

See! they forsake me. Now the time is come,
That France must avail³ her lofty-plumed crest,
And let her head fall into England's lap.
My ancient incantations are too weak,
And hell too strong for me to buckle with:
Now, France, thy glory droopeth to the dust. [Exit.]

Alarums. Enter French and English, fighting.
LA PUCELLE and YORK fight hand to hand. LA
PUCELLE is taken. The French fly.

York. Damsel of France, I think I have you fast;
Unchain your spirits now with spelling charms,
And try if they can gain your liberty.—
A goodly prize, fit for the devil's grace!
See, how the ugly witch doth bend her brows,
As if, with Circe, she would change my shape.

Puc. Chang'd to a worse shape thou canst not be.
York. O, Charles the Dauphin is a proper man;
No shape but his can please your dainty eye.

Puc. A plaguing mischief light on Charles, and
thee!

And may ye both be suddenly surpris'd
By bloody hands, in sleeping on your beds!

York. Fell, banning⁴ hag! enchantress, hold thy tongue.

Puc. I pr'ythee, give me leave to curse a while.
York. Curse, miscreant, when thou comest to the stake. [Exeunt.]

*Alarums. Enter SUFFOLK, leading in LADY
MARGARET.*

Suff. Bo what thou wilt, thou art my prisoner.
[Gazes on her.]

O fairest beauty, do not fear, nor fly;
For I will touch thee but with reverent hands,
And lay them gently on thy tender side.
I kiss these fingers [Kisses her hand.] for eternal peace:

Who art thou? say, that I may honour thee.
Mar. Margaret my name; and daughter to a king,
The king of Naples, whosoe'er thou art.

Suff. An earl I am, and Suffolk am I call'd.
Be not offended, nature's miracle,
Thou art allotted to be ta'en by me:
So doth the swan her downy cygnets save,
Keeping them prisoners underneath her wings.
Yet, if this servile usage once offend,
Go, and be free again as Suffolk's friend.
[She turns away as going.]

O, stay!—I have no power to let her pass;
My hand would free her, but my heart says—no.
As plays the sun upon the glassy streams,
Twinkling another counterfeited beam,
So seems this gorgeous beauty to mine eyes.⁵

¹ Warburton thought that we should read legions here, the same mistake having occurred before in this play.

² Where for whereas, a common substitution in old writers; whereas is also sometimes used for where.

³ To vail is to lower. See note on Merchant of Venice, Act i. Sc. 1.

⁴ To bann is to curse.

⁵ This comparison, made between things sufficiently unlike (Johnson observes,) is intended to express the softness and delicacy of Lady Margaret's beauty, which delighted, but did not dazzle: which was bright, but gave no pain by its lustre.

Fain would I woo her, yet I dare not speak:
I'll call for pen and ink, and write my mind:
Fye, De la Poole! disable not thyself;
Hast not a tongue? is she not here thy prisoner?
Wilt thou be daunted at a woman's sight?
Ay; beauty's princely majesty is such,
Confounds the tongue, and makes the senses rough.

Mar. Say, earl of Suffolk,—if thy name be so,—
What ransom must I pay before I pass?

For, I perceive, I am thy prisoner.

Suff. How canst thou tell she will deny thy suit,
Before thou make a trial of her love? [Aside.]

Mar. Whyspeak'st thou not? what ransom must
I pay?

Suff. She's beautiful; and therefore to be woo'd:
She is a woman; therefore to be won. [Aside.]

Mar. Wilt thou accept of ransom, yea, or no?

Suff. Fond man! remember, that thou hast a wife:
Then how can Margaret be thy paramour? [Aside.]

Mar. I were best leave him, for he will not hear.

Suff. There all is marr'd; there lies a cooling carc.⁶

Mar. He talks at random; sure, the man is mad.

Suff. And yet a dispensation may be had.

Mar. And yet I would that you would answer me.

Suff. I'll win this lady Margaret. For whom?

Why, for my king: Tush! that's a wooden thing.

Mar. He talks of wood: It is some carpenter.

Suff. Yet so my fancy⁷ may be satisfied,
And peace established between these realms.

But there remains a scruple in that too;
For though her father be the king of Naples,
Duke of Anjou and Maine, yet he is poor,
And our nobility will scorn the match. [Aside.]

Mar. Hear ye, captain? Are you not at leisure?

Suff. It shall be so, disdain you ne'er so much:
Henry is youthful, and will quickly yield.—
Madam, I have a secret to reveal.

Mar. What though I be enthrall'd? he seems a knight,

And will not any way dishonour me. [Aside.]

Suff. Lady, vouchsafe to listen what I say.

Mar. Perhaps, I shall be rescu'd by the French:
And then I need not crave his courtesy. [Aside.]

Suff. Sweet madam, give me hearing in a cause—
Mar. Tush: women have been captivate ere now. [Aside.]

Suff. Lady, wherefore talk you so?

Mar. I cry you mercy, 'tis but quid pro quo.

Suff. Say, gentle princess, would you not suppose
Your bondage happy, to be made a queen?

Mar. To be a queen in bondage, is more vile,
Than is a slave in base servility;

For princes should be free.

Suff. And so shall you,

If happy England's royal king be free.

Mar. Why, what concerns his freedom unto me?

Suff. I'll undertake to make thee Henry's queen;
To put a golden sceptre in thy hand,
And set a precious crown upon thy head,
If thou wilt condescend to be my—
Mar. What?

Suff. His love.

Mar. I am unworthy to be Henry's wife.

Suff. No, gentle madam; I unworthy am
To woo so fair a dame to be his wife,
And have no portion in the choice myself.

How say you, madam; are you so content?

Mar. An if my father please, I am content.

⁶ 'Do not represent thyself so weak.' To disable was to dispraise, or impeach.

⁷ The meaning of rough here is not very evident. Sir Thomas Hanmer reads crouch.

⁸ A cooling card was most probably a card so decisive as to cool the courage of the adversary. Metaphorically, something to damp or overwhelm the hopes of an expectant.

⁹ I. e. an awkward business, an undertaking not likely to succeed. 'It is sport to see a bold fellow out of countenance, for that puts his face into a most shrunken and redden posture.'

10 l. e. love.

Suff. Then call our captains, and our colours, forth:

And, madam, at your father's castle walls
We'll crave a parley to confer with him.

[Troops come forward.]

A Parley sounded. Enter REIGNIER, on the Walls.

Suff. See, Reignier, see, thy daughter prisoner.

Reig. To whom?

Suff. To me.

Reig. Suffolk, what remedy?

I am a soldier, and unapt to weep,

Or to exclaim on fortune's fickleness.

Suff. Yes, there is remedy enough, my lord:

Consent (and for thy honour, give consent,)

Thy daughter shall be wedded to my king;

Whom I with pain have woo'd and won thereto:

And this her easy-held imprisonment

Hath gain'd thy daughter princely liberty.

Reig. Speaks Suffolk as he thinks?

Suff. Fair Margaret knows,

That Suffolk doth not flatter, face,¹ or feign.

Reig. Upon thy princely warrant, I descend,

To give thee answer of thy just demand.

[Exit from the Walls.]

Suff. And here I will expect thy coming.

Trumpets sounded. Enter REIGNIER, below.

Reig. Welcome, brave earl, into our territories:

Command in Anjou what your honour pleases.

Suff. Thanks, Reignier, happy for so sweet a child.

Fit to be made companion with a king:

What answer makes your grace unto my suit?

Reig. Since thou dost deign to woo her little worth,

To be the princely bride of such a lord;

Upon condition I may quietly

Enjoy mine own, the county Maine, and Anjou,

Free from oppression, or the stroke of war,

My daughter shall be Henry's, if he please.

Suff. That is her ransom, I deliver her;

And those two counties, I will undertake,

Your grace shall well and quietly enjoy.

Reig. And I again,—in Henry's royal name,

As deputy unto that gracious king,

Give thee her hand, for sign of plighted faith.

Suff. Reignier of France, I give thee kingly thanks,

Because this is in traffic of a king:

And yet, methinks, I could be well content

To be mine own attorney in this case. [Aside.]

I'll over then to England with this news,

And make this marriage to be solemniz'd;

So, farewell Reignier! Set this diamond safe

In golden palaces, as it becomes.

Reig. I do embrace thee, as I would embrace

The Christian prince, King Henry, were he here.

Mar. Farewell, my lord? Good wishes, praise, and prayers,

Shall Suffolk ever have of Margaret. [Going.]

Suff. Farewell, sweet madam! But hark you,

Margaret;

No princely commendation to my king?

Mar. Such commendations as become a maid,

A virgin, and his servant, say to him.

Suff. Words sweetly plac'd and modestly directed.

But madam, I must trouble you again—

No loving token to his majesty?

Mar. Yes, my good lord; a pure unspotted heart,

Never yet taint with love, I send the king.

Suff. And this withal. [Kisses her.]

Mar. That for thyself:—I will not so presume,

To send such peevish² tokens to a king.

[Exeunt REIGNIER and MARGARET.]

Suff. O, wert thou for myself!—But, Suffolk,

stay;

Thou may'st not wander in that labyrinth;

There Minotaurs, and ugly treasons, lurk.

Solicit Henry with her wondrous praise:

Bethink thee on her virtues that surmount;

Mad,³ natural graces that extinguish art;

Repeat their semblance often on the seas,

That, when thou com'st to kneel at Henry's feet,

Thou may'st bereave him of his wits with wonder.

[Exit.]

SCENE IV. Camp of the Duke of York, in Anjou.

Enter YORK, WARWICK, and others.

York. Bring forth that sorceress, condemn'd to burn.

Enter LA PUCELLE, guarded, and a Shepherd.

Shep. Ah, Joan! this kill thy father's heart outright!

Have I sought every country far and near,

And, now it is my chance to find thee out,

Must I behold thy timeless⁴ cruel death?

Ah, Joan, sweet daughter Joan, I'll die with thee!

Puc. Decrepit miser!⁵ base ignoble wretch!

I am descended of a gentler blood:

Thou art no father, nor no friend of mine.

Shep. Out, out!—My lords, an please you, 'tis not so;

I did beget her, all the parish knows:

Her mother liveth yet, can testify,

She was the first fruit of my bachelorship.

War. Graceless! wilt thou deny thy parentage?

York. This argues what her kind of life hath been;

Wicked and vile; and so her death concludes.

Shep. Fye, Joan! that thou wilt be so obstacle!⁶

God knows, thou art a collop of my flesh:

And for thy sake have I shed many a tear:

Deny me not, I prythee, gentle Joan.

Puc. Peasant, avant!—You have suborn'd this

man,

Of purpose to obscure my noble birth.

Shep. 'Tis true, I gave a noble to the priest,

The morn that I was wedded to her mother.—

Kneel down and take my blessing, good my girl.

Wilt thou not stoop? Now cursed be the time

Of thy nativity! I would the milk

Thy mother gave thee, when thou suck'dst her

breast,

Had been a little ratsbane for thy sake!

Or else, when thou didst keep my lambs a-field,

I wish some ravenous wolf had eaten thee!

Dost thou deny thy father, cursed drab?

O, burn her, burn her; hanging is too good. [Exit.]

York. Take her away, for she hath liv'd too long,

To fill the world with vicious qualities.

Puc. First, let me tell you whom you have condemn'd;

Not one begotten of a shepherd swain

But issu'd from the progeny of kings;

Virtuous and holy; chosen from above,

By inspiration of celestial grace,

To work exceeding miracles on earth.

I never had to do with wicked spirits:

But you,—that are polluted with your lusts,

Stain'd with the guiltless blood of innocents,

Corrupt and tainted with a thousand vices,—

Because you want the grace that others have,

You judge it straight a thing impossible

To compass wonders, but by help of devils.

No, misconceived!⁷ Joan of Arc hath been

A virgin from her tender infancy,

Chaste and immaculate in very thought;

Whose maiden blood, thus rigorously effus'd,

Will cry for vengeance at the gates of heaven.

York. Ay, ay;—away with her to execution.

War. And hark ye, sirs; because she is a maid,

Spare for no fagots, let there be enough:

1 To face is to carry a false appearance, to play the hypocrite. Hence the name of one of Ben Jonson's characters in The Alchemist.

2 I. e. silly; foolish.

3 Mad has been shown by Steevens to have been occasionally used for wild, in which sense we must take it here; if we do not, with others, suspect it an error of the press for And or Her.

4 Timeless is untimely.

5 Miser has no relation to avarice in this passage, but simply means a miserable creature.

6 This vulgar corruption of obstinate has oddly lasted till now, says Johnson.

7 No, ye misconceivers, ye who mistake me and my qualities.

Place barrels of pitch upon the fatal stage,
That so her torture may be shortened.

Puc. Will nothing turn your unrelenting hearts?—
Then, Joan, discover thine infirmity;
That warranteth by law to be thy privilege.—
I am with child, ye bloody homicides;
Murder not then the fruit within my womb,
Although ye hale me to a violent death.

York. Now heaven forefend! the holy maid with child!

War. The greatest miracle that e'er ye wrought;
Is all your strict preciseness come to this?

York. She and the Dauphin have been juggling;
I did imagine what would be her refuge.

War. Well, go to; we will have no bastards live:
Especially, since Charles must father it.

Puc. You are deceived; my child is none of his;
It was Alençon, that enjoy'd my love.

War. Alençon! that notorious Machiavel!¹
It dies, an if it had a thousand lives.

Puc. O, give me leave, I have deluded you;
'Twas neither Charles, nor yet the duke I nam'd,
But Reignier, king of Naples, that prevail'd.

War. A married man! that's most intolerable.

York. Why, here's a girl! I think, she knows not well,

There were so many, whom she may accuse.

War. It's a sign, she hath been liberal and free.

York. And, yet, forsooth, she is a virgin pure.—
Strumpet, thy words condemn thy brat, and thee:
Use no entreaty, for it is in vain.

Puc. Then lead me hence; with whom I leave my curse:

May never glorious sun reflex his beams
Upon the country where you make abode!
But darkness and the gloomy shade of death
Environ you; till mischief, and despair,
Drive you to break your necks, or hang yourselves!

[Exit, guarded.]

York. Break thou in pieces, and consume to ashes,

Thou foul accursed minister of hell!

Enter CARDINAL BEAUFORT, attended.

Car. Lord Regent, I do greet your excellence
With letters of commission from the king.
For know, my lords, the states of Christendom,
Mov'd with remorse² of these outrageous broils,
Have earnestly implor'd a general peace
Betwixt our nation and the aspiring French;
And here at hand the Dauphin, and his train,
Approacheth, to confer about some matter.

York. Is all our travail turn'd to this effect?

After the slaughter of so many peers,
So many captains, gentlemen and soldiers,
That in this quarrel have been overthrown,
And sold their bodies for their country's benefit,
Shall we at last conclude effeminate peace?
Have we not lost most part of all the towns,
By treason, falsehood, and by treachery,
Our great progenitors had conquer'd?—
O, Warwick, Warwick! I foresee with grief
The utter loss of all the realm of France.

War. Be patient, York; if we conclude a peace,
It shall be with such strict and severe covenants,
As little shall the Frenchman gain thereby.

Enter CHARLES, attended; ALENÇON, Bastard, REIGNIER, and others.

Char. Since, lords of England, it is thus agreed,
That peaceful truce shall be proclaim'd in France,
We come to be informed by yourselves
What the conditions of that league must be.

York. Speak, Winchester; for boiling choler chokes

The hollow passage of my poison'd voice,
By sight of these our baleful³ enemies.

Win. Charles, and the rest, it is enacted thus.
That—in regard King Henry gives consent,
Of mere compassion, and of lenity,
To ease your country of distressful war,
And suffer you to breathe in fruitful peace,—
You shall become true liegemen to his crown:
And, Charles, upon condition thou wilt swear
To pay him tribute, and submit thyself,
Thou shalt be plac'd as viceroy under him,
And still enjoy thy regal dignity.

Alen. Must he be then as shadow of himself?
Adorn his temples with a coronet;⁴
And yet, in substance and authority,
Retain but privilege of a private man?
This proffer is absurd and reasonless.

Char. 'Tis known, already, that I am possess'd
With more than half the Gallian territories,
And therein reverenc'd for their lawful king:
Shall I, for lucre of the rest unvanquish'd,
Detract so much from that prerogative,
As to be call'd but viceroy of the whole?
No, lord ambassador; I'll rather keep
That which I have, than, coveting for more,
Be cast from possibility of all.

York. Insulting Charles! hast thou by secret means

Used intercession to obtain a league;
And, now the matter grows to compromise,
Stand'st thou aloof upon comparison?

Either accept the title thou usurp'st,
Of benefit⁵ proceeding from our king,
And not of any challenge of desert,
Or we will plague thee with incessant wars.

Reig. My lord, you do not well in obstinacy
To cavil in the course of this contract;
If once it be neglected, ten to one,
We shall not find like opportunity.

Alen. To say the truth, it is your policy,
To save your subjects from such massacre,
And ruthless slaughters, as are daily seen
By our proceeding in hostility:
And therefore take this compact of a truce,
Although you break it when your pleasure serves.

[Aside to CHARLES]

War. How say'st thou, Charles? shall our condition stand?

Char. It shall:
Only reserv'd, you claim no interest
In any of our towns of garrison.

York. Then swear allegiance to his majesty;
As thou art knight, never to disobey,
Nor be rebellious to the crown of England,
Thou, nor thy nobles, to the crown of England.—

[CHARLES, and the rest, give tokens of fealty.]

So, now dismiss your army when ye please;
Hang up your ensigns, let your drums be still.
For here we entertain a solemn peace. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V. London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter KING HENRY, in conference with SURFOLK; GLOSTER and EXETER following.

K. Hen. Your wondrous rare description, noble earl,

Of beauteous Margaret hath astonish'd me:
Her virtues, graced with external gifts,
Do breed love's settled passions in my heart:
And like as rigour in tempestuous gusts
Provokes the mightiest bulk against the tide;
So am I driven, by breath of her renown,
Either to suffer shipwreck, or arrive
Where I may have fruition of her love.

Surf. Tush! my good lord! this superficial tale
Is but a preface of her worthy praise:
The chief perfections of that lovely dame
(Had I sufficient skill to utter them,)
Would make a volume of enticing lines,
Able to ravish any dull conceit.
And, which is more, she is not so divine,

¹ The character of Machiavel seems to have made so very deep an impression on the dramatic writers of this age, that he is many times introduced without regard to anachronism.

² Compassion, pity.

³ Baleful had anciently the same meaning as baneful.

ful. It is an epithet frequently bestowed on poisonous plants and reptiles.

⁴ Coronet is here used for crown.

⁵ 'Be content to live as the beneficiary of our king' Benefit is here a term of law.

So full replete with choice of all delights,
But, with as humble lowliness of mind,
She is content to be at your command;
Command, I mean, of virtuous chaste intents,
To love and honour Henry as her lord.

K. Hen. And otherwise will Henry ne'er presume.

Therefore, my lord protector, give consent,
That Margaret may be England's royal queen.

Glo. So should I give consent to flatter sin.
You know, my lord, your highness is betroth'd
Unto another lady of esteem;
How shall we then dispense with that contract,
And not deface your honour with reproach?

Suff. As doth a ruler with unlawful oaths;
Or one, that, at a triumph¹ having vow'd
To try his strength, forsaketh yet the lists
By reason of his adversary's odds:
A poor earl's daughter is unequal odds:
And therefore may be broke without offence.

Glo. Why, what, I pray, is Margaret more than that?

Her father is no better than an earl,
Although in glorious titles he excel.

Suff. Yes, my good lord, her father is a king,
The king of Naples, and Jerusalem;
And of such great authority in France,
As his alliance will confirm our peace,
And keep the Frenchmen in allegiance.

Glo. And so the earl of Armagnac may do,
Because he is near kinsman unto Charles.

Ecc. Beside, his wealth doth warrant liberal dower;

While Reignier sooner will receive than give.

Suff. A dower, my lords! disgrace not so your king,

That he should be so abject, base, and poor,
To choose for wealth, and not for perfect love.
Henry is able to enrich his queen,

And not to seek a queen to make him rich:

So worthless peasants bargain for their wives,
As market-men for oxen, sheep, or horse.

Marriage is a matter of more worth,

Than to be dealt in by attorneyship:²

Not whom we will, but whom his grace affects,
Must be companion of his nuptial bed:

And therefore, lords, since he affects her most,

It most of all these reasons bindeth us,

In our opinions she should be preferred.

For what is wedlock forced, but a hell,

An age of discord and continual strife?

Whereas the contrary bringeth forth bliss,

And is a pattern of celestial peace.

Whom should we match with Henry, being a king,

But Margaret, that is daughter to a king?

Her peerless feature, joined with her birth,

Approves her fit for none, but for a king?

Her valiant courage, and undaunted spirit

(More than in women commonly is seen,)

Will answer our hope in issue of a king;

For Henry, son unto a conqueror,

Is likely to beget more conquerors,

If with a lady of so high resolve,

As is fair Margaret, he be link'd in love.

Then yield, my lords; and here conclude with me,

That Margaret shall be queen, and none but she.

K. Hen. Whether it be through force of your report,

My noble lord of Suffolk; or for that

¹ A triumph then signified a public exhibition; such as a tournament, mask, or revel.

² By the intervention of another man's choice; or the discretionary agency of another. The phrase occurs twice in King Richard III.:-

'Be the attorney of my love to her.'

Again:-

'I, by attorney, bless thee from thy mother.'

My tender youth was never yet attain'd
With any passion of inflaming love,
I cannot tell; but this I am assur'd,
I feel such sharp dissension in my breast,
Such fierce alarms both of hope and fear,
As I am sick with working of my thoughts.
Take, therefore, shipping: post, my lord, to France;
Agree to any covenants: and procure
That Lady Margaret do vouchsafe to come
To cross the seas to England, and be crown'd
King Henry's faithful and anointed queen:
For your expenses and sufficient charge,
Among the people gather up a tenth.
Be gone, I say; for, till you do return,
I rest perplexed with a thousand cares.—
And you, good uncle, banish all offence:
If you do censure³ me by what you were,
Not what you are, I know it will excuse
This sudden execution of my will.

And so conduct me, where from company,

I may revolve and ruminate my grief.⁴ [Exit.]

Glo. Ay, grief, I fear me, both at first and last.

[Exeunt GLOSTER and EXETER.]

Suff. Thus Suffolk hath prevail'd: and thus he goes,

As did the youthful Paris once to Greece;

With hope to find the like event in love,

But prosper better than the Trojan did.

Margaret shall now be queen, and rule the king;

But I will rule both her, the king, and realm. [Exit.]

OF this play there is no copy earlier than that of the folio in 1623, though the two succeeding parts are extant in two editions in quarto. That the second and third parts were published without the first, may be admitted as no weak proof that the copies were surreptitiously obtained, and that the printers of that time gave the public those plays, not such as the author designed, but such as they could get them. That this play was written before the two others is indubitably collected from the series of events; that it was written and played before Henry the Fifth is apparent, because in the epilogue there is mention made of this play, and not of the other parts:-

'Henry the Sixth in swaddling bands crown'd king;
Whose state so many had the managing,
That they lost France, and made his England bleed:
Which oft our stage hath shown.'

France is lost in this play. The two following contain, as the old title imports, the contention of the houses of York and Lancaster.

The Second and Third Parts of Henry VI. were printed in 1600. When Henry V. was written, we know not, but it was printed likewise in 1600, and therefore before the publication of the first and second parts. The First Part of Henry VI. had been often shown on the stage, and would certainly have appeared in its place, had the author been the publisher. JOHNSON.

THAT the second and third parts, as they are now called, were printed without the first, is a proof, in my apprehension, that they were not written by the same author: and the title of The Contention of the Houses of York and Lancaster, being affixed to the two pieces which were printed in quarto, is a proof that they were a distinct work, commencing where the other ended, but not written at the same time; and that this play was never known by the title of The First Part of King Henry VI. till Heminge and Condell gave it that name in their volume, to distinguish it from the two subsequent plays; which being altered by Shakspeare, assumed the new titles of the Second and Third Parts of King Henry VI. that they might not be confounded with the original pieces on which they were formed. The first part was originally called The Historical Play of King Henry VI. MALONE.

³ To censure is here simply to judge. 'If in judging me you consider the past frailties of your own youth.'

⁴ Grief, in the first line, stands for pain, uneasiness, in the second, especially for sorrow.

SECOND PART OF KING HENRY THE SIXTH.

RELIMINARY REMARKS.

THIS and the Third Part of King Henry VI. contain that troublesome period of this prince's reign, which took in the whole contention between the houses of York and Lancaster: and under that title were these two plays first acted and published. The present play opens with King Henry's marriage, which was in the twenty-third year of his reign [A. D. 1445], and closes with the first battle fought at St. Albans, and won by the York faction, in the thirty-third year of his reign [A. D. 1455]: so that it comprises the history and transactions of ten years.

The Contention of the Two Famous Houses of York and Lancaster was published in quarto; the first part in 1594; the second, or True Tragedy of Richard Duke of York, in 1595; and both were reprinted in 1600. In a dissertation annexed to these plays, Mr. Malone has endeavoured to establish the fact that these two dramas were not originally written by Shakspeare, but by some preceding author or authors before the year 1590; and that upon them Shakspeare formed this and the following drama, altering, retrenching, or amplifying as he thought proper. I will endeavour to give a brief abstract of the principal arguments. 1. The entry on the Stationers' books, in 1594, does not mention the name of Shakspeare; nor are the plays printed with his name in the early editions; but, after the poet's death, an edition was printed by one Pavier without date, but really, in 1619, with the name of Shakspeare on the title-page. This he has shown to be a common fraudulent practice of the booksellers of that period. When Pavier republished The Contention of the Two Houses, &c. in 1619, he omitted the words 'as it was acted by the earl of Pembroke his servants,' which appeared on the original title-page,—just as on the republication of the old play of King John, in two parts, in 1611, the words 'as it was acted in the honourable city of London,' were omitted; because the omitted words in both cases marked the respective pieces not to be the production of Shakspeare. And, as in King John, the letters W. Sh. were added, in 1611, to deceive the purchaser; so in the republication of The whole Contention, &c. Pavier, having dismissed the words above-mentioned, inserted these:—'Newly corrected and enlarged by William Shakspeare;' knowing that these pieces had been made the groundwork of two other plays: that they had in fact been corrected and enlarged, (though not in his copy, which was a mere reprint from the edition of 1600,) and exhibited under the titles of the Second and Third Parts of King Henry VI.; and hoping that this new edition of the original plays would pass for those altered and augmented by Shakspeare, which were then unpublished.

A passage from Greene's Groat-worth of Wit, edited by Mr. Tyrwhitt, first suggested and strongly supports Malone's hypothesis. The writer, Robert Greene, is supposed to address himself to his poetical friend, George Peele, in these words:—'Yes, trust them not [alluding to the players], for there is an upstart crow beautified with our feathers, that with his tygers heart wrapp'd in a players hide, supposes hee is well able to bombaste out a blank verse as the best of you; and, being an absolute Joannes factotum, is, in his own conceit, the only Shakescene in a country.'—'O tyger's heart wrapped in a woman's hide!' is a line in the old quarto play entitled The First Part of the Contention, &c. There seems to be no doubt that the allusion is to Shakspeare, that the old plays may have been the production of Greene, Peele, and Marlowe, or some of them; and that Greene could not conceal his mortification, at the fame of himself and his associates, old and established playwrights, being eclipsed by a new upstart writer, (for so he calls the poet,) who had then perhaps first attracted the notice of the public by exhibiting two plays formed upon old dramas written by them, considerably enlarged and improved. The very term that Greene uses, 'to bombaste out a blank verse,' exactly corresponds with what has been now suggested. This new poet, says he, knows as well as any man how to amplify and swell out a blank verse.

Shakspeare did for the old plays, what Berni had before done to the Orlando Innamorato of Boiardo. He wrote new beginnings to the Acts; he new versified, he new modelled, he transposed many of the parts; and greatly amplified and improved the whole. Several lines, however, and whole speeches, which he thought sufficiently polished, he accepted, and introduced, without any, or very slight, alterations.

Malone adopted the following expedient to mark these alterations and adoptions, which has been followed in the present edition:—All those lines which the poet adopted without any alteration, are printed in the usual manner; those speeches which he altered or expanded are distinguished by inverted commas; and to all lines entirely composed by himself asterisks are prefixed.

The internal evidences upon which Malone relies to establish his position are, 1. The variations between the old plays in quarto, and the corresponding pieces in the folio edition of Shakspeare's dramatic works, which are of so peculiar a nature as to mark two distinct hands. Some circumstances are mentioned in the old quarto plays, of which there is not the least trace in the folio; and many minute variations occur that prove the pieces in the quarto to have been original and distinct compositions. No copyist or shorthand writer would invent circumstances totally different from those which appear in Shakspeare's new-modelled draughts, as exhibited in the first folio; or insert whole speeches, of which scarcely a trace is found in that edition. In some places a speech in one of these quartos consists of ten or twelve lines: in Shakspeare's folio the same speech consists perhaps of only half the number. A copyist by the ear, or an unskilful shorthand writer, might mutilate and exhibit a poet's thoughts or expressions imperfectly; but he would not dilate and amplify them, or introduce totally new matter.

Malone then exhibits a sufficient number of instances to prove, beyond the possibility of doubt, his position: so that (as he observes) we are compelled to admit, either that Shakspeare wrote two sets of plays on the story which forms his Second and Third Parts of King Henry VI., hasty sketches, and entirely distinct and more finished performances; or else we must acknowledge that he formed his pieces on a foundation laid by another writer or writers; that is upon the two parts of The Contention of the Two Houses of York, &c. It is a striking circumstance that almost all the passages in the Second and Third Parts of King Henry VI. which resemble others in Shakspeare's undisputed plays, are not found in the original pieces in quarto, but in his ri-faccimento in folio. As these resemblances to his other plays, and a peculiar Shakspearian phraseology, ascertain a considerable portion of these disputed dramas to be the production of that poet; so, on the other hand, other passages, discordant, in matters of fact, from his other plays, are proved by this discordancy not to have been composed by him: and these discordant passages, being found in the original quarto plays, prove that those pieces were composed by another writer.

It is observable that several portions of English history had been dramatised before the time of Shakspeare. Thus we have King John, in two parts, by an anonymous writer; Edward I. by George Peele; Edward II. by Christopher Marlowe; Edward III. anonymous; Henry IV. containing the deposition of Richard II. and the accession of Henry to the crown, anonymous; Henry V. and Richard III. both by anonymous authors. It is therefore highly probable that the whole of the story of Henry VI. had been brought on the scene, and that the first of the plays here printed, formerly called The Historical Play of King Henry VI. and now named The First Part of King Henry VI. as well as the Two Parts of the Contention of the Houses of York and Lancaster, were the compositions of some of the authors who had produced the historical dramas above enumerated.

Mr. Boswell, speaking of the originals of the second and third of these plays, says, 'That Marlowe may have had some share in these compositions, I am not disposed to deny; but I cannot persuade myself that they entirely proceeded from his pen. Some passages are possessed of so much merit, that they can scarcely be ascribed to any one except the most distinguished of Shakespeare's predecessors; but the tameness of the general style is very different from the peculiar characteristics of that poet's mighty line, which are great energy both of thought and language, degenerating too frequently into tumour and extravagance. The versification appears to me to be of a different colour.—That Marlowe, Peele, and Greene, may all of them have had a share in these dramas, is consonant to the frequent practice of the age; of which ample proofs may be found in the extracts from Henslowe's MS. printed by Mr. Malone.

From the passage alluding to these plays, in Greene's Groatsworth of Wit, it seems probable that they were produced previous to 1592, but were not printed until they appeared in the folio of 1623.

To Johnson's high panegyric of that impressive scene in this play, the death of Cardinal Beaufort, we may add that Schlegel says, 'It is sublime beyond all praise. Can any other poet be named who has drawn aside the curtain of eternity at the close of this life in such an overpowering and awful manner? And yet it is not mere horror with which we are filled, but solemn emotion; we have an exemplification of a blessing and a curse in close proximity; the pious king is an image of the heavenly mercy, which, even in his last moments, labours to enter into the soul of the sinner.'

ACT I.

SCENE I. London. A Room of State in the Palace. Flourish of Trumpets; then Hautboys.
Enter, on one side, KING HENRY, DUKE of GLOSTER, SALISBURY, WARWICK, and CARDINAL BEAUFORT; on the other, QUEEN MARGARET, led in by SUFFOLK; YORK, SOMERSET, BUCKINGHAM, and others, following.

Suffolk.

As by your high imperial majesty
I had in charge at my depart for France,
As procurator¹ to your excellence,
To marry Princess Margaret for your grace;
So, in the famous ancient city, Tours,—
In presence of the kings of France and Sicil,
The dukes of Orleans, Calaber, Bretagne, and Alençon,
Seven earls, twelve barons, twenty reverend bishops,—

I have perform'd my task, and was espous'd;
And humbly now upon my bended knee,
In sight of England and her lordly peers,
Deliver up my title in the queen
To your most gracious hands, that are the substance²
Of that great shadow I did represent;
The happiest gift that ever marquis gave,
The fairest queen that ever king receiv'd.

K. Hen. Suffolk, arise.—Welcome, Queen Margaret;

I can express no kinder sign of love,
Than this kind kiss.—O Lord, that lends me life,

1 'The marquesse of Suffolk, as procurator to King Henry, espoused the said ladie in the church of St. Martins. At the which marriage were present, the father and mother of the bride; the French king himself, that was uncle to the husband; and the French queen also, that was aunt to the wife. There were also the Dukes of Orleans, of Calabre, of Alanson, and of Britaine; seven earles, twelve barons, twenty bishops.'—Hall and Holinshed.

2 I. e. to the gracious hands of you, my sovereign, who are, &c. In the old play the line stands:—
'Unto your gracious excellence, that are.'

Lend me a heart replete with thankfulness!

For thou hast given me, in this beauteous face,

'A world of earthly blessings to my soul,

* If sympathy of love unite our thoughts.

'Q. Mar. Great king of England, and my gracious lord;

'The mutual conference that my mind hath had³—

'By day, by night; waking, and in my dreams;

'In courtly company, or at my beads,—

'With you mine alder-liest⁴ sovereign,

'Makes me the bolder to salute my king

'With ruder terms; such as my wit affords,

'And over-joy of heart doth minister.

'K. Hen. Her sight did ravish: but her grace in speech,

'Her words y-clad with wisdom's majesty,

'Makes me, from wondering fall to weeping joys;⁵

'Such is the fulness of my heart's content.—

'Lords with one cheerful voice welcome my love.

All. Long live Queen Margaret, England's happiness!

Q. Mar. We thank you all. [Flourish.]

Suff. My lord protector, so it please your grace,

Here are the articles of contracted peace,

Between our sovereign and the French king Charles,

For eighteen months concluded by consent.

Glo. [Reads.] Imprimis, It is agreed between the French king, Charles, and William de la Poole, marquess of Suffolk, ambassador for Henry king of England,—that the said Henry shall espouse the lady

Margaret, daughter unto Reignier king of Naples,

Sicilia, and Jerusalem; and crown her queen of England, ere the thirtieth of May next ensuing.—

Item.—That the duchy of Anjou and the county of Maine, shall be released and delivered to the king her

father—

3 I am the bolder to address you, having already familiarized you to my imagination.

4 I. e. most beloved of all: from alder, of all; formerly used in composition with adjectives of the superlative degree: and liest, dearest, or most loved.

5 This weeping joy, of which there is no trace in the original play, Shakespeare frequently uses. It is introduced in Much Ado about Nothing, King Richard II. Macbeth, and King Lear.

K. Hen. Uncle, how now?

Glo. Pardon me, gracious lord;
Some sudden qualm hath struck me at the heart,
And dimm'd mine eyes, that I can read no further.

K. Hen. Uncle of Winchester, I pray, read on.
Win. Item,—It is further agreed between them,— that the duchies of Anjou and Maine shall be released and delivered over to the king her father; and she sent over of the king of England's own proper cost and charges, without having dowry.

K. Hen. They please us well.—Lord marquess, kneel down;

We here create thee the first duke of Suffolk,
And girt thee with the sword.—

Cousin of York, we here discharge your grace
From being regent in the parts of France,
Till term of eighteen months be full expir'd.—
Thanks, uncle Winchester, Gloster, York, and Buckingham,

Somerset, Salisbury, and Warwick;
We thank you all for this great favour done,
In entertainment to my princely queen.
Come, let us in; and with all speed provide
To see her coronation be perform'd.

[Exeunt King, Queen, and Suffolk.]

Glo. Brave peers of England, pillars of the state,
'To you Duke Humphrey must unload his grief,
'Your grief, the common grief of all the land.
'What! did my brother Henry spend his youth,
'His valour, coin, and people, in the wars?
'Did he so often lodge in open field,
'In winter's cold, and summer's parching heat,
'To conquer France, his true inheritance?
'And did my brother Bedford toil his wits,
'To keep by policy what Henry got?
'Have you yourselves, Somerset, Buckingham,
'Brave York, Salisbury, and victorious Warwick,
'Receiv'd deep scars in France and Normandy?
'Or hath my uncle Beaufort, and myself,
'With all the learned council of the realm,
'Studied so long, sat in the council-house,
'Early and late, debating to and fro
'How France and Frenchmen might be kept in awe?
'And hath his highness in his infancy
'Been crown'd in Paris, in despite of foes?
'And shall these labours, and these honours, die?
'Shall Henry's conquest, Bedford's vigilance,
'Your deeds of war, and all our counsel, die?
'O peers of England, shameful is this league!
'Fatal this marriage, cancelling your fame:
'Blotting your names from books of memory:
'Razing the characters of your renown:
'Defacing monuments of conquer'd France;
'Undoing all, as all had never been!

* Car. Nephew, what means this passionate discourse?

* This peroration with such circumstance?

* For France, 'tis ours; and we will keep it still.

* Glo. Ay, we will keep it, if we can;

* But now it is impossible we should:

Suffolk, the new-made duke that rules the roast,

Hath given the duchies of Anjou and Maine

* Unto the poor king Reigner, whose large style

* Agrees not with the leanness of his purse.¹

* Sal. Now, by the death of him that died for all,

* These counties were the keys of Normandy:—

But wherefore weeps Warwick, my valiant son?

* War. For grief, that they are past recovery:

* For, were there hope to conquer them again,

* My sword should shed hot blood, mine eyes no tears.

* Anjou and Maine! myself did win them both;

* Those provinces these arms of mine did conquer:

* And are the cities, that I got with wounds,

* Deliver'd up again with peaceful words?²

* Mort Dieu!

¹ This speech crowded with so many circumstances of aggravation.

² King Reigner, her father, for all his long style, had too short a power to send his daughter honourably to the king her spouse.—Holinshead.

³ The indignation of Warwick is natural, but might have been better expressed: there is a kind of jingle

* York. For Suffolk's duke—may he be suffocate,
* That dims the honour of this warlike isle!

* France should have torn and rent my very heart,

* Before I would have yielded to this league.

* I never read but England's kings have had

* Large sums of gold, and dowries, with their wives:

* And our King Henry gives away his own,

* To match with her that brings no vantages.

* Glo. A proper jest, and never heard before

* That Suffolk should demand a whole fifteenth,

* For costs and charges in transporting her!

* She should have staid in France, and starv'd in France,

* Before—

* Car. My lord of Gloster, now you grow too hot;

* It was the pleasure of my lord the king.

* Glo. My lord of Winchester, I know your mind.

* 'Tis not my speeches that you do mistake,

* But 'tis my presence that doth trouble you.

* Rancour will out: Proud prelate, in thy face

* I see thy fury: if I longer stay,

* We shall begin our ancient bickerings.

* Lordings, farewell; and say, when I am gone,

* I prophesied—France will be lost ere long. [Exit.]

* Car. So, there goes our protector in a rage.

* 'Tis known to you he is mine enemy:

* Nay, more, an enemy unto you all;

* And no great friend, I fear me, to the king;

* Consider, lords, he is the next of blood,

* And heir apparent to the English crown;

* Had Henry got an empire by his marriage,

* And all the wealthy kingdoms of the west,

* There's reason he should be displeas'd at it.

* Look to it, lords; let not his smoothing word

* Bewitch your hearts; be wise, and circumspect.

* What though the common people favour him,

* Calling him—Humphrey the good duke of Gloster;

* Clapping their hands, and crying with loud voice—

* Jesu maintain your royal excellence!

* With—God preserve the good duke Humphrey!

* I fear me, lords, for all this flattering gloss,

* He will be found a dangerous protector.

* Buck. Why should he then protect our sovereign,

* He being of age to govern of himself,

* Cousin of Somerset, join you with me,

* And all together—with the duke of Suffolk,—

* We'll quickly hoise Duke Humphrey from his seat.

* Car. This weighty business will not brook delay;

* I'll to the duke of Suffolk presently. [Exit.]

* Som. Cousin of Buckingham, though Humphrey's pride,

* And greatness of his place be grief to us,

* Yet let us watch the haughty cardinal;

* His insolence is more intolerable

* Than all the princes in the land beside;

* If Gloster be displac'd, he'll be protector.

* Buck. Or thou, or I, Somerset, will be protector,

* Despight Duke Humphrey, or the cardinal.

[Exeunt BUCKINGHAM and SOMERSET.]

* Sal. Pride went before, ambition follows him.

* While these do labour for their own preferment,

* Behooves it us to labour for the realm.

* I never saw but Humphrey duke of Gloster

* Did bear him like a noble gentleman.

* Oft have I seen the haughty cardinal—

* More like a soldier, than a man of the church,

* As stout, and proud, as he were lord of all,—

* Swear like a ruffian, and demean himself

* Unlike the ruler of a common-weal.—

* Warwick, my son, the comfort of my age!

* Thy deeds, thy plainness, and thy house-keeping,

* Hath won the greatest favour of the commons,

* Excepting none but good duke Humphrey.—

* And, brother York, thy acts in Ireland, intended in wounds and wounds. In the old play the jngle is different. 'And must that then which we won at our swords, be given away with words?

⁴ Richard Plantagenet, duke of York, married Cecily, the daughter of Ralf Neville, earl of Westmoreland, by Joan, daughter to John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster, by his third wife, dame Catharine Swinford. Richard Neville, earl of Salisbury, was son to the earl of Westmore-

* In bringing them to civil discipline ;
 * Thy late exploits, done in the heart of France,
 * When thou wert regent for our sovereign,
 * Have made thee fear'd, and honour'd, of the people :—
 * Join we together, for the public good ;
 * In what we can to bridle and suppress
 * The pride of Suffolk, and the cardinal,
 * With Somerset's and Buckingham's ambition ;
 * And, as we may, cherish Duke Humphrey's deeds,
 * While they do tend the profit of the land.
 * War. So God help Warwick, as he loves the land,
 * And common profit of his country !
 * York. And so says York, for he hath greatest cause.

Sal. Then let's make haste away, and look unto the main.

War. Unto the main ! O father, Maine is lost ;
 That Maine, which by main force Warwick did win,
 * And would have kept, so long as breath did last :
 Main chance, father, you meant ; but I meant Maine ;

Which I will win from France, or else be slain.

[Exeunt WARWICK and SALISBURY.]

York. Anjou and Maine are given to the French ;
 * Paris is lost ; the state of Normandy
 * Stands on a tickle² point, now they are gone :
 * Suffolk concluded on the articles ;
 * The peers agreed ; and Henry was well pleas'd,
 * To change two dukedoms for a duke's fair daughter.
 * I cannot blame them all ; What is't to them ?
 * 'Tis thine they give away, and not their own.
 * Pirates may make cheap pennyworths of their pillage,
 * And purchase friends, and give to courtesans,
 * Still revelling, like lords, till all be gone :
 * While—as the silly owner of the goods
 * Weeps over them, and wrings his hapless hands,
 * And shakes his head, and trembling stands aloof,
 * While all is shar'd, and all is borne away ;
 * Ready to starve, and dare not touch his own.
 * So York must sit, and fret, and bite his tongue,
 * While his own lands are bargain'd for, and sold.
 * Methinks, the realms of England, France, and Ireland,

* Bear that proportion to my flesh and blood,
 * As did the fatal brand Althea burn'd,
 * Unto the prince's heart of Calydon.³
 Anjou and Maine, both given unto the French !
 Cold news for me ; for I had hope of France,
 Even as I have of fertile England's soil.
 A day will come, when York shall claim his own ;
 And therefore I will take the Nevils' parts,
 And make a show of love to proud Duke Humphrey,
 And, when I spy advantage, claim the crown,
 For that's the golden mark I seek to hit :
 Nor shall proud Lancaster usurp my right,
 Nor hold his sceptre in his childish fist,
 Nor wear the diadem upon his head,
 Whose church-like humours fit not for a crown.
 Then, York, be still awhile, till time do serve :
 Watch thou, and wake, when others be asleep,
 To pry into the secrets of the state ;
 Till Henry, surfeiting in joys of love,
 With his new bride, and England's dear-bought queen,

And Humphrey with the peers be fall'n at jars ;
 Then will I raise aloft the milk-white rose,
 With whose sweet smell the air shall be perfum'd ;
 And in my standard bear the arms of York,
 To grapple with the house of Lancaster ;
 And, force perforce, I'll make him yield the crown,
 Whose bookish rule hath pull'd fair England down.

Exit.

land by a second wife. He married Alice, only daughter of Thomas Montacute, earl of Salisbury, who was killed at the siege of Orleans (see Part I. of this play, Act I. Sc. 3.), and in consequence of that alliance obtained the title of Salisbury in 1423. His eldest son, Richard, having married the sister and heir of Henry Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, was created earl of Warwick, 1449.

1 This is an anachronism. The present scene is in SCENE II. The same. A Room in the Duke of Gloster's House. Enter GLOSTER and the Duchess.

Duch. Why droops my lord, like over-ripen'd corn,
 Hanging the head at Ceres' plenteous load ?
 * Why doth the great Duke Humphrey knit his brows,
 * As frowning at the favours of the world ?
 * Why are thine eyes fix'd to the sullen earth,
 * Gazing on that which seems to dim thy sight !
 * What seest thou there ? King Henry's diadem,
 * Enchas'd with all the honours of the world ?
 * If so, gaze on, and grovel on thy face,
 * Until thy head be circled with the same.
 * Put forth thy hand, reach at the glorious gold :—
 * What, is't too short ? I'll lengthen it with mine :
 * And having both together heav'd it up,
 * We'll both together lift our heads to heaven ;
 * And never more abase our sight so low,
 * As to vouchsafe one glance unto the ground.

Glo. O Nell, sweet Nell, if thou dost love thy lord,
 * Banish the canker of ambitious thoughts :
 * And may that thought, when I imagine ill
 * Against my king and nephew, virtuous Henry
 * Be my last breathing in this mortal world !
 * My troublous dream this night doth make me sad.
 * Duch. What dream'd my lord ? tell me, and I'll requite it

* With sweet rehearsal of my morning's dream.
 * Glo. Methought, this staff, mine office-badge in court,
 * Was broke in twain, by whom, I have forgot,
 * But, as I think, it was by the cardinal ;
 * And on the pieces of the broken wand
 * Were plac'd the heads of Edmond duke of Somerset,
 * And William de la Poole, first duke of Suffolk.

* This was my dream ; what doth it bode, God knows.
 * Duch. Tut, this was nothing hut an argument,
 That he that breaks a stick of Gloster's grove,
 * Shall lose his head for his presumption.
 * But list to me, my Humphrey, my sweet duke :
 * Methought I sat in seat of majesty,
 * In the cathedral church of Westminster,
 * And in that chair where kings and queens are crown'd ;

* Where Henry, and dame Margaret, kneel'd to me,
 * And on my head did set the diadem.
 * Glo. Nay, Eleanor, then must I chide outright :
 * Presumptuous dame, ill nurtur'd⁴ Eleanor !
 Art thou not second woman in the realm ;
 And the protector's wife, belov'd of him ?
 * Hast thou not worldly pleasure at command,
 * Above the reach or compass of thy thought ?
 And wilt thou still be hammering treachery,
 * To tumble down thy husband, and thyself,
 * From top of honour to disgrace's feet ?
 Away from me, and let me hear no more.

* Duch. What, what, my lord ! are you so choleric
 * With Eleanor, for telling but her dream ?
 * Next time I'll keep my dreams unto myself,
 * And not be check'd.

* Glo. Nay, be not angry, I am pleas'd again.

Enter a Messenger.

* Mess. My lord protector, 'tis his highness' pleasure.
 * You do prepare to ride into Saint Albans,
 * Whereas⁵ the king and queen do mean to hawk.
 Glo. I go.—Come, Nell, thou wilt ride with us ?

1445 ; but Richard, Duke of York, was not viceroy of Ireland till 1449.

2 Tickle is frequently used for ticklish by ancient writers.

3 Meleager ; whose life was to continue only so long as a certain firebrand should last. His mother Althea having thrown it into the fire, he expired in torment.

4 Ill nurtur'd is ill educated.

5 Whereas for where ; a common substitution in old language, as where is often used for whereas.

* Duch. Yes, good my lord, I'll follow presently.
[Exeunt GLOSTER and Messenger.]
 * Follow I must, I cannot go before,
 * While Gloster bears this base and humble mind.
 * Were I a man, a duke, and next of blood,
 * I would remove these tedious stumbling-blocks,
 * And smooth my way upon their headless necks:
 * And, being a woman, I will not be slack
 * To play my part in fortune's pageant.
 * Where are you there? Sir John! nay, fear not,
 man,
 * We are alone; here's none but thee, and I.

Enter HUME.

Hume. Jesu preserve your royal majesty!
 * Duch. What say'st thou, majesty! I am but grace.
Hume. But, by the grace of God, and Hume's
 advice,
 * Your grace's title shall be multiplied.
 * Duch. What say'st thou, man? hast thou as yet conferr'd
 * With Margery Jourdain, the cunning witch;¹
 * And Roger Bolingbroke, the conjurer?
 * And will they undertake to do me good?
 * Hume. They have promised,—to show your highness
 * A spirit rais'd from depth of under ground,
 * That shall make answer to such questions,
 * As by your grace shall be propounded him.
 * Duch. It is enough; I'll think upon the questions:
 * When from Saint Albans we do make return,
 * We'll see these things effected to the full.
 * Here, Hume, take this reward; make merry, man,
 * With thy confederates in this weighty cause.

[Exit DUCHESSE.]

* Hume. Hume must make merry with the duchess' gold;
 * Marry, and shall. But how now, Sir John Hume?
 * Seal up your lips, and give no words but—mum!
 * The business asketh silent secrecy.
 * Dame Eleanor gives gold, to bring the witch:
 * Gold cannot come amiss, were she a devil.
 * Yet have I gold, flies from another coast:
 * I dare not say, from the rich cardinal,
 * And from the great and new-made duke of Suffolk;
 * Yet I do find it so: for, to be plain,
 * They, knowing dame Eleanor's aspiring humour,
 * Have hired me to undermine the duchess,
 * And buz these conjurations in her brain.
 * They say, A crafty knave does need no broker;²
 * Yet am I Suffolk and the cardinal's broker.
 * Hume, if you take not heed, you shall go near
 * To call them both—a pair of crafty knaves.
 * Well, so it stands: And thus, I fear, at last,
 * Hume's knavery will be the duchess' wreck;
 * And her attainment will be Humphrey's fall:
 * Sort how it will,⁴ I shall have gold for all. [Exit.]

SCENE III. The same. A Room in the Palace.

Enter PETER, and others, with Petitions.

* 1 Pet. My masters, let's stand close; my lord protector will come this way by and by, and then

 * we may deliver our supplications in the quill.¹
 * 2 Pet. Marry, the Lord protect him, for he's a 'good man! Jesu bless him!

Enter SUFFOLK, and QUEEN MARGARET.

* 1 Pet. Here 'a comes, methinks, and the queen
 * with him: I'll be the first, sure.
 * 2 Pet. Come back, fool; this is the duke of Suffolk, and not my lord protector.
 * Suff. How now, fellow? would'st any thing with
 me?
 * 1 Pet. I pray, my lord, pardon me! I took ye 'for my lord protector.

* Q. Mar. [Reading the superscription.] To my 'lord protector! are your supplications to his lordship? Let me see them: What is thine?

* 1 Pet. Mine is, an't please your grace, against John Goodman, my lord cardinal's man, for keeping my house, and lands, and wife and all, from me.

Suff. Thy wife too? that is some wrong indeed.⁶
 —What's yours?—What's here? [Reads.] Against the duke of Suffolk, for enclosing the commons of Melford.—How now, sir knave?

* 2 Pet. Alas, sir, I am but a poor petitioner of our whole township.

Peter. [Presenting his petition.] Against my master, Thomas Horner, for saying, That the duke of York was rightful heir to the crown.

* Q. Mar. What say'st thou? did the duke of York say, he was rightful heir to the crown?

* Peter. That my master was? No, forsooth: my master said, That he was; and that the king was
 'an usurper.

Suff. Who is there? [Enter Servants.]—Take this fellow in, and send for his master with a pursuivant presently:—we'll hear more of your matter before the king. [Exit Servants, with Peter.]

* Q. Mar. And as for you, that love to be protected

'Under the wings of our protector's grace,
 * Begin your suits anew, and sue to him.

[Tears the Petition.]

'Away, base cullions!¹⁰—Suffolk, let them go.

* All. Come, let's be gone. [Exit Petitioners.]

* Q. Mar. My lord of Suffolk, say, is this the guise,

* Is this the fashion in the court of England?

* Is this the government of Britain's isle,

* And this the royalty of Albion's king?

* What, shall King Henry be a pupil still,

* Under the surly Gloster's governance?

* Am I a queen in title and in style,

* And must be made a subject to a duke?

* I tell thee, Poole, when in the city Tours

'Thou rann'st a tilt in honour of my love,

'And stol'st away the ladies' hearts of France;

* I thought King Henry had resembled thee,

'In courage, courtship, and proportion:

* But all his mind is bent to holiness,

* To number Ave-Maries on his beads:

* His champions are—the prophets and apostles,

¹ A title frequently bestowed on the clergy. See the first note on the Merry Wives of Windsor.

² It appears from Rymer's Fœdera, vol. x. p. 505, that in the tenth year of Henry VI. Margery Jourdemayn, John Virley Clerk, and Friar John Ashwell, were, on the ninth of May, brought from Windsor by the constable of the castle, to which they had been committed for sorcery, before the council at Westminster, and afterwards committed to the custody of the Lord Chancellor. It was ordered that whenever the said Virley and Ashwell should find security for their good behaviour they should be set at liberty, and in like manner that Jourdemayn should be discharged on her husband's finding security. This woman was afterwards burned in Smithfield, as stated in the play, and also in the Chronicles.

³ This expression was proverbial.

⁴ Let the issue be what it will.

⁵ There have been some strange conjectures in explanation of this phrase, in the quill. Steevens says that it may mean no more than written or penned suppli-

cations. Mr. Tollet thinks it means with great exactness and observance of form, in allusion to the quilled or plaited ruffs. Hawkins suggests that it may be the same with the French en quille, said of a man when he stands upright upon his feet, without moving from the place, in allusion to quille, a ninepin. It appears to be nothing more than an intention to mark the vulgar pronunciation of 'in the coil,' i. e. in the bustle. This word is spelt in the old dictionaries quail, and was no doubt often pronounced by ignorant persons quile, or quill.

⁶ This wrong seems to have been sometimes practised in Shakespeare's time. Among the Lansdowne MSS. we meet with the following singular petition:—Julius Bogarucius to the Lord Treasurer, in Latin, complaining that the Master of the Rolls keeps his wife from him in his own house, and wishes he may not teach her to be a papist.

⁷ The quarto reads 'an usurer.'

⁸ Queen. An usurper thou would'st say,

Ay—an usurper.

⁹ I. e. scoundrels; from cogniti, Ital.

- * His weapons, holy saws of sacred writ ;
- * His study is his tilt-yard, and his loves
- * Are brazen images of canonized saints.
- * I would, the college of cardinals
- * Would choose him pope, and carry him to Rome,
- * And set the triple crown upon his head ;
- * That were a state fit for his holiness.

Suff. Madam, be patient ; as I was cause
Your highness came to England, so will I
In England work your grace's full content.

* Q. Mar. Beside the haught protector, have we Beaufort,

* The imperious churchman ; Somerset, Buckingham,

* And grumbling York : and not the least of these,
* But can do more in England than the king.

* Suff. And he of these, that can do most of all,
* Cannot do more in England than the Nevils :
* Salisbury and Warwick are no simple peers.

* Q. Mar. Not all these lords do vex me half so much,

* As that proud dame, the lord protector's wife.
* She sweeps it through the court with troops of ladies,

* More like an empress than Duke Humphrey's wife ;

Strangers in court do take her for the queen :

* She bears a duke's revenues on her back,

* And in her heart she scorns her poverty :

* Shall I not live to be aveng'd on her ?

* Contemptuous base-born callat as she is,

* She vaunted 'mongst her mixions t'other day,

The very train of her worst wearing-gown

Was better worth than all my father's lands,

* Till Suffolk gave two dukedoms¹ for his daughter.

* Suff. Madam, myself have lim'd a bush for her ;²

* And plac'd a quire of such enticing birds,

* That she will light to listen to the lays,

* And never mount to trouble you again.

* So, let her rest ; And, madam, list to me :

* For I am bold to counsel you in this.

* Although we fancy not the cardinal,

* Yet must we join with him, and with the lords,

* Till we have brought Duke Humphrey in disgrace.

* As for the duke of York, this late complaint³

* Will make but little for his benefit :

* So, one by one, we'll weed them all at last,

* And you yourself shall steer the happy helm.

Enter KING HENRY, YORK, and SOMERSET, conversing with him ; DUKE and DUCHESS of GLOS-TER, CARDINAL BEAUFORT, BUCKINGHAM, SALISBURY, and WARWICK.

* K. Hen. For my part, noble lords, I care not which ;

Or Somerset, or York, all's one to me.

* York. If York have ill demean'd himself in France,

Then let him be deny'd⁴ the regentship.

* Som. If Somerset be unworthy of the place,

Let York be regent, I will yield to him.

* War. Whether your grace be worthy, yea, or no,

Dispute not that : York is the worthier.

* Car. Ambitious Warwick, let thy betters speak.

* War. The cardinal's not my better in the field.

* Buck. All in this presence are thy betters, Warwick.

* War. Warwick may live to be the best of all.

* Sal. Peace, son ;—and show some reason,
Buckingham,

* Why Somerset should be prefer'd in this.

* Q. Mar. Because the king, forsooth, will have it so.

* Glo. Madam, the king is old enough himself

' To give his censure :⁵ these are no women's matters.

* Q. Mar. If he be old enough, what needs your grace

' To be protector of his excellence ?

* Glo. Madam, I am protector of the realm ;

* And, at his pleasure, will resign my place.

* Suff. Resign it then, and leave thine insolence.

* Since thou wert king (as who is king, but thou ?)

* The commonwealth hath daily run to wreck :

* The Dauphin hath prevail'd beyond the seas

* And all the peers and nobles of the realm

* Have been as bondmen to thy sovereignty.

* Car. The commons hast thou rack'd ; the clergy's bags

* Are lank and lean with thy extortions.

* Som. Thy sumptuous buildings, and thy wife's attire,

* Have cost a mass of public treasury.

* Buck. Thy cruelty in execution,

* Upon offenders, hath exceeded law,

* And left thee to the mercy of the law.

* Q. Mar. Thy sale of offices, and towns in France,—

* If they were known, as the suspect is great,—

* Would make thee quickly hop without thy head.

[Exit GLOSTER. The Queen drops her Fan.

* Give me my fan : What, minion ! can you not ?

[Gives the Duchess a box on the ear.

* I cry you mercy, madam ; Was it you ?

* Duch. Was't I ? yea, I it was, proud French-
woman :

* Could I come near your beauty with my nails,
I'd set my ten commandments in your face.⁶

* K. Hen. Sweet aunt, be quiet ; 'twas against her will.

* Duch. Against her will ! Good king, look to't in time ;

* She'll hamper thee, and dandle thee like a baby :

* Though in this place most master wear no
breeches,

She shall not strike dame Eleanor unreveng'd.

[Exit DUCHESS.

* Buck. Lord cardinal, I will follow Eleanor,

* And listen after Humphrey, how he proceeds :

* She's tickled now ; her fume needs no spurs,

* She'll gallop fast enough to her destruction.

[Exit BUCKINGHAM.

Re-enter GLOSTER.

* Glo. Now, lords, my choler being over-blown,

* With walking once about the quadrangle,

* I come to talk of commonwealth affairs.

* As for your spiteful false objections,

* Prove them, and I lie open to the law :

* But God in mercy so deal with my soul,

* As I in duty love my king and country !

* But, to the matter that we have in hand :

* I say, my sovereign, York is meekest man,

* To be your regent in the realm of France.

* Suff. Before we make election, give me leave

* To show some reason, of no little force,

* That York is most unmeet of any man.

* York. I'll tell thee, Suffolk, why I am unmeet.

* First, for I cannot flatter thee in pride :

* Next, if I be appointed for the place,

* My lord of Somerset will keep me here,

* Without discharge, money, or furniture,

* Till France be won into the Dauphin's hands.

* Last time, I danc'd attendance on his will,

* Till Paris was besieg'd, famish'd, and lost.

* War. That I can witness ; and a fouler fact

* Did never traitor in the land commit.

* Suff. Peace, headstrong Warwick !

* War. Image of pride, why should I hold my peace ?

ful king

the old writers.

⁵ Censure here means simply judgment or opinion, the sense in which it was used by all the writers of the
time.

⁶ This appears to have been a popular phrase for the hands or ten fingers.

Enter Servants of SUFFOLK, bringing in HORNER and PETER.

Suff. Because here is a man accus'd of treason: Pray God, the duke of York excuse himself!

* York. Doth any one accuse York for a traitor?

* K. Hen. What mean'st thou, Suffolk? tell me: What are these?

* Suff. Please it your majesty, this is the man that doth accuse his master of high treason: His words were these;—that Richard, duke of York,

'Was rightful heir unto the English crown;

'And that your majesty was an usurper.

* K. Hen. Say, man, were these thy words?

Hor. An't shall please your majesty, I never said nor thought any such matter: God is my witness, I am falsely accused by the villain.

* Pet. By these ten bones, my lords, [holding up his hands.] he did speak them to me in the garret one night, as we were scouring my lord of York's armour.

* York. Base dunghill villain, and mechanical,

* I'll have thy head for this thy traitor's speech;

* I do beseech your royal majesty,

'Let him have all the rigour of the law.

Hor. Alas, my lord, hang me, if ever I spake the words. My accuser is my pretence; and when I did correct him for his fault the other day, he did vow upon his knees he would be even with me: I have good witness of this; therefore, I beseech your majesty, do not cast away an honest man for a villain's accusation.

* K. Hen. Uncle, what shall we say to this in law?

* Glo. This doom, my lord, if I may judge.

'Let Somerset be regent o'er the French,

'Because in York this breeds suspicion:

'And let these have a day appointed them

'For single combat in convenient place;

'For he hath witness of his servant's malice:

'This is the law, and this Duke Humphrey's doom.

* K. Hen. Then be it so. My lord of Somerset,

We make your grace lord regent o'er the French.²

Som. I humbly thank your royal majesty.

Hor. And I accept the combat willingly.

* Pet. Alas, my lord, I cannot fight; * for God's * sake, pity my case! the spite of man prevaileth

* against me. O, Lord have mercy upon me! I * shall never be able to fight a blow: O Lord, my

* heart!

* Glo. Sirrah, or you must fight, or else be hang'd.

* K. Hen. Away with them to prison: and the day

* of combat shall be the last of the next month.—

* Come, Somerset, we'll see thee sent away.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. The same. The Duke of Gloucester's Garden. Enter MARGERY JOURDAIN, HUME, SOUTHWELL, and BOLINGBROKE.

* Hume. Come, my masters; the duchess, I tell you, expects performance of your promises.

* Boling. Master Hume, we are therefore provided: Will her ladyship behold and hear our exorcisms?³

* Hume. Ay; What else? fear you not her courage.

1 We have just heard a duchess threaten to set her ten commandments in the face of a queen. We have here again a similar vulgar expression. It is, however, a very ancient popular adjuration, and may be found in many old dramatic pieces.

2 Theobald inserted these two lines from the old play, because without them the king has not declared his assent to Gloucester's opinion: and the duke of Somerset is made to thank him for his regency before the king has deputed him to it. Malone supposes that Shakespeare thought Henry's consent to Humphrey's doom might be expressed by a nod; and therefore omits the lines.

3 By exorcise Shakespeare invariably means to raise spirits, and not to lay them. Vide note on All's Well that Ends Well, Act v. Sc. 3.

4 Matter or business.

5 The old quarto reads 'the silence of the night.' The variation of the copies is worth notice:—

'Dark night, dread night, the silence of the night,

* Boling. I have heard her reported to be a woman of an invincible spirit: But it shall be convenient, master Hume, that you be by her aloft, * while we be busy below; and so, I pray you, go * in God's name, and leave us. [Exit Hume.]

* Mother Jourdain, be you prostrate, and grovel on the earth;—* John Southwell, read you; and let * us to our work.

Enter Duchess, above.

* Duch. Well said, my masters; and welcome * all. To this gear; * the sooner the better.

* Boling. Patience, good lady; wizards know their times:

Deep night, dark night, the silent of the night.

'The time of night when Troy was set on fire

'The time when screechows cry, and ban-dogs howl,

'And spirits walk, and ghosts break up their graves,

'That time best fits the work we have in hand.

'Madam, sit you, and fear not; whom we raise,

'We will make fast within a hallow'd verge.

[Here they perform the Ceremonies appertaining, and make the Circle: BOLINGBROKE, or SOUTHWELL, reads, Conjuro te, &c. It thunders and lightens terribly; then the Spirit riseth.]

* Spir. Adsum.

* M. Jourd. Asmath,

* By the eternal God, whose name and power

* Thou tremblest at, answer that I shall ask;

* For, till thou speak, thou shalt not pass from hence.

* Spir. Ask what thou wilt:—That I had said and done!

Boling. First, of the king. What shall of him become? [Reading out of a paper.]

Spir. The duke yet lives, that Henry shall depose;

But him outlive, and die a violent death. [As the Spirit speaks SOUTHWELL writes the answer]

Boling. What fate awaits the duke of Suffolk?

Spir. By water shall he die, and take his end.

Boling. What shall befall the duke of Somerset?

Spir. Let him shun castles;

Safer shall he be upon the sandy plains

Than where castles mounted stand.

* Have done, for more I hardly can endure.

Boling. Descend to darkness, and the burning lake;

* False fiend, avoid!

[Thunder and Lightning. Spirit descends.]

Enter YORK and BUCKINGHAM, hastily, with their Guards, and others.

* York. Lay hands upon these traitors, and their trash.

* Beldame, I think, we watch'd you at an inch.—

* What, madam, are you there? the king and commonweal

* Are deeply indebted for this piece of pains;

* My lord protector will, I doubt it not,

* See you well guerdon'd⁴ for these good deserts.

* Duch. Not half so bad as thine to England's king,

* Injurious duke; that threat'st where is no cause.

Wherein the furies mask in hellish troops,
Send up, I charge you, from Cocytus' lake
The spirit of Ascalon to come to me,
To pierce the bowels of this centric earth,
And hither come in twinkling of an eye!
Ascalon, ascend, ascend!—

Warburton, in a learned but erroneous note, wished to prove that an interlunar night was meant: Stevens has justly observed that silent is here used by the poet as a substantive.

6 Ban-dog, or band-dog, any great fierce dog which required to be tied or chained up. Canis molossus, a massive, bear-dog, or bull-dog. It is sometimes called in the dictionaries canis catenarius.

7 It was anciently believed that spirits who were raised by incantations, remained above ground, and answered questions with reluctance. See both Lucan and Status.

8 Rewarded.

* Buck. True, madam, none at none. What call you this? [Showing her the papers.]
 * Away with them; let them be clapp'd up close,
 * And kept asunder:—You, madam, shall with us:
 * Stafford, take her to thee.—

[Exit Duchess from above.]

* We'll see your trinkets here all forth-coming;
 * All.—Away!

[Exit Guards, with SOUTH. BOLING. &c.]

* York. Lord Buckingham, methinks, you watch'd her well:

* A pretty plot, well chosen to build upon!
 Now, pray, my lord, let's see the devil's writ.
 What have we here? [Reads.]

*The duke yet lives, that Henry shall depose;
 But him outlive, and die a violent death.*

* Why, this is just,

* Aio te, Æacida, Romanos vincere posse.

Well, to the rest:

Tell me, what fate awaits the duke of Suffolk?

By water shall he die, and take his end.—

What shall betide the duke of Somerset?

Let him shun castles;

*Safer shall he be upon the sandy plains,
 Than where castles mounted stand.*

* Come, come, my lords;

* These oracles are hardly attain'd,

* And hardly understood.

* The king is now in progress toward Saint Albans,

* With him the husband of this lovely lady:

* Thither go these news, as fast as horse can carry them;

* A sorry breakfast for my lord protector.

* Buck. Your grace shall give me leave, my lord of York,

* To be the post, in hope of his reward.

* York. At your pleasure, my good lord.—Who's within there, ho!

Enter a Servant.

* Invite my lords of Salisbury, and Warwick,

* To sup with me to-morrow night.—Away!
 [Exit.]

ACT II.

SCENE I. Saint Albans. Enter KING HENRY, QUEEN MARGARET, GLOSTER, Cardinal, and SUFFOLK, with Falconers hollaing.

* Q. Mar. Believe me, lords, for flying at the brook,¹

* I saw not better sport these seven years' day:

* Yet, by your leave, the wind was very high;

* And, next to one, old Joan had not gone out.²

* K. Hen. But what a point, my lord, your falcon made,

* And what a pitch she flew above the rest!—

* To see how God in all his creatures works!

* Yea, man and birds, are fain³ of climbing high.

* Suff. No marvel, an it like your majesty,

* My lord protector's hawks do tower so well;

* They know their master loves to be aloft,

* And bears his thoughts above his falcon's pitch.

* Glo. My lord, 'tis but a base ignoble mind

* That mounts no higher than a bird can soar.

² Johnson was informed that the meaning here is, 'the wind being high, it was ten to one that the old hawk had flown quite away; a trick which hawks often play their masters in windy weather.' But surely, not going out cannot signify not coming home. Dr. Percy's interpretation is entirely opposed to this; he explains it, 'The wind was so high it was ten to one that old Joan would not have taken her flight at the game.' Stevens says, 'The ancient books of hawking do not enable him to decide on the merits of such discordant explanations.' I think, if he had looked into Latham's Falconry, he would have found that Dr. Percy's is the right explanation. 'When you shall come afterward to fly her she must be altogether guided and governed by her stomach; yea, she will be kept and also lost by the same: for let her fail of that never so little, and every puff of wind will blow her away from you; nay, if there be no

* Car. I thought as much; he'd be above the clouds.

* Glo. Ay, my lord cardinal; How think you by that?

Were it not good, your grace could fly to heaven?

* K. Hen. The treasury of everlasting joy!

* Car. Thy heaven is on earth; thine eyes and thoughts

* Beat on a crown,⁴ the treasure of thy heart;

Pernicious protector, dangerous peer,

That smooth'st it so with king and commonweal!

* Glo. What, cardinal, is your priesthood grown peremptory?

* Tantæne animis celestibus ira?

* Churchmen so hot? good uncle, hide such malice;

* With such holiness can you do it?

* Suff. No malice, sir; no more than well becomes

* So good a quarrel, and so bad a peer.

* Glo. As who, my lord?

* Suff. Why, as you, my lord;

Am't like your lordly lord protectorship.

* Glo. Why, Suffolk, England knows thine insolence.

* Q. Mar. And thy ambition, Gloucester.

* K. Hen. I prythee, peace Good queen; and whet not on these furious peers, For blessed are the peacemakers on earth.⁵

* Car. Let me be blessed for the peace I make,

Against this proud protector, with my sword!

* Glo. 'Faith, holy uncle, 'would 'twere come to that! [Aside to the Cardinal.]

* Car. Marry, when thou dar'st. [Aside.]

* Glo. Make up no factious numbers for the matter,

* In thine own person answer thy abuse. [Aside.]

* Car. Ay, where thou dar'st not peep: an if thou dar'st,

* This evening, on the east side of the grove. [Aside.]

* K. Hen. How now, my lords?

* Car. Believe me, cousin Gloucester,

* Had not your man put up the fowl so suddenly,

* We had had more sport.—Come with thy two-hand-sword.⁶ [Aside to Glo.]

* Glo. True, uncle.

* Car. Are you advis'd?—the east side of the grove?

* Glo. Cardinal, I am with you. [Aside.]

* K. Hen. Why, how now, uncle Gloucester?

* Glo. Talking of hawking; nothing else, my lord.—

Now, by God's mother, priest, I'll shave your crown for this,

* Or all my fence⁷ shall fail. [Aside.]

* Car. Medice teipsum; } [Aside.]

* Protector, see to't well, protect yourself.

* K. Hen. But what a point, my lord, your falcon made,

* And what a pitch she flew above the rest!

* To see how God in all his creatures works!

* Yea, man and birds, are fain³ of climbing high?

* I pray, my lords, let me compound this strife.

Enter an Inhabitant of Saint Albans, crying

A Miracle!⁸

* Glo. What means this noise?

Fellow, what miracle dost thou proclaim?

wind stirring, yet she will wheele and sinke away from him and from his voice, that all the time before had lured and trained her up. Booke i. p. 60, Ed. 1633.

³ i. e. fond or glad.

⁴ i. e. thy mind is working on a crown.

⁵ Vide St. Matthew, v. 9.

⁶ The 'two-hand-sword' was sometimes called the long sword, and in common use before the introduction of the rapier.

Justice Shallow, in the Merry Wives of Windsor, boasts of the exploits he had performed in his youth with this instrument.

In the original play the Cardinal desires Gloucester to bring his sword and buckler.

⁷ Fence is the art of defence.

⁸ This scene is founded on a story which Sir Thomas More has related, and which he says was communicated to him by his father.

The impostor's name is not mentioned; but he was detected by Humphrey Duke of Gloucester, and in the manner here represented.

See More's Works, p. 134, Edit. 1557.

Inhab. A miracle! a miracle!

Suff. Come to the king, and tell him what miracle.

Inhab. Forsooth, a blind man at Saint Alban's shrine,

Within this half hour, hath receiv'd his sight;

A man, that ne'er saw in his life before.

* K. Hen. Now, God be prais'd! that to believing souls

Gives light in darkness, comfort in despair!

Enter the Mayor of Saint Alban, and his Brethren; and SIMPCOX, borne between two Persons in a Chair; his Wife, and a great Multitude, following.

* Car. Here come the townsmen on procession,

* To present your highness with the man.

* K. Hen. Great is his comfort in this earthly vale,

* Although by his sight his sin be multiplied.

* Glo. Stand by, my masters, bring him near the king,

* His highness' pleasure is to talk with him.

* K. Hen. Good fellow, tell us here the circumstance,

* That we for thee may glorify the Lord.

What, hast thou been long blind, and now restor'd?

Simp. Born blind, an't please your grace.

Wife. Ay, indeed, was he.

Suff. What woman is this?

Wife. His wife, an't like your worship.

Glo. Had'st thou been his mother, thou could'st have better told.

K. Hen. Where wert thou born?

Simp. At Berwick in the north, an't like your grace.

* K. Hen. Poor soul! God's goodness hath been great to thee:

* Let never day nor night unhallow'd pass,

* But still remember what the Lord hath done.

* Q. Mar. Tell me, good fellow, cam'st thou here by chance,

* Or of devotion, to this holy shrine?

* Simp. God knows, of pure devotion; being call'd

* A hundred times, and oftner, in my sleep

* By good Saint Alban; who said,—Simpcox, come;

* Come, offer at my shrine, and I will help thee.

* Wife. Most true, forsooth; and many time and oft

* Myself have heard a voice to call him so.

Car. What, art thou lame?

Simp. Ay, God Almighty help me!

Suff. How cam'st thou so?

Simp. A fall of a tree.

Wife. A plum-tree, master.

Glo. How long hast thou been blind?

Simp. O, born so, master.

Glo. What, and would'st climb a tree?

Simp. But that in all my life, when I was a youth.

* Wife. Too true; and bought his climbing very dear.

* Glo. Mass, thou lov'd'st plums well, that would'st venture so.

* Simp. Alas, good master, my wife desir'd some damsons,

And made me climb, with danger of my life.

* Glo. A subtle knave! but yet it shall not serve.—

* Let me see thine eyes:—wink now;—now open them:—

* In my opinion yet thou see'st not well.

* Simp. Yes, master, clear as day; I thank God, and Saint Alban.

Glo. Say'st thou me so? What colour is this cloak of!

Simp. Red, master: red as blood.

Glo. Why, that's well said: What colour is my gown of?

Simp. Black, forsooth; coal-black, as jet.

* K. Hen. Why then; thou know'st what colour jet is of?

Suff. And yet, I think, jet did he never see.

Glo. But cloaks, and gowns, before this day, a many.

* Wife. Never, before this day, in all his life.

Glo. Tell me, sirrah, what's my name?

Simp. Alas, master, I know not.

Glo. What's his name?

Simp. I know not.

Glo. Nor his?

Simp. No, indeed, master.

Glo. What's thine own name?

Simp. Saunder Simpcox, an if it please you, master.

Glo. Then, Saunder, sit thou there, the lyingest knave

In Christendom. If thou hadst been born blind, Thou might'st as well have known our names, as thus

To name the several colours we do wear.

Sight may distinguish of colours; but suddenly

To nominate them all, 's impossible.—

My lords, Saint Alban here hath done a miracle;

And would ye not think that cunning to be great,

That could restore this cripple to his legs?

Simp. O, master, that you could!

Glo. My masters of Saint Alban, have you not beades in your town, and things called whips?

May. Yes, my lord, if it please your grace.

Glo. Then send for one presently.

May. Sirrah, go fetch the beadle hither straight.

[Exit an Attendant.]

Glo. Now fetch me a stool hither by and by.

[A Stool brought out.] Now, sirrah, if you mean to save yourself from whipping, leap me over this stool, and run away.

Simp. Alas, master, I am not able to stand alone: You go about to torture me in vain.

Re-enter Attendant, with the Beadle.

Glo. Well, sir, we must have you find your legs. Sirrah beadle, whip him till he leap over that same stool.

Bead. I will, my lord.—Come on, sirrah: off with your doublet quickly.

Simp. Alas, master, what shall I do? I am not able to stand.

[After the Beadle hath hit him once, he leaps over the Stool, and runs away; and the People follow, and cry, A miracle!

* K. Hen. O God, seest thou this, and bear'st so long?

* Q. Mar. It made me laugh, to see the villain run.

* Glo. Follow the knave; and take this drab away.

* Wife. Alas, sir, we did it for pure need.

Glo. Let them be whipped through every market town, till they come to Berwick, whence they came.

[Exit Mayor, Beadle, Wife, &c.]

* Car. Duke Humphrey has done a miracle to-day.

* Suff. True; made the lame to leap, and fly away.

* Glo. But you have done more miracles than I;

* You made, in a day, my lord, whole towns to fly.

Enter BUCKINGHAM.

* K. Hen. What tidings with our cousin Buckingham?

* Buck. Such as my heart doth tremble to unfold.

* A sort¹ of naughty persons, lewdly² bent,—

* Under the countenance and confederacy,

* Of Lady Eleanor, the protector's wife,

* The ringleader and head of all this rout,—

* Have practis'd dangerously against your state,

* Dealing with witches, and with conjurers;

* Whom we have apprehended in the fact;

* Raising up wicked spirits from under ground,

* Demanding of King Henry's life and death,

* And other of your highness' privy council,

* As more at large your grace shall understand.

* Car. And so, my lord protector, by this means

* Your lady is forthcoming³ yet at London.

* This news, I think, hath turn'd your weapon's edge:

* 'Tis like, my lord, you will not keep your hour.

[Aside to GLOSTER.]

2 I. e. wickedly, knavishly.

3 I. e. your lady is in custody.

1 A sort is a company.

* Glo. Ambitious churchman, leave to afflict my heart!
 * Sorrow and grief have vanquish'd all my powers:
 * And, vanquish'd as I am, I yield to thee,
 * Or to the meanest groom.
 * K. Hen. O God, what mischiefs work the wicked ones;
 * Heaping confusion on their own heads thereby!
 * Q. Mar. Gloster, see here the tainture of thy nest;
 * And, look thyself be faultless, thou wert best.
Glo. Madam, for myself, to heaven I do appeal,
 * How I have lov'd my king, and commonweal:
 * And, for my wife, I know not how it stands;
 * Sorry I am to hear what I have heard:
 * Noble she is; but if she have forgot
 * Honour, and virtue, and convers'd with such
 * As, like to pitch, defile nobility,
 * I banish her my bed, and company;
 * And give her, as a prey, to law and shame,
 * That hath dishonour'd Gloster's honest name.
 * K. Hen. Well, for this night, we will repose us here:
 * To-morrow, toward London, back again,
 * To look into this business thoroughly,
 * And call these foul offenders to their answers;
 * And poise the cause in justice' equal scales,
 * Whose beam stands sure, whose rightful cause prevails. [Flourish. Exeunt.]

SCENE II. London. The Duke of York's Garden. Enter YORK, SALISBURY, and WARWICK.
York. Now, my good lords of Salisbury and Warwick,
 * Our simple supper ended, give me leave
 * In this close walk, to satisfy myself,
 * In craving your opinion of my title,
 * Which is infallible to England's crown.
 * Sal. My lord, I long to hear it at full.
War. Sweet York, begin; and if thy claim be good,
 The Nevils are thy subjects to command.
York. Then thus:—
 * Edward the Third, my lords, had seven sons:
 * The first, Edward the Black Prince, prince of Wales;
 * The second, William of Hatfield; and the third,
 * Lionel, duke of Clarence; next to whom,
 * Was John of Gaunt, the duke of Lancaster;
 * The fifth, was Edmond Langley, duke of York;
 * The sixth, was Thomas of Woodstock, duke of Gloucester;
 * William of Windsor was the seventh, and last.
 * Edward, the Black Prince, died before his father;
 * And left behind him Richard, his only son,
 * Who, after Edward the Third's death, reign'd as king;
 * Till Henry Bolingbroke, duke of Lancaster,
 * The eldest son and heir of John of Gaunt,
 * Crown'd by the name of Henry the Fourth,
 * Seiz'd on the realm; depos'd the rightful king;

1 In the original play the words are, 'as you both know.' The phraseology of the text is peculiar to Shakespeare.

2 In Act ii. Sc. 5, of the last play, York, to whom this is spoken, is present at the death of Edmund Mortimer in prison; and the reader will recollect him to have been married to Owen Glendower's daughter in the First Part of King Henry IV.

3 Some of the mistakes of the historians and the drama concerning Edmund Mortimer, earl of March, are noticed in a note to the former play; where he is introduced an aged and gray-haired prisoner in the Tower, and represented as having been confined 'since Harry Monmouth first began to reign.' Yet here we are told he was kept in captivity by Owen Glendower till he died. The fact is, that Hall having said Owen Glendower kept his son-in-law, Lord Grey of Ruthvin, in captivity till he died, and this Lord March having been said by some historians to have married Owen's daughter, the author of this play has confounded them with each other. This Edmund being only six years of age at the death of his father, in 1398, he was delivered by King Henry IV. in ward to his son Henry prince of

* Sent his poor queen to France, from whence she came,
 * And him to Pomfret; where, as you all know,
 * Harmless Richard was murder'd traitorously.
 * War. Father, the duke hath told the truth;
 * Thus got the house of Lancaster the crown.
 * York. Which now they hold by force, and not by right;
 * For Richard, the first son's heir being dead,
 * The issue of the next son should have reign'd.
 * Sal. But William of Hatfield died without an heir.
 * York. The third son, duke of Clarence (from whose line
 * I claim the crown,) had issue—Philippe, a daughter,
 * Who married Edmund Mortimer, earl of March,
 * Edmund had issue—Roger, earl of March:
 * Roger had issue—Edmund, Anne, and Eleanor.
 * Sal. This Edmund, in the reign of Bolingbroke.
 * As I have read, laid claim unto the crown;
 * And, but for Owen Glendower, had been king,
 * Who kept him in captivity, till he died.
 * But, to the rest.
 * York. His eldest sister, Anne,
 * My mother being heir unto the crown,
 * Married Richard, earl of Cambridge; who was son
 * To Edmund Langley, Edward the Third's fifth son.
 * By her I claim the kingdom: she was heir
 * To Roger, earl of March; who was the son
 * Of Edmund Mortimer; who married Philippe,
 * Sole daughter unto Lionel, duke of Clarence;
 * So, if the issue of the elder son
 * Succeed before the younger, I am king.
 * War. What plain proceedings are more plain than this?
 * Henry doth claim the crown from John of Gaunt,
 * The fourth son; York claims it from the third.
 * Till Lionel's issue fails, his should not reign:
 * It fails not yet; but flourishes in thee,
 * And in thy sons, fair slips of such a stock.—
 * Then, father Salisbury, kneel we both together;
 * And, in this private plot, be we the first,
 * That shall salute our rightful sovereign
 * With honour of his birthright to the crown.
 * Both. Long live our sovereign Richard, England's king!
 * York. We thank you, lords. But I am not your king
 * Till I be crown'd; and that my sword be stain'd
 * With heart-blood of the house of Lancaster.
 * And that's not suddenly to be perform'd;
 * But with advice and silent secrecy.
 * Do you, as I do, in these dangerous days,
 * Wink at the duke of Suffolk's insolence,
 * At Beaufort's pride, at Somerset's ambition,
 * At Buckingham, and all the crew of them,
 * Till they have snar'd the shepherd of the flock,
 * That virtuous prince, the good Duke Humphrey:

Wales, and during the whole of that reign, being a minor, and related to the family on the throne, he was under the particular care of the king. At the age of ten years, in 1402, he headed a body of Herefordshire men against Owen Glendower, and was taken prisoner by him. The Percies, in the manifesto they published before the battle of Shrewsbury, speak of him as rightful heir to the crown, whom Owen had confined, and whom, finding for political reasons that the king would not ransom him, they at their own charges had ransomed. If he was at the battle of Shrewsbury, he was probably brought there against his will, to grace their cause, and was under the care of the king soon after. Great trust was reposed in this earl of March during the whole reign of King Henry V. In the sixth year of that king he was at the siege of Fresnes, with the earl of Salisbury; and soon afterwards with the king himself at the siege of Melun. In the same year he was made lieutenant of Normandy; was at Melun with Henry to treat of his marriage with Catharine; and accompanied that queen when she returned from France with the corpse of her husband, in 1422, and died two years afterwards at his castle of Trim, in Ireland.

4 Sequestered spot.

* 'Tis that they seek : and they, in seeking that,
 * Shall find their deaths, if York can prophecy.
 * Sal. My lord, break we off ; we know your mind at full.
 * War. My heart assures me, that the earl of Warwick
 ' Shall one day make the duke of York a king.
 ' York. And, Nevil, this I do assure myself,—
 ' Richard shall live to make the earl of Warwick
 ' The greatest man in England, but the king.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. The same. A Hall of Justice.
Trumpets sounded. Enter KING HENRY, QUEEN
MARGARET, GLOSTER, YORK, SUFFOLK, and SALISBURY ; the Duchess of Gloster, MARGERY JOURDAIN, SOUTHWELL, HUME, and BOLINGBROKE, under guard.

* K. Hen. Stand forth, dame Eleanor Cobham, Gloster's wife :
 ' In sight of God, and us, your guilt is great ;
 ' Receive the sentence of the law, for sins
 ' Such as by God's book are adjudg'd to death.—
 * You four, from hence to prison back again ;
 [To JOURN. &c.]
 * From thence, unto the place of execution.
 * The witch in Smithfield shall be burn'd to ashes,
 * And you three shall be strangled on the gallows.—
 ' You, madam, for you are more nobly born,
 ' Deprived of your honour in your life,
 ' Shall after three days' open penance done,
 ' Live in your country here, in banishment,
 ' With Sir John Stanley, in the Isle of Man.
 * Duch. Welcome is banishment, welcome were my death.

* Glo. Eleanor, the law, thou seest, hath judged
 thee ;
 * I cannot justify whom the law condemns.—
 [Exeunt the Duchess, and the other prisoners guarded.]

* Mine eyes are full of tears, my heart of grief.
 ' Ah, Humphrey, this dishonour in thine age
 ' Will bring thy head with sorrow to the ground !
 ' I beseech your majesty, give me leave to go ;
 ' Sorrow would solace, and mine age would ease.
 * K. Hen. Stay, Humphrey duke of Gloster : ere thou go,
 ' Give up thy staff ; Henry will to himself
 ' Protector be : and God shall be my hope,
 ' My stay, my guide, and lantern to my feet ;
 ' And go in peace, Humphrey ; no less belov'd,
 ' Than when thou wert protector to thy king.

* Q. Mar. I see no reason, why a king of years
 * Should be to be protected like a child.—
 ' God and King Henry govern England's helm :
 ' Give up your staff, sir, and the king his realm.
 * Glo. My staff?—here, noble Henry, is my staff ;
 ' As willingly do I the same resign,
 ' As e'er thy father Henry made it mine ;
 ' And even as willingly at thy feet I leave it,
 ' As others would ambitiously receive it.

* Farewell, good king : When I am dead and gone,
 May honourable peace attend thy throne ! [Exit.]

* Q. Mar. Why, now is Henry king, and Margaret queen ;

* And Humphrey, duke of Gloster, scarce himself,

* That bears so shrewd a maim ; two pulls at once,—
 * His lady banish'd, and a limb lopp'd off.
 * This staff of honour rought,¹ there let it stand,
 * Where it best fits to be, in Henry's hand.
 * Suff. Thus droops this lofty pine, and hangs his sprays ;

* Thus Eleanor's pride dies in her youngest days.
 * York. Lords, let him go.—Please it your majesty,

* This is the day appointed for the combat ;
 * And ready are the appellant and defendant,
 * The armourer and his man, to enter the lists,
 * So please your highness to behold the fight.

* Q. Mar. Ay, good my lord ; for purposely therefore

* Left I the court, to see this quarrel tried.
 * K. Hen. O' God's name, see the lists and all things fit ;

* Here let them end it, and God defend the right !
 * York. I never saw a fellow worse bested,

* Or more afraid to fight, than is the appellant,
 * The servant of this armourer, my lords.

Enter, on one side, HORNER, and his neighbours, drinking to him so much that he is drunk ; and he enters bearing his staff with a sand-bag fastened to it ; a drum before him ; at the other side, PETER, with a drum and a similar staff ; accompanied by Prentices drinking to him.

1 Neigh. Here, neighbour Horner, I drink to you in a cup of sack ; And fear not, neighbour, you shall do well enough.

2 Neigh. And here, neighbour, here's a cup of charneco.²

3 Neigh. And here's a pot of good double beer, neighbour : drink, and fear not your man.

Hor. Let it come, i'th' faith, and I'll pledge you all ;
 And a fig for Peter !

1 Pren. Here, Peter, I drink to thee ; and be not afraid.

2 Pren. Be merry, Peter, and fear not thy master too ; fight for credit of the prentices.

Peter. I thank you all : * drink, and pray for me,
 * I pray you ; for, I think, I have taken my last
 * draught in this world.³—Here, Robin, an if I die, I give thee my apron ; and, Will, thou shalt have my hammer :—and here, Tom, take all the money that I have.—O Lord, bless me, I pray God ! for I am never able to deal with my master, he hath learnt so much fence already.

Sal. Come, leave your drinking, and fall to blows.
 —Sirrah, what's thy name ?

Peter. Peter, forsooth.

Sal. Peter ! what more ?

Peter. Thump.

Sal. Thump ! then see thou thump thy master
 well.

Hor. Masters, I am come hither, as it were, upon my man's instigation, to prove him a knave, and myself an honest man : * touching the duke of
 * York,—will take my death, I never meant him any ill, nor the king, nor the queen : * And, there* fore, Peter, have at thee with a downright blow, as Bevis of Southampton fell upon Ascapart.¹⁰

* York. Despatch!—this knave's tongue begins to double.¹¹

1 I. e. sorrow requires solace, and age requires ease.
 2 The image is probably from our Liturgy :—'A lantern to my feet, and a light to my paths.'

3 Raught is the ancient preterite of the verb reach.
 Shakespeare uses it in Antony and Cleopatra, Act iv. Sc. 9 :—'The hand of death has raught him.'

4 Her in this line relates to pride, and not to Eleanor.
 The pride of Eleanor dies before it has reached maturity.

5 I. e. let him pass out of your thoughts. Duke Humphrey had already left the stage.

6 In a worse plight.

7 As, according to the old law of duels, knights were to fight with the lance and the sword, so those of inferior rank fought with an ebony staff, or baton, to the farther end of which was fixed a bag crammed hard with sand.

8 Charneco appears to have been a kind of sweet wine. Warburton imagines that it may have had its name from charneca, the Spanish name for a species of turpentine tree ; but Steevens says Charneco is the name of a village in Portugal where this wine was made. It is frequently mentioned by old writers.

9 Gay has borrowed this idea in his What d'ye call it, where Peasecod says :—

'Stay, let me pledge—'tis my last earthly liquor.'
 Peasecod's subsequent bequest is likewise copied from Peter's division of his moveables.

10 Warburton added this allusion to Bevis and Ascapart from the old quarto. The story of this knight and giant were familiar to our ancestors ; their effigies are still preserved on the gates of Southampton.

11 This is from Holinshed, whose narrative Shakespeare has deserted in making the armourer confess treason :—'His neighbours gave him wine and strong drink in such excessive sort, that he was therewith

* Sound trumpets, alarm to the combatants.

[Alarm. They fight, and Peter strikes down his Master.

Hor. Hold, Peter, hold! I confess, I confess treason. [Dies.

* York. Take away his weapon;—Fellow,

* Thank God, and the good wine in thy master's way.

* Peter. O God! have I overcome mine enemies in this presence? O Peter, thou hast prevailed in right?

K. Hen. Go, take hence that traitor from our sight;

For, by his death, we do perceive his guilt:¹

And God, in justice, hath reveal'd to us

The truth and innocence of this poor fellow,

Which he had thought to have murder'd wrongfully.—

Come, fellow, follow us for thy reward. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV. The same. A Street. Enter GLOSTER and Servants, in mourning Cloaks.

* Glo. Thus, sometimes hath the brightest day a cloud;

* And, after summer, overmore succeeds

* Barren winter, with his wrathful nipping cold:

* So cares and joys abound, as seasons fleet.²

Sirs, what's o'clock?

Serv. Ten, my lord.

* Glo. Ten is the hour that was appointed me,

* To watch the coming of my punish'd duchess:

* 'Unearth' may she endure the flinty streets,

* To tread them with her tender-feeling feet.

Sweet Nell, ill can thy noble mind brook

The abject people, gazing on thy face,

* With envious³ looks, still laughing at thy shame;

* That erst did follow thy proud chariot wheels,

* When thou didst ride in triumph through the streets.

* But, soft! I think, she comes; and I'll prepare

* My tear-stain'd eyes to see her miseries.

Enter the Duchess of Gloster, in a white sheet, with papers pinned upon her back, her feet bare, and a taper burning in her hand: SIR JOHN STANLEY, a Sheriff, and Officers.

Serv. So please your grace, we'll take her from the sheriff.

* Glo. No, stir not, for your lives; let her pass by.

Duch. Come you, my lord, to see my open shame?

Now thou dost penance too. Look, how they gaze!

* See, how the giddy multitude do point,

* And nod their heads, and throw their eyes on thee!

* Ah, Gloster, hide thee from their hateful looks;

* And, in thy closet pent up, rue my shame,

And ban⁴ thine enemies, both mine and thine.

Glo. Be patient, gentle Nell; forget this grief.

Duch. Ah, Gloster, teach me to forget myself:

For, whilst I think I am thy married wife,

And thou a prince, protector of this land,

* Methinks, I should not thus be led along.

Mail'd up in shame,⁵ with papers on my back;

* And follow'd with a rabble, that rejoice

distempered, and reeled as he went, and so was slain without guilt. As for the false servant, he lived not long unpunished; for being convict of felonie in court of assise, he was judged to be hanged, and so was at Tyburne.⁶ Fo. 626.

¹ The real name of the combatants were John Davys and William Catour. The names of the sheriffs were Godfrey Bologne and Robert Horne, the latter, which occurs in the page of Fabian's Chronicle, may have suggested the name of Horner. The precept to the sheriffs, commanding them to prepare the barriers in Smithfield, with the account of expenses incurred, is among the records of the exchequer, and has been printed in Mr. Nichols's Illustrations of the Manners and Expenses of Antient Times in England, quarto, 1797. It appears that the erection of the barriers, the combat itself, and the subsequent execution of the armourer, occupied the space of six or seven days; that a large quantity of sand and gravel was consumed on the occasion, and that the place of battle was strewn with rushes. Mr. Steevens inferred that the armourer was not killed by his opponent, but scorched, and immediately afterwards hanged. This, however, is in direct

* To see my tears, and hear my deep-fet⁷ groans.

The ruthless flint doth cut my tender feet;

And, when I start, the envious people laugh,

And bid me be advis'd⁸ how I tread.

* Ah, Humphrey, can I bear this shameful yoke?

* Trow'st thou, that e'er I'll look upon the world;

* Or count them happy, that enjoy the sun?

* No; dark shall be my light, and night my day;

* To think upon my pomp shall be my hell.

Sometime I'll say, I am duke Humphrey's wife;

And he a prince, and ruler of the land:

Yet so he rul'd, and such a prince he was,

As he stood by, whilst I, his forlorn duchess,

* Was made a wonder, and a pointing-stock,

To every idle rascal follower.

But be thou mild, and blush not at my shame;

Nor stir at nothing, till the axe of death

Hang over thee, as, sure, it shortly will.

For Suffolk,—he that can do all in all

* With her, that hateth thee, and hates us all,—

And York, and impious Beaufort, that false priest,

Have all lim'd bushes to betray thy wings,

And, fly thou how thou canst, they'll tangle thee:

* But fear not thou, until thy foot be snar'd,

* Nor never seek prevention of thy foes.

* Glo. Ah, Nell, forbear; thou aimest all awry;

* I must offend before I be attained:

* And had I twenty times so many foes,

* And each of them had twenty times their power,

* All these could not procure me any scathe,⁹

* So long as I am loyal, true, and crimeless.

* Would'st have me rescue thee from this reproach?

* Why, yet thy scandal were not wip'd away,

* But I in danger for the breach of law.

* Thy greatest help is quiet,¹⁰ gentle Nell;

* I pray thee, sort thy heart to patience;

* These few days' wonder will be quickly worn.

Enter a Herald.

Her. I summon your grace to his majesty's parliament, holden at Bury the first of this next month.

Glo. And my consent ne'er ask'd herein before.

This is close dealing.—Well, I will be there.

[Exit Herald.

My Nell, I take my leave:—and, master sheriff,

Let not her penance exceed the king's commission.

* Sher. An't please your grace, here my commission stays:

* And Sir John Stanley is appointed now

* To take her with him to the Isle of Man.

* Glo. Must you, Sir John, protect my lady here?

* Stan. So am I given in charge, may't please your grace.

Glo. Entreat her not the worse, in that I pray

You use her well: the world may laugh again;¹¹

And I may live to do you kindness, if

You do it her. And so, Sir John, farewell.

Duch. What gone, my lord; and bid me not farewell.

* Glo. Witness my tears, I cannot stay to speak.

[Exeunt GLOSTER and Servants.

contradiction to all the historians, who state that he was slain. Hall's words are, 'whose body was drawn to Tyburn, and there hanged and beheaded.' The law made no distinction, the dead body of the vanquished was equally adjudged to the punishment of a convicted traitor, in order that his posterity might participate in his infamy. Indeed the record seems decisive; for it states that the dead man was watched after the battle was done, and this most probably means before it was conveyed to Tyburn for execution and decapitation. The death of the vanquished person was always regarded as certain evidence of his guilt.

² i. e. pass or fleet away. ³ Not easily.

⁴ Malicious. ⁵ Curse.

⁶ Wrapped or bundled up in disgrace; alluding to the sheet of penance. Mailed, from a mail or male, a little budget.

⁷ Deep-fetched. ⁸ i. e. careful, circumspect

⁹ Scathe is harm, mischief, used by all our ancient writers. The word is still in use in Scotland.

¹⁰ The poet has not endeavoured to raise much compassion for the duchess, who indeed suffers hut what she had deserved.—Johnson.

¹¹ i. e. the world may look again favourably on me.

- * Duch. Art thou gone too? * All comfort go with thee!
- * For none awakes with me: my joy is—death:
- * Death, at whose name I oft have been afraid,
- * Because I wish'd this world's eternity.—
- * Stanley, I pry'thee, go, and take me hence;
- * I care not whither, for I beg no favour,
- * Only convey me where thou art commanded.
- * Stan. Why, madam, that is to the Isle of Man;
- * There to be used according to your state.
- * Duch. That's bad enough, for I am but reproach:
- * And shall I then be us'd reproachfully?
- * Stan. Like to a duchess, and Duke Humphrey's lady,
- * According to that state you shall be used.
- * Duch. Sheriff, farewell, and better than I fare;
- * Although thou hast been conduct¹ of my shame!
- * Sher. It is my office; and, madam, pardon me.
- * Duch. Ay, ay, farewell; thy office is discharg'd.—
- * Come, Stanley, shall we go?
- * Stan. Madam, your penance done, throw off this sheet,
- * And go we to attire you for our journey.
- * Duch. My shame will not be shifted with my sheet:
- * No, it will hang upon my richest robes,
- * And show itself, attire me how I can.
- * Go, lead the way; I long to see my prison.²

[Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I. The Abbey at Bury. Enter to the Parliament, KING HENRY, QUEEN MARGARET, CARDINAL BEAUFORT, SUFFOLK, YORK, BUCKINGHAM, and others.

- * K. Hen. I muse,³ my lord of Gloster is not come:
- * 'Tis not his wont to be the hindmost man, What'er occasion keeps him from us now.
- * Q. Mar. Can you not see? or will you not observe
- * The strangeness of his alter'd countenance?
- * With what a majesty he bears himself?
- * How insolent of late he is become,
- * How proud, how peremptory, and unlike himself?
- * We know the time, since he was mild and affable;
- * And, if we did but glance a far-off look,
- * Immediately he was upon his knee,
- * That all the court admir'd him for submission:
- * But meet him now, and, be it in the morn,
- * When every one will give the time of day,
- * He knits his brow, and shows an angry eye,
- * And passeth by with stiff unbowed knee,
- * Disdaining duty that to us belongs.
- * Small curs are not regarded, when they grin:
- * But great men tremble, when the lion roars:
- * And Humphrey is no little man in England.
- * First, note, that he is near you in descent;
- * And should you fall, he is the next will mount.
- * Me seemeth,⁴ then, it is no policy,—
- * Respecting what a rancorous mind he bears,
- * And his advantage following your decease,—
- * That he should come about your royal person,
- * Or be admitted to your highness' council.
- * By flattery hath he won the commons' hearts;
- * And, when he please to make commotion,

- * 'Tis to be fear'd, they all will follow him.
- * Now 'tis the spring, and weeds are shallow-rooted;
- * Suffer them now, and they'll o'ergrow the garden,
- * And choke the herbs for want of husbandry.
- * The reverent care, I bear unto my lord,
- * Made me collect these dangers in the duke.
- * If it be fond,⁵ call it a woman's fear;
- * Which fear if better reasons can supplant,
- * I will subscribe and say—I wrong'd the duke.
- * My lord of Suffolk,—Buckingham,—and York,—
- * Reprove my allegation, if you can;
- * Or else conclude my words effectual.
- * Suff. Well hath your highness seen into this duke;
- * And, had I first been put to speak my mind,
- * I think I should have told your grace's tale.
- * The duchess, by his subornation,
- * Upon my life, began her devilish practices:
- * Or if he were not privy to those faults,
- * Yet, by reputing of his high descent⁶
- * (As next the king he was successive heir,)—
- * And such high vaunts of his nobility,
- * Did instigate the bedlam brain-sick duchess,
- * By wicked means, to frame our sovereign's fall.
- * Smooth runs the water where the brook is deep;
- * And in his simple show he harbours treason.
- The fox barks not, when he would steal the lamb.
- No, no, my sovereign; Gloster is a man
- Unsound yet, and full of deep deceit.
- * Car. Did he not, contrary to form of law,
- * Devise strange deaths for small offences done
- * York. And did he not, in his protectorship;
- * Levy great sums of money through the realm,
- * For soldiers' pay in France, and never sent it?
- * By means whereof, the towns each day revolted.
- * Buck. Tut! these are petty faults to faults unknown,
- * Which time will bring to light in smooth Duke Humphrey.
- * K. Hen. My lords, at once: The care you have of us,
- * To mow down thorns that would annoy our foot,
- * Is worthy praise: But shall I speak my conscience?
- * Our kinsman Gloster is as innocent
- * From meaning treason to our royal person,
- * As is the sucking lamb, or harmless dove:
- * The duke is virtuous, mild; and too well given,
- * To dream on evil, or to work my downfall.
- * Q. Mar. Ah, what's more dangerous than this fond affiance!
- * Seems he a dove? his feathers are but borrow'd,
- * For he's disposed as the hateful raven.
- * Is he a lamb? his skin is surely lent him.
- * For he's inclin'd as are the ravenous wolves.
- * Who cannot steal a shape, that means deceit?
- * Take heed, my lord; the welfare of us all
- * Hangs on the cutting short that fraudulent man.

Enter SOMERSET.

- * Som. All health unto my gracious sovereign!
- * K. Hen. Welcome, Lord Somerset. What news from France?
- * Som. That all your interest in those territories
- * Is utterly bereft you; all is lost.
- * K. Hen. Cold news, Lord Somerset: But God's will be done!
- * York. Cold news for me; for I had hope of France,
- * As firmly as I hope for fertile England.⁷
- * Thus are my blossoms blasted in the bud, lately, in our memory. Selden says that this must be understood so far as it relates to the title being 'commonly in use, and properly to the king applied,' because he adduces an instance of the use of majesty, so early as the reign of Henry the Second. The reader will see more on the subject in Mr. Douce's Illustrations of Shakspeare, vol. ii. p. 11.

8 i. e. valuing himself on his high descent. The word occurs again in Act v:—

'And in my conscience do repute his grace,' &c.

9 These two lines York had spoken before in the first act of this play. He is now meditating on this disappointment, and comparing his former hopes with his present loss.

1 For conductor.

2 This impatience of a high spirit is very natural. It is not so dreadful to be imprisoned as it is desirable in a state of disgrace to be sheltered from the scorn of gazers. This is one of those touches which came from the hand of Shakspeare; it is not in the old play.

3 Wonder.

4 i. e. it seemeth to me, a word more grammatical than methinks, which has intruded into its place.—Johnson

5 i. e. assemble by observation.

6 Foolish.

7 Suffolk uses highness and grace promiscuously to the queen. Camden says that majesty came into use in the reign of King Henry the Eighth, as sacred majesty

* Henry my lord is cold in great affairs,
 * Too full of foolish pity; and Gloster's show
 * Beguiles him, as the mournful crocodile
 * With sorrow snares relenting passengers:
 * Or as the snake, roll'd in a flowering bank,¹
 * With shining checker'd slough, doth sting a child,
 * That, for the beauty, thinks it excellent.
 * Believe me, lords, were none more wise than I
 * (And yet, herein, I judge mine own wit good,)
 * This Gloster should be quickly rid the world,
 * To rid us from the fear we have of him.
 * Car. That he should die, is worthy policy:
 * But yet we want a colour for his death:
 * 'Tis meet, he be condemn'd by course of law.
 * Suff. But, in my mind, that were no policy;
 * The king will labour still to save his life;
 * The commons haply rise to save his life;
 * And yet we have but trivial argument,
 * More than mistrust, that shows him worthy death.
 * York. So that, by this, you would not have him die.
 * Suff. Ah, York, no man alive so fain as I.
 * York. 'Tis York that hath more reason for his death.—²
 * But, my lord cardinal, and you, my lord of Suffolk,—
 * Say as you think, and speak it from your souls,—
 * Wer't not all one, an empty eagle were set
 * To guard the chicken from a hungry kite,
 * As place Duke Humphrey for the king's protector?
 * Q. Mar. So the poor chicken should be sure of death.
 * Suff. Madam, 'tis true: And wer't not madness, then,
 * To make the fox surveyor of the fold?
 * Who being accus'd a crafty murderer,
 * His guilt should be but idly posted over,
 * Because his purpose is not executed.
 * No; let him die, in that he is a fox,
 * By nature prov'd an enemy to the flock,
 * Before his chaps be stain'd with crimson blood;
 * As Humphrey, prov'd by reasons, to my liege,³
 * And do not stand on quilllets, how to slay him:
 * Be it by gins, by snares, by subtilty,
 * Sleeping or waking, 'tis no matter how,
 * So he be dead; for that is good deceit
 * Which mates⁴ him first, that first intends deceit.
 * Q. Mar. Thrice-noble Suffolk, 'tis resolutely spoke.
 * Suff. Not resolute, except so much were done;
 * For things are almost spoke, and seldom meant:
 * But, that my heart accordeth with my tongue,—
 * Seeing the deed is meritorious,
 * And to preserve my sovereign from his foe,—
 * Say but the word, and I will be his priest.
 * Car. But I would have him dead, my lord of Suffolk,
 * Ere you can take due orders for a priest:
 * Say, you consent, and censure⁵ well the deed,
 * And I'll provide his executioner.
 * I tender so the safety of my liege.
 * Suff. Here is my hand, the deed is worthy doing.
 * Q. Mar. And so say I.
 * York. And I: and now we three have spoke it,
 * It skills not greatly⁶ who impugns our doom.

Enter a Messenger.

* Mess. Great lords, from Ireland am I come
 * again,
 * To signify—that rebels there are up,
 * And put the Englishmen unto the sword;
 * Send succours, lords, and stop the rage betime,
 * Before the wound do grow incurable;
 * For, being green, there is great hope of help.

* Car. A breach, that craves a quick expedient⁷
 * stop!
 * What counsel give you in this weighty cause?
 * York. That Somerset be sent as regent thither:
 * 'Tis meet, that lucky ruler be employ'd;
 * Witness the fortune he hath had in France.
 * Som. If York, with all his far-fet⁸ policy,
 * Had been the regent there instead of me,
 * He never would have staid in France so long.
 * York. No, not to lose it all, as thou hast done:
 * I rather would have lost my life betimes,
 * Than bring a burden of dishonour home,
 * By staying there so long, till all were lost.
 * Show me one scar character'd on thy skin:
 * Men's flesh preserv'd so whole, do seldom win.
 * Q. Mar. Nay then, this spark will prove a raging
 * fire,
 * If wind and fuel, be brought to feed it with:—
 * No more, good York:—sweet Somerset, be still:—
 * Thy fortune, York, hadst thou been regent there,
 * Might happily have prov'd far worse than his.
 * York. What, worse than naught? nay, then a
 * shame take all!
 * Som. And in the number, thee, that wishest
 * shame!
 * Car. My lord of York, try what your fortune is.
 * The uncivil Kernes of Ireland are in arms,
 * And temper clay with blood of Englishmen:
 * To Ireland will you lead a band of men,
 * Collected choicely, from each county some,
 * And try your hap against the Irishmen?
 * York. I will, my lord, so please his majesty.
 * Suff. Why, our authority is his consent:
 * And, what we do establish, he confirms:
 * Then, noble York, take thou this task in hand.
 * York. I am content: Provide me soldiers, lords,
 * Whiles I take order for mine own affairs.
 * Suff. A charge, Lord York, that I will see per-
 * form'd.
 * But now return we to the false Duke Humphrey.
 * Car. No more of him; for I will deal with him,
 * That, henceforth, he shall trouble us no more.
 * And so break off: the day is almost spent:
 * Lord Suffolk, you and I must talk of that event.
 * York. My lord of Suffolk, within fourteen days,
 * At Bristol I expect my soldiers;
 * For there I'll ship them all for Ireland.
 * Suff. I'll see it truly done, my lord of York.
 * [Exeunt all but York.
 * York. Now, York, or never, steel thy fearful
 * thoughts,
 * And change misdoubt to resolution:
 * Be that thou hop'st to be; or what thou art:
 * Resign to death, it is not worth the enjoying:
 * Let pale-fac'd fear keep with the mean-born man,
 * And find no harbour in a royal heart:
 * Faster than spring-time showers, comes thought
 * on thought;
 * And not a thought, but thinks on dignity.
 * My brain, more busy than the labouring spider,
 * Weaves tedious snares to trap mine enemies.
 * Well, nobles, well, 'tis politicly done,
 * To send me packing with an host of men:
 * I fear me, you but warm the starved snake,
 * Who, cherish'd in your breasts, will sting your * hearts.
 * 'Twas men I lack'd, and you will give them me:
 * I take it kindly: yet, be well assur'd
 * You put sharp weapons in a madman's hands.
 * While I in Ireland nourish a mighty band,
 * I will stir up in England some black storm,
 * Shall blow ten thousand souls to heaven, or hell:
 * And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage

stroyed, as being proved by reasons or arguments to be the king's enemy, before he has committed any actual crime.

4 I.e. confounds, overcomes.

5 That is, 'I will be the attendant on his last scene; I will be the last man whom he shall see.'

6 I.e. judge or think well of it.

7 'It matters not greatly.' Shakspeare has the phrase in Twelfth Night, Act v. Sc. 1.

8 Expeditious.

9 Far-fetched.

2 York had more reason for desiring Humphrey's death, because he stood between him and the crown, which he had proposed to himself in his ambitious views.

3 The meaning of this obscurely constructed passage appears to be, 'The fox may be lawfully killed, as being known to be an enemy to sheep, even before he has actually killed them; so Humphrey may be properly de-

 * I know, no pain, they can inflict upon him,
 * Will make him say—I mov'd him to those arms.
 * Say, that he thrive (as 'tis great like he will),
 * Why, then from Ireland come I with my strength,
 * And reap the harvest which that rascal sow'd:
 * For, Humphrey being dead, as he shall be,
 * And Henry put apart, the next for me. [Exit.

SCENE II.⁵ Bury. A Room in the Palace.
 Enter certain Murderers, hastily.

1 Mur. Run to my lord of Suffolk; let him know,
 * We have despatch'd the duke, as he commanded.
 * 2 Mur. O, that it were to do!—What have we done?

* Didst ever hear a man so penitent?

Enter SUFFOLK.

* 1 Mur. Here comes my lord.
 * Suff. Now, sirs, have you Despatch'd this thing?
 * 1 Mur. Ay, my good lord, he's dead.
 * Suff. Why, that's well said. Go, get you to my house;
 * I will reward you for this venturesome deed.
 * The king and all the peers are here at hand:—
 * Have you laid fair the bed? are all things well,
 * According as I gave directions?
 * 1 Mur. 'Tis, my good lord.
 * Suff. Away, be gone! [Exeunt Murderers.

Enter KING HENRY, QUEEN MARGARET, CAR-DINAL BEAUFORT, SOMERSET, Lords, and others.

* K. Hen. Go, call our uncle to our presence
 straight:

* Say, we intend to try his grace to-day,
 * If he be guilty, as 'tis published.

* Suff. I'll call him presently, my noble lord.

[Exit.

* K. Hen. Lords, take your places;—And, I pray you all,

1 Thus in Macbeth:—

* All that impedes thee from the golden round,
 * Which fate and metaphysical aid doth seem
 * To have thee crown'd withal.

In King Henry IV. Part II. the crown is called 'this golden rigot.'

2 A flaw is a violent gust of wind.

3 Kernes were Irish peasantry, who served as light-armed foot soldiers. In King Richard II. they are called 'rough rug-headed Kernes.'

4 A dancer in a morris-dance; originally, perhaps, meant to imitate a Moorish dance, and thence named.
 The bells sufficiently indicate that the English morris-dance is intended. It appears from Blount's Glosso-graphy, and some of our old writers, that the dance itself was called a morisco. Florio, in the first edition of his Italian Dictionary, defines 'Moresca, a kind of morice or antique dance, after the Moorish or Ethiopian fashion.' The reader who would know more on this curious subject will do well to consult Mr. Douce's very

* Proceed no straiter 'gainst our uncle Gloster,
 * Than from true evidence, of good esteem,
 * He be approv'd in practice culpable.

* Q. Mar. God forbid any malice should prevail,
 * That faultless may condemn a nobleman!
 * Pray God, he may acquit him of suspicion!

* K. Hen. I thank thee, Margaret; these words content me much.—

Re-enter SUFFOLK.

* How now? why look'st thou pale? why trem-blest thou?

* Where is our uncle? what is the matter, Suffolk?
 Suff. Dead in his bed, my lord; Gloster is dead.

* Q. Mar. Marry, God forefend!

* Car. God's secret judgment:—I did dream tonight,

* The duke was dumb, and could not speak a word.

[The King swoons.

* Q. Mar. How fares my lord?—Help, lords!
 the king is dead.

* Som. Rear up his body; wring him by the nose.

* Q. Mar. Run, go, help, help!—O Henry, open thine eyes!

* Suff. He doth revive again;—Madam, be patient.

* K. Hen. O heavenly God!

* Q. Mar. How fares my gracious lord?

Suff. Comfort, my sovereign! gracious Henry, comfort!

K. Hen. What, doth my lord of Suffolk comfort me?

Came he right now? to sing a raven's note,

* Whose dismal tune bereft my vital powers;

And thinks he, that the chirping of a wren,

* By crying comfort from a hollow breast,

* Can chase away the first-conceived sound?

* Hide not thy poison with such sugar'd words,

* Lay not thy hands on me; forbear, I say;

* Their touch affrights me, as a serpent's stung.

Thou baleful messenger, out of my sight!

* Upon thy eyeballs murderous tyranny

* Sits in grim majesty, to fright the world.

* Look not upon me, for thine eyes are wounding:—

* Yet do not go away;—Come, basilisk,

* And kill the innocent gazer with thy sight:*

* For in the shade of death I shall find joy:

* In life, but double death, now Gloster's dead!

Q. Mar. Why do you rate my lord of Suffolk

thus?

* Although the duke was enemy to him,

* Yet he, most christianlike, laments his death:

* And for myself,—foe as he was to me,

* Might liquid tears, or heart-offending groans,

* Or blood-consuming sighs recall his life,

* I would be blind with weeping, sick with groans,

* Look pale as primrose, with blood-drinking sighs,

* And all to have the noble duke alive.

* What know I how the world may deem of me?

* For it is known we were but hollow friends;

* It may be judg'd, I made the duke away:

* So shall my name with slander's tongue be wounded,

* And princes' courts be fill'd with my reproach.

interesting dissertation, printed in the second volume of his Illustrations of Shakspeare.

5 The directions concerning this scene stand thus in the quarto copy:—'Then the curtains being drawn, Duke Humphrey is discovered in his bed, and two men lying on his breast, and smothering him in his bed.
 And then enter the Duke of Suffolk to them.'

6 As nothing further is spoken either by Somerset or the cardinal, or by any one else, to show that they continue in the presence, it is to be presumed that they take advantage of the confusion occasioned by the king's swooning, and slip out unobserved. The next news we hear of the cardinal, he is at the point of death.

7 Just now.

8 —As Esculap an herdsman did aspie,
 That did with easy sight enforce a basilisk to flie,
 Albeit naturally that beast doth murder with the eye.'

Albion's England, b. l. c. iii.

9 And stop the rising of blood-sucking sighs.

King Henry VI. Part III. Act iv. Sc. 4

* This get I by his death : Ah me, unhappy !
 * To be a queen, and crown'd with infamy !
 * K. Hen. Ah, woe is me for Gloster, wretched man !

Q. Mar. Be woe for me, more wretched than he is.

What, dost thou turn away, and hide thy face ?
 I am no loathsome leper, look on me.

* What, art thou, like the adder, waxen deaf ?
 * Be poisonous too, and kill thy forlorn queen.
 * Is all thy comfort shut in Gloster's tomb ?
 * Why, then dame Margaret was ne'er thy joy :
 * Erect his statue then, and worship it,
 * And make my image but an alehouse sign.
 Was I, for this, nigh wreck'd upon the sea ;
 * And twice by awkward wind from England's bank

* Drove back again unto my native clime ?
 What boded this, but well forewarning wind
 Did seem to say,—Seek not a scorpion's nest,
 * Nor set no footing on this unkind shore ?
 * What did I then, but curs'd the gentle gusts,
 * And he that loos'd them from their brazen caves ;
 * And bid them blow towards England's blessed shore,

* Or turn our stern upon a dreadful rock ?
 * Yet Æolus would not be a murderer,
 * But left that hateful office unto thee :
 * The pretty vaulting sea refus'd to drown me ;
 * Knowing, that thou would'st have me drown'd on shore,

* With tears as salt as sea, through thy unkindness :
 * The splitting rocks cower'd in the sinking sands,
 * And would not dash me with their ragged sides ;
 * Because thy flinty heart, more hard than they,
 * Might in thy palace perish Margaret.
 * As far as I could ken thy chalky cliffs,
 * When from the shore the tempest beat us back,
 * I stood upon the hatches in the storm :
 * And when the dusky sky began to rob
 * My earnest-gaping sight of thy land's view,
 * I took a costly jewel from my neck,—
 * A heart it was, bound in with diamonds,—
 * And threw it towards thy land ;—the sea received it ;

* And so, I wish'd, thy body might my heart :
 * And even with this, I lost fair England's view,
 * And bid mine eyes be packing with my heart ;
 * And call'd them blind and dusky spectacles,
 * For losing ken of Albion's wished coast.
 * How often have I tempted Suffolk's tongue
 * (The agent of thy foul inconstancy)
 * To sit and witch me, as Ascanius did,
 * When he to madding Dido would unfold
 * His father's acts, commenc'd in burning Troy ?
 * Am I not witch'd like her ? or thou not false like him ?¹

1 i. e. let not woe be to thee for Gloster, but for me.

2 This allusion, which has been borrowed from the Proverbs of Solomon, and Psalm lviii. by many writers, is oddly illustrated in a passage of Gower's Confessio Amantis, b. i. fo. x. ed. 1532.

3 The same uncommon epithet is applied to the wind by Marlowe in his Edward II.—

'With awkward winds, and with sore tempest driven
 To fall on shore. —'

And by Drayton, Epistle from Richard II. to Queen Isabella :—

'And undertook to travaille dangerous wales,
 Driven by awkward winds and boisterous seas.'

4 The verb perish is here used actively. Thus in Beaumont and Fletcher's Maid's Tragedy :—

'— let not my sins
Perish your noble youth.'

5 The old copy reads 'watch me : the emendation is Theobald's, who observes that 'It was Cupid in the semblance of Ascanius who bewitched Dido.' She, taking him for Ascanius, would naturally speak to him about his father, and would be witched by what she learned from him, as well as by the more regular narrative she had heard from Æneas himself.

6 Stevens thinks the word or should be omitted in this line, which would improve both the sense and metre. Mason proposes to read art instead of or.

7 Stevens proposed to read rain instead of drain.

* Ah me, I can no more ! Die, Margaret !
 * For Henry weeps, that thou dost live so long.

Noise within. Enter WARWICK and SALISBURY.
The Commons press to the door.

* War. It is reported, mighty sovereign,
 * That good Duke Humphrey traitorously is murder'd

* By Suffolk and the Cardinal Beaufort's means.
 * The commons, like an angry hive of bees,
 * That want their leader, scatter up and down,
 * And care not who they sting in his revenge.
 * Myself have calm'd their spleenful mutiny,
 * Until they hear the order of his death.

K. Hen. That he is dead, good Warwick, 'tis too true ;

But how he died, God knows, not Henry :
 * Enter his chamber, view his breathless corpse ;
 * And comment then upon his sudden death.

War. That I shall do, my liege :—Stay, Salisbury,

With the rude multitude, till I return.

[WARWICK goes into an inner Room, and SALISBURY retires.]

* K. Hen. O thou that judgest all things, stay my thoughts :

* My thoughts, that labour to persuade my soul,
 * Some violent hands were laid on Humphrey's life !
 * If my suspect be false, forgive me, God ;
 * For judgment only doth belong to thee !
 * Fain would I go to chafe his paly lips
 * With twenty thousand kisses, and to drain
 * Upon his face an ocean of salt tears ;
 * To tell my love unto his dumb deaf trunk,
 * And with my fingers feel his hand unfeeling :
 * But all in vain are these mean obsequies ;
 * And, to survey his dead and earthly image,
 * What were it but to make my sorrow greater !

The folding Doors of an inner Chamber are thrown open, and GLOSTER is discovered dead in his Bed : WARWICK and others standing by it.

* War. Come hither, gracious sovereign, view this body.

* K. Hen. That is to see how deep my grave is made :

* For, with his soul, fled all my worldly solace ;
 * For seeing him, I see my life in death.

* War. As surely as my soul intends to live
 * With that dread King that took our state upon him
 * To free us from his Father's wrathful curse,
 * I do believe that violent hands were laid
 * Upon the life of this thrice-famed duke.

Suff. A dreadful oath, sworn with a solemn tongue !

* What instance gives Lord Warwick for his vow ?
 * War. See, how the blood is settled in his face !

Oh have I seen a timely parted ghost,⁸
 * Of ashy semblance, meagre, pale, and bloodless,

8 This stage direction was inserted by Malone as best suited to the exhibition. The stage direction in the quarto is, 'Warwick draws the curtains, and shows Duke Humphrey in his bed.' In the folio, 'A bed with Gloster's body put forth.' By these and other circumstances it seems that the theatres were then unfurnished with scenes. In those days, it appears that curtains were occasionally hung across the middle of the stage on an iron rod, which being drawn open formed a second apartment, when a change of scene was required. See Malone's Account of the ancient Theatres, prefixed to the variorum editions of Shakspeare.

9 How much discussion there has been about this simple passage, which evidently means :—'I see my own life threatened with extermination, or surrounded by death.' Thus in a passage of the Burial Service, to which I am surprised none of the commentators have adverted, 'In the midst of life we are in death.'

10 Shakspeare has confounded the terms which signify body and soul together. So in A Midsummer Night's Dream :—

'— damned spirits all,

That in cross-ways and floods have burial.'

The word is frequently thus licentiously used by ancient writers ; instances are to be found in Spenser and others. 'A timely parted ghost,' says Malone, 'means a body that has become inanimate in the common course

' Being all descended to the labouring heart ;
 ' Who, in the conflict that it holds with death,
 ' Attracts the same for aidance 'gainst the enemy :
 ' Which with the heart there cools and ne'er returneth
 ' To blush and beautify the cheek again.
 ' But, see, his face is black, and full of blood ;
 ' His eyeballs further out than when he liv'd,
 ' Staring full ghastly like a strangled man ;
 ' His hair uprear'd, his nostrils stretched with struggling ;
 ' His hands abroad display'd, as one that grasp'd
 ' And tugg'd for life, and was by strength subdu'd.
 ' Look on the sheets, his hair, you see, is sticking ;
 ' His well proportion'd beard made ruff and rugged,
 ' Like to the summer's corn by tempest lodg'd.
 ' It cannot be, but he was murder'd here ;
 ' The least of all these signs were probable.
 ' Suff. Why, Warwick, who should do the duke to death ?

' Myself, and Beaufort, had him in protection ;
 ' And we, I hope, sir, are no murderers.
 ' War. But both of you were vow'd Duke Humphrey's foes ;
 ' And you, forsooth, had the good duke to keep :
 ' 'Tis like, you would not feast him like a friend ;
 ' And 'tis well seen he found an enemy.

' Q. Mar. Then you, belike, suspect these noble-men
 ' As guilty of Duke Humphrey's timeless death.
 ' War. Who finds the heifer dead, and bleeding fresh,

And sees fast by a butcher with an axe,
 But will suspect, 'twas he that made the slaughter ?
 Who finds the partridge in the puttock's nest,
 But may imagine how the bird was dead,
 Although the kite soar with unbloodied beak ?
 Even so suspicious is this tragedy.

' Q. Mar. Are you the butcher, Suffolk ; where's your knife ?

Is Beaufort term'd a kite ? where are his talons ?
 ' Suff. I wear no knife, to slaughter sleeping men ;
 But here's a vengeful sword, rusted with ease,
 That shall be scour'd in his rancorous heart,
 That slanders me with murder's crimson badge :—
 Say, if thou dar'st, proud lord of Warwickshire,
 That I am faulty in Duke Humphrey's death.

[Exeunt Cardinal, Som., and others.]

' War. What dares not Warwick, if false Suffolk dare him ?

' Q. Mar. He dares not calm his contumelious spirit,

Nor cease to be an arrogant controller,
 Though Suffolk dare him twenty thousand times.

' War. Madam, be still ; with reverence may I say ;

For every word, you speak in his behalf,
 Is slander to your royal dignity.

' Suff. Blunt-witted lord, ignoble in demeanour !
 If ever lady wrong'd her lord so much,
 Thy mother took into her blameful bed
 Some stern untutor'd churl, and noble stock
 Was graft with crab-tree slip ; whose fruit thou art,
 And never of the Nevils' noble race.

' War. But that the guilt of murder bucklers thee,
 And I should rob the deathsman of his fee,
 Quitting thee thereby of ten thousand shames,
 And that my sovereign's presence makes me mild,
 I would, false murderous coward, on thy knee
 Make thee beg pardon for thy passed speech,
 And say—it was thy mother that thou meant'st,
 That thou thyself wast born in bastardy :
 And after all this fearful homage done,
 Give thee thy hire, and send thy soul to hell,
 Pernicious bloodsucker of sleeping men !

Suff. Thou shalt be waking, while I shed thy blood,

If from this presence thou dar'st go with me.

' War. Away even now, or I will drag thee hence ;

* Unworthy though thou art, I'll cope with thee,

* And do some service to Duke Humphrey's ghost.

[Exeunt SUFFOLK and WARWICK.]

' K. Hen. What stronger breastplate than a heart untainted ?

* Thrice is he armed, that hath his quarrel just ;

* And he but naked, though lock'd up in steel,

* Whose conscience with injustice is corrupted.²

[A Noise within.]

' Q. Mar. What noise is this ?

Re-enter SUFFOLK and WARWICK, with their Weapons drawn.

' K. Hen. Why, how now, lords ? your wrathful weapons drawn

' Here in our presence ? dare you be so bold ?—

' Why, what tumultuous clamour have we here ?

' Suff. The traitorous Warwick, with the men of

Bury,
 Set all upon me, mighty sovereign.

Noise of a Crowd within. Re-enter SALISBURY.

* Sal. Sirs, stand apart ; the king shall know your mind.—[Speaking to those within.]

Dread lord, the commons send you word by me,
 Unless false Suffolk straight be done to death,
 Or banished fair England's territories,

* They will by violence tear him from your palace,

* And torture him with grievous ling'ring death.

They say, by him the good Duke Humphrey died ;

* They say, in him they fear your highness' death ;

* And mere instinct of love and loyalty,—

* Free from a stubborn opposite intent,

* As being thought to contradict your liking,—

* Makes them thus forward in his banishment.

* They say, in care of your most royal person,

* That, if your highness should intend to sleep,

* And charge—that no man should disturb your rest,

* In pain of your dislike, or pain of death ;

* Yet notwithstanding such a strait edict,

* Were there a serpent seen, with forked tongue,

* That slyly glided towards your majesty,

* It were but necessary you were wak'd ;

* Lest, being suffer'd in that harmful slumber,

* The mortal worm³ might make the sleep eternal.

* And therefore do they cry, though you forbid,

* That they will guard you, wh'er you will, or no,

* From such fell serpents as false Suffolk is ;

* With whose envenomed and fatal sting

* Your loving uncle, twenty times his worth,

* They say, is shamefully bereft of life.

Commons. [Within.] An answer from the king,

my lord of Salisbury.

' Suff. 'Tis like the commons, rude unpolish'd hinds,

Could send such message to their sovereign :

But you, my lord, were glad to be employ'd,

To show how quaint an orator you are :

But all the honour Salisbury hath won,

Is—that he was the lord ambassador,

Sent from a sort⁴ of tinkers to the king.

Commons. [Within.] An answer from the king,

or we'll all break in.

' K. Hen. Go, Salisbury, and tell them all from me,

* I thank them for their tender loving care ;

* And had I not been 'cited so by them,

* Yet do I purpose as they do entreat ;

* For sure, my thoughts do hourly prophesy

* Mischance unto my state by Suffolk's means.

* And therefore—by His majesty I swear,

* Whose far unworthy deputy I am,— of nature ; to which violence has not brought a timeless end.' But Mr. Douce has justly observed, that timely may mean early, recently, newly.

1 i. e. the fingers being widely distended. 'Herein was the Emperor Domitian so cunning, that let a boy a good distance off hold up his hand, and stretch his fingers abroad, he would shoot through the spaces without touching the boy's hand, or any finger.'—Peacham's Complete Gentleman, 1622, p. 181.

2 Thus in Marlowe's Lust's Dominion :—

'Come, Moor ; I'm arm'd with more than complete steel,
 The justice of my quarrel.'

3 Deadly serpent. 4 i. e. dextrous. 5 A company

'He shall not breathe infection in this air'

'But three days longer, on the pain of death.'

[Exit SALISBURY.]

* Q. Mar. O Henry, let me plead for gentle Suffolk!

* K. Hen. Ungentle queen, to call him gentle Suffolk.

'No more, I say; if thou dost plead for him,

'Thou wilt but add increase unto my wrath.

'Had I but said, I would have kept my word:

'But, when I swear, it is irrevocable:—

* If, after three days' space, thou here be'st found,

* On any ground that I am ruler of,

* The world shall not be ransom for thy life,—

'Come, Warwick, come, good Warwick, go with me;

'I have great matters to impart to thee.

[Exit K. HENRY, WARWICK, Lords, &c.]

* Q. Mar. Mischance, and sorrow, go along with you!

'Heart's discontent, and sour affliction,

'Be playfellows to keep you company!

'There's two of you, the devil make a third!

'And threefold vengeance tend upon your steps!

* Suff. Cease, gentle queen, these execrations,

* And let thy Suffolk take his heavy leave.

* Q. Mar. Fye, coward woman, and soft-hearted wretch!

* Hast thou not spirit to curse thine enemies?

* Suff. A plague upon them! wherefore should I curse them?

Would curses kill, as doth the mandrake's groan,¹

'I would invent as bitter-searching terms,

* As curst, as harsh, and horrible to hear,

'Deliver'd strongly through my fixed teeth,

'With full as many signs of deadly hate,

'As lean-fac'd Envy in her loathsome cave:

My tongue should stumble in mine earnest words:

Mine eyes should sparkle like the beaten flint;

My hair be fix'd on end, as one distract;

Ay, every joint should seem to curse and ban:

And even now my burden'd heart would break,

Should I not curse them. Poison be their drink!

Gall, worse than gall, the daintiest that they taste!

Their sweetest shade, a grove of cypress trees!²

Their chiefest prospect, murdering basilisks!

Their softest touch, as smart as lizards' stings!³

Their music, frightful as the serpent's hiss:

And boding screechows make the concert full!

All the foul terrors in dark-seated hell—

* Q. Mar. Enough, sweet Suffolk; thou torment'st thyself;

* And these dread curses—like the sun's gainst glass,

* Or like an overcharged gun—recoil,

* And turn the force of them upon thyself.

* Suff. You bade me ban,⁴ and will you bid me leave?

Now, by the ground that I am banish'd from,

Well could I curse away a winter's night,

Though standing naked on a mountain top,

Where biting cold would never let grass grow,

And think it but a minute spent in sport.

* Q. Mar. O, let me entreat thee, cease! Give me thy hand,

* That I may dew it with my mournful tears;

* Nor let the rain of heaven wet this place,

* To wash away my woeful monuments.

* O, could this kiss be printed in thy hand;

[Kisses his hand.]

* That thou might'st think upon these by the seal,

* Through whom a thousand sighs are breath'd for thee!⁵

'So, get thee gone, that I may know my grief;

'Tis but surmis'd whilst thou art standing by,

* As one that surfeits thinking on a want.

'I will repeal thee, or, be well assur'd,

* Adventure to be banished myself:

* And banished I am, if but from thee.

* Go, speak not to me; even now be gone.—

* O, go not yet!—Even thus two friends condemn'd

* Embrace, and kiss, and take ten thousand leaves,

* Leather a hundred times to part than die.

* Yet now farewell; and farewell life with thee!

* Suff. Thus is poor Suffolk ten times banished,

Once by the king, and three times thrice by thee.

* 'Tis not the land I care for, wert thou hence;

* A wilderness is populous enough,

* So Suffolk had thy heavenly company:

* For where thou art, there is the world itself,

* With every several pleasure in the world;

* And where thou art not, desolation.

* I can no more:—Live thou to joy thy life;

* Myself no joy in nought, but that thou liv'st.

Enter VAUX.

* Q. Mar. Whither goes Vaux so fast? what news, I pray thee?

* Vaux. To signify unto his majesty,

That cardinal Beaufort is at point of death:

* For suddenly a grievous sickness took him,

* That makes him gasp, and stare, and catch the air

* Blaspheming God, and cursing men on earth.

* Sometime, he talks as if Duke Humphrey's ghost

* Were by his side; sometime, he calls the king,

* And whispers to his pillow, as to him,

* The secrets of his overcharged soul:

* And I am sent to tell his majesty,

* That even now he cries aloud for him.

* Q. Mar. Go, tell this heavy message to the king.

[Exit VAUX.]

* Ah me! what is this world? what news are these?

* But wherefore grieve I at an hour's poor loss?

* Omitting Suffolk's exile, my soul's treasure?

* Why only, Suffolk, mourn I not for thee,

* And with the southern clouds, contend in tears;

* Theirs for the earth's increase, mine for my sorrow's?

* Now, get thee hence: The king, thou know'st, is coming:

* If thou be found by me, thou art but dead.

* Suff. If I depart from thee, I cannot live:

* And in thy sight to die, what were it else,

* But like a pleasant slumber in thy lap?

* Here could I breathe my soul into the air,

* As mild and gentle as the cradle-babe,

* Dying with mother's dug between thy lips.

begin to rave; they immediately see in them what they could not find in themselves, the deformity and folly of useless rage.

6 That by the impression of my kiss for ever remaining on thy hand, thou mightest think on those lips through which a thousand sighs will be breathed for thee.

7 'Nec sine te pulchrum dias in luminis auras Exoritur, neque sit lætum nec amabile quicquam.' Lucretius.

And, still more elegantly, Milton, in a passage of his Conus (afterwards omitted,) ver. 214, &c.—

'_____ while I see you,
This dusky hollow is a paradise,
And heaven gates o'er my head.'

8 '_____ Infected minds
To their deaf pillows will discharge their secrets' Macbeth.

9 'Why do I lament a circumstance of which the impression will pass away in an hour; while I neglect to think on the loss of Suffolk, my affection for whom no time will efface?'

1 i. e. he shall not contaminate this air with his infected breath.

2 The fabulous accounts of the plant called a mandrake give it an inferior degree of animal life, and relate, that when it is torn from the ground it groans, and that this groan being certainly fatal to him that is offering such unwelcome violence, the practice of those who gathered mandrakes was to tie one end of a string to the plant, and the other to a dog, upon whom the fatal groan discharged its malignity. See Bulleine's Bulwarke of Defence against Sicknesse, &c. fol. 1579, p. 41.

3 Cypress was employed in the funeral rites of the Romans, and hence is always mentioned as an ill-boding plant.

4 This is one of the vulgar errors in the natural history of our ancestors. The lizard has no sting, and is quite harmless.

5 This inconsistency is very common in real life. Those who are vexed to impatience, are angry to see others less disturbed than themselves; but when others

Where,¹ from thy sight, I should be raging mad,
 'And cry out for thee to close up mine eyes,
 'To have thee with thy lips to stop my mouth;
 'So should'st thou either turn my flying soul,²
 'Or I should breathe it so into thy body,
 And then it liv'd in sweet Elysium.
 To die by thee, were but to die in jest;
 From thee to die, were torture more than death;
 O, let me stay, befall what may befall.
 'Q. Mar. Away! though parting be a fretful cor'sive,³
 'It is applied to a deathful wound.
 'To France, sweet Suffolk: Let me hear from thee;
 'For wheresoe'er thou art in this world's globe,
 I'll have an Iris⁴ that shall find thee out.
 Suff. I go.
 Q. Mar. And take my heart with thee.
 Suff. A jewel, lock'd into the woeful'st cask
 That ever did contain a thing of worth.
 Even as a splitted bark, so sunder we;
 This way fall I to death.
 Q. Mar. This way for me.

[Exeunt, severally.]

SCENE III. London. Cardinal Beaufort's Bed-chamber. Enter KING HENRY,⁵ SALISBURY, WARWICK, and others. The Cardinal in Bed; Attendants with him.

* K. Hen. How fares my lord? speak, Beaufort, to thy sovereign.
 'Car. If thou be'st death, I'll give thee England's treasure,⁶
 'Enough to purchase such another island,
 'So thou wilt let me live, and feel no pain.
 * K. Hen. Ah, what a sign it is of evil life,
 * When death's approach is seen so terrible!
 * War. Beaufort, it is thy sovereign speaks to thee.
 * Car. Bring me unto my trial when you will.
 'Died he not in his bed? where should he die?
 Can I make men live where they will or no?⁷
 * O! torture me no more, I will confess.—
 'Alive again? then show me where he is;
 'I'll give a thousand pounds to look upon him.—
 * He hath no eyes,⁸ the dust hath blinded them.—
 'Comb down his hair; look! look! it stands upright,
 'Like lime-twigs set to catch my winged soul!—
 'Give me some drink; and bid the apothecary
 'Bring the strong poison that I bought of him.
 * K. Hen. O thou eternal Mover of the heavens,
 * Look with a gentle eye upon this wretch!

1 Where for whereas; as in other places.
 2 Pope was indebted to this passage in his Eloisa to Abelaud, where he makes that votarist of exquisite sensibility say:—

'See my lips tremble, and my eyeballs roll,
 Suck my last breath, and catch my flying soul.'
 3 Corrosive was generally pronounced and most frequently written cor'sive in Shakespeare's time. See Mr. Nares's Glossary in voce. The accent, as Mr. Todd observes, being then on the first syllable, the word was easily thus abbreviated.

4 Iris was the messenger of Juno.
 5 The quarto offers this stage-direction:—'Enter the King and Salisbury, and then the curtains be drawn, and the Cardinal is discovered in his bed, raving and staring as if he were mad.' This description did not escape Shakespeare, for he has availed himself of it in a preceding speech by Vaux.

6 A passage in Hall's Chronicle, Henry VI. fol. 70. b. suggested the corresponding lines in the old play.

7 'We cannot hold mortality's strong hand:—
 Why do you bend such solemn brows on me?
 Think you, I bear the shears of destiny?
 Have I commandment on the pulse of life?

King John.

8 'Thou hast no speculation in those eyes
 Which thou dost glare with.' Macbeth.

9 Thus in the old play of King John, 1591, Pandolph sees the king dying, and says:—

'Then, good my lord, if you forgive them all,
 Lift up your hand, in token you forgive.'

10 'Peccantes culpæ cave, nam labimur omnes
 Aut sumus, aut fulmus, vel possumus esse, quod alce est.'

* O, beat away the busy meddling fiend,
 * That lays strong siege unto this wretch's soul,
 * And from his bosom purge this black despair!
 'War. See, how the pangs of death do make him grin.
 * Sal. Disturb him not, let him pass peaceably.
 * K. Hen. Peace to his soul, if God's good pleasure be!
 'Lord cardinal, if thou think'st on heaven's bliss,
 'Hold up thy hand,⁹ make signal of thy hope—
 'He dies, and makes no sign; O God, forgive him!
 'War. So bad a death argues a monstrous life.
 * K. Hen. Forbear to judge,¹⁰ for we are sinners all.—
 'Close up his eyes, and draw the curtain close;
 'And let us all to meditation. [Exeunt]

ACT IV.

SCENE I. Kent. The Seashore near Dover.¹¹
Firing heard at Sea. Then enter, from a Boat, a Captain, a Master, a Master's Mate, WALTER WHITMORE, and others; with them SUFFOLK, and other Gentlemen, prisoners.

* Cap. The gaudy, blabbing, and remorseful¹² day
 * Is crept into the bosom of the sea;
 * And now loud howling wolves arouse the jades
 * That drag the tragic melancholy night;
 * Who with their drowsy, slow, and flagging wings¹³
 * Clip dead men's graves, and from their misty jaws
 * Breathe the foul contagious darkness in the air.
 * Therefore, bring forth the soldiers of our prize;
 * For, whilst our pinnace anchors in the Downs,
 * Here shall they make their ransom on the sand,
 * Or with their blood stain this discolour'd shore.—
 * Master, this prisoner freely give I thee:—
 'And thou that art his mate, make boot of this;—
 'The other, [pointing to SUFFOLK,] Walter Whitmore, is thy share.
 'I Gent. What is my ransom, master? let me know.
 'Mast. A thousand crowns, or else lay down your head.
 'Mate. And so much shall you give, or off goes yours.
 * Cap. What, think you much to pay two thousand crowns,
 * And bear the name and port of gentlemen?—
 * Cut both the villains' throats;—for die you shall;
 * The lives of those which we have lost in fight
 * Cannot¹⁴ be counterpois'd with such a petty sum.

'This is one of the scenes which have been applauded by the critics, and which will continue to be admired when prejudices shall cease, and bigotry give way to impartial examination. These are beauties that rise out of nature and of truth; the superficial reader cannot miss them, the profound can image nothing beyond them.'—Johnson.

11 There is a curious circumstantial account of the event on which this scene is founded in the Paston Letters, published by Sir John Fenn, vol. i. p. 38, Letter x. The scene is founded on the narration of Hall, which is copied by Holinshed.

12 The epithet blabbing, applied to the day by a man about to commit murder, is exquisitely beautiful. Guilt, if afraid of light, considers darkness as a natural shelter, and makes night the confidant of those actions which cannot be trusted to the tell-tale day.—Johnson. Spenser and Milton make use of the epithet:—

'For Venus hated his all-blabbing light.'
Britain's Ida, c. ii.
 'Ere the blabbing eastern scout.'—Comus, v. 138.
Remorseful is pitiful.

13 The chariot of the night is supposed by Shakespeare to be drawn by dragons. Vide Cymbeline, Act ii. Sc. 2.

14 The word cannot, which is necessary to complete the sense of the passage, is not in the old copy: it was supplied by Malone. The difference between the captain's present and succeeding sentiments may be thus accounted for. Here he is only striving to intimidate his prisoners into a ready payment of their ransom. Afterwards his natural disposition inclines him to mercy, till he is provoked by the upbraidings of Suffolk.

* 1 Gent. I'll give it, sir; and therefore spare my life.
 * 2 Gent. And so will I, and write home for it straight.
Whit. I lost mine eye in laying the prize aboard,
 And therefore, to revenge it, shalt thou die;
[To Suff.]
 And so should these, if I might have my will.
 * Cap. Be not so rash; take ransom, let him live.
 * Suff. Look on my George, I am a gentleman;
 Rate me at what thou wilt, thou shalt be paid.
Whit. And so am I, my name is Walter Whitmore.
 How now? why start'st thou? what, doth death affright?
Suff. Thy name affrights me, in whose sound is death.
 A cunning man did calculate my birth,
 And told me—that by Water I should die:¹
 Yet let not this make thee be bloody-minded:
 Thy name is—Gaultier, being rightly sounded.
Whit. Gaultier, or Walter, which it is, I care not;
 Ne'er yet did base dishonour blur our name,
 But with our sword we wip'd away the blot;
 Therefore, when merchant-like I sell revenge,
 Broke be my sword, my arms torn and defac'd,²
 And I proclaim'd a coward through the world!

[Lays hold on SUFFOLK.]

* Suff. Stay, Whitmore; for thy prisoner is a prince,
 The duke of Suffolk, William de la Poole.
Whit. The duke of Suffolk, muffled up in rags!
Suff. Ay, but these rags are no part of the duke;
 Jove sometime went disguis'd, and why not I?
Cap. But Jove was never slain, as thou shalt be.
 * Suff. Obscure and lowly swain, King Henry's blood,
 The honourable blood of Lancaster,
 Must not be shed by such a jaded groom.⁴
 Hast thou not kiss'd thy hand, and held my stirrup?
 * Bare-headed plodded by my footcloth mule,
 And thought thee happy when I shook my head?
 How often hast thou waited at my cup,
 Fed from my trencher, kneel'd down at the board,
 When I have feasted with Queen Margaret?
 * Remember it, and let it make thee crest-fall'n;
 * Ay, and allay this thy abortive pride:⁵
 * How in our voiding lobby hast thou stood,
 * And duly waited for my coming forth?
 * This hand of mine hath writ in thy behalf,
 * And therefore shall it charm thy riotous tongue.⁶
 * Whit. Speak, captain, shall I stab the forlorn swain?
 * Cap. First let my words stab him, as he hath me.

1 Suffolk had heard his name before without being startled by it. In the old play, as soon as ever the captain has consigned him to Walter Whickmore, he immediately exclaims, 'Walter!' Whickmore asks him why he fears him; and Suffolk replies, 'It is thy name affrights me.' The poet here, as in other instances, has fallen into an impropriety by sometimes following and sometimes deserting his original.

2 Thus Drayton, in Queen Margaret's Epistle to this Duke of Suffolk:—

'I pray thee, Poole, have care how thou dost pass;
 Never the sea yet half so dangerous was;
 And one foretold by water thou should'st die.'

A note on these lines says, 'The witch of Eye received answer from the spirit, that the duke of Suffolk should take heed of water.' See the Fourth Scene of the first Act of this play. The prophecy is differently stated by a contemporary in the Paston Letters, vol. i. p. 40:—'Also he asked the name of the ship; and when he knew it, he remembered Stacy that said, if he might escape the dangers of the Tower he should be safe, and then his heart failed him.'

3 The new image which Shakespeare has introduced into this speech—'my arms torn and defac'd'—is also found in King Richard III. Act iii. Sc. 2. See note on that passage.

4 A jaded groom is a low fellow. Suffolk's boast of his own blood was hardly warranted by his origin. His great grandfather had been a merchant at Hull. If Shakespeare had known his pedigree he would not have failed to make some of his adversaries reproach him with it.

6 Pride that has had birth too soon.

* Suff. Base slave! thy words are blunt, and so art thou.
 * Cap. Convey him hence, and on our longboat's side
 Strike off his head.
Suff. Thou dar'st not for thy own.
Cap. Yes, Poole.
Suff. Poole?
Cap. Poole? Sir Poole? lord!
 * Ay, kennel, puddle, sink; whose filth and dirt
 Troubles the silver spring where England drinks.
 * Now will I dam up this thy yawning mouth,
 For swallowing the treasure of the realm;
 * Thy lips, that kiss'd the queen, shall sweep the ground;
 * And thou, that smil'dst at good Duke Humphrey's death,
 * Against the senseless winds shalt grin in vain,
 * Who, in contempt, shall hiss at thee again:
 * And wedded be thou to the hags of hell,
 * For daring to affy a mighty lord
 * Unto the daughter of a worthless king,
 * Having neither subject, wealth, nor diadem.
 * By devilish policy art thou grown great,
 * And, like ambitious Sylla, overgorg'd
 * With goblets of thy mother's bleeding heart.
 * By thee, Anjou and Maine were sold to France:
 * The false revolting Normans, thorough thee,
 * Disdain to call us lord; and Picardy
 * Hath slain their governors, surpris'd our forts,
 * And sent the ragged soldiers wounded home.
 * The princely Warwick, and the Nevils all,—
 * Whose dreadful swords were never drawn in vain,
 * As hating thee, are rising up in arms:
 * And now the house of York—thrust from the crown,
 * By shameful murder of a guiltless king,
 * And lofty proud encroaching tyranny,—
 * Burns with revenging fire: whose hopeful colours
 * Advance our half-fac'd sun,⁷ striving to shine;
 * Under the which is writ—Invitis nobiscus.
 * The commons here in Kent are up in arms:
 * And, to conclude, reproach, and beggary,
 * Is crept into the palace of our king,
 * And all by thee:—Away! convey him hence.
 * Suff. O that I were a god, to shoot forth thunder
 Upon these paltry, servile, abject drudges!
 * Small things make base men proud: 'this villain here,
 * Being captain of a pinnace,⁸ threatens more
 * Than Bargulus the strong Illyrian pirate.⁹
 * Drones suck not eagles' blood, but rob bee-hives.
 * It is impossible, that I should die
 By such a lowly vassal as thyself.
 * Thy words move rage, and not remorse, in me:¹¹

6 By this expression, 'charm thy riotous tongue,' the poet meant Suffolk to say that it should be as potent as a charm in stopping his licentious talk. The same expression occurs in Othello, Act iv. Sc. 1.

7 To betroth in marriage. This enumeration of Suffolk's crimes seems to have been suggested by the Mirror for Magistrates. See the Legend of William de la Poole. The rest of this speech is entirely Shakespeare's; there is no trace of it in the original play.

8 Edward III. bore for his device the rays of the sun dispersing themselves out of a cloud.—Camden's Remaines.

9 A pinnace then signified a ship of small burthen, built for speed. Vide note on The Merry Wives of Windsor, Act i. Sc. 3.

10 'Bargulus, Illyrius Latro, de quo est apud Theopompum, magnas opes habuit.'—Cicero de Officiis, lib. ii. c. 11. Shakespeare, as Dr. Farmer has shown, might have met with this pirate in some of the translations of his time: he points out two to which he is mentioned. In the old play it is, 'Abraas the great Macedonian pirate.'

11 This line in the original play is properly given to the captain. What remorse (i. e. pity) could Suffolk be called upon to show to his assailant? Whereas the captain might with propriety say to his captive, Thy haughty language exasperates me, instead of exciting my compassion. Mr. Boswell is, I believe, mistaken in asserting that remorse was used in the modern sense. At least I find no instance where it is so used by Shakespeare.

'I go of message from the queen to France;
'I charge thee, waft me safely cross the channel.

Cap. Walter,——

'Whit. Come, Suffolk, I must waft thee to thy death.

* Suff. Gelidus timor occupat artus; '—'tis thee I fear.

'Whit. Thou shalt have cause to fear, before I leave thee.

'What, are ye daunted now? now will ye stoop?

'I Gent. My gracious lord, entreat him, speak him fair.

'Suff. Suffolk's imperial tongue is stern and rough,

'Us'd to command, untaught to plead for favour.

'Far be it, we should honour such as these

'With humble suit; no, rather let my head

'Stoop to the block, than these knees bow to any,

'Save to the God of heaven, and to my king;

'And sooner dance upon a bloody pole,

'Than stand uncover'd to the vulgar groom.

* True nobility is exempt from fear:—

'More can I bear, than you dare execute.²

'Cap. Hail him away, and let him talk no more.

'Suff. Come, soldiers, show what cruelty ye can,³

'That this my death may never be forgot!—

'Great men oft die by vile bezonians.⁴

'A Roman sworder and banditto slave,

'Murder'd sweet Tully; Brutus' bastard hand

'Stab'd Julius Cæsar; savage islanders,

'Pompey the Great:⁵ and Suffolk dies by pirates.

[Exit SUFF. with WHIT. and others.]

Cap. And as for these whose ransom we have set,

'It is our pleasure, one of them depart:—

'Therefore come you with us, and let him go.

[Exeunt all but the first Gentleman.]

Re-enter WHITMORE, with SUFFOLK'S Body.

'Whit. There let his head and lifeless body lie,⁶

'Until the queen his mistress bury it. [Exit.]

'I Gent. O barbarous and bloody spectacle!

'His body will I bear unto the king:

'If he revenge it not, yet will his friends:

'So will the queen, that living held him dear.

[Exit, with the Body.]

SCENE II. Blackheath. Enter GEORGE BEVIS and JOHN HOLLAND.

'Geo. Come, and get thee a sword, though made of a lath; they have been up these two days.

'John. They have the more need to sleep now than.

'Geo. I tell thee, Jack Cade the clothier means to dress the commonwealth, and turn it, and set a new nap upon it.

'John. So he had need, for 'tis threadbare. Well, I say, it was never merry world in England, since gentlemen came up.⁷

1 The source from whence this line has been extracted has not yet been discovered. The following lines are the nearest which have been found in the Classic Poets:—

'Subitus tremor occupat artus.'

Virg. JEn. v. 446.

'Nile quidem gelidos radiorum viribus artus.'

Ovid. Metam. iv. 247.

'Navite, confessu gelido pallor timorem.'

De Tristib. El. iii. 113.

2 — I am able now, methinks

(Out of a fortitude of soul I feel.)

To endure more miseries, and greater far,

Than my weak-hearted enemies dare offer.

King Henry VIII.

Again in Othello:—

'Thou hast not half the power to do me harm,

As I have to be hurt.'

3 According to the Letter in the Paston Collection, already cited, the cutting off of Suffolk's head was very barbarously performed. 'One of the lowest of the ship bade him lay down his head, and he should be fairly ferd [dead] with, and dye on a sword; and took a rusty sword and smote off his head within half a dozen strokes.'

4 A bezonian is a mean low person.

5 Pompey was killed by Achilles and Septimius at the moment that the Egyptian fishing boat in which they

* Geo. O miserable age! Virtue is not regarded in handicrafts-men.

* John. The nobility think scorn to go in leather aprons.

* Geo. Nay more, the king's council are no good workmen.

* John. True; And yet it is said,—Labour in thy vocation; which is as much to say, as,—let the magistrates be labouring men; and therefore should we be magistrates.

* Geo. Thou hast hit it: for there's no better sign of a brave mind, than a hard hand.

* John. I see them! I see them! There's Best's son, the tanner of Wingham;—

* Geo. He shall have the skins of our enemies, to make dog's leather of.

John. And Dick the butcher,——

* Geo. Then is sin struck down like an ox, and iniquity's throat cut like a calf.

* John. And Smith the weaver:——

* Geo. Argo, their thread of life is spun.

* John. Come, come, let's fall in with them.

Drum. Enter CADE, DICK the Butcher, SMITH the Weaver, and others in great number.

'Cade. We John Cade, so termed of our supposed father,——

'Dick. Or rather, of stealing a cade of herrings.⁸

[Aside.]

'Cade.—for our enemies shall fall before us, inspired with the spirit of putting down kings and princes.—Command silence.

Dick. Silence!

Cade. My father was a Mortimer.—

Dick. He was an honest man, and a good bricklayer. [Aside.]

'Cade. My mother a Plantagenet,—

'Dick. I knew her well, she was a midwife. [Aside.]

'Cade. My wife descended of the Lacies,—

'inspired with the spirit of a pedler's daughter, and sold many laces. [Aside.]

'Smith. But, now of late, not able to travel with her furred pack, she washes bucks here at home. [Aside.]

'Cade. Therefore am I of an honourable house.

Dick. Ay, by my faith, the field is honourable; and there was he born, under a hedge; for his father had never a house, but the cage.⁹ [Aside.]

* Cade. Valiant I am.

* Smith. 'A must needs; for beggary is valiant. [Aside.]

Cade. I am able to endure much.

Dick. No question of that; for I have seen him whipped three market days together. [Aside.] were, reached the coast, his head being thrown into the sea, a circumstance sufficiently resembling Suffolk's death to bring it to the poet's memory; though his mention of it is not quite accurate. In the old play Pompey is not named.

6 They 'laid his body on the sands of Dover,' and some say that his head was set on a pole by it.—Paston's Letters, vol. i. p. 41.

7 The same phrase was used by the duke of Suffolk to Wolsey and Campeggio in the reign of Henry VIII.

'With that stepped forth the duke of Suffolk from the king, and by his commandment spake these words, with a stout and hault countenance.—'It was never merry England (quoth he) whilst we had cardinals among us.'—Cavendish's Life of Wolsey, p. 167, ed. 1825.

8 Tom Nashe speaks of having weighed one of Gabriel Harvey's books against a cade of herrings, and ludicrously says, 'That the rebel Jack Cade was the first that devised to put red herrings in cades, and from him they have their name.—Lenten Stuffs, 1599.

Cade, however, is derived from cadus, Lat. a cask. We may add, from the accounts of the Celeress of the Abbey of Barking, in the Monasticum Anglicanum, 'a barrel of herring shold contain a thousand herryngs, and a cade of herryng six hundred, six score to the hundred.'

Cade, with more learning than should naturally fall to his character, alludes to his name from cado, to fall.

9 'Little places of prison, set commonly in the market place for harlots and vagabonds, we call cages'—Barret.

Cade. I fear neither sword nor fire.

Smith. He need not fear the sword, for his coat is of proof.¹ [Aside.]

Dick. But, methinks, he should stand in fear of fire, being burnt i' the hand for stealing of sheep.

[Aside.]

Cade. Be brave then; for your captain is brave, and vows reformation. There shall be, in England, seven half-penny loaves sold for a penny; the three-hooped pot shall have ten hoops;² and I will make it felony, to drink small beer: all the realm shall be in common, and in Cheapside shall my palfrey go to grass. And, when I am king (as king I will be)——

All. God save your majesty!

Cade. I thank you, good people:—there shall be no money; all shall eat and drink on my score; and I will apparel them all in one livery, that they may agree like brothers, and worship me their lord.

Dick. The first thing we do, let's kill all the lawyers.

Cade. Nay, that I mean to do.⁴ Is not this a lamentable thing, that of the skin of an innocent lamb should be made parchment? that parchment, being scribbled o'er, should undo a man? Some say, the bee stings; but I say, 'tis the bee's wax; for I did but seal once to a thing, and I was never mine own man since. How now; who's there?

Enter some, bringing in the Clerk of Chatham.

Smith. The clerk of Chatham: he can write and read, and cast account.

Cade. O monstrous!

Smith. We took him setting of boys' copies.

Cade. Here's a villain!

Smith. He has a book in his pocket, with red letters in't.

Cade. Nay, then he is a conjurer.

Dick. Nay, he can make obligations,⁵ and write court-hand.

Cade. I am sorry for't: the man is a proper man, on mine honour; unless I find him guilty, he shall not die,—Come hither, sirrah, I must examine thee: What is thy name?

Clerk. Emmanuel.

Dick. They use to write it on the top of letters;—'Twill go hard with you.

Cade. Let me alone:—Dost thou use to write thy name? or hast thou a mark to thyself, like an honest plain-dealing man?

Clerk. Sir, I thank God, I have been so well brought up, that I can write my name.

All. He hath confessed: away with him; he's a villain, and a traitor.

Cade. Away with him, I say: hang him with his pen and inkhorn about his neck.

[Exeunt some with the Clerk.]

Enter MICHAEL.

Mich. Where's our general?

Cade. Here I am, thou particular fellow.

1 A quibble is most probably intended between two senses of the word; one as being able to resist, the other as being well tried, that is, long worn.

2 These drinking vessels of our ancestors were of wood. Nash, in his Pierce Penniless, 1595, says, 'I believe hoopes in quart pots were invented to that end, that every man should take his hoope, and no more.'

3 'To mend the world by banishing money is an old contrivance of those who did not consider that the quarrels and mischiefs which arise from money, as the signs or tickets of riches, must, if riches were to cease, arise from riches themselves, and could never be at an end till every man was contented with his own share of the goods of life.'—Johnson.

4 This speech was transposed by Shakespeare from a subsequent scene in the old play.

5 i. e. bonds.

6 That is on the top of Letters Missive and such like public acts. See Mabillon's Diplomata.

7 After this speech, in the old play, are the following words:

—Is there any more of them that be knights?

Mich. Fly, fly, fly! Sir Humphrey Stafford and his brother are hard by, with the king's forces.

Cade. Stand, villain, stand, or I'll sell thee down: He shall be encountered with a man as good as himself: He is but a knight, is 'a?

Mich. No.

Cade. To equal him, I will make myself a knight presently: Rise up Sir John Mortimer. Now have at him.

Enter SIR HUMPHREY STAFFORD, and WILLIAM his Brother, with Drum and Forces.

* Staff. Rebellious hinds, and filth and scum of Kent,

* Mark'd for the gallows,—lay your weapons down;

* Home to your cottages, forsake this groom;—

* The king is merciful, if you revolt.

* W. Staff. But angry, wrathful, and inclin'd to blood,

* If you go forward: therefore yield, or die.

Cade. As for these silken-coated slaves, I pass not;⁸

It is to you, good people, that I speak,

* O'er whom, in time to come, I hope to reign;

* For I am rightful heir unto the crown.

* Staff. Villain, thy father was a plasterer;

* And thou thyself, a shearmen, Art thou not?

Cade. And Adam was a gardener.

* W. Staff. And what of that?

Cade. Marry, this:—Edmund Mortimer, earl of March,

Married the duke of Clarence's daughter; Did he not?

* Staff. Ay, sir.

Cade. By her, he had two children at one birth

W. Staff. That's false.

* Cade. Ay, there's the question; but, I say, 'tis true:

* The elder of them, being put to nurse,

* Was by a beggar-woman stol'n away;

* And, ignorant of his birth and parentage,

* Became a bricklayer, when he came to age:

* His son am I; deny it, if you can.

Dick. Nay, 'tis too true; therefore he shall be king.

Smith. Sir, he made a chimney in my father's house, and the bricks are alive at this day to testify it; therefore, deny it not.

* Staff. And will you credit this base drudge's words,

* That speaks he knows not what?

* All. Ay, marry, will we; therefore get ye gone.

W. Staff. Jack Cade, the duke of York hath taught you this.

* Cade. He lies, for I invented it myself [Aside.]

—Go to, sirrah. Tell the king from me, that—for his father's sake, Henry the Fifth, in whose time boys went to span counter for French crowns,—I am content he shall reign; but I'll be protector over him.

* Dick. And, furthermore, we'll have the Lord Say's head, for selling the dukedom of Maine.

* Cade. And good reason; for thereby is England maimed,⁹ and fain to go with a staff, but that my puissance holds it up. Fellow kings, I tell you, that that Lord Say hath gelded¹⁰ the common-

Tom. Yea, his brother.

Cade. Then kneel down, Dick Butcher; rise up Sir Dick Butcher. Sound up the drum.

8 I care not, I pay them no regard.

9 Transform me to what shape you can,

Ipsum not what it be. Drayton's Quest of Cynthia.

9 The same play upon words is in Daniel's Civil Wars, 1595—

* Anjou and Maine, the main that foul appears.

10 Steevens observes that 'Shakspeare has here transgressed a rule laid down by Tully, De Oratore:

'Nolo morte dici Africani castratam esse rempublicam.'

The character of the speaker may countenance such indelicacy here, but in other places our author talks of 'gelding purses, patrimonies, and contents.' I must again remark that in the former instances the phrase was only metaphorically used for diminishing or cur-

'wealth, and made it an eunuch: and more than that, he can speak French, and therefore he is a traitor.'

'Staf. O gross and miserable ignorance!

'Cade. Nay, answer, if you can: The Frenchmen are our enemies: go to, then, I ask but this; Can he, that speaks with the tongue of an enemy, be a good counsellor, or no?

* All. No, no; and therefore we'll have his head.

* W. Staf. Well, seeing gentle words will not prevail,

* Assail them with the army of the king.

'Staf. Herald, away: and, throughout every town,

'Proclaim them traitors that are up with Cade;

'That those, which fly before the battle ends,

'May, even in their wives' and children's sight,

'Be hang'd up for example at their doors:—

'And you, that be the king's friends, follow me.

[Exeunt the Two STAFFORDS, and Forces.]

* Cade. And you, that love the commons, follow me.—

* Now show yourselves men, 'tis for liberty.

* We will not leave one lord, one gentleman:

* Spare none, but such as go in clouted shoon;¹

* For they are thrifty honest men, and such

* As would (but that they dare not) take our parts.

* Dick. They are all in order, and march toward us.

* Cade. But then are we in order, when we are

* most out of order. Come, march forward.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. Another part of Blackheath. Alarums. The two Parties enter and fight, and both the STAFFORDS are slain.

'Cade. Where's Dick, the butcher of Ashford?

'Dick. Here, sir.

'Cade. They fell before thee like sheep and oxen,

'and thou behavedst thyself as if thou hadst been

'in thine own slaughter-house: therefore thus will

'I reward thee.—The Lent shall be as long again

'as it is; and thou shalt have a licence to kill for a

'hundred lacking one, a week.²

'Dick. I desire no more.

* Cade. And, to speak truth, thou deservest no

* less. This monument of the victory will I bear;³

* and the bodies shall be dragged at my horse's

* heels, till I do come to London, where we will * have the mayor's sword borne before us.

* Dick. If we mean to thrive and do good, break

* open the gaols, and let out the prisoners.

* Cade. Fear not that, I warrant thee. Come,

* let's march towards London. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. London. A Room in the Palace.

Enter KING HENRY, reading a Supplication; the

DUKE of BUCKINGHAM, and LORD SAY with him; at a distance, QUEEN MARGARET, mourning over SUFFOLK's Head.

* Q. Mar. Oft have I heard—that grief softens the mind;

* And makes it fearful and degenerate;

* Think therefore on revenge, and cease to weep.

* But who can cease to weep, and look on this?

tailings, and is not peculiar to Shakespeare, but a common form of expression in his time.

1 Shoes.

2 The last two words, a week, were added by Malone from the old play. It is necessary to render the passage intelligible. In the reign of Elizabeth, butchers were strictly enjoined not to sell flesh meat in Lent, not with a religious view, but for the double purpose of diminishing the consumption of flesh meat during that period, and so making it more plentiful during the rest of the year, and of encouraging the fisheries and augmenting the number of seamen. Butchers, who had interest at court, frequently obtained a dispensation to kill a certain number of beasts a week during Lent; of which indulgence, the wants of invalids who could not subsist without animal food, was made the pretence. There are several proclamations on the subject in the library of the Society of Antiquaries.

3 Here Cade must be supposed to take off Stafford's armour. So Holinshed:—Jack Cade, upon his victory against the Staffords, apparelled himself in Sir Hum-

* Here may his head lie on my throbbing breast:

* But where's the body that I should embrace?

* Buck. What answer makes your grace to the rebels' supplication?

* K. Hen. I'll send some holy bishop⁴ to entreat:

* For God forbid, so many simple souls

* Should perish by the sword! And I myself,

* Rather than bloody war shall cut them short,

* Will parley with Jack Cade their general.—

* But stay, I'll read it over once again.

* Q. Mar. Ah, barbarous villains! hath this lovely

face

* Rul'd, like a wandering planet,⁵ over me;

* And could it not enforce them to relent,

* That were unworthy to behold the same?

* K. Hen. Lord Say, Jack Cade hath sworn to have thy head.

* Say. Ay, but I hope, your highness shall have his.

* K. Hen. How now, madam? Still

Lamenting, and mourning for Suffolk's death?

I fear, my love, if that I had been dead,

Thou wouldest not have mourn'd so much for me.

* Q. Mar. No, my love, I should not mourn, but die for thee.

Enter a Messenger.

* K. Hen. How now! what news? why com'st thou in such haste?

* Mes. The rebels are in Southwark; Fly, my

lord!

* Jack Cade proclaims himself Lord Mortimer,

Descended from the duke of Clarence's house:

And calls your grace usurper, openly,

And vows to crown himself in Westminster.

His army is a ragged multitude

Of hinds and peasants, rude and merciless;

Sir Humphrey Stafford and his brother's death

Hath given them heart and courage to proceed:

All scholars, lawyers, courtiers, gentlemen,

They call—false caterpillars, and intend their death.

* K. Hen. O graceless men! they know not what they do.⁶

* Buck. My gracious lord, retire to Kenelworth,

Until a power be rais'd to put them down.

* Q. Mar. Ah! were the duke of Suffolk now alive,

* These Kentish rebels would be soon appeas'd.

* K. Hen. Lord Say, the traitors hate thee,

Therefore away with us to Kenelworth.

* Say. So might your grace's person be in danger;

* The sight of me is odious in their eyes:

* And therefore in this city will I stay,

* And live alone as secret as I may.

Enter another Messenger.

* 2 Mess. Jack Cade hath gotten London Bridge;

the citizens

* Fly and forsake their houses:

* The rascal people, thirsting after prey,

* Join with the traitor; and they jointly swear,

* To spoil the city, and your royal court.

* Buck. Then linger not, my lord; away, take horse.

phrey's brigandine, set full of gilt nails, and so in glory returned again toward London.' Sir Humphrey Stafford was, in fact, killed at Sevenoaks, and is buried at Bromsgrove, in Staffordshire.

4 Shakespeare has here fallen into another inconsistency, by sometimes following Holinshed instead of the old play. He afterwards forgets this holy bishop: and in scene the eighth we find only Buckingham and Clifford were sent, conformably to the old play. Holinshed mentions that the archbishop of Canterbury and the duke of Buckingham were sent.

5 Predominated irresistibly over my passions, as the planets over those born under their influence. The old play led Shakespeare into this strange exhibition; a queen with the head of her murdered paramour on her bosom, in presence of her husband!

6 Instead of this line the old copy has:—

'Go bid Buckingham and Clifford gather

An army up, and meet with the rebels.'

* K. Hen. Come, Margaret; God, our hope, will succour us.

Q. Mar. My hope is gone, now Suffolk is deceas'd.
* K. Hen. Farewell, my lord; [To LORD SAY.] trust not the Kentish rebels.

* Buck. Trust nobody, for fear you be betray'd.
* Say. The trust I have is in mine innocence,
' And therefore am I bold and resolute. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V. The same. The Tower. Enter LORD SCALES, and others on the Walls. Then enter certain Citizens, below.

Scales. How now? is Jack Cade slain?

1 Cit. No, my lord, nor likely to be slain; for they have won the bridge, killing all those that withstand them: The lord mayor craves aid of your honour from the Tower, to defend the city from the rebels.

Scales. Such aid as I can spare, you shall command;

But I am troubled here with them myself,
The rebels have assay'd to win the Tower.
But get you to Smithfield, and gather head,
And thither will I send you Matthew Gough:
Fight for your king, your country, and your lives;
And so farewell, for I must hence again. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI. The same. Cannon Street. Enter JACK CADE, and his Followers. He strikes his Staff on London-stone:

Cade. Now is Mortimer lord of this city. And here, sitting upon London-stone, I charge and command, that of the city's cost, the pissing-conduit run nothing but claret wine this first year of our reign. And now, henceforward, it shall be treason for any that calls me other than—Lord Mortimer.

Enter a Soldier running.

Sold. Jack Cade! Jack Cade!

Cade. Knock him down there. [They kill him.]

* Smith. If this fellow be wise, he'll never call * you Jack Cade more; I think he hath a very fair * warning.

Dick. My lord, there's an army gathered together in Smithfield.

Cade. Come then, let's go fight with them: But, first, go and set London Bridge on fire;¹ and, if you can, burn down the Tower too. Come, let's away. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII. The same. Smithfield. Alarm. Enter on one side, CADE and his Company; on the other, Citizens, and the King's Forces, headed by MATTHEW GOUGH.⁴ They fight; the Citizens are routed, and MATTHEW GOUGH is slain.

Cade. So, sirs:—Now go some and pull down the Savoy;⁵ others to the inns of court; down with them all.

Dick. I have a suit unto your lordship.

1 Whatever offence to modern delicacy may be given by this imagery, such ornaments to fountains appear to have been no uncommon device in ancient times. The curious reader may see a design, probably from the pencil of Benedetto di Montagna, for a very singular fountain of this kind, in that elegant book the Hyperotomachia, printed by Aldus in 1499. Le Grand, in his Vie Privée des François, mentions that at a feast made by Philippe-le-Bon, there was 'une statue d'enfant nu, pose sur une roche, et qui de sa broquette pissait eau de rose.' This conduit may, however, have been one set up at the standarde in Cheape, according to Stowe, by John Wels, grocer, mayor, in 1430, with a small cistern for fresh water, having one cock continually running.

2 'He also put to execution in Southwarke diverse persons, some for breaking this ordinance, and other being his old acquaintance, lest they should bewray his base lineage, disparaging him for his usurped name of Mortimer.'—Holinshed, p. 634.

3 At that time London Bridge was of wood: the houses upon it were actually burnt in this rebellion. Hall says 'he entered London, and cut the ropes of the drawbridge.'

4 Holinshed calls Mathew Gough 'a man of great wit and much experience in feats of chivalrie, the which in continual warres had spent his time in serving of the Cade. Be it a lordship thou shalt have it for that word.

Dick. Only, that the laws of England may come out of your mouth.⁶

* John. Mass, 'twill be sore law then; for he was thrust in the mouth with a spear, and 'tis not whole yet. [Aside.]

* Smith. Nay, John, it will be stinking law; for his breath stinks with eating toasted cheese.

Cade. I have thought upon it, it shall be so. [Aside.]

* Away, burn all the records of the realm; my mouth shall be the parliament of England.

* John. Then we are like to have biting statutes, unless his teeth be pulled out. [Aside.]

* Cade. And henceforward all things shall be in common.

Enter a Messenger.

* Mess. My lord, a prize, a prize! here's the Lord Say, which sold the towns in France; * he * that made us pay one and twenty fifteens,⁷ and * one shilling to the pound, the last subsidy.

Enter GEORGE BEVIS, with the LORD SAY.

* Cade. Well, he shall be beheaded for it ten times.—Ay, thou say,⁸ thou serge, nay, thou buckram lord! now art thou within point-blank of our jurisdiction regal. What canst thou answer to my majesty, for giving up of Normandy unto Monsieur Basimecu, the dauphin of France? Be it known unto thee, by these presence, even the presence of Lord Mortimer, that I am the besom that must sweep the court clean of such filth as thou art. Thou hast most traitorously corrupted the youth of the realm, in erecting a grammar-school: and whereas, before, our forefathers had no other books but the score and the tally, thou hast caused printing to be used;⁹ and, contrary to the king, his crown, and dignity, thou hast built a paper-mill. It will be proved to thy face, that thou hast men about thee, that usually talk of a noun, and a verb; and such abominable words, as no Christian ear can endure to hear. Thou hast appointed justices of peace, to call poor men before them about matters they were not able to answer. Moreover, thou hast put them in prison; and because they could not read, thou hast hanged them;¹⁰ when, indeed, only for that cause, they have been most worthy to live. Thou dost ride on a foot-cloth,¹¹ dost thou not?

Say. What of that?

Cade. Marry, thou oughtest not to let thy horse wear a cloak, when honest men than thou go in their hose and doublets.

king his father.' See also IV. of Worcester, p. 357; and the Paston Letters, vol. i. p. 42.

5 'This trouble had been saved Cade's reformers by his predecessor Wat Tyler. It was never re-edified till Henry VI. founded the hospital.'

6 'It was reported, indeed, that he should sale with great pride that within four daies all the laws of England should come forth of his mouth.'—Holinshed, p. 432.

7 A fifteen was the fifteenth part of all the moveables, or personal property of each subject.

8 Say is a kind of thin woollen stuff or serge.

9 Shakspeare is a little too early with this accusation. Yet Meerman, in his Origines Typographice, has availed himself of this passage to support his hypothesis that printing was introduced into England by Frederic Coraelius, one of Coster's workmen, from Haarlem in the time of Henry VI. Shakspeare's anachronisms are not more extraordinary than those of his contemporaries. Spenser mentions cloth made at Lincoln in the ideal reign of King Arthur, and has adorned a castle at the same period with cloth of Arras and of Tours.

10 I. e. they were hanged because they could not claim the benefit of clergy.

11 A foot-cloth was a kind of housing, which covered the body of the horse: it was sometimes made of velvet and bordered with gold lace. This is a reproach truly characteristic: nothing gives so much offence to the lower orders as the sight of superfluities merely ostentatious.

* Dick. And work in their shirt too ; as myself,
* for example, that am a butcher.

Say. You men of Kent,—

Dick. What say you of Kent ?

* Say. Nothing but this : 'Tis bona terra, mala gens.¹

* Cade. Away with him, away with him ! he speaks Latin.

* Say. Hear me but speak, and bear me where you will.

* Kent, in the commentaries Cæsar writ,

* Is term'd the civil'st place of all this isle :²

* Sweet is the country, because full of riches ;

* The people liberal, valiant, active, wealthy ;

* Which makes me hope you are not void of pity.

* I sold not Maine, I lost not Normandy :

* Yet, to recover them, would lose my life.

* Justice with favour have I always done ;

* Prayers and tears have mov'd me, gifts could never.

* When have I aught exacted at your hands,

* Kent, to maintain the king, the realm, and you ?³

* Large gifts have I bestow'd on learned clerks,

* Because my book prefer'd me to the king :

* And—seeing ignorance is the curse of God,

* Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heaven,—

* Unless you be possess'd with devilish spirits,

* You cannot but forbear to murder me.

* This tongue hath parley'd unto foreign kings

* For your behoof,—

* Cade. Tut ! when struck'st thou one blow in the field ?

* Say. Great men have reaching hands ; oft have I struck

* Those that I never saw, and struck them dead.

* Geo. O monstrous coward ! what, to come behind folks ?

* Say. These cheeks are pale for⁴ watching for your good.

* Cade. Give him a box o' the ear, and that will make 'em red again.

* Say. Long sitting to determine poor men's causes

Hath made me full of sickness and diseases.

* Cade. Ye shall have a hempen caudle then, and the pap of a hatchet.⁵

* Dick. Why dost thou quiver, man ?

* Say. The palsy, and not fear, provoketh me.

* Cade. Nay, he nods at us ; as who should say,

* I'll be even with you. I'll see if his head will * stand steadier on a pole, or no : Take him away, and behead him.

* Say. Tell me, wherein I have offended most ?

* Have I affected wealth, or honour ; speak ?

* Are my chests fill'd up with extorted gold ?

* Is my apparel sumptuous to behold ?

* Whom have I injur'd, that ye seek my death ?

* These hands are free from guiltless blood-shedding,⁶

* This breast from harbouring foul deceitful thoughts.

* O, let me live !

* Cade. I feel remorse in myself with his words :

* but I'll bridle it ; he shall die, an it be but for

* pleading so well for his life. Away with him !

* he has a familiar⁷ under his tongue ; he speaks

* not o' God's name. 'Go, take him away, I say,

* and strike off his head presently ; and then break

* into his son-in-law's house, Sir James Cromer,⁸

* and strike off his head, and bring them both upon

* two poles hither.

* All. It shall be done.

* Say. Ah, countrymen ! if when you make your prayers,

* God should be so obdurate as yourselves,

* How would it fare with your departed souls ?

* And therefore yet relent, and save my life.

* Cade. Away with him, and do as I command ye.

[Exeunt some, with LORD SAY.]

* The proudest peer in the realm shall not wear a * head on his shoulders, unless he pay me tribute ;

* there shall not a maid be married, but she shall

* pay to me her maidenhead ere they have it :⁹

* Men shall hold of me in capite ; and we charge

* and command, that their wives be as free as heart

* can wish, or tongue can tell.

* Dick. My lord, when shall we go to Cheap-

* side, and take up commodities upon our bills ?¹⁰

* Cade. Marry, presently.

* All. O brave !

Re-enter Rebels, with the Heads of LORD SAY, and his Son-in-law.

* Cade. But is not this braver ?—Let them kiss

* one another,¹¹ for they loved well, when they were * alive. Now part them again, lest they consult

* about the giving up of some more towns in France.

* Soldiers, defer the spoil of the city until night :

* for with these borne before us, instead of maces,

* will we ride through the streets ; and, at every

* corner, have them kiss.—Away ! [Exeunt.]

SCENE VIII. Southwark. Alarum. Enter CADE, and all his Rabblement.

* Cade. Up Fish Street ! down Saint Magnus'

* Corner ! kill and knock down ! throw them into

* Thames !—[A Parley sounded, then a Retreat.]

* What noise is this I hear ? Dare any be so bold

* to sound retreat or parley, when I command them

* kill ?

7 A demon who was supposed to attend at call.

8 It was William Crowmer, sheriff of Kent, whom Cade put to death. Lord Say and he had been previously sent to the Tower, and both, or at least the former, convicted of treason at Cade's mock commission of Oyer and Terminer at Guildhall. See W. of Wyre-ester, p. 470.

9 Alluding to an ancient usage, on which Beaumont and Fletcher have founded their play called the Custom of the Country. See Cowell's Law Dictionary, or Blount's Glossographia, 1651, in voce Marcheta. Blackstone is of opinion that it never prevailed in England, though he supposes it certainly did in Scotland. Boetius and Skene both mention this custom as existing in the time of Malcolm III. A. D. 1057. Sir D. Dalrymple controverts the fact, and denies the actual existence of the custom ; as does Whitaker in his History of Manchester. There are several ancient grants from our early kings to their subjects, written in rude verse, and empowering them to enjoy their lands as 'free as heart can wish or tongue can tell.' The authenticity of them, however, is doubtful. See Blount's Jocular Tenures.

10 An equivocal alluding to the halberts or bills borne by the rabble. Shakspeare has the same quibble in Much Ado about Nothing, Act iii. Sc. 3.

11 This may be taken from the Legend of Jack Cade in the Mirror for Magistrates, as Dr. Farmer observes ; but both Hall and Holinshed mention the circumstance

1 After this line the old play proceeds thus :—

Cade. Bonum terrum, What's that ?

Dick. He speaks French.

Will. No, 'tis Dutch.

Nick. No, 'tis Outalian : I know it well enough.

2 'Ex his omnibus sunt humanissimi, qui Cantium incolunt.' Cæsar. Thus translated by Ar. Golding, 1590 :—'Of all the Inhabitants of the isle, the civilest are the Kentish-folke.' It is said also in the same words in Lyly's Euphues and his England, 1590.

3 This passage has been supposed corrupt merely because it was erroneously pointed. I have now placed a comma at Kent, to show that it is parenthetically spoken ; and then I see not the slightest difficulty in the meaning of the passage. It was thus absurdly pointed in the folio :—

'When have I aught exacted at your hands ?

Kent to maintain, the king, the realm, and you ?

Large gifts, have I bestow'd on learned clerks,' &c.

4 I. e. in consequence of.

5 The old copy reads 'the help of a hatchet.' There can be little doubt but that Dr. Farmer's emendation, 'pap of a hatchet,' is the true reading : it is a proper accompaniment to the 'hempen caudle.' Lyly wrote a pamphlet with the title of 'Pap with a Hatchet ;' and the phrase occurs in his play of Mother Bombie : 'They give us pap with a spoon, and when we speake for what we love, pap with a hatchet.'

6 I. e. these hands are free from shedding guiltless or innocent blood.

Enter BUCKINGHAM, and Old CLIFFORD, with Forces.

'Buck. Ay, here they be that dare and will disturb thee :

'Know, Cade, we come ambassadors from the king
'Unto the commons whom thou hast misled ;
'And here pronounce free pardon to them all,
'That will forsake thee, and go home in peace.

'Cliff. What say ye, countrymen ? will ye relent,
'And yield to mercy, whilst 'tis offer'd you ;
'Or let a rabble lead you to your deaths ?
'Who loves the king, and will embrace his pardon,
'Fling up his cap, and say—God save his majesty !
'Who hateth him, and honours not his father,
'Henry the Fifth, that made all France to quake,
'Shake he his weapon at us, and pass by.

'All. God save the king ! God save the king !

'Cade. What, Buckingham, and Clifford, are ye so brave ?—And you, base peasants, do ye believe him ? will you needs be hanged with your pardons about your necks ? Hath my sword therefore broke through London Gates, that you should leave me at the White Hart in Southwark ? I thought, ye would never have given out these arms, till you had recovered your ancient freedom : but you are all recreants, and dastards ; and delight to live in slavery to the nobility. Let them break your backs with burdens, take your houses over your heads, ravish your wives and daughters before your faces ; For me,—I will make shift for one ; and so—God's curse light upon you all !

'All. We'll follow Cade, we'll follow Cade.

'Cliff. Is Cade the son of Henry the Fifth,
'That thus you do exclaim—you'll go with him ?
'Will he conduct you through the heart of France,
'And make the meanest of you earls and dukes ?

'Alas, he hath no home, no place to fly to ;
'Nor knows he how to live, but by the spoil,
'Unless by robbing of your friends, and us.
'Wer't not a shame, that whilst you live at jar,
'The fearful French, whom you late vanquished,
'Should make a start o'er seas, and vanquish you ?
'Methinks, already, in this civil broil,

'I see them lording it in London streets,
'Crying—Villageois ! unto all they meet.

'Better, ten thousand base-born Cades miscarry,
'Than you should stoop unto a Frenchman's mercy.
'To France, to France, and get what you have lost ;
'Spare England, for it is your native coast :
'Henry hath money, you are strong and manly ;
'God on our side, doubt not of victory.

'All. A Clifford ! a Clifford ! we'll follow the king, and Clifford.

'Cade. Was ever feather so lightly blown to and fro, as this multitude ? the name of Henry the Fifth hales them to a hundred mischiefs, and makes them leave me desolate. I see them lay their heads together, to surprise me : my sword make way for me, for here is no staying.—In despite of the devils and hell, have through the very midst of you ! and heavens and honour be witness, that no want of resolution in me, but only my followers' base and ignominious treasons, makes me betake me to my heels. [Exit.]

'Buck. What, is he fled ? go some, and follow him ;

'And he, that brings his head unto the king,
'Shall have a thousand crowns for his reward.—

[Exit some of them.]

1 So all the historians agree ; and yet in Part I. Act iii. Sc. 4, King Henry is made to say :—

'I do remember how my father said'—
a plain proof that the whole of that play was not written by the same hand as this.

2 'The Gallowglasses useth a kind of pollax for his weapon. These men are grim of countenance, tall of stature, big of limme, lusty of body, wel and strongly timbered. The kerne is an ordinary foot-soldier, using for weapon his sword and target, and sometimes his pice, being commonly good markmen.'—Stanhurst's Description, of Ireland, c. viii. f. 21.

'Follow me, soldiers ; we'll devise a mean
'To reconcile you all unto the king. [Exit.]

SCENE IX. Kenelworth Castle. Enter KING HENRY, QUEEN MARGARET, and SOMERSET, on the Terrace of the Castle.

* K. Hen. Was ever king that joy'd an earthly throne,

* And could command no more content than I ?

* No sooner was I crept out of my cradle,

* But I was made a king, at nine months old :¹

* Was never subject long'd to be a king,

* As I do long and wish to be a subject.

Enter BUCKINGHAM and CLIFFORD.

* Buck. Health, and glad tidings, to your majesty !

* K. Hen. Why, Buckingham, is the traitor, Cade, surpris'd ?

* Or is he but retir'd to make him strong ?

Enter, below, a great number of CADE's Followers, with Halters about their Necks.

'Cliff. He's fled, my lord, and all his powers do yield ;

'And humbly thus, with halters on their necks,

'Expect your highness' doom, of life, or death.

'K. Hen. Then, heaven, set ope thy everlasting gates,

'To entertain my vows of thanks and praise !—

'Soldiers, this day have you redeem'd your lives,

'And show'd how well you love your prince and country :

'Continue still in this so good a mind,

'And Henry, though he be unfortunate,

'Assure yourselves, will never be unkind :

'And so, with thanks, and pardon to you all,

'I do dismiss you to your several countries.

All. God save the king ! God save the king !

Enter a Messenger.

* Mess. Please it your grace to be advertised,

* The duke of York is newly come from Ireland ;

* And with a puissant and a mighty power,

* Of Gallowglasses, and stout Kernes,²

* Is marching hitherward in proud array ;

* And still proclaimeth, as he comes along,

* His arms are only to remove from thee

* The duke of Somerset, whom he terms a traitor.

* K. Hen. Thus stands my state, 'twixt Cade and York distress'd ;

* Like to a ship, that, having escap'd a tempest,

* Is straightway calm'd³ and boarded with a pirate ;

* But now⁴ is Cade driven back, his men dispers'd ;

* And now is York in arms to second him.—

* I pray thee, Buckingham, go forth and meet him ;

* And ask him, what's the reason of these arms,

* Tell him, I'll send Duke Edmund to the Tower ;—

* And, Somerset, we will commit thee thither,

* Until his army be dismiss'd from him.

* Som. My lord ;

* I'll yield myself to prison willingly,

* Or unto death, to do my country good.

* K. Hen. In any case, be not too rough in terms ;

* For he is fierce, and cannot brook hard language.

* Buck. I will, my lord ; and doubt not so to deal,

* As all things shall redound unto your good.

* K. Hen. Come, wife, let's in, and learn to govern better :

* For yet may England curse my wretched reign.

[Exit.]

SCENE X. Kent. Iden's Garden.⁵ Enter CADE.

* Cade. Fye on ambition ! fye on myself ; that

3 The first folio reads calme ; which may be right. The second folio printed by mistake claimed ; and the third folio calm'd. This reading has been adopted as most perspicuous, and because in Othello we have :—
——— must be be-lee'd and calm'd.

4 But is here not adversative. 'It was only just now (says Henry,) that Cade and his followers were routed.'

5 'A gentleman of Kent, named Alexander Eden, awaited so his time, that he took the said Cade in a garden in Sussex, so that there he was slain at Hothfield,' &c.—Holinshed, p. 633. 'This Iden was, in fact, the new sheriff of Kent, who had followed Cade from Rochester.'—William of Wyccester, p. 472.

* have a sword, and yet am ready to famish! These * five days have I hid me in these woods; and
 * durst not peep out, for all the country is lay'd for * me: but now am I so hungry, that if I might have
 * a lease of my life for a thousand years, I could * stay no longer. Wherefore, on a brick-wall have
 * I clumbed into this garden; to see if I can eat
 * grass, or pick a sallet another while, which is not
 * amiss to cool a man's stomach this hot weather.
 * And, I think, this word sallet was born to do me
 * good: for, many a time, but for a sallet,¹ my * brain-pan had been cleft with a brown bill; and,
 * many a time when I have been dry, and bravely
 * marching, it hath served me instead of a quart-
 * pot to drink in; and now the word sallet must
 * serve me to feed on.

Enter IDEN, with Servants.

'Iden. Lord, who would live turmoiled in the court,
 ' And may enjoy such quiet walks as these?
 ' This small inheritance, my father left me,
 ' Contenteth me, and is worth a monarchy.
 ' I seek not to wax great by others' waning;
 ' Or gather wealth, I care not with what envy;
 ' Sufficeth, that I have maintains my state,
 ' And sends the poor well pleased from my gate.
 ' Cade. Here's the lord of the soil come to seize ' me for a stray, for entering his fee-simple without ' leave. Ah, villain, thou wilt betray me, and get ' a thousand crowns of the king for carrying my ' head to him; but I'll make thee eat iron like an
 ' ostrich, and swallow my sword like a great pin,
 ' ere thou and I part.

'Iden. Why, rude companion, whatsoe'er thou be,
 ' I know thee not; Why then should I betray thee?
 ' Is't not enough, to break into my garden,
 ' And, like a thief, to come and rob my grounds,
 ' Climbing my walls in spite of me the owner,
 ' But thou wilt brave me with these saucy terms?

Cade. Brave thee? ay, by the best blood that ever was broached, and beard thee too. Look on me well: I have eat no meat these five days; yet, come thou and thy five men, and if I do not leave you all as dead as a door nail,² I pray God, I may never eat grass more.

'Iden. Nay, it shall ne'er be said, while England stands,

That Alexander Iden, an esquire of Kent,
 Took odds to combat a poor famish'd man.
 ' Oppose thy steadfast-gazing eyes to mine,
 ' See if thou canst outface me with thy looks.
 ' Set limb to limb, and thou art far the lesser;
 ' Thy hand is but a finger to my fist;
 ' Thy leg a stick, compared with this truncheon;
 ' My foot shall fight with all the strength thou hast;
 ' And if mine arm be heaved in the air,
 ' Thy grave is digg'd already in the earth.
 ' As for words, whose greatness answers words,³
 ' Let this my sword report what speech forbears.

* Cade. By my valour, the most complete cham* pion that ever I heard.—Steel, if thou turn the * edge, or cut not out the burly-boned clown in
 * chimes of hee ere thou sleep in thy sheath, I be* seech God⁴ on my knees, thou mayest be turned * to hobnails. [They fight; CADE falls.] O, I am
 * slain! famine, and no other, hath slain me: let
 * ten thousand devils come against me, and give me
 * but the ten meals I have lost, and I'd defy them
 * all. Wither, garden; and be henceforth a burying-place to all that do dwell in this house, because

 ' the unconquered soul of Cade is fled.

'Iden. Is't Cade that I have slain, that monstrous
 traitor?

'Sword, I will hallow thee for this thy deed,
 ' And hang thee o'er my tomb, when I am dead;⁵

* Ne'er shall this blood be wiped from thy point;

* But thou shalt wear it as a herald's coat,

* To emblaze the honour that thy master got.

'Cade. Iden, farewell; and be proud of thy victory: Tell Kent from me, she hath lost her best man, and exhort all the world to be cowards; for

'I, that never feared any, am vanquished by famine,

not by valour. [Dies.]

*Iden. How much thou wrong'st me,⁶ heaven be my judge.

*Die, damned wretch, the curse of her that bare

thee!

*And as I thrust thy body in with my sword,

*So wish I, I might thrust thy soul to hell.⁷

'Hence will I drag thee headlong by the heels

'Unto a dunghill, which shall be thy grave,

'And there cut off thy most ungracious head;

'Which I will bear in triumph to the king,

'Leaving thy trunk for crows to feed upon.

[Exit, dragging out the Body.]

ACT V.

SCENE I. The same. Fields between Dartford and Blackheath. The King's Camp on one side. On the other, enter YORK attended with Drum and Colours: his Forces at some distance.

'York. From Ireland thus comes York, to claim his right,

'And pluck the crown from feeble Henry's head:

'Ring, bells, aloud; burn, bonfires, clear and bright,

'To entertain great England's lawful king.

Ah, sancta majestas! who would not buy thee dear?

'Let them obey that know not how to rule;

'This hand was made to handle nought but gold:

'I cannot give due action to my words,

'Except a sword, or sceptre, balance it.⁸

'A sceptre shall it have, have I a soul;⁹

'On which I'll toss the flower-de-luce of France.

Enter BUCKINGHAM.

'Whom have we here? Buckingham, to disturb
 me?

'The king hath sent him, sure: I must dissemble.

'Buck. York, if thou meanest well, I greet thee
 well.

'York. Humphrey of Buckingham, I accept thy greeting.

'Art thou a messenger, or come of pleasure?

'Buck. A messenger from Henry, our dread liege,

'To know the reason of these arms in peace;

'Or why, thou—being a subject as I am,—

'Against thy oath and true allegiance sworn,

'Should'st raise so great a power without his leave,

'Or dare to bring thy force so near the court.

'York. Scarce can I speak, my choler is so great.

'O, I could heave up rocks, and fight with flint,

'I am so angry at these abject terms;

'And now, like Ajax Telamonius,

'On sheep or oxen could I spend my fury!¹⁰

Aside.

1 A sallet is a helmet.

2 See note on the Second Part of King Henry IV. Act
 v. Sc. 3.

3 Johnson explains this, 'As for words, whose pomp and rumour may answer words, and only words, I shall forbear them, and refer the rest to my sword.'

4 In the folio 'I beseech Jove' was substituted to avoid the penalty of the statute, 3 Jac. I. c. 2, against profane swearing. Cade was very unlikely to swear by Jove.

5 This sentiment is much more correctly expressed in the quarto:—

'O sword, I'll honour thee for this, and in my chamber Shalt thou hang, as a monument to after age,
 For this great service thou hast done to me.'

6 Johnson erroneously interprets this, 'In supposing that I am proud of my victory.' Iden evidently means that Cade wrongs him by undervaluing his prowess.

7 Not to dwell upon the wickedness of this horrid wish, with which Iden debases his character, the whole of this speech is wild and confused. The quarto is more favourable both to Iden's morality and language. This faulty amplification was owing to the desire of expanding a scanty thought in the old play. It can hardly be treated as an interpolation, however we may desire to think it such.

8 I. e. balance my hand.

9 York means to say, 'If I have a soul, my hand shall not be without a sceptre.'

'I am far better born than is the king :
 'More like a king, more kingly in my thoughts :
 'But I must make fair weather yet awhile,
 'Till Henry be more weak, and I more strong.—
 'O Buckingham, I pr'ythee, pardon me,
 'That I have given no answer all this while ;
 'My mind was troubled with deep melancholy.
 'The cause why I have brought this army hither,
 'Is—to remove proud Somerset from the king,
 'Seditious to his grace and to the state.
 'Buck. That is too much presumption on thy part :
 'But if thy arms be to no other end,
 'The king hath yielded unto thy demand ;
 'The duke of Somerset is in the Tower.
 'York. Upon thine honour, is he prisoner ?
 'Buck. Upon mine honour, he is prisoner.
 'York. Then, Buckingham, I do dismiss my powers.—
 'Soldiers, I thank you all : disperse yourselves ;
 'Meet me to-morrow in Saint George's field,
 'You shall have pay, and every thing you wish.
 * And let my sovereign, virtuous Henry,
 * Command my eldest son,—nay, all my sons,
 * As pledges of my fealty and love,
 * I'll send them all as willing as I live ;
 * Lands, goods, horse, armour, any thing I have—
 * Is his to use, so Somerset may die.
 'Buck. York, I commend this kind submission :
 'We twain will go into his highness' tent.

Enter KING HENRY, attended.

'K. Hen. Buckingham, doth York intend no harm to us,
 'That thus he marcheth with thee arm in arm ?
 * York. In all submission and humility,
 * York doth present himself unto your highness.
 * K. Hen. Then what intend these forces thou dost bring ?
 * York. To heave the traitor Somerset from hence ;
 'And fight against that monstrous rebel, Cade,
 'Who since I heard to be discomfited.

Enter IDEN, with CADE's Head.

'Iden. If one so rude, and of so mean condition,
 'May pass into the presence of a king,
 'Lo, I present your grace a traitor's head,
 'The head of Cade, whom I in combat slew.
 'K. Hen. The head of Cade ?—Great God, how just art thou !—
 'O, let me view his visage being dead,
 'That living wrought me such exceeding trouble.
 'Tell me, my friend, art thou the man that slew him ?
 'Iden. I was, an't like your majesty.
 'K. Hen. How art thou call'd ? and what is thy degree ?
 'Iden. Alexander Iden, that's my name ;
 * A poor esquire of Kent, that loves his king.
 * Buck. So please it you, my lord, 'twere not amiss
 * He were created knight for his good service.
 * K. Hen. Iden, kneel down ; [He kneels.] Rise up a knight.
 'We give thee for reward a thousand marks ;
 'And will, that thou henceforth attend on us.
 'Iden. May Iden live to merit such a bounty,
 'And never live but true unto his liege !
 'K. Hen. See, Buckingham ! Somerset comes with the queen :
 'Go, bid her hide him quickly from the duke.

Enter QUEEN MARGARET and SOMERSET.

'Q. Mar. For thousand Yorks he shall not hide his head,
 'But boldly stand, and front him to his face.
 'York. How now ! Is Somerset at liberty ?
 'Then, York, unloose thy long-imprison'd thoughts,
 'And let thy tongue be equal with thy heart.
 'Shall I endure the sight of Somerset ?—
 'False king ! why hast thou broken faith with me,
 'Knowing how hardly I can brook abuse ?
 'King did I call thee ? no, thou art not king ;
 'Not fit to govern and rule multitudes,
 'Which dar'st not, no, nor canst not rule a traitor.
 'That head of thine doth not become a crown ;
 'Thy hand is made to grasp a palmer's staff,
 'And not to grace an awful princely sceptre.
 'That gold must round engirt these brows of mine ;
 'Whose smile and frown, like to Achilles' spear,
 'Is able with the change to kill and cure.
 'Here is a hand to hold a sceptre up,
 'And with the same to act controlling laws.
 'Give place ; by heaven, thou shalt rule no more
 'O'er him, whom heaven created for thy ruler.
 'Som. O monstrous traitor !—I arrest thee, York,
 'Of capital treason 'gainst the king and crown :
 * Obey, audacious traitor ; kneel for grace.
 * York. Would'st have me kneel ? first let me ask of these,
 * If they can brook I bow a knee to man.—
 * Sirrah, call in my sons to be my bail :
 [Exit an Attendant.]
 * I know, ere they will have me go to ward,
 * They'll pawn their swords for my enfranchisement.
 'Q. Mar. Call hither Clifford ; bid him come again,
 * To say, if that the bastard boys of York
 * Shall be the surety for their traitor father.
 * York. O blood-bespotted Neapolitan,
 * Outcast of Naples, England's bloody scourge !
 'The sons of York, thy betters in their birth,
 'Shall be their father's bail ; and bane to those
 'That for my surety will refuse the boys.
Enter EDWARD and RICHARD PLANTAGENET with Forces, at one side ; at the other, with Forces also, Old CLIFFORD and his Son.
 * See, where they come ; I'll warrant they'll make it good.
 * Q. Mar. And here comes Clifford, to deny their bail.
 'Clif. Health and all happiness to my lord the king !
 'York. I thank thee, Clifford : Say, what news with thee ?
 'Nay, do not fright us with an angry look :
 'We are thy sovereign, Clifford, kneel again ;
 'For thy mistaking so, we pardon thee.
 'Clif. This is my king, York, I do not mistake ;
 'But thou mistak'st me much, to think I do :
 'To Bedlam* with him ? is the man grown mad ?
 'K. Hen. Ay, Clifford ; a bedlam and ambitious humour
 'Makes him oppose himself against his king.
 'Clif. He is a traitor ; let him to the Tower,
 'And chop away that factious pate of his.
 'Q. Mar. He is arrested, but will not obey ;
 'His sons, he says, shall give their words for him.
 'York. Will you not, sons ?
 'Edw. Ay, noble father, if our words will serve.
 'Rich. And if words will not, then our weapons shall.

1 Iden has before said :—
 'Lord, who would live turmold in a court,
 'And may enjoy such quiet walks as these.' &c.
 This is strictly a picture of poor human nature. He rails at enjoyments which he supposes out of his reach ; but no sooner are they offered to him, but he embraces them eagerly. Shakespeare has in this instance followed the old play.

2 'Mysens et Emonia juvenis quia cuspidem vulnus
 Senerat, hac ipsa cuspidem sensit opem.'

Proper lib. ii. El. 1.

3 Custody, confinement.

4 This has been thought an anachronism ; but Stowe shows that it is not : 'Next unto the parish of St. Butolph is a fayre inne for receipt of travellers ; then an hospital of S. Mary of Bethlehem, founded by Simon Fitz-Mary, one of the Sheriffs of London, in the year 1246. He founded it to have bene a priorie of canons with brethren and sisters, and King Edward the Third granted a protection, which I have seen, for the brethren Milicia beate Maria de Bethlem, within the cite of London, the 14th year of his reign. It was an hospital for distracted people.—Survey of London, p. 127, 1393.

* Clif. Why, what a brood of traitors have we here!

* York. Look in a glass, and call thy image so;
* I am thy king, and thou a false-heart traitor.—
* Call hither to the stake my two brave bears,¹
* That, with the very shaking of their chains,
* They may astonish these fell lurking curs;
* Bid Salisbury, and Warwick, come to me.

Drums. Enter WARWICK and SALISBURY, with Forces.

* Clif. Are these thy bears? we'll bait thy bears to death,

* And manacle the bearward in their chains,
* If thou dar'st bring them to the baiting-place.

* Rich. Oft have I seen a hot o'erweening cur

* Run back and bite, because he was withheld;

* Who, being suffer'd with the bear's fell paw,²

* Hath clapp'd his tail between his legs, and cried:

* And such a piece of service will you do,

* If you oppose yourselves to match Lord Warwick.

* Clif. Hence, heap of wrath, foul indigested

* lump,

* As crooked in thy manners as thy shape!

* York. Nay, we shall heat you thoroughly anon.

* Clif. Take heed, lest by your heat you burn yourselves.

* K. Hen. Why, Warwick, hath thy knee forgot * to bow?

* Old Salisbury,—shame to thy silver hair,

* Thou mad misleader of thy brain-sick son!—

* What, wilt thou on thy death-bed play the ruffian,

* And seek for sorrow with thy spectacles?

* O, where is faith? O, where is loyalty?

* If it be banish'd from the frosty head,

* Where shall it find a harbour in the earth?—

* Wilt thou go dig a grave to find out war,

* And shame thine honourable age with blood?

* Why art thou old, and want'st experience?

* Or wherefore dost abuse it, if thou hast it?

* For shame! in duty bend thy knee to me,

* That bows unto the grave with mickle age.

* Sal. My lord, I have consider'd with myself

* The title of this most renowned duke;

* And in my conscience do repute his grace

* The rightful heir to England's royal seat.

* K. Hen. Hast thou not sworn allegiance unto me?

* Sal. I have.

* K. Hen. Canst thou dispense with heaven for * such an oath?

* Sal. It is great sin, to swear unto a sin;

* But greater sin, to keep a sinful oath.

* Who can be bound by any solemn vow

* To do a murderous deed, to rob a man,

* To force a spotless virgin's chastity,

* To reave the orphan of his patrimony,

* To wring the widow from her custom'd right;

* And have no other reason for this wrong,

* But that he was bound by a solemn oath?

* Q. Mar. A subtle traitor needs no sophister.

* K. Hen. Call Buckingham, and bid him arm himself.

* York. Call Buckingham, and all the friends thou

* hast,

* I am resolv'd for death or dignity.

1 The Nevils, earls of Warwick, had a bear and ragged staff for their crest.

2 Bear-baiting was not only a popular but a royal entertainment in the poet's time. See Stowe's account of Queen Elizabeth's amusements of this kind, or Laneham's Letter concerning the entertainments at Kenelworth Castle. 'Being suffer'd to approach the bear's fell paw' may be the meaning; but it is probable that suffer'd is used for made to suffer.

3 A burgonet is a helmet; a Burgundian's steel cap or casque.

4 One on whom nature has set a mark of deformity, a stigma. It was originally and properly 'a person who had been branded with a hot iron for some crime. One notably defamed for naughtiness.' See Bullokar's Expositor, 1616; or Blount's Glossography. 1671.

* Clif. The first I warrant thee, if dreams prove true.

* War. You were best to go to bed, and dream again,

To keep thee from the tempest of the field.

* Clif. I am resolv'd to bear a greater storm,

Than any thou canst conjure up to-day;

And that I'll write upon thy burgonet,

Might I but know thee by thy household badge.

* War. Now, by my father's badge, old Nevil's crest,

The rampant bear chain'd to the ragged staff,

This day I'll wear aloft my burgonet,³

(As on a mountain top the cedar shows,

That keeps his leaves in spite of any storm,

Even to affright thee with the view thereof.

* Clif. And from thy burgonet I'll rend thy bear,

And tread it under foot with all contempt,

* Despight the bearward that protects the bear.

* Y. Clif. And so to arms, victorious father,

To quell the rebels, and their 'complices.

* Rich. Fye! charity, for shame! speak not in spite,

For you shall sup with Jesu Christ to-night.

* Y. Clif. Foul stigmatic,⁴ that's more than thou canst tell.

* Rich. If not in heaven, you'll surely sup in hell.

[Exeunt severally.]

SCENE II. Saint Albans. Alarums: Excursions. Enter WARWICK.

* War. Clifford of Cumberland, 'tis Warwick calls!

And if thou dost not hide thee from the bear,

Now,—when the angry trumpet sounds alarm,

And dead men's cries do fill the empty air,—

Clifford, I say, come forth and fight with me!

Proud northern lord, Clifford of Cumberland,

Warwick is hoarse with calling thee to arms.

Enter YORK.

* How now, my noble lord? what, all a-foot?

* York. The deadly-handed Clifford slew my steed;

* But match to match I have encounter'd him,

* And made a prey for carrion kites and crows

* Even of the bonny beast he lov'd so well.

Enter CLIFFORD.

* War. Of one or both of us the time is come.

* York. Hold, Warwick, seek thee out some other chase,

For I myself must hunt this deer to death.⁵

* War. Then, nobly, York; 'tis for a crown thou fight'st.—

* As I intend, Clifford, to thrive to-day,

It grieves my soul to leave thee unassail'd.

[Exit WARWICK.]

* Clif. What seest thou in me, York? why dost thou pause?

* York. With thy brave bearing should I be in love,

* But that thou art so fast mine enemy.

* Clif. Nor should thy prowess want praise and esteem,

* But that 'tis shown ignobly, and in treason.

* York. So let it help me now against thy sword,

* As I in justice and true right express it!

* Clif. My soul and body on the action both!—

* York. A dreadful lay!—address thee instantly.

[They fight, and CLIFFORD falls.]

* Clif. La fin couronne les œuvres. [Dies.]

5 In the old play:—

* 'The bonniest gray, that e'er was bred in north.'

6 This passage will remind the classical reader of Achilles' conduct in the twenty-second Iliad, v. 205, where he expresses his determination that Hector should fall by no other hand than his own.

7 A dreadful wager; a tremendous stake.

8 The author, in making Clifford fall by the hand of York, has departed from the truth of history, a practice not uncommon with him when he does his utmost to make his characters considerable. This circumstance, however, serves to prepare the reader or spectator for the vengeance afterwards taken by Clifford's son on York and Rutland. At the beginning of the third part of this drama the poet has forgot this circumstance, and 'York. Thus war hath given thee peace, for thou art still.

Peace with his soul, heaven, if it be thy will!

[Exit.]

Enter Young CLIFFORD.

* Y. Clif. Shame and confusion! all is on the rout:

* Fear frames disorder, and disorder wounds
* Where it should guard. O war, thou son of hell,
* Whom angry heavens do make their minister,
* Throw in the frozen bosoms of our part
* Hot coals of vengeance! Let no soldier fly:
* He that is truly dedicate to war,
* Hath no self-love; nor he, that loves himself,
* Hath not essentially, but by circumstance,
* The name of valour.—O, let the vile world end,
[Seeing his dead Father.]

* And the premised¹ flames of the last day
* Knit earth and heaven together!
* Now let the general trumpet blow his blast,
* Particularities and petty sounds
* To cease!²—Wast thou ordain'd, dear father,
* To lose thy youth in peace, and to achieve³
* The silver livery of advised⁴ age;
* And, in thy reverence,⁵ and thy chair-days, thus
* To die in ruffian battle?—Even at this sight,
* My heart is turn'd to stone: and, while 'tis mine,
* It shall be stony. York not our old men spares;
* No more will I their babes: tears virginal
* Shall be to me even as the dew to fire;
* And beauty, that the tyrant oft reclaims,
* Shall to my flaming wrath be oil and flax.
* Henceforth I will not have to do with pity:
* Meet I an infant of the house of York,
* Into as many gobbets will I cut it,
* As wild Medea young Absyrtus did:⁶
* In cruelty will I seek out my fame.

* Come, thou new ruin of old Clifford's house:
[Taking up the body.]

* As did Æneas old Anchises bear,
* So bear I thee upon my manly shoulders:
* But then Æneas bare a living load,
* Nothing so heavy as these woes of mine. [Exit.]

Enter RICHARD PLANTAGENET and SOMERSET, fighting, and SOMERSET is killed.

Rich. So, lie thou there;
* For underneath an alehouse' paltry sign,
The Castle in Saint Albans, Somerset
Hath made the wizard famous in his death.⁷
* Sword, hold thy temper; heart, be wrathful still:
* Priests pray for enemies, but princes kill. [Exit.]

Alarums: Excursions. Enter KING HENRY,
QUEEN MARGARET, and others, retreating.

* Q. Mar. Away, my lord! you are slow; for shame, away!

there represents Clifford's death as it really happened:—

¹ Lord Clifford, and Lord Stafford, all abreast, Charg'd our main battle's front, and, breaking in,
Were by the swords of common soldiers slain.

These lines were adopted by Shakspeare from The True Tragedy of Richard Duke of York, upon which the Third Part of King Henry VI. is founded.

² Premised is sent before their time. The sense is
'let the flames reserved for the last day be sent now.'

³ To cease is to stop, a verb active.

⁴ To achieve is to arrive at, or accomplish.

⁵ I. e. circumspect, cautious.

⁶ In that period of life which is entitled to command reverence. Reverenda canities. Shakspeare has used the word in the same manner in As You Like It, where Orlando says to his brother (speaking of their father)
'thou art indeed nearer to his reverence.'

⁷ When Medea fled with Jason from Colchos, she murdered her brother Absyrtus, and cut his body into several pieces, that her father might be prevented for some time from pursuing her.

The death of Somerset here accomplishes that equivocal prediction of Jourdain the witch in the first act:—

'Let him shun castles:
Safely shall he be upon the sandy plains
Than where castles mounted stand.'

Such equivocal predictions were much in vogue in early times and the fall of many eminent persons is by the

* K. Hen. Can we outrun the heavens? good Margaret, stay.

* Q. Mar. What are you made of? you'll not fight, nor fly:

* Nor is it manhood, wisdom, and defence,
* To give the enemy way: and to secure us
* By what we can, which can no more but fly.

[Alarum afar off.]

* If you be ta'en, we then should see the bottom⁹
* Of all our fortunes: but if we haply scape
* (As well we may, if not through your neglect,)
* We shall to London get; where you are lov'd;
* And where this breach, now in our fortunes made,
* May readily be stopp'd.

Enter Young CLIFFORD.

* Y. Clif. But that my heart's on future mischief set,

* I would speak blasphemy ere bid you fly;
* But fly you must; incurable discomfit
* Reigns in the hearts of all our present parts.¹⁰
* Away, for your relief! and we will live
* To see their day, and them our fortune give:
* Away, my lord, away! [Exit.]

SCENE III. Fields near Saint Albans. Alarum:
Retreat. Flourish; then enter YORK, RICHARD PLANTAGENET, WARWICK, and Soldiers, with Drum and Colours.

* York. Of Salisbury, who can report of him;
* That winter lion, who, in rage forgets
* Aged contusions and all brush of time;¹¹
* And, like a gallant in the brow of youth,¹²
* Repairs him with occasion? this happy day
* Is not itself, nor have we won one foot,
* If Salisbury be lost.

* Rich. My noble father
* Three times to-day I help him to his horse,
* Three times bestrid him,¹³ thrice I led him off,
* Persuaded him from any further act:
* But still, where danger was, still there I met him;
* And like rich hangings in a homely house,
* So was his will in his old feeble body.
* But, noble as he is, look where he comes.

Enter SALISBURY.

* Sal. Now, by my sword, well hast thou fought to-day;
* By the mass, so did we all.—I thank you, Richard:
* God knows, how long it is I have to live;
* And it hath pleas'd him, that three times to-day
* You have defended me from imminent death.—
* Well, lords, we have not got that which we have;¹⁴
* 'Tis not enough our foes are this time fled,
* Being opposites of such repairing nature.¹⁵
* York. I know, our safety is to follow them;
* For, as I hear, the king is fled to London,

Chronicles represented as accomplishing them: being delivered in obscure terms, any fortuitous event was the more readily supposed to verify them.

⁹ This line, Stevens observes, may serve to countenance his emendation of a passage at the commencement of the third scene, Act iv. of Macbeth, where he proposed to read 'and wisdom is it to offer,' &c. See note on that passage.

¹⁰ This expression, the bottom of all our fortunes, is peculiarly Shakspeare's; he has it in King Henry IV.
Part I.:

'The very bottom and the soul of hope,
The very list, the very utmost bound
Of all our fortunes.'

¹¹ Parts may stand for parties; but I cannot help thinking that it is an error for party; by which, as Mr.
Tyrwhitt and Stevens observe, the jingle of hearts and parts would be avoided.

¹² Warburton would substitute 'all bruis'd of time.'
But, as Stevens observes, 'the brush of time' is the gradual deterioration of time.

¹³ I. e. the height of youth: the brow of a hill is its summit.

¹⁴ That is 'three times I saw him fallen, and striding over him defended him till he recovered.'

¹⁵ I. e. we have not secured that which we have acquired.

¹⁶ I. e. being enemies that are likely so soon to rally and recover themselves from this defeat. To repair, in ancient language, was to renovate, to restore to a former condition.

' To call a present court of parliament.
' Let us pursue him, ere the writs go forth :—
' What says Lord Warwick ? shall we after them ?
War. After them ! nay, before them, if we can.
Now by my faith, lords, 'twas a glorious day :

Saint Albans' battle, won by famous York,
Shall be eterniz'd in all age to come.—
Sound, drums and trumpets :—and to London all :
And more such days as these to us befall !
[Exeunt]

THIRD PART OF KING HENRY THE SIXTH.¹

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

THE action of this play opens just after the first battle of St. Albans [May 23, 1455.] wherein the York faction carried the day ; and closes with the murder of King Henry VI. and the birth of Prince Edward, afterwards King Edward V. [November 4, 1471.] So that this history takes in the space of full sixteen years.

The title of the old play, which Shakspeare altered and improved, is 'The True Tragedie of Richard Duke of Yorke, and the Death of good King Henry the Sixth : with the whole Contention between the Two Houses of Lancaster and Yorke : as it was sundrie times acted by the Right Honourable the Earle of Pembroke his Servants. Printed at London by P. S. for Thomas Millington, and are to be solde at his Shoppe under St Peter's Church in Cornewall, 1595.' There was another edition in 1600 by the same publisher : and it was reproduced with the name of Shakspeare on the title page, printed by T. P. no date, but ascertained to have been printed in 1619.

The present historical drama was altered by Crown, and brought on the stage in 1680, under the title of The Miseries of Civil War. Surely the works of Shakspeare could have been little read at that period ; for Crown, in his prologue, declares the play to be entirely his own composition :—

' For by his feeble skill 'tis built alone,
The divine Shakspeare did not lay one stone.'

Whereas the very first scene is that of Jack Cade, copied almost verbatim from the Second Part of King Henry VI. and several others from this Third Part, with as little variation.

ACT I.

SCENE I. London. The Parliament House.
Drums. Some Soldiers of York's party break in. Then, enter the DUKE OF YORK, EDWARD, RICHARD, NORFOLK, MONTAGUE, WARWICK, and others, with white Roses, in their Hats.

Warwick.

I WONDER, how the king escap'd our hands.

York. While we pursu'd the horsemen of the north,

He slyly stole away, and left his men :

Whereat the great lord of Northumberland,

1 This play is only divided from the former for the convenience of exhibition ; for the series of action is continued without interruption, nor are any two scenes of any play more closely connected than the first scene of this play with the last of the former.—Johnson.

2 See the former play, p. 256. Shakspeare has fallen into this inconsistency by following the old plays in the construction of these dramas

Rich. Speak thou for me, and tell them what I did.¹

[Throwing down the DUKE of SOMERSET'S Head.]

* York. Richard hath best deserv'd of all my sons.—

What, is your grace dead, my lord of Somerset?

Norfolk. Such hope have all the line of John of Gaunt!

Rich. Thus do I hope to shake King Henry's head.

War. And so do I.—Victorious prince of York, Before I see thee seated in that throne

Which now the house of Lancaster usurps, I vow by heaven, these eyes shall never close.

This is the palace of the fearful king,
'And this the regal seat: possess it, York:

For this is thine, and not King Henry's heirs'.²

York. Assist me then, sweet Warwick, and I will;

'For hither we have broken in by force.

Norfolk. We'll all assist you; he, that flies, shall die.

York. Thanks, gentle Norfolk.—Stay by me, my lords;—

'And, soldiers, stay, and lodge by me this night.

War. And, when the king comes, offer him no violence,

'Unless he seek to thrust you out by force.

[They retire.]

* York. The queen, this day, here holds her parliament,

* But little thinks we shall be of her council:

* By words, or blows, here let us win our right.

Rich. Arm'd as we are, let's stay within this house.

War. The bloody parliament shall this be call'd, Unless Plantagenet, duke of York, be king; And bashful Henry depos'd, whose cowardice Hath made us by-words to our enemies.

'York. Then leave me not, my lords; be resolute; I mean to take possession of my right.

War. Neither the king, nor he that loves him best,

The proudest he that holds up Lancaster,

Dares stir a wing, if Warwick shake his bells.³

'I'll plant Plantagenet, root him up who dares:— Resolve thee, Richard; claim the English crown.

[Warwick leads YORK to the Throne, who seats himself.]

Flourish. Enter KING HENRY, CLIFFORD, NORTHUMBERLAND, WESTMORELAND, EXETER, and others, with red Roses in their Hats.

K. Hen. My lords, look where the sturdy rebel sits, Even in the chair of state! belike, he means (Back'd by the power of Warwick, that false peer,) To aspire unto the crown, and reign as king.—

Earl of Northumberland, he slew thy father;— And thine, Lord Clifford; and you both have vow'd revenge

On him, his sons, his favourites, and his friends.

Norfolk. If I be not, heavens, be reveng'd on me!

Cliff. The hope thereof makes Clifford mourn in steel.

West. What, shall we suffer this? let's pluck him down:

'My heart for anger burns, I cannot brook it.

K. Hen. Be patient, gentle earl of Westmoreland.

Cliff. Patience is for poltroons, and such as he; He durst not sit there had your father liv'd.

My gracious lord, here in the parliament

Let us assail the family of York.

Norfolk. Well hast thou spoken, cousin; be it so.

K. Hen. Ah, know you not, the city favours them, And they have troops of soldiers at their back?

Exe. But when the duke is slain, they'll quickly fly.

K. Hen. Far be the thought of this from Henry's heart,

To make a shambles of the parliament-house!

Cousin of Exeter, frowns, words, and threats,

Shall be the war that Henry means to use.—

[They advance to the Duke.]

Thou factious duke of York, descend my throne,

And kneel for grace and mercy at my feet:

I am thy sovereign.

York. Thou art deceiv'd, I am thine.

Exe. For shame, come down; he made thee duke of York.

York. 'Twas my inheritance, as the earldom was.⁴

Exe. Thy father was a traitor to the crown,

War. Exeter, thou art a traitor to the crown,

In following this usurping Henry.

Cliff. Whom should he follow, but his natural king?

War. True, Clifford; and that's Richard, duke of York.

'K. Hen. And shall I stand, and thou sit in my throne?

'York. It must and shall be so. Content thyself.

War. Be duke of Lancaster, let him be king.

West. He is both king and duke of Lancaster:

And that the lord of Westmoreland shall maintain.

War. And Warwick shall disprove it. You forget, That we are those, which chas'd you from the field,

And slew your fathers, and with colours spread

March'd through the city to the palace gates.

'Norfolk. Yes, Warwick, I remember it to my grief;

And, by his soul, thou and thy house shall rue it.

'West. Plantagenet, of thee, and these thy sons, Thy kinsmen, and thy friends, I'll have more lives, Than drops of blood were in my father's veins.

'Cliff. Urge it no more; lest that, instead of words, I send thee, Warwick, such a messenger,

As shall revenge his death, before I stir.

'War. Poor Clifford! how I scorn his worthless threats!

York. Will you, we show our title to the crown?

'If not, our swords shall plead it in the field.

K. Hen. What title hast thou, traitor, to the crown?

Thy father was, as thou art, duke of York;⁵

Thy grandfather, Roger Mortimer, earl of March:

I am the son of Henry the Fifth,⁶

Who made the Dauphin and the French to stoop,

And seiz'd upon their towns and provinces.

War. Talk not of France, sith⁶ thou hast lost it all.

K. Hen. The lord protector lost it, and not I;

When I was crown'd, I was but nine months old.

Rich. You are old enough now, and yet, methinks you lose:—

Father, tear the crown from the usurper's head.

Edw. Sweet father, do so; set it on your head.

Mont. Good brother [To YORK], as thou lov'st and honour'st arms,

Let's fight it out, and not stand caving thus.

Rich. Sound drums and trumpets, and the king will fly.

¹ Shakspeare was also led into this anachronism by the old plays. At the time of the first battle of St. Albans, where Richard is represented to have fought in the last scene of the preceding play, he was not one year old; having been born at Fotheringay Castle, October 21, 1454. At the time to which the third scene of the present act refers, he was but six years old; and in the fifth act, in which Henry is represented as having been killed by him in the Tower, not more than sixteen and eight months.

² The allusion is to falconry. Hawks had sometimes little bells hung on them, perhaps to dare the birds; that is, to fright them from rising.

³ The old play reads 'as the kingdom is.' Why Shakspeare altered it, it is not easy to say, for the new line only exhibits the same meaning more obscurely. York means that the dukedom was his inheritance from his father, as the earldom of March was his inheritance from his mother. His title to the crown was not as duke of York, but as earl of March, and by naming that he covertly asserts his right to the crown.

⁴ Another mistake of the author of the old play. York's father was earl of Cambridge, and was beheaded in the lifetime of his elder brother, Edward duke of York.

⁵ The military reputation of King Henry V. is the sole support of his son. The name of King Henry the Fifth dispersed the followers of Cade.

⁶ Since. A contraction of sithence.

York. Sons, peace!

K. Hen. Peace thou! and give King Henry leave to speak.

War. Plantagenet shall speak first:—hear him, lords;

And be you silent and attentive too,
For he, that interrupts him, shall not live.

K. Hen. Think'st thou, that I will leave my kingly throne,

Wherein my grandsire, and my father, sat?

No: first shall war unpeople this my realm;

Ay, and their colours—often borne in France;

And now in England, to our heart's great sorrow,—
Shall be my winding-sheet.¹—Why faint you, lords?

'My title's good, and better far than his.

War. But prove it, Henry, and thou shalt be king.

K. Hen. Henry the Fourth by conquest got the crown.

York. 'Twas by rebellion against his king.

K. Hen. I know not what to say; my title's weak.
Tell me, may not a king adopt an heir?

York. What then?

K. Hen. An if he may, then am I lawful king:

'For Richard in the view of many lords,

Resign'd the crown to Henry the Fourth;

Whose heir my father was, and I am his.

York. He rose against him, being his sovereign,

And made him to resign his crown perforce.

War. Suppose, my lords, he did it unconstrain'd,

Think you, 'twere prejudicial to his crown?²

Eze. No; for he could not so resign his crown,

But that the next heir should succeed and reign.

K. Hen. Art thou against us, duke of Exeter?

Eze. His is the right, and therefore pardon me.

York. Why whisper you, my lords, and answer not?

Eze. My conscience tells me he is lawful king.

K. Hen. All will revolt from me, and turn to him.

North. Plantagenet, for all the claim thou lay'st,
Think not, that Henry shall be so depos'd.

War. Depos'd he shall be, in despite of all.

North. Thou art deceiv'd: 'tis not thy southern power,—

'Of Essex, Norfolk, Suffolk, nor of Kent,—
Which makes thee thus presumptuous and proud,—
Can set the duke up, in despite of me.

Clif. King Henry, be thy title right or wrong,

Lord Clifford vows to fight in thy defence:

May that ground gape, and swallow me alive,

'Where I shall kneel to him that slew my father!

K. Hen. O Clifford, how thy words revive my heart!

York. Henry of Lancaster, resign thy crown:—
What mutter you, or what conspire you, lords?

War. Do right unto this princely duke of York;

Or I will fill the house with armed men,

And, o'er the chair of state, where now he sits,

Write up his title with usurping blood.

[He stamps, and the Soldiers show themselves.]

K. Hen. My lord of Warwick, hear me but one word:—

'Let me, for this my life time, reign as king.

York. Confirm the crown to me, and to mine heirs,
And thou shalt reign in quiet whilst thou liv'st.

K. Hen. I am content: Richard Plantagenet,

Enjoy the kingdom after my decease.

Clif. What wrong is this unto the prince your son?

War. What good is this to England, and himself?

West. Base, fearful, and despairing Henry!

Clif. How hast thou injur'd both thyself and us?

West. I cannot stay to hear these articles.

North. Nor I.

Clif. Come, cousin, let us tell the queen these news.

* West. Farewell, faint-hearted and degenerate king,

* In whose cold blood no spark of honour bides.

North. Be thou a prey unto the house of York,

'And die in bands for this unmanly deed!

Clif. In dreadful war may'st thou be overcome!

Or live in peace, abandon'd, and despis'd!

[Exeunt NORTHUMBERLAND, CLIFFORD, and WESTMORELAND.]

* War. Turn this way, Henry, and regard them not.

Eze. They seek revenge,³ and therefore will not yield.

K. Hen. Ah, Exeter!

War. Why should you sigh, my lord?

K. Hen. Not for myself, Lord Warwick, but my son,

Whom I unnaturally shall disinherit.

But, be it as it may:—I here entail

'The crown to thee, and to thine heirs forever;

Conditionally, that here thou take an oath,

To cease this civil war, and, whilst I live,

To honour me as thy king and sovereign;

* And neither⁴ by treason, nor hostility,

* To seek to put me down, and reign thyself.

York. This oath I willingly take, and will perform.

[Coming from the Throne.]

War. Long live King Henry!—Plantagenet, embrace him.

K. Hen. And long live thou, and these thy forward sons!

York. Now York and Lancaster are reconcil'd.

Eze. Accurs'd he he, that seeks to make them foes! [Senet. The Lords come forward.]

York. Farewell, my gracious lord; I'll to my castle.⁵

War. And I'll keep London, with my soldiers.

Nor. And I to Norfolk, with my followers.

Mont. And I unto the sea, from whence I came.

[Exeunt YORK, and his Sons, WARWICK, NORFOLK, MONTAGUE, Soldiers, and Attendants.]

* K. Hen. And I, with grief and sorrow, to the court.

Enter QUEEN MARGARET and the Prince of Wales.

Eze. Here comes the queen, whose looks bewray⁶ her anger:

I'll steal away.

K. Hen. Exeter, so will I. [Going.]

Q. Mar. Nay, go not from me, I will follow thee.

K. Hen. Be patient, gentle queen, and I will stay.

Q. Mar. Who can be patient in such extremes?

* Ah, wretched man! 'twould, I had died a maid,

* And never seen thee, never borne thee son,

* Seeing thou, hast prov'd so unnatural a father!

* Hath he deserv'd to lose his birthright thus?

* Hadst thou but lov'd him half so well as I;

* Or felt that pain which I did for him once;

* Or nourish'd him, as I did with my blood;

* Thou wouldest have left thy dearest heart-blood

there,

* Rather than have made that savage duke thine

heir,

* And disinherited thine only son.

* Prince. Father, you cannot disinherit me:

* If you be king, why should not I succeed?

* K. Hen. Pardon me, Margaret;—pardon me, sweet son;—

* The earl of Warwick, and the duke, enforc'd me.

* Q. Mar. Enforc'd thee! art thou king, and wilt be forc'd?

I shame to hear thee speak. Ah, timorous wretch!

quered, and seek to be revenged. They are not influenced by principle but passion.—Johnson.

4 Malone asserts that neither, either, brother, and many similar words, were used by Shakespeare as monosyllables. Stevens doubts this, with seeming propriety, and observes that the versification of this and the preceding play, has many lines as unmetrical and irregular as this.

1 Perhaps Gray had this passage in mind when he wrote:—

'Weave the warp, and weave the woof,

The winding-sheet of Edward's race.'

3 They go away, not because they doubt the justice of this determination, but because they have been con-

Thou hast undone thyself, thy son, and me,
 * And given unto the house of York such head,
 * As thou shalt reign but by their sufferance.
 * To entail him and his heirs unto the crown,
 * What is it, but to make thy sepulchre,¹
 * And creep into it far before thy time?
 * Warwick is chancellor, and the lord of Calais;
 Stern Faulconbridge² commands the narrow seas;
 The duke is made protector of the realm;
 * And yet shalt thou be safe? * such safety finds
 * The trembling lamb, environed with wolves.
 * Had I been there, which am a silly woman,
 * The soldiers should have toss'd me on their pikes,
 * Before I would have granted to that act.
 * But thou prefer'st thy life before thine honour:
 * And seeing thou dost, I here divorce myself,
 * Both from thy table, Henry, and thy bed,
 * Until that act of parliament be repeal'd,
 * Whereby my son is disinherited.

The northern lords, that have forsworn thy colours,
 Will follow mine, if once they see them spread:
 * And spread they shall be; to thy foul disgrace,
 * And utter ruin of the house of York.
 * Thus do I leave thee:—Come, son, let's away;
 * Our army's ready: Come, we'll after them.

K. Hen. Stay, gentle Margaret, and hear me speak.

Q. Mar. Thou hast spoke too much already; get thee gone.

K. Hen. Gentle son Edward, thou wilt stay with me?

Q. Mar. Ay, to be murder'd by his enemies.

Prince. When I return with victory from the field, I'll see your grace: till then, I'll follow her.

Q. Mar. Come, son, away; we may not linger thus.

[Exeunt QUEEN MARGARET, and the Prince.]

K. Hen. Poor queen! how love to me, and to her son,

* Hath made her break out into terms of rage!

* Reveng'd may she be on that hateful duke;

* Whose haughty spirit, winged with desire,

* Will coast³ my crown, and, like an empty eagle,

* Tire⁴ on the flesh of me, and of my son!

* The loss of those three lords⁵ torments my heart:

* I'll write unto them, and entreat them fair;—

* Come, cousin, you shall be the messenger.

* Ere. And I, I hope, shall reconcile them all.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II. A Room in Sandal Castle, near Wakefield in Yorkshire. Enter EDWARD, RICHARD, and MONTAGUE.

Rich. Brother, though I be youngest, give me leave.

Edw. No, I can better play the orator.

Mont. But I have reasons strong and forcible.

Enter YORK.

York. Why, how now, sons and brother, at a strife?

* What is your quarrel? how began it first?

Edw. No quarrel, but a slight contention.

York. About what?

Rich. About that which concerns your grace, and us;

* The crown of England, father, which is yours.

York. Mine, boy? not till King Henry be dead.

* Rich. Your right depends not on his life, or death.

* Edw. Now you are heir, therefore enjoy it now:

* By giving the house of Lancaster leave to breathe,

* It will outrun you, father, in the end.

* York. I took an oath that he should quietly reign.

Edw. But, for a kingdom, any oath may be broken:

* I'd break a thousand oaths, to reign one year.

Rich. No; God forbid, your grace should be forsworn.

York. I shall be, if I claim by open war.

Rich. I'll prove the contrary, if you'll hear me speak.

York. Thou canst not, son; it is impossible.

Rich. An oath is of no moment, being not took

* Before a true and lawful magistrate,

* That hath authority over him that swears;

* Henry had none, but did usurp the place;

* Then, seeing 'twas he that made you to depose,

* Your oath, my lord, is vain and frivolous.

* Therefore, to arms. * And, father, do but think,

* How sweet a thing it is to wear a crown;

* Within whose circuit is Elysium,

* And all that poets feign of bliss and joy.

* Why do we linger thus? I cannot rest,

* Until the white rose, that I wear, be dyed

* Even in the lukewarm blood of Henry's heart.

York. Richard, enough; I will be king or die.—

* Brother, thou shalt to London presently.

* And whet on Warwick to this enterprise.—

* Thou, Richard, shalt unto the duke of Norfolk,

* And tell him privily of our intent.—

* You, Edward, shall unto my Lord Cobham,

* With whom the Kentishmen will willingly rise:

* In them I trust; for they are soldiers,

* Witty⁶ and courteous, liberal, full of spirit.—

* While you are thus employ'd, what resteth more,

* But that I seek occasion how to rise;

* And yet the king not privy to my drift,

* Nor any of the house of Lancaster?

Enter a Messenger.

* But, stay; What news? Why com'st thou in such post?

* Mess. The queen, with all the northern earls and lords,¹⁰

1 The queen's reproach is founded on a position long received among politicians, that the loss of kingly power is soon followed by loss of life.

2 The person here meant was Thomas Nevill, bastard son to the Lord Faulconbridge, 'a man (says Hall) of no lesse corage than audacitie, who for his cruel conditions was such an apte person, that a more meter could not be chosen to set all the world in a broyle, and to put the estate of the realme on an ill hazard.' He had been appointed by Warwick, vice-admiral of the sea, and had in charge so to keep the passage between Dover and Calais, that none which either favoured King Henry or his friends, should escape untaken or undrowned: such, at least, were his instructions with respect to the friends and favourers of King Edward after the rupture between him and Warwick. On Warwick's death, he fell into poverty, and robbed, both by sea and land as well friends as enemies. He once brought his ships up the Thames, and with a considerable body of the men of Kent and Essex, made a spirited assault on the city, with a view to plunder and pillage, which was not repelled but after a sharp conflict, and the loss of many lives; and, had it happened at a more critical period, might have been attended with fatal consequences to Edward. After roving on the sea some little time longer, he ventured to land at Southampton, where he was taken and beheaded. See Hall and Holinshed.—Ritson.

3 To coast is, apparently, to pursue, to hover about any thing. The old form of the word appears to have been costoye, or costoite, from the French costoyer, to pursue a course alongside an object, to watch it.

4 To tire is to tear; to feed like a bird of prey.

5 I. e. of Northumberland, Westmoreland, and Clifford, who had left him in disgust.

6 Shakespeare seems to have thought York and Montague brothers-in-law. But Montague was brother to Warwick; Warwick's daughter was married to a son of York, but not during the life of York. Steevens thought that as Shakespeare uses the expression brothers of the war in King Lear, something of the kind might be meant here.

7 The obligation of an oath is here eluded by a very despicable sophistry. A lawful magistrate alone has the power to exact an oath, but the oath derives no part of its force from the magistrate. The plea against the obligation of an oath obliging to maintain a usurper, taken from the unlawfulness of the oath itself, in the foregoing play, was rational and just.—Johnson.

8 Of sound judgment.

9 The folio reads 'Enter Gabriel.' It was the name of the actor, probably Gabriel Singer, who played this insignificant part. The emendation is from the old play, and was made by Theobald.

10 I know not (says Johnson) whether the author intended any moral instruction, but he that reads this has

' Intend here to besiege you in your castle :
' She is hard by with twenty thousand men ;
' And therefore fortify your hold, my lord.

* York. Ay, with my sword. What! think'st thou, that we fear them?—

' Edward and Richard, you shall stay with me ;
' My brother Montague shall post to London !

* Let noble Warwick, Cobham, and the rest,

* Whom we have left protectors of the king,

* With powerful policy strengthen themselves,

* And trust not simple Henry, nor his oaths.

* Mont. Brother, I go ; I'll win them, fear it not :

* And thus most humbly I do take my leave. [Exit.]

Enter Sir JOHN and Sir HUGH MORTIMER.

York. Sir John, and Sir Hugh Mortimer, mine uncles !

' You are come to Sandal in a happy hour ;

The army of the queen mean to besiege us.

Sir John. She shall not need, we'll meet her in the field.

' York. What, with five thousand men ?

Rich. Ay, with five hundred, father, for a need.

A woman's general ; What should we fear ?

[A March afar off.]

Edu. I hear their drums ; let's set our men in order ;

' And issue forth, and bid them battle straight.

' York. Five men to twenty!—though the odds be great,

' I doubt not, uncle, of our victory.

' Many a battle have I won in France,

' When as the enemy hath been ten to one ;

' Why should I not now have the like success ?

[Alarum. Exeunt.]

SCENE III. Plains near Sandal Castle. Alarums: Excursions. Enter RUTLAND, and his Tutor.

' Rut. Ah, whither shall I fly to 'scape their hands ?

Ah, tutor! look, where bloody Clifford comes !

Enter CLIFFORD, and Soldiers.

' Cliff. Chaplain, away! thy priesthood saves thy life.

As for the brat of this accursed duke,
Whose father slew my father,⁵—he shall die.

Tut. And I, my lord, will bear him company.

Cliff. Soldiers, away with him.

Tut. Ah, Clifford! murder not this innocent child,

' Lest thou be hated both of God and man.

[Exit, forced off by Soldiers.]

Cliff. How now! is he dead already? Or, is it fear,

That makes him close his eyes?—I'll open them.

' Rut. So looks the pent-up lion o'er the wretch

' That trembles under his devouring paws :⁶

And so he walks, insulting o'er his prey ;

' And so he comes to rend his limbs asunder.—

' Ah, gentle Clifford, kill me with thy sword,

And not with such a cruel threat'ning look.

Sweet Clifford, hear me speak before I die ;—

I am too mean a subject for thy wrath,

Be thou reveng'd on men, and let me live.

Cliff. In vain thou speak'st, poor boy ; my father's blood

Hath stopp'd the passage where thy words should enter.

a striking admonition against precipitancy, by which we often use unlawful means to do that which a little delay would put honestly in our power. Had York stayed but a few moments, he had saved his cause from the stain of perjury.

1 'A priest called Sir Robert Aspill.' Hall, fo. 99.

2 i. e. the father of which brat, namely the duke of York.

3 Steevens remarks that the epithet devouring, which might well have characterized the whole animal, 'is oddly enough bestowed on his paws.'

4 Rutland was born in 1443 ; or at latest, according to Hall, in 1443, and Clifford's father was slain at the battle of St. Albans, in 1455. Consequently Rutland was then at least seven years old, more probably twelve.

Rut. Then let my father's blood open it again ;
He is a man, and, Clifford, cope with him.

Cliff. Had I thy brethren here, their lives, and thine,

Were not revenge sufficient for me ;

No, if I digg'd up thy forefathers' graves,

And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,

It could not slake mine ire, nor ease my heart.

The sight of any of the house of York

Is as a fury to torment my soul ;

' And till I root out their accursed line,

' And leave not one alive, I live in hell.

Therefore— [Lifting his hand.]

Rut. O, let me pray before I take my death :—

To thee I pray ; sweet Clifford, pity me !

Cliff. Such pity as my rapier's point affords.

' Rut. I never did thee harm : Why wilt thou slay me ?

Cliff. Thy father hath.

Rut. But 'twas ere I was born.⁴

Thou hast one son, for his sake pity me ;

Lest, in revenge thereof,—sith⁵ God is just,—

He be as miserably slain as I.

Ah, let me live in prison all my days ;

And when I give occasion of offence,

Then let me die, for now thou hast no cause.

Cliff. No cause ?

Thy father slew my father ; therefore, die.

[CLIFFORD slabs him.]

Rut. *Dii faciant, laudis summa sit istae tuae*¹⁶

[Dies.]

Cliff. Plantagenet! I come, Plantagenet!

And this thy son's blood cleaving to my blade,

Shall rust upon my weapon, till thy blood,

Congeal'd with this, do make me wipe off both.

[Exit.]

SCENE IV. The same. Alarum. Enter YORK

' York. The army of the queen hath got the field :

' My uncles both are slain in rescuing me ;⁷

' And all my followers to the eager foe

' Turn back, and fly, like ships before the wind,

' Or lambs pursu'd by hunger-starved wolves.

' My sons—God knows, what hath bechanced

them :

But this I know,—they have demean'd themselves

Like men born to renown, by life, or death.

' Three times did Richard make a lane to me ;

And thrice cried,—Courage, father! fight it out!

' And full as oft came Edward to my side,

With purple falchion painted to the hilt

In blood of those that had encounter'd him

' And when the hardiest warriors did retire,

' Richard cried,—Charge! and give no foot of ground!

' And cried,—A crown, or else a glorious tomb!

' A sceptre, or an earthly sepulchre!

With this we charg'd again : but, out, alas!

' We bodg'd⁸ again ; as I have seen a swan

' With bootless labour swim against the tide,

' And spend her strength with overmatching waves.

[A short Alarum within.]

' Ah, hark! the fatal followers do pursue ;

' And I am faint, and cannot fly their fury :

' And, were I strong, I would not shun their fury :

' The sands are number'd, that make up my life ;

' Here must I stay, and here my life must end.

5. Since.

6 This line is in Ovid's Epistle from Phillis to Demophoon. The same quotation is in Nash's Have with you to Saffron Walden, 1596.

7 These were two bastard uncles by the mother's side, Sir John and Sir Hugh Mortimer. See Grafton's Chronicle, p. 649.

8 Bodged is probably the same as budged, from bouger, French. Steevens thought that it was the same as bogged, i. e. made bad, or bungling work of the attempt to rally. But the following passage, in which Coriolanus speaks of his army who had fled from their adversaries, seems decisive :—

' The mouse ne'er shunn'd the cat, as they did budge From rascals worse than they.'

Enter QUEEN MARGARET, CLIFFORD, NORTHUMBERLAND, and Soldiers.

'Come, bloody Clifford,—rough Northumberland,—

'I dare your quenchless fury to more rage;

'I am your butt, and I abide your shot.

North. Yield to our mercy, proud Plantagenet.

Clif. Ay, to such mercy, as his ruthless arm,

With downright payment, show'd unto my father.

Now Phaeton hath tumbled from his car,

And made an evening at the noontide prick.¹

York. My ashes, as the Phoenix, may bring forth

'A bird that will revenge upon you all:

'And, in that hope, I throw mine eyes to heaven,

Scorning whate'er you can afflict me with.

* Why come you not? what! multitudes, and fear?

Clif. So cowards fight, when they can fly no further;

'So doves do peck the falcon's piercing talons;

So desperate thieves, all hopeless of their lives,

Breathe out invectives 'gainst the officers.

York. O, Clifford, but bethink thee once again,

'And, in thy thought o'errun my former time:

* And, if thou canst for blushing, view this face;

And bite thy tongue that slanders him with cowardice,

'Whose frown hath made thee faint and fly ere this.

Clif. I will not bandy with thee word for word;

But buckle with thee blows, twice two for one.

[Draws.

Q. Mar. Hold, valiant Clifford! for a thousand causes,

I would prolong awhile the traitor's life:

Wrath makes him deaf: speak thou, Northumberland.

North. Hold, Clifford; do not honour him so much,

To prick thy finger, though to wound his heart:

What valour were it, when a cur doth grin,

For one to thrust his hand between his teeth,

When he might spurn him with his foot away?

It is war's prize² to take all vantages;

'And ten to one is no impeachment of valour.

[They lay hands on YORK, who struggles.

Clif. Ay, so survives the woodcock with the gin.

North. So doth the coney struggle in the net.

[YORK is taken prisoner.

York. So triumph thieves upon their conquer'd booty;

So true men's yield, with robbers so o'ermatch'd.

North. What would your grace have done unto him now?

Q. Mar. Brave warriors, Clifford and Northumberland,

Come make him stand upon this molehill here;

'That taught³ at mountains with outstretched arms,

Yet parted but the shadow with his hand.—

* What! was it you that would be England's king?

Was't you that revell'd in our parliament,

And made a preaching of your high descent?

Where are your mess of sons to back you now?

The wanton Edward, and the lusty George?

'And where's that valiant crookback prodigy,

Dicky, your boy, that, with his grumbling voice,

Was wont to cheer his dad in mutinies?

Or, with the rest, where is your darling Rutland?

Look, York; I stain'd this napkin with the blood

That valiant Clifford, with his rapier's point,

Made issue from the bosom of the boy:

And, if thine eyes can water for his death,

I give thee this to dry thy cheeks withal.

'Alas, poor York! but that I hate thee deadly,

I should lament thy miserable state.

I pry'thee, grieve, to make me merry, York;

Stamp, rave, and fret, that I may sing and dance.

What, hath thy fiery heart so parch'd thine entrails,

That not a tear can fall for Rutland's death?

* Why art thou patient, man? thou should'st be mad;

* And I, to make thee mad, do mock thee thus.

Thou would'st be fied, I see, to make me sport;

York cannot speak, unless he wear a crown.—

A crown for York;—and, lords, bow low to him.—

Hold you his hands, whilst I do set it on.—

[Putting a paper Crown on his Head.

Ay, marry, sir, now looks he like a king!

Ay, this is he that took King Henry's chair;

And this is he was his adopted heir.—

But how is it that great Plantagenet

Is crown'd so soon, and broke his solemn oath?

As I bethink me, you should not be king.

Till our King Henry had shook hands with death.

And will you pale⁴ your head in Henry's glory

And rob his temples of the diadem,

Now in his life, against your holy oath?

O, 'tis a fault too unpardonable!

Off with the crown; and, with the crown, his head;

And, whilst we breathe, take time to do him dead.

Clif. That is my office, for my father's sake.

Q. Mar. Nay, stay; let's hear the orisons he makes.

York. She wolf of France, but worse than wolves of France,

'Whose tongue more poisons than the adder's tooth!

How ill beseeeming is it in thy sex,

To triumph like an Amazonian trull,

'Upon their woes, whom fortune captivates?

But that thy face is, visorlike, unchanging,

Made impudent with use of evil deeds,

I would assay, proud queen, to make thee blush:

To tell thee whence thou cam'st, of whom deriv'd,

Were shame enough to shame thee, wert thou not shameless.

Thy father bears the type⁵ of king of Naples,

Of both the Sicils, and Jerusalem;

Yet not so wealthy as an English yeoman.

Hath that poor monarch taught thee to insult?

It needs not, nor it boots thee not, proud queen;

Unless the adage must be verified,—

That beggars, mounted, run their horse to death.

'Tis beauty, that doth oft make women proud;

But, God he knows, thy share thereof is small;

'Tis virtue, that doth make them most admir'd;

The contrary doth make thee wonder'd at:

'Tis government,¹⁰ that makes them seem divine;

The want thereof makes thee abominable:

Thou art as opposite to every good,

As the Antipodes are unto us,

Or as the south to the septentrion.¹¹

O, tyger's heart, wrapp'd in a woman's hide!

How could'st thou drain the life-blood of the child,

To bid the father wipe his eyes withal,

And yet be seen to bear a woman's face?

Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible;

'Thou stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorseless.

upon a molehill, on whose heads they put a garland in stead of a crown, which they had fashioned and made of segges or bulrushes, and having so crown'd him with that garlande, they kneeled down afore him, as the Jews did to Christe, in scorn, saying to him, Haile king without rule, haile, king without heritage, haile, duke and prince without people or possessions. And, at length, having thus scorn'd hym with these and diverse other like despitefull wordes, they strooke off his head, which (as ye have heard) they presented to the queen.

7 Impale, encircle with a crown. 8 Kill him.

9 i. e. the crown, the emblem or symbol of royalty.

10 Government, in the language of the time signified evenness of temper, and decency of manners.

11 The North.

1 Noontide point on the dial.

2 Prize here must have the same meaning as prise in French, or presa in Italian, i. e. a hold or advantage that may be taken. Unless we can imagine that it signifies licitum est, 'it is prized or esteemed lawful in war,' &c. Prize, prise, and prize were used indiscriminately by our ancestors.

3 Honest men.

4 Reached. Vide note on Part II. of this play, Act II. Sc. 3.

5 Handkerchief.

6 According to Hall the paper crown was not placed on York's head till after he was dead: but Hollinshed, after having copied Hall, says:—'Some write that the duke was taken alive and in derision caused to stand

' Bidd'st thou me rage, why, now thou hast thy wish:
' Would'st have me weep? why, now thou hast thy will:

' For raging wind blows up incessant showers.
And, when the rage allays, the rain begins.¹
These tears are my sweet Rutland's obsequies;
' And every drop cries vengeance for his death,—
' 'Gainst thee, fell Clifford,—and thee, false French-woman.

North. Beshrew me, but his passions² move me so,
That hardly can I check my eyes from tears.

York. That face of his the hungry cannibals
Would not have touch'd, would not have stain'd with blood:

But you are more inhuman, more inexorable,—
O, ten times more,—than tigers of Hyrcania.
See, ruthless queen, a hapless father's tears:
This cloth thou dipp'dst in blood of my sweet boy,
And I with tears do wash the blood away.
Keep thou the napkin, and go boast of this:

[He gives back the Handkerchief.
And, if thou tell'st the heavy story right,
Upon my soul, the hearers will shed tears;³
Yea, even my foes will shed fast-falling tears,
And say,—Alas, it was a piteous deed!—
There, take the crown, and, with the crown, my
curse;

And, in thy need, such comfort come to thee,
As now I reap at thy too cruel hand!
Hard-hearted Clifford, take me from the world;
My soul to heaven, my blood upon your heads!

North. Had he been slaughterman to all my kin,
' I should not for my life but weep for him,
To see how inly sorrow gripes his soul.

Q. Mar. What, weeping-ripe, my Lord Northumberland?

Think but upon the wrong he did us all,
And that will quickly dry thy melting tears.

Cliff. Here's for my oath, here's for my father's death. [Stabbing him.

Q. Mar. And here's to right our gentle-hearted king. [Stabbing him.

York. Open thy gate of mercy, gracious God!
' My soul flies through these wounds to seek out thee. [Dies.

Q. Mar. Off with his head, and set it on York gate;
So York may overlook the town of York.⁴

[Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I. A Plain near Mortimer's Cross in Herefordshire. Drums. Enter EDWARD and RICHARD, with their Forces, marching.

 Edu.* I wonder, how our princely father 'scap'd;
* Or whether he be 'scap'd away, or no,
* From Clifford's and Northumberland's pursuit;
* Had he been ta'en, we should have heard the news;
Had he been slain, we should have heard the news;

¹ We meet with the same thought in Shakespeare's Rape of Lucrece:—

' This windy tempest, till it blow up rain,
Held back his sorrow's tide, to make it more:
At last it rains, and busy winds give o'er,
Then son and father weep with equal strife,
Who should weep most for daughter or for wife.'

² Passions for griefs.
³ 'Tell thou the lamentable tale of me,
And send the hearers weeping to their beds.'

⁴ This gallant prince fell by his own imprudence, in consequence of leading an army of only five thousand men to engage with twenty thousand, and not waiting for the arrival of his son the earl of March, with a large body of Welshmen. He and Cecily his wife, with his son Edmund, earl of Rutland, were originally buried in the chancel of Fotheringay church. Peacham, in his Complete Gentleman, 1627, p. 153, gives an account of the destruction of their monuments, of the disinterment, &c.; and of their reinterment in the church, by command of Queen Elizabeth, under a mean monument of plaster.
⁵ Demeaned himself.

* Or, had he 'scap'd, methinks, we should have heard

* The happy tidings of his good escape.

* How fares my brother? why is he so sad?

Rich. I cannot joy, until I be resolv'd

Where our right valiant father is become.

' I saw him in the battle range about;

' And watch'd him how he singled Clifford forth.

' Methought, he bore him in the thickest troop,

As doth a lion in a herd of neat;⁵

* Or as a bear, encompass'd round with dogs;

* Who having pinch'd a few, and made them cry,

* The rest stand all aloof, and bark at him.

* So far'd our father with his enemies:

* So fled his enemies my warlike father;

' Methinks, 'tis prize' enough to be his son.

See, how the morning opens her golden gates,

And takes her farewell of the glorious sun!⁶

* How well resembles it the prime of youth,

* Trim'd like a younker, prancing to his love!

Edu. Dazzle mine eyes, or do I see three suns?

Rich. Three glorious suns, each one a perfect sun;⁷

Not separated with the racking clouds,⁸

But sever'd in a pale clear-shining sky.

See, see! they join, embrace, and seem to kiss,

As if they vow'd some league inviolable:

Now are they but one lamp, one light, one sun.

In this the heaven figures some event.

* Edu. 'Tis wondrous strange, the like yet never heard of.

I think, it cites us, brother, to the field;

That we, the sons of brave Plantagenet,

' Each one already blazing by our meeds,¹¹

Should, notwithstanding, join our lights together,

' And overshine the earth, as this the world.

' Whate'er it bodes, henceforward will I bear

Upon my target three fair shining suns.

* Rich. Nay, bear three daughters;—by your leave I speak it,

* You love the breeder better than the male.

Enter a Messenger.

' But what art thou, whose heavy looks foretell

' Some dreadful story hanging on thy tongue?

Mess. Ah, one that was a woful looker on,

When as the noble duke of York was slain,

* Your princely father, and my loving lord.

* Edu. O, speak no more! for I have heard too much.¹²

' Rich. Say how he died, for I will hear it all.

' Mess. Environed he was with many foes;

* And stood against them as the hope of Troy!¹³

* Against the Greeks, that would have enter'd Troy.

* But Hercules himself must yield to odds;

* And many strokes, though with a little axe,

* Hew down and fell the hardest-timber'd oak.

' By many hands your father was subdu'd;

* But only slaughter'd by the ireful arm

* Of unrelenting Clifford, and the queen:

* Who crown'd the gracious duke in high despite;

* Laugh'd in his face; and, when with grief he wept,

* The ruthless queen gave him, to dry his cheeks,

6 Neat cattle, cows, oxen, &c.

7 Prize is here again used for estimation.

8 Aurora takes for a time her farewell of the sun,

when she dismisses him to his diurnal course.

9 This circumstance is mentioned both by Hall and Holinshed. 'At which tyme the sun (as some write) appeared to the earl of March like three sunnes, and sodainly joynd altogether in one; upon whiche sight hee tooke such courage, that he fiercely setting on his enemies put them to flight; and for this cause menne ymagined that he gave the sun in his full brightnesse for his badge or cognizance.'—Holinshed.

10 I. e. the clouds floating before the wind like a reek or vapour. This verb, though now obsolete, was formerly in common use; and it is now provincially common to speak of the reek of the weather.

11 Meed anciently signified merit as well as reward, and is so explained by Cotgrave, Phillips, and others.

12 The generous tenderness of Edward, and savage fortitude of Richard, are well distinguished by their different reception of their father's death.

13 Hector.

' A napkin steeped in the harmless blood
' Of sweet young Rutland, by rough Clifford slain :
' And, after many scorns, many foul taunts,
' They took his head, and on the gates of York
' They set the same ; and there it doth remain,
' The saddest spectacle that e'er I view'd.

Edw. Sweet duke of York, our prop to lean upon ;
' Now thou art gone, we have no staff, no stay !—
' O Clifford, boist'rous Clifford, thou hast slain
' The flower of Europe for his chivalry ;
' And treacherously hast thou vanquish'd him,
' For, hand to hand, he would have vanquish'd thee !—

Now my soul's palace is become a prison :
Ah, would she break from hence ! that this my body
' Might in the ground be closed up in rest :

' For never henceforth shall I joy again,
' Never, O never, shall I see more joy.

Rich. I cannot weep ; for all my body's moisture Scarce serves to quench my furnace-burning heart :

' Nor can my tongue unload my heart's great burden ;

* For selfsame wind, that I should speak withal,
* Is kindling coals, that fire all my breast,

* And burn me up with flames that tears would quench.

* To weep, is to make less the depth of grief :
* Tears, then, for babes ; blows, and revenge, for me !—

' Richard, I bear thy name, I'll venge thy death,
' Or die renowned by attempting it.

Edw. His name that valiant duke hath left with thee ;

' His dukedom and his chair with me is left.

Rich. Nay, if thou be that princely eagle's bird,
Show thy descent by gazing 'gainst the sun :¹

For chair and dukedom, throne and kingdom say ;
Either that is thine, or else thou wert not his.

March. Enter WARWICK and MONTAGUE, with Forces.²

War. How now, fair lords ? What fare ? what news abroad ?

' Rich. Great lord of Warwick, if we should recount

Our baleful news, and, at each word's deliverance,
Stab poniards in our flesh till all were told,

The words would add more anguish than the wounds.
O valiant lord, the duke of York is slain.

Edw. O Warwick ! Warwick ! that Plantagenet,
Which held thee dearly, as his soul's redemption,

Is by the stern Lord Clifford done to death.³

War. Ten days ago I drown'd these news in tears :

And now to add more measure to your woes,
I come to tell you things since then befall'n.

After the bloody fray at Wakefield fought,
Where your brave father breath'd his latest gasp,

Tidings, as swiftly as the posts could run,
Were brought me of your loss, and his depart.

I then in London, keeper of the king,
Muster'd my soldiers, gather'd flocks of friends,

And very well appointed, as I thought,
March'd towards Saint Albans to intercept the queen,

Bearing the king in my behalf along :

For by my scouts I was advertised,
That she was coming with a full intent

To dash our late decree in parliament,
' Touching King Henry's oath, and your succession.

Short tale to make,—we at Saint Albans met,
Our battles join'd, and both sides fiercely fought :

But, whether 'twas the coldness of the king,
Who look'd full gently on his warlike queen,

That robb'd my soldiers of their hated spleen ;
Or whether 'twas report of her success ;
Or more than common fear of Clifford's rigour,

' Who thunders to his captives—blood and death,
I cannot judge : but, to conclude with truth,

Their weapons like to lightning came and went ;
Our soldiers—like the night-owl's lazy flight,

' Or like a lazy thrasher with a flail,—
Fell gently down, as if they struck their friends.

I cheer'd them up with justice of our cause,
With promise of high pay, and great rewards :

But all in vain ; they had no heart to fight,
And we, in them, no hope to win the day,

So that we fled ; the king, unto the queen ;
Lord George your brother, Norfolk, and myself,

In haste, posthaste, are come to join with you ;
For in the marches here, we heard you were,

Making another head to fight again.

Edw. Where is the duke of Norfolk, gentle Warwick ?

And when came George from Burgundy to England ?

' War. Some six miles off the duke is with the soldiers :

And for your brother,—he was lately sent
From your kind aunt, duchess of Burgundy,

' With aid of soldiers to this needful war.

Rich. 'Twas odds, belike, when valiant Warwick fled :

Oft have I heard his praises in pursuit,
But ne'er, till now, his scandal of retire.

War. Nor now my scandal, Richard, dost thou hear :

For thou shalt know this strong right hand of mine
Can pluck the diadem from faint Henry's head,

And wring the awful sceptre from his fist ;
Were he as famous and as bold in war,

As he is fam'd for mildness, peace, and prayer.

Rich. I know it well, Lord Warwick : blame me not ;

'Tis love, I bear thy glories, makes me speak.
But, in this troublous time, what's to be done ?

Shall we go throw away our coats of steel,
And wrap our bodies in black mourning gowns,

Numbring our Ave-Maries with our beads ?
Or shall we on the helmets of our foes

Tell our devotion with revengeful arms ?
If for the last, say—Ay, and to it, lords.

War. Why, therefore Warwick came to seek you out ;

And therefore comes my brother Montague.

Attend me, lords. The proud insulting queen,
With Clifford, and the haught Northumberland,

And of their feather, many more proud birds,
Have wrought the easy-melting king like wax.

He swore consent to your succession,
His oath enrolled in the parliament ;

And now to London all the crew are gone,
To frustrate both his oath, and what beside

May make against the house of Lancaster.

' Their power, I think, is thirty thousand strong
Now, if the help of Norfolk, and myself,

With all the friends that thou, brave earl of March,
Amongst the loving Welshmen canst procure,

' Will but amount to five and twenty thousand,
Why, Via ! to London will we march again ;

And once again bestride our foaming steeds,
' And once again cry—Charge upon our foes !

But never once again turn back, and fly.

Rich. Ay, now, methinks, I hear great Warwick speak :

Ne'er may he live to see a sunshine day,
That cries—Retire, if Warwick bid him stay.

Edw. Lord Warwick, on thy shoulder will I lean ;

of December, 1460, when Edward was in his nineteenth year, Rutland in his eighteenth, George of York, afterwards duke of Clarence, in his twelfth, and Richard only in his ninth year.

³ This circumstance is not warranted by history. Clarence and Gloster (as they were afterwards created) were sent into Flanders immediately after the battle of Wakefield, and did not return until their brother Edward had got possession of the crown. The duchess of Burgundy was not their aunt, but a third cousin.

1 Thus in Spenser's Hymn of Heavenly Beauty :—
' —like the native bird of eagle's kind,
On that bright sun of glory fix thine eyes.'

2 This meeting was at Chipping Norton, according to W. Wyrcester, p. 488.

3 A common ancient expression for killed ; from the French faire mourir.

4 The ages of the duke of York's children will show how far historic truth is departed from in the present play. The battle of Wakefield was fought on the 29th

'And when thou fall'st, (as God forbid the hour!)
Must Edward fall, which peril heaven forefend!
War. No longer earl of March, but duke of York;
'The next degree is, England's royal throne:
For king of England shalt thou be proclaim'd
In every borough as we pass along;
And he that throws not up his cap for joy,
'Shall for the fault make forfeit of his head.
King Edward,—valiant Richard,—Montague,—
Stay we no longer dreaming of renown,
'But sound the trumpets, and about our task.

* Rich. Then, Clifford, were thy heart as hard as steel,

* (As thou hast shown it flinty by thy deeds,)

* I come to pierce it,—or to give thee mine.

* Edu. Then strike up, drums;—God, and Saint George, for us!

Enter a Messenger.

War. How now? what news?

Mess. The duke of Norfolk sends you word by me,

The queen is coming with a puissant host;
And craves your company for speedy counsel.

War. Why then it sorts, brave warriors: Let's away. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. Before York. Enter KING HENRY, QUEEN MARGARET, the PRINCE OF WALES, CLIFFORD and NORTHUMBERLAND, with Forces.

Q. Mar. Welcome, my lord, to this brave town of York.

Yonder's the head of that arch enemy,
That sought to be encompass'd with your crown:
'Doth not the object cheer your heart, my lord?

* K. Hen. Ay, as the rocks cheer them that fear their wreck;—

To see this sight, it irks my very soul.—
Withhold revenge, dear God! 'tis not my fault,
Not wittingly have I infring'd my vow.

Clif. My gracious liege, this too much lenity
And harmful pity, must be laid aside.

To whom do lions cast their gentle looks?

Not to the beast that would usurp their den.

Whose hand is that the forest bear doth lick?

Not his, that spoils her young before her face.

Who 'scapes the lurking serpent's mortal sting?

Not he, that sets his foot upon her back.

The smallest worm will turn, being trodden on;

'And doves will peck, in safeguard of their brood.

Ambitious York did level at thy crown,

Thou smiling, while he knit his angry brows:

He, but a duke, would have his son a king,

And raise his issue, like a loving sire;

Thou, being a king, bless'd with a goodly son,

Didst yield consent to disinherit him,

'Which argued thee a most unloving father.

Unreasonable creatures feed their young:

And though man's face be fearful to their eyes,

Yet, in protection of their tender ones,

Who hath not seen them (even with those wings

'Which sometime they have used with fearful flight,)

Make war with him that climb'd unto their nest,

Offering their own lives in their young's defence?

For shame, my liege, make them your precedent!

Were it not pity that this goodly boy

Should lose his birthright by his father's fault;

And long hereafter say unto his child,—

What my great grandfather and grandsire got,

My careless father fondly² gave away?

Ah, what a shame were this! Look on the boy;
And let his manly face, which promiseth
Successful fortune, steel thy melting heart,
To hold thine own, and leave thine own with him.

K. Hen. Full well hath Clifford play'd the orator, Infering arguments of mighty force.

'But, Clifford, tell me, didst thou never hear,—

That things ill got had ever bad success?

And happy always was it for that son,

Whose father for his hoarding went to hell?³

I'll leave my son my virtuous deeds behind;

And 'would, my father had left me no more!

For all the rest is held at such a rate,

'As brings a thousand-fold more care to keep,

'Than in possession any jot of pleasure.

Ah, cousin York! 'would thy best friends did know,

'How it doth grieve me that thy head is here!

* Q. Mar. My lord, cheer up your spirits; our foes are nigh,

'And this soft courage makes your followers faint.

'You promis'd knighthood to our forward son;

'Unsheath your sword, and dub him presently,—

Edward, kneel down.

K. Hen. Edward Plantagenet, arise a knight;

And learn this lesson,—Draw thy sword in right.

Prince. My gracious father, by your kingly leave,

I'll draw it as apparent to the crown,

And in that quarrel use it to the death.

Clif. Why, that is spoken like a toward prince.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Royal commanders, be in readiness:

'For, with a band of thirty thousand men,

Comes Warwick, backing of the duke of York;

And, in the towns as they do march along,

Proclaims him king, and many fly to him:

'Darraign your battle,⁴ for they are at hand.

Clif. I would, your highness would depart the field:

The queen hath best success when you are absent.⁵

* Q. Mar. Ay, good my lord, and leave us to our fortune.

K. Hen. Why, that's my fortune too; therefore I'll stay.

North. Be it with resolution then to fight.

Prince. My royal father, cheer these noble lords,

And hearten those that fight in your defence:

Unsheath your sword, good father; cry, Saint

George!

March. Enter EDWARD, GEORGE, RICHARD, WARWICK, NORFOLK, MONTAGUE, and Soldiers.

'Edu. Now, perjur'd Henry! wilt thou kneel for grace,

'And set thy diadem upon my head;

* Or bide the mortal fortune of the field?

Q. Mar. Go, rate thy minions, proud insulting boy!

'Becomes it thee to be thus bold in terms,

'Before thy sovereign, and thy lawful king?

Edu. I am his king, and he should bow his knee;

I was adopted heir by his consent;

Since when, his oath is broke;⁶ for, as I hear,

You—that are king, though he do wear the crown,—

Have caus'd him, by new act of parliament,

'To blot out me, and put his own son in.

1 Why, then, things are as they should be; it falls out right.

2 Foolishly.

3 The king quotes two proverbs; the one—'Ill-gotten goods never prosper'; the other—'Happy the child whose father went to the devil.' This last he must be supposed to use interrogatively, as disputing the truth of it: 'Was it always happy for that son?' &c. This interpretation sets the king's reasoning right.

4 I.e. arrange your host, put your host in order. Darraign is used by Chaucer, Skelton, and Spenser.

5 Happy was the queen in her two bataysils, but unfortunate was the king in all his enterprises; for where his person was present the victorie fedde ever from him to the other parte.—Hall's Chronicle. Henry VI. fol. c. Drayton has enlarged upon this superstitious belief in his Miseries of Queen Margaret.

6 Edward's argument is founded on an article said to have been in the compact between Henry and the duke of York: 'That if the king did closely or apertly studye or go about to compass or imagine the death or destruction of the sayde duke or his blood, then he to forfeit the crowne, and the duke of Yorke to take it.—Hall. If this had been one of the articles of the compact, the duke having been killed at Wakefield, his eldest son would now have a title to the crown; but Malone doubts whether it ever made part of that agreement. The poet followed Hall

'Clif. And reason too;
Who should succeed the father, but the son?

'Rich. Are you there, butcher?—O, I cannot speak!

'Clif. Ay, crookback; here I stand to answer thee,

Or any he the proudest of thy sort.

Rich. 'Twas you that kill'd young Rutland, was it not?

Clif. Ay, and old York, and yet not satisfied.

Rich. For God's sake, lords, give signal to the fight.

War. What say'st thou, Henry, wilt thou yield the crown?

Q. Mar. Why, how now, long-tongued Warwick? dare you speak?

When you and I met at St. Albans last,
Your legs did better service than your hands.

War. Then 'twas my turn to fly, and now 'tis thine.

Clif. You said so much before, and yet you fled.

War. 'Twas not your valour, Clifford, drove me thence.

'North. No, nor your manhood, that durst make you stay.

Rich. Northumberland, I hold thee reverently;—
Break off the parle; for scarce I can refrain

The execution of my big-swoln heart
Upon that Clifford, that cruel child-killer.

Clif. I slew thy father: Call'st thou him a child?

Rich. Ay, like a dastard, and a treacherous coward,

As thou didst kill our tender brother Rutland;
But, ere sunset, I'll make thee curse the deed.

K. Hen. Have done with words, my lords, and hear me speak.

Q. Mar. Defy them then, or else hold close thy lips.

K. Hen. I pr'ythee, give no limits to my tongue;
I am a king, and privilege'd to speak.

Clif. My liege, the wound, that brod this meeting here,

Cannot be cur'd by words; therefore be still.

Rich. Then, executioner, unsheathe thy sword:
By him that made us all, I am resolv'd,

'That Clifford's manhood lies upon his tongue.

Edw. Say, Henry, shall I have my right or no?
A thousand men have broke their fasts to-day,

That ne'er shall dine, unless thou yield the crown.

War. If thou deny, their blood upon thy head;
For York in justice puts his armour on.

'Prince. If that be right, which Warwick says is right,

There is no wrong, but every thing is right.

Rich. Whoever got thee, there thy mother stands;
For, well I wot, thou hast thy mother's tongue.

Q. Mar. But thou art neither like thy sire, nor dam;

But like a foul misshapen stigmatic,
Mark'd by the destinies to be avoided,¹

'As venom toads, or lizards' dreadful stings.

Rich. Iron of Naples, hid with English gilt,²
Whose father bears the title of a king,

(As if a channel³ should be call'd the sea,)
'Sham'st thou not, knowing whence thou art ex-traught,

To let thy tongue detect thy base-born heart?⁴

Edw. A wisp of straw⁵ were worth a thousand crowns,

To make this shameless callet know herself.—

* Helen of Greece was fairer far than thou,
* Although thy husband may be Menelaus;⁶

* And ne'er was Agamemnon's brother wrong'd
* By that false woman, as this king by thee.

'His father revell'd in the heart of France,
And tam'd the king, and made the Dauphin stoop;

And, had he match'd according to his state,
He might have kept that glory to this day:

But, when he took a beggar to his bed,
And grac'd thy poor sire with his bridal day,

'Even then that sunshine brew'd a shower for him,
'That wash'd his father's fortunes forth of France,

And heap'd sedition on his crown at home.

'For what hath broach'd this tumult, but thy pride?
Hadst thou been meek, our title still had slept;

And we, in pity of the gentle king,
Had slipp'd our claim until another age.

'Geo. But, when we saw our sunshine made thy spring,

'And that thy summer bred us no increase,
We set the axe to thy usurping root;

And though the edge hath something hit ourselves,
'Yet, know thou, since we have begun to strike,

'We'll never leave, till we have hewn thee down,
Or bath'd thy growing with our heated bloods.

Edw. And, in this resolution, I defy thee;
Not willing any longer conference,

Since thou deny'st the gentle king to speak.—
Sound trumpets!—let our bloody colours wave!—

And either victory, or else a grave.

Q. Mar. Stay, Edward.

Edw. No, wrangling woman; we'll no longer stay:
These words will cost ten thousand lives to-day.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III. A Field of Battle between Towton and Saxon, in Yorkshire.⁷ Alarums: Executions. Enter WARWICK.

'War. Forspent with toil, as runners with a race,
I lay me down a little while to breathe:

For strokes receiv'd, and many blows repaid,
Have robb'd my strong-knit sinews of their strength,

'And spite of spite, needs must I rest awhile.

Enter EDWARD, running.

Edw. Smile, gentle heaven! or strike, ungentle death!

'For this world frowns, and Edward's sun is clouded.

War. How now, my lord? what hap? what hope of good?

Enter GEORGE.

* Geo. Our hap is loss, our hope but sad despair;
'Our ranks are broke, and ruin follows us:

'What counsel give you, whither shall we fly?

'Edw. Bootless is flight, they follow us with wings;

'And weak we are, and cannot shun pursuit.

Enter RICHARD.

'Rich. Ah, Warwick, why hast thou withdrawn thyself?

'Thy brother's blood the thirsty earth hath drunk,¹⁰
'Broach'd with the steely point of Clifford's lance:

'And, in the very pangs of death, he cried,—

8 Shakspeare has here, perhaps, intentionally thrown three different actions into one. The principal action took place on the eve of Palm Sunday, 1461. 'This battle (says Carte) decided the fate of the house of Lancaster, overturning in one day an usurpation strengthened by sixty-two years' continuance, and established Edward on the throne of England.'

9 '— Thus repulsed, our final hope
Is flat despair.' Milton.

10 The brother here mentioned is no person in the drama, but a natural son of Salisbury. Hollinshed, relating the death of Lord Clifford in this action at Ferry-bridge, on the 28th of March, 1461, says, 'He was slain, and with him the bastard of Salisbury, brother to the earl of Warwick, a valiant young gentleman, and of great audacity.'

1 It is my firm persuasion.

2 See the Second Part of King Henry VI. Act v. Sc. I.

3 Gilt is a superficial covering of gold.

4 A channel in the poet's time signified what we now call a kennel; which word is still pronounced channel in the north.

5 To show thy meanness of birth by thy indecent relling.

6 A wisp of straw was often applied as a mark of opprobrium to an immodest woman, a scold, or similar offenders; even showing it to a woman was, therefore, considered as a grievous affront. A callet was a lewd woman; but a term often given to a scold.

7 i. e. a cuckold. In Troilus and Cressida, Therstes, speaking of Menelaus, calls him 'The goodly transformation of Jupiter there,—the primitive statue and oblique memorial of cuckolds.'

Like to a dismal clangor heard from far,—
 'Warwick, revenge! brother, revenge my death!
 'So underneath the belly of their steeds,
 'That stain'd their fetlocks in his smoking blood,
 'The noble gentleman gave up the ghost.
 'War. Then let the earth be drunken with our blood:

I'll kill my horse, because I will not fly.
 * Why stand we like soft-hearted women here,
 * Wailing our losses, whiles the foe doth rage;
 * And look upon,¹ as if the tragedy.
 * Were play'd in jest by counterfeiting actors?
 * Here on my knee I vow to God above,
 * I'll never pause again, never stand still,
 * Till either death hath clos'd these eyes of mine,
 * Or fortune given me measure of revenge.
 Edu. O Warwick, I do bend my knee with thine;
 'And, in this vow, do chain my soul to thine.—
 * And, ere my knee rise from the earth's cold face,
 * I throw my hands, mine eyes, my heart to thee,
 Thou setter up and plucker down of kings!
 'Beseeching thee,—if with thy will it stands,
 'That to my foes this body must be prey,—
 'Yet that thy brazen gates of heaven may ope,
 'And give sweet passage to my sinful soul!—
 'Now, lords, take leave until we meet again,
 Where'er it be, in heaven, or on earth.

'Rich. Brother, give me thy hand; and, gentle Warwick,
 'Let me embrace thee in my weary arms:—
 'I, that did never weep, now melt with woe,
 'That winter should cut off our spring-time so.
 'War. Away, away! Once more sweet lords, farewell.

'Geo. Yet let us all together to our troops,
 'And give them leave to fly that will not stay;
 And call them pillars, that will stand to us;
 'And, if they thrive, promise them such rewards
 'As victors wear at the Olympian games:
 * This may plant courage in their quailing² breasts;
 * For yet is hope of life, and victory.—
 * Fore-slow³ no longer, make we hence again.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV. The same. Another Part of the Field. Excursions. Enter RICHARD and CLIFFORD.

'Rich. Now, Clifford, I have singled thee alone:
 'Suppose, this arm is for the duke of York,
 'And this for Rutland; both bound to revenge,
 'Wert thou environ'd with a brazen wall.⁴

Clif. Now, Richard, I am with thee here alone:
 This is the hand, that stabb'd thy father York;
 And this the hand that slew thy brother Rutland;
 And here's the heart that triumphs in their death,
 And cheers these hands, that slew thy sire and brother,
 To execute the like upon thyself;
 And so, have at thee.

[They fight. WARWICK enters; CLIFFORD flies.]

'Rich. Nay, Warwick, single out some other chase;
 For I myself will hunt this wolf to death.⁵

[Exeunt.]

1 Look upon for look on, i. e. are mere spectators.

2 Quailing is sinking into dejection.

3 To fore-slow is to delay, to loiter.

4 Fore-slow no time; sweet Lancaster, let's march.

Marlowe's Edward III.

5 — non si te ferreus agger

Ambiat. Statius, Theb. li. v. 453.

6 Two very similar lines in the preceding play are spoken of Richard's father by Clifford's father:—

'Hold, Warwick, seek thee out some other chase;

For I myself must hunt this deer to death.'

7 The leading thought in both these soliloquies is borrowed from Holinshed, p. 665. 'This deadly conflict continued ten hours in doubtful state of victorie, uncertainlie heaving and setting on both sides,' &c. Steevens points out a similar comparison in Virgil, Æn. lib. x. ver. 354, which originates with Homer, Il. xiv.

8 This speech is mournful and soft, exquisitely suited to the character of the king, and makes a pleasing inter-

SCENE V. Another Part of the Field. Alarum. Enter KING HENRY.

* K. Hen. This battle fares like to the morning's war,⁶

* When dying clouds contend with growing light;
 * What time the shepherd, blowing of his nails,
 * Can neither call it perfect day, nor night.
 * Now sways it this way, like a mighty sea,
 * Forc'd by the tide to combat with the wind;
 * Now sways it that way, like the selfsame sea
 * Forc'd to retire by fury of the wind;
 * Sometime, the flood prevails; and then the wind;
 * Now, one the better; then, another best;
 * Both tugging to be victors, breast to breast,
 * Yet neither conqueror, nor conquered:
 * So is the equal poise of this fell war.
 * Here on this molehill will I sit me down,
 * To whom God will, there be the victory!
 * For Margaret my queen, and Clifford too,
 * Have chid me from the battle; swearing both,
 * They prosper best of all when I am thence.
 * 'Would, I were dead! if God's good will were so:
 * For what is in this world, but grief and woe?
 * O God! methinks, it were a happy life,⁷

* To be no better than a homely swain;
 * To sit upon a hill, as I do now,
 * To carve out dials quaintly, point by point,
 * Thereby to see the minutes how they run:
 * How many make the hour full complete,
 * How many hours bring about the day,
 * How many days will finish up the year,
 * How many years a mortal man may live.
 * When this is known, then to divide the times:
 * So many hours must I tend my flock;
 * So many hours must I take my rest;
 * So many hours must I contemplate;
 * So many hours must I sport myself;
 * So many days my ewes have been with young;
 * So many weeks ere the poor fools will year;
 * So many years ere I shall shear the fleece:
 * So minutes, hours, days, weeks, months, and years,
 * Pass'd over to the end they were created,
 * Would bring white hairs unto a quiet grave.

Ah, what a life were this! how sweet! how lovely!
 * Gives not the hawthorn bush a sweeter shade
 * To shepherds, looking on their silly sheep,
 * Than doth a rich embroider'd canopy
 * To kings, that fear their subjects' treachery?
 * O, yes it doth; a thousand fold it doth.
 * And to conclude,—the shepherd's homely curds,
 * His cold thin drink out of his leather bottle,
 * His wonted sleep under a fresh tree's shade
 * All which secure and sweetly he enjoys,
 * Is far beyond a prince's delicacies,
 * His viands sparkling in a golden cup,
 * His body couched in a curious bed,
 * When care, mistrust, and treason wait on him.

Alarum. Enter a Son that has killed his Father,⁸ dragging in the dead Body.

Son. Ill blows the wind, that profits nobody.—
 'This man, whom hand to hand I slew in fight, change, by affording, amidst the tumult and horror of the battle, an unexpected glimpse of rural innocence and pastoral tranquillity.—Johnson. There are some verses preserved of Henry VI. which are in a strain of the same pensive moralizing character. The reader may not be displeased to have them here subjoined, that he may compare them with the congenial thoughts the poet has attributed to him:—

'Kingdoms are but cares;
 State is devoid of stay;
 Riches are ready snares,
 And hasten to decay.
 Pleasure is a privy [game],
 Which vice doth still provoke;
 Pomp unprompt; and fame a flame;
 Power a smouldering smoke.

Who meaneth to remove the rock
 Out of his slimy mud,
 Shall mire himself, and hardly scape
 The swelling of the flood.'

8 These two horrible instances are selected to show

' May be possessed with some store of crowns :
 * And I, that baply take them from him now,
 * May yet ere night yield both my life and them
 * To some man else, as this dead man doth me.—
 * Who's this?—O God! it is my father's face,
 * Whom in this conflict I unawares have kill'd.
 * O heavy time, begetting such events!
 * From London by the king was I press'd forth;
 * My father, being the earl of Warwick's man,
 * Came on the part of York, press'd by his master;
 * And I, who at his hands receiv'd my life,
 * Have by my hands of life bereaved him.—
 * Pardon me, God, I knew not what I did!—
 * And pardon, father, for I knew not thee!—
 * My tears shall wipe away these bloody marks;
 * And no more words, till they have flow'd their fill.
 * K. Hen. O piteous spectacle! O bloody times!
 * Whilst lions war, and battle for their dens,
 * Poor harmless lambs abide their enmity.—
 * Weep, wretched man, I'll aid thee tear for tear;
 * And let our hearts, and eyes, like civil war,
 * Be blind with tears, and break o'ercharg'd with grief.'

Enter a Father, who has killed his Son, with the Body in his arms.

' Fath. Thou that so stoutly hast resisted me,
 * Give me thy gold, if thou hast any gold;
 * For I have bought it with a hundred blows.—
 * But let me see:—is this our foeman's face?
 * Ah, no, no, no, it is mine only son!—
 * Ah, boy, if any life be left in thee,
 * Throw up thine eye; see, see, what showers arise,
 * Blown with the windy tempest of my heart,
 * Upon thy wounds, that kill mine eye and heart!—
 * O, pity, God, this miserable age!—
 * What stratagems,* how fell, how butcherly,
 * Erroneous, mutinous, and unnatural,
 * This deadly quarrel daily doth beget!—
 * O boy, thy father gave thee life too soon,
 * And hath bereft thee of thy life too late!
 * K. Hen. Woe above woe! grief more than common grief!

' O, that my death would stay these ruthless deeds!
 * O pity, pity, gentle heaven, pity!—
 * The red rose and the white are on his face,
 * The fatal colours of our striving houses:
 * The one, his purple blood right well resembles;
 * The other, his pale cheeks, methinks, present!
 * With one rose, and let the other flourish!
 * If you contend, a thousand lives must wither.
 * Son. How will my mother, for a father's death,
 * Take on⁴ with me, and ne'er be satisfied!
 * Fath. How will my wife, for slaughter of my son,
 * Shed seas of tears, and ne'er be satisfied!
 * K. Hen. How will the country, for these woful chances,
 * Misthink⁵ the king, and not be satisfied!
 * Son. Was ever son, so rued a father's death?
 * Fath. Was ever father, so bemoan'd a son?
 * K. Hen. Was ever king, so griev'd for subjects' woe?
 * Much is your sorrow; mine, ten times so much.
 * Son. I'll bear thee hence, where I may weep my fill.
 * Fath. These arms of mine shall be thy winding-sheet;

* My heart, sweet boy, shall be thy sepulchre;
 * For from my heart thine image ne'er shall go.
 * My sighing breast shall be thy funeral bell;
 * And so obsequious⁶ will thy father be,
 * Sad for the loss of thee, having no more,
 * As Priam was for all his valiant sons.
 * I'll bear thee hence; and let them fight that will,
 * For I have murder'd where I should not kill.

[Exit, with the Body.]

' K. Hen. Sad-hearted men, much overgone with care,
 * Here sits a king more woful than you are.
Alarms: Excursions. Enter QUEEN MARGARET, PRINCE OF WALES, and EXETER.
 * Prince. Fly, father, fly! for all your friends are fled,
 * And Warwick rages like a chafed bull:
 * Away! for death doth hold us in pursuit.
 * Q. Mar. Mount you, my lord, towards Berwick post amain,
 * Edward and Richard, like a brace of greyhounds
 * Having the fearful flying hare in sight,
 * With fiery eyes, sparkling for very wrath,
 * And bloody steel grasp'd in their ireful hands,
 * Are at our backs; and therefore, hence amain.
 * Exe. Away! for vengeance comes along with them;
 * Nay, stay not to expostulate, make speed;
 * Or else come after, I'll away before.
 * K. Hen. Nay, take me with thee, good sweet Exeter;
 * Not that I fear to stay, but love to go
 * Whither the queen intends. Forward; away!
[Exit.]

SCENE VI. The same. A loud Alarm. Enter CLIFFORD, wounded.

' Clif. Here burns my candle out, ay, here it dies,
 * Which, while it lasted, gave King Henry light.
 * O, Lancaster! I fear thy overthrow,
 * More than my body's parting with my soul.
 * My love, and fear, glew'd many friends to thee;
 * And, now I fall, thy tough commixtures melt.
 * Impairing Henry, strength'ning mis-proud York,
 * The common people swarm like summer flies:
 * And whither fly the gnats, but to the sun?
 * And who shines now but Henry's enemies?
 * O Phœbus! hadst thou never given consent
 * That Phaeton should check thy fiery steeds,
 * Thy burning car never had scorched the earth:
 * And, Henry, hadst thou sway'd as kings should do,
 * Or as thy father, and his father did,
 * Giving no ground unto the house of York,
 * * They never then had sprung like summer flies:
 * I, and ten thousand in this luckless realm,
 * Had left no mourning widows for our death,
 * And thou this day hadst kept thy chair in peace.
 * For what doth cherish weeds but gentle air?
 * And what makes robbers bold, but too much lenity?
 * Bootless are plaints, and cureless are my wounds;
 * No way to fly, nor strength to hold out flight:
 * The foe is merciless, and will not pity;
 * For at their hands I have deserv'd no pity.
 * The air hath got into my deadly wounds,
 * And much effuse of blood doth make me faint:—

5 Think unfavourably of.

6 Obsequious is here careful of obsequies or funeral rites. See Hamlet, Act I. Sc. 1.

7 In the old play the stage direction adds, with an arrow in his neck. It is thought that Beaumont and Fletcher ridiculed this, by introducing Ralph, the grocer's apprentice, in the Knight of the Burning Pestle, with a forked arrow through his head. The circumstance is related by Holinshed, p. 664:—'The Lord Clifford, either for heat or paine, putting off his gorget suddenly, with an arrow (as some saie) without a head, was stricken into the throte, and immediately rendered his spirit.'

8 Hence perhaps originated the following passage in The Bard of Gray:—

'The swarm that in thy noontide beam were born,
 * Gone to salute the rising morn.'

the innumerable calamities of civil war. Raphael has introduced the second of these incidents in his picture of the battle of Constantine and Maximianus.

1 The king intends to say that the state of their hearts and eyes shall be like that of the kingdom in a civil war; all shall be destroyed by power formed within themselves.

2 Stratagems here means direful events.
 3 Of these obscure lines the following explanation by Henley is the most probable which has been offered:—Had the son been younger he would have been precluded from the levy which brought him to the field; and had the father recognized him before their mortal encounter, it would not have been too late to have saved him from death.

4 To take on is a phrase still in use in common parlance, and signifies to persist in clamorous lamentation.

Come, York, and Richard, Warwick, and the rest ;
' I stabb'd your fathers' bosoms, split my breast.

[He faints.]

Alarm and Retreat. Enter EDWARD, GEORGE, RICHARD, MONTAGUE, WARWICK, and Soldiers.

' Edw. Now breathe we, lords ; good fortune bids us pause,
' And smoothe the frowns of war with peaceful looks.'—

* Some troops pursue the bloody-minded queen ;—
' That led calm Henry, though he were a king,
' As doth a sail, fill'd with a fretting gust,
' Command an argosy to stem the waves.
' But think you, lords, that Clifford fled with them ?
' War. No, 'tis impossible he should escape :
For, though before his face I speak the words,
Your brother Richard mark'd him for the grave :
' And, wheresoe'er he is, he's surely dead.

[CLIFFORD groans, and dies.]

Edw. Whose soul is that which takes her heavy leave ?

Rich. A deadly groan, like life and death's departing.²

Edw. See who it is : and now the battle's ended,
If friend, or foe, let him be gently us'd.

' Rich. Revoke that doom of mercy, for 'tis Clifford ;

' Who not contented that he lopp'd the branch
' In hewing Rutland when his leaves put forth,
' But set his murdering knife unto the root
' From whence that tender spray did sweetly spring,
' I mean our princely father, duke of York.

War. From off the gates of York fetch down the head,
Your father's head, which Clifford placed there :

' Instead whereof, let this supply the room ;
Measure for measure must be answered.

Edw. Bring forth that fatal screechowl to our house,

' That nothing sung but death³ to us and ours :
' Now death shall stop his dismal threatening sound,
' And his ill-boding tongue no more shall speak.

[Attendants bring the Body forward.]

War. I think his understanding is bereft :—
Speak, Clifford, dost thou know who speaks to thee ?—

Dark cloudy death o'er shades his beams of life,
And he nor sees, nor hears us what we say.

Rich. O, 'would he did ! and so, perhaps, he doth ;
' 'Tis but his policy to counterfeit,
' Because he would avoid such bitter taunts,
' Which in the time of death he gave our father.

Geo. If so thou think'st, vex him with eager words.⁴

Rich. Clifford, ask mercy, and obtain no grace.

Edw. Clifford, repent in bootless penitence.

War. Clifford, devise excuses for thy faults.

Geo. While we devise fell tortures for thy faults.

' Rich. Thou didst love York, and I am son to York.

Edw. Thou pitied'st Rutland, I will pity thee.

Geo. Where's the Captain Margaret, to fence you now ?

War. They mock thee, Clifford ! swear as thou wast wont.

' Rich. What, not an oath ? nay, then the world goes hard,

' When Clifford cannot spare his friends an oath : I know by that, he's dead ; And, by my soul,

' If this right hand would buy two hours' life,

That I in all despite might rail at him,

' This hand should chop it off ; and with the issuing blood

Stifle the villain, whose unstanched thirst

York and young Rutland could not satisfy.

War. Ay, but he's dead : Off with the traitor's head,

And rear it in the place your father's stands.—

And now to London with triumphant march,

There to be crowned England's royal king.

' From whence shall Warwick cut the sea to France,

And ask the Lady Bona for thy queen :

So shalt thou sinew both these lands together ;

' And, having France thy friend, thou shalt not dread

The scatter'd foe, that hopes to rise again :

For though they cannot greatly sting to hurt,

Yet look to have them buz, to offend thine ears.

First, will I see the coronation ;

' And then to Britany I'll cross the sea,

To effect this marriage, so it please my lord.

Edw. Even as thou wilt, sweet Warwick, let it be :

* For on thy shoulder do I build my seat ;

* And never will I undertake the thing,

* Wherein thy counsel and consent is wanting.—

' Richard, I will create thee duke of Gloster ;—

' And George, of Clarence ;—Warwick, as ourself,

' Shall do, and undo, as him pleaseth best.

Rich. Let me be duke of Clarence ; George, of Gloster ;

For Gloster's dukedom is too ominous.⁵

War. Tut, that's a foolish observation ;

Richard, be duke of Gloster : Now to London,

To see these honours in possession. [Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I. A Chase in the North of England.

Enter Two Keepers,⁶ with Crossbows in their Hands.

1 Keep. Under this thick-grown brake⁷ we'll shroud ourselves ;

' For through this laund⁸ anon the deer will come ;

' And in this covert will we make our stand,

' Culling the principal of all the deer.

* 2 Keep. I'll stay above the hill, so both may shoot.

* 1 Keep. That cannot be ; the noise of thy crossbow

* Will scare the herd, and so my shoot is lost.

* Here stand we both, and aim we at the best ;

* And, for the time shall not seem tedious,

1 Thus in King Richard III. :—
Grim-visaged war hath smooch'd his wrinkled front.

2 Departing for separation. To depart, in old language, is to part. Thus in the old marriage service :—
Till death us depart.

3 We have this also in King Richard III. :—
' Out on you, owls ! nothing but songs of death.'

4 Sour words ; words of asperity. ' Verie eagle or sowre : peracerous.'—Baret.

5 Alluding to the deaths of Thomas of Woodstock and Humphrey, duke of Gloster. The author of the old play, in which this line is found, had a passage of Hall's Chronicle in his thoughts, in which the unfortunate ends of those who had borne the title is recounted : he thus concludes :—' So that this name of Gloucester is taken for an unhappie and unfortunate stile, as the proverbe speaks of Segane's horse, whose ryder was ever unhorsed, and whose possessor was ever brought to miserie.'

6 In the folio copy, instead of two keepers, we have through negligences the names of the persons who represented these characters, Sincklo and Humphrey. Humphrey was probably Humphrey Jeaffies, mentioned in Mr. Henslowe's manuscript ; Sincklo we have before mentioned, his name being prefixed to some speeches in the Induction to The Taming of the Shrew. Hall and Holinshed tell us that Henry VI. ' was no sooner entered into England but he was known and taken of one Cantlow, and brought to the king.' It appears, however, from records in the duchy office, that King Edward granted a rent-charge of one hundred pound to Sir James Harrington, in recompense of his great and laborious diligence about the capture and detention of the king's great traitor, rebel, and enemy, lately called Henry the Sixth, made by the said James ; and likewise annuities to Richard and Thomas Talbot, Esquires,—Talbot, and Levesey, for their services in the same capture. Henry had been for some time harboured by James Maychell of Crakenhorpe, Westmoreland. See Rymer's Fœdera, xi. 548, 573.

7 Thicket.

8 A plain extended between woods, a laune.

* I'll tell thee what befell me on a day,
 * In this self-place where now we mean to stand.
 '2 Keep. Here comes a man, let's stay till he be past.

Enter KING HENRY, disguised, with a Prayer-book.

K. Hen. From Scotland am I stol'n, even of pure love,
 ' To greet mine own land with my wishful sight.
 ' No, Harry, Harry, 'tis no land of thine;
 * Thy place is fill'd, thy sceptre wrung from thee,
 * Thy balm wash'd off,¹ wherewith thou wast anointed:

No bending knee will call thee Cæsar now,
 ' No humble suitors press to speak for right,
 * No, not a man comes for redress of thee;
 For how can I help them, and not myself?

'1 Keep. Ay, here's a deer whose skin's a keeper's fee:

' This is the quondam king; let's seize upon him.
 * K. Hen. Let me embrace these our adversities;

* For wise men say, it is the wisest course.
 '2 Keep. Why linger we? let us lay hands upon him.

*1 Keep. Forbear awhile; we'll hear a little more.

K. Hen. My queen, and son, are gone to France for aid;

And, as I hear, the great commanding Warwick

' Is thither gone, to crave the French king's sister
 ' To wife for Edward: If this news be true,

' Poor queen, and, son, your labour is but lost;
 ' For Warwick is a subtle orator,

' And Lewis a prince soon won with moving words.
 ' By this account, then, Margaret may win him;

' For she's a woman to be pitied much:
 * Her sighs will make a battery in his breast;

* Her tears will pierce into a marble heart;
 * The tiger will be mild, while she doth mourn;

* And Nero will be tainted with remorse,
 * To hear, and see, her plaints, her brinish tears.

* Ay, but she's come to beg; Warwick, to give:
 She, on his left side, craving aid for Henry;

He, on his right, asking a wife for Edward.
 She weeps, and says—her Henry is depos'd;

He smiles, and says—his Edward is install'd;
 * That she, poor wretch, for grief can speak no more:

* While Warwick tells his title, smooths the wrong,
 * Inferreth arguments of mighty strength;²

* And, in conclusion, wins the king from her,
 * With promise of his sister, and what else,

* To strengthen and support King Edward's place.
 * O Margaret, thus 'twill be; and thou, poor soul,

* Art then forsaken, as thou wert'st forlorn.³
 '2 Keep. Say, what art thou, that talk'st of kings and queens?

' K. Hen. More than I seem, and less than I was born to:

' A man at least, for less I should not be;
 And men may talk of kings, and why not I?

'2 Keep. Ay, but thou talk'st as if thou wert a king.

' K. Hen. Why, so I am, in mind:⁴ and that's enough.

'2 Keep. But, if thou be a king, where is thy crown?

1 Thus also in King Richard II. —
 ' Not all the water in the rough rude sea
 Can wash the balm from an anointed king.'

It is observable that this line is one of those additions to the original play which are found in the folio and not in the quarto.

2 This line has already occurred in the former Act:—
 ' Inferring arguments of mighty force.'

In the line the line occurs but once.

3 The pety of Henry scarce interests us more for his misfortunes than his constant solicitude for the welfare of his deceitful queen.—Steevens.

4 Malone thinks that there is an allusion here to an old poem by Sir Edward Dyer, beginning—' My mind to me a kingdom is.' See it in Percy's Reliques, 3d edition, vol. I. p. 293.

5 This is in every particular a falsification of history. Sir John Grey fell in the second battle of St. Albans

K. Hen. My crown is in my heart, not on my head;

* Not deck'd with diamonds, and Indian stones,
 * Nor to be seen: 'my crown is call'd, content;

' A crown it is, that seldom kings enjoy.
 '2 Keep. Well, if you be a king crown'd with content,

Your crown content, and you, must be contented
 ' To go along with us: for, as we think,

' You are the king, King Edward hath depos'd;
 ' And we his subjects, sworn in all allegiance,

' Will apprehend you as his enemy.
 * K. Hen. But did you never swear, and break an oath?

*2 Keep. No, never such an oath, nor will not now.

* K. Hen. Where did you dwell, when I was king of England?

*2 Keep. Here in this country, where we now remain.

* K. Hen. I was anointed king at nine months old;

* My father and my grandfather were kings;
 * And you were sworn true subjects unto me:

* And, tell me then, have you not broke your oaths?
 *1 Keep. No;

For we were subjects, but while you were king.
 * K. Hen. Why, am I dead? do I not breathe a man?

* Ah, simple men, you know not what you swear.
 * Look, as I blow this feather from my face,

* And as the air blows it to me again,
 * Obeying with my mind when I do blow,

* And yielding to another when it blows,
 * Commanded always by the greater gust;

* Such is the lightness of you common men.
 * But do not break your oaths; for, of that sin

* My mild entreaty shall not make you guilty.
 * Go where you will, the king shall be commanded;

* And be you kings; command, and I'll obey.
 *1 Keep. We are true subjects to the king, King Edward.

* K. Hen. So would you be again to Henry,
 * If he were seated as King Edward is.

'1 Keep. We charge you, in God's name, and in the king's,

To go with us unto the officers.
 ' K. Hen. In God's name, lead; your king's name be obey'd:

* And what God will, then let your king perform;
 * And what he will, I humbly yield unto. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II. London. A Room in the Palace.
Enter KING EDWARD, GLOSTER, CLARENCE, and LADY GREY.

' K. Edw. Brother of Gloster, at Saint Albans' field

' This lady's husband, Sir John Grey, was slain,
 His lands then seiz'd on by the conqueror:

Her suit is now, to repossess those lands;
 * Which we in justice cannot well deny,

Because in quarrel of the house of York
 ' The worthy gentleman did lose his life.⁵

Glo. Your highness shall do well, to grant her suit;

* It were dishonour, to deny it her.

fighting on the side of King Henry; and so far is it from being true that his lands were seized by the conqueror (Queen Margaret) that they were in fact seized by King Edward after his victory at Towton, 1461. The present scene is laid in 1464. Shakspeare followed the old play in this instance; but when he afterwards had occasion to mention this matter in writing his King Richard III he stated it truly as he found it in the Chronicles. In Act I. Sc. 2 of that play, Richard, addressing himself to Queen Elizabeth (the Lady Grey of the present scene), says:—

' In all which time you and your husband Grey
 Were factious for the house of Lancaster;

(And, Rivers, so were you:)—was not your husband
 In Margaret's battle at Saint Albans slain?

Malone says that this circumstance, among numerous others, proves incontestably that Shakspeare was not the original author of this and the preceding play.

K. Edw. It were no less; but yet I'll make a pause.
Glo. Yea! is it so?
 I see, the lady hath a thing to grant,
 Before the king will grant her humble suit.
Clar. He knows the game; How true he keeps the wind?
Glo. Silence!
K. Edw. Widow, we will consider of your suit;¹
 And come some other time, to know our mind.
L. Grey. Right gracious lord, I cannot brook delay:
 'May it please your highness to resolve me now;
 'And what your pleasure is, shall satisfy me.
Glo. [Aside.] Ay, widow? then I'll warrant you all your lands,
 'And if what pleases him, shall pleasure you.
 'Fight closer, or, good faith, you'll catch a blow.
 Clar.* I fear her not, unless she chance to fall.
 Glo.* God forbid that! for he'll take vantages.
K. Edw. How many children hast thou, widow? tell me.
Clar. I think, he means to beg a child of her.
Glo. Nay, whip me then; he'll rather give her two.
L. Grey. Three, my most gracious lord.
Glo. You shall have four, if you'll be rul'd by him.
K. Edw. 'Twere pity, they should lose their father's land.
L. Grey. Be pitiful, dread lord, and grant it then.
K. Edw. Lords, give us leave; I'll try this widow's wit.
Glo. Ay, good leave² have you; for you will have leave,
 'Till youth take leave, and leave you to the crutch.
 [GLOSTER and CLARENCE retire to the other side.]
 K. Edw.* Now tell me, madam, do you love your children?
 L. Grey.* Ay, full as dearly as I love myself.
 K. Edw.* And would you not do much, to do them good?
 L. Grey.* To do them good, I would sustain some harm.
 K. Edw.* Then get your husband's lands, to do them good.
 L. Grey.* Therefore I came unto your majesty.
K. Edw. I'll tell you how these lands are to be got.
 L. Grey.* So shall you bind me to your highness' service.
 K. Edw.* What service wilt thou do me, if I give them?
 L. Grey.* What you command, that rests in me to do.
 K. Edw.* But you will take exceptions to my boon.
 L. Grey.* No, gracious lord, except I cannot do it.
 K. Edw.* Ay, but thou canst do what I mean to ask.
 L. Grey.* Why, then I will do what your grace commands.
 Glo.* He plies her hard; and much rain wears the marble.
 Clar.* As red as fire! nay, then her wax must melt.
L. Grey. Why stops my lord? shall I not hear my task?
K. Edw. An easy task; 'tis but to love a king.
L. Grey. That's soon perform'd, because I am a subject.
K. Edw. Why then, thy husband's lands I freely give thee.

L. Grey. I take my leave with many thousand thanks.
Glo. The match is made; she seals it with a curt'sy.
 K. Edw.* But stay thee, 'tis the fruits of love I mean.
 L. Grey.* The fruits of love I mean, my loving liege.
 K. Edw.* Ay, but I fear me, in another sense.
 What love, think'st thou, I sue so much to get?
 L. Grey.* My love till death, my humble thanks, my prayers;
 'That love, which virtue begs, and virtue grants.
K. Edw. No, by my troth, I did not mean such love.
 L. Grey.* Why, then you mean not as I thought you did.
 K. Edw.* But now you partly may perceive my mind.
 L. Grey.* My mind will never grant what I perceive
 * Your highness aims at, if I aim aright.
K. Edw. To tell thee plain, I aim to lie with thee.
 L. Grey.* To tell you plain, I had rather lie in prison.
K. Edw. Why, then thou shalt not have thy husband's lands.
L. Grey. Why, then mine honesty shall be my dowry;
 For by that loss I will not purchase them.
 K. Edw.* Therein thou wrong'st thy children mightily.
L. Grey. Herein your highness wrongs both then and me.
 But, mighty lord, this merry inclination
 'Accords not with the sadness³ of my suit;
 Please you dismiss me, either with ay, or no.
K. Edw. Ay; if thou wilt say ay, to my request:
 No; if thou dost say no, to my demand.
L. Grey. Then, no, my lord. My suit is at an end.
 Glo.* The widow likes him not, she knits her brows.
Clar. He is the bluntest wooer in Christendom.
 K. Edw.* [Aside.] Her looks do argue her replete with modesty;
 * Her words do show her wit incomparable;
 * All her perfections challenge sovereignty:
 One way, or other, she is for a king;
 And she shall be my love, or else my queen.—
 Say, that King Edward take thee for his queen?
L. Grey. 'Tis better said than done, my gracious lord:
 I am a subject fit to jest withal,
 But far unfit to be a sovereign.
K. Edw. Sweet widow, by my state I swear to thee,
 I speak no more than what my soul intends;
 And that is, to enjoy thee for my love.
L. Grey. And that is more than I will yield unto.
 'I know I am too mean to be your queen:
 And yet too good to be your concubine.
K. Edw. You cavil, widow; I did mean, my queen.
L. Grey. 'Twill grieve your grace, my sons should call you—father.
K. Edw. No more, than when thy daughters call thee mother.
 Thou art a widow, and thou hast some children,
 And, by God's mother, I, being but a bachelor,
 Have other some: why, 'tis a happy thing
 To be the father unto many sons.
 'Answer no more, for thou shalt be my queen.
Glo. The ghostly father now hath done his shrift.
Clar. When he was made a shriver, 'twas for shift.
K. Edw. Brothers, you muse what chat we two have had.

1 A very lively and spritely dialogue; the reciprocity is quicker than is common in Shakspeare.—Johnson

2 This phrase implies readiness of assent.

3 i. e. seriousness.

* Glo. The widow likes it not, for she looks very sad.

K. Edw. You'd think it strange if I should marry her.

Clar. To whom, my lord?

K. Edw. Why, Clarence, to myself.

Glo. That would be ten days' wonder, at the least.

Clar. That's a day longer than a wonder lasts.

* Glo. By so much is the wonder in extremes.

K. Edw. Well, jest on, brothers: I can tell you both,

Her suit is granted for her husband's lands.

Enter a Nobleman.

Nob. My gracious lord, Henry your foe is taken, and brought your prisoner to your palace gate.

K. Edw. See, that he be convey'd unto the Tower:—

* And go we, brothers, to the man that took him, To question of his apprehension.—

* Widow, go you along;—Lords, use her honourable.

[EXECUTED KING EDWARD, LADY GREY, CLARENCE, and Lord.]

Glo. Ay, Edward will use women honourably.

* Would, he were wasted, marrow, bones, and all,

* That from his loins no hopeful branch may spring,

* To cross me from the golden time I look for!

* And yet, between my soul's desire and me

* (The lustful Edward's title buried)

* Is Clarence, Henry, and his son young Edward,

* And all the unlook'd-for issue of their bodies,

* To take their rooms, ere I can place myself:

A cold premeditation for my purpose!

* Why, then I do but dream on sovereignty;

* Like one that stands upon a promontory,

* And spies a far-off shore where he would tread,

* Wishing his foot were equal with his eye;

* And chides the sea that sunders him from thence,

* Saying—he'll lade it dry to have his way:

* So do I wish the crown, being so far off;

* And so I chide the means that keep me from it;

* And so I say—I'll cut the causes off,

* Flattering me with impossibilities.—

* My eye's too quick, my heart o'erween too much,

* Unless my hand and strength could equal them.

* Well, say there is no kingdom then for Richard;

* What other pleasure can the world afford?

* I'll make my heaven in a lady's lap,

* And deck my body in gay ornaments,

* And witch sweet ladies with my words and looks.

* O miserable thought! and more unlikely,

* Than to accomplish twenty golden crowns!

Why, love forswore me in my mother's womb:

* And, for I should not deal in her soft laws

* She did corrupt frail nature with some bribe

* To shrink mine arm up like a wither'd shrub;

* To make an envious mountain on my back,

Where sits deformity to mock my body;

* To shape my legs of an unequal size;

* To disproportion me in every part,

* Like to a chaos, or an unlick'd bear-whelp,¹

* That carries no impression like the dam.

And am I then a man to be belov'd?

* O, monstrous fault, to harbour such a thought.

1 It was an opinion which, in spite of its absurdity, prevailed long, that the bear brings forth only shapeless lumps of flesh, which she licks into the form of bears. It is now well known that the whelps of bears are produced in the same state with those of other animals.—

Johnson.

2 Richard speaks here the language of nature. Whoever is stigmatized with deformity has a constant source of envy in his mind, and would counterbalance by some other superiority those advantages which he feels himself to want. Bacon remarks that the deformed are commonly daring; and it is almost proverbially observed that they are ill-natured. The truth is that the deformed, like all other men, are displeased with inferiority, and endeavour to gain ground by good or bad means, as they are virtuous or corrupt.—Johnson.

3 I.e. encircled. Steevens would read with Hammer:—
'Until my head that this misshap'd trunk bears.'

* Then, since this earth affords no joy to me,

* But to command, to check, to o'erbear such

* As are of better person than myself;²

* I'll make my heaven—to dream upon the crown;

* And, whiles I live, to account this world but hell,

* Until my misshap'd trunk that bears this head,

* Be round impaied³ with a glorious crown.

* And yet I know not how to get the crown,

* For many lives stand between me and home:

* And I,—like one lost in a thorny wood,

* That rents the thorns, and is rent with the thorns;

* Seeking a way, and straying from the way

* Not knowing now to find the open air,

* But toiling desperately to find it out,—

* Torment myself to catch the English crown:

* And from that torment I will free myself,

* Or hew my way out with a bloody axe.

Why, I can smile, and murder while I smile;

* And cry, content, to that which grieves my heart;

* And wet my cheeks with artificial tears,

* And frame my face to all occasions.

* I'll drown more sailors than the mermaid shall;

* I'll slay more gazers than the basilisk;

* I'll play the orator as well as Nestor,

* Deceive more slyly than Ulysses could;

* And, like a Sinon, take another Troy;

I can add colours to theameleon;

* Change shapes, with Proteus, for advantages,

* And set the murd'rous Machiavel⁴ to school.

Can I do this, and cannot get a crown?

* Tut! were it further off, I'll pluck it down. [Exit]

SCENE III. France. A Room in the Palace.

Flourish. Enter LEWIS, the French King, and

LADY BONA, attended; the King takes his State.

Then enter QUEEN MARGARET, PRINCE EDWARD her Son, and the EARL OF OXFORD.

* K. Lew. Fair queen of England, worthy Margaret,

* Sit down with us: it ill befits thy state,

* And birth, that thou should'st stand, while Lewis doth sit.

* Q. Mar. No, mighty king of France; now Margaret

* Must strike her sail, and learn awhile to serve,

* Where kings command. I was, I must confess,

* Great Albion's queen in former golden days:

* But now mischance hath trod my title down,

* And with dishonour laid me on the ground;

* Where I must take like seat unto my fortune,

* And to my humble seat conform myself.

* K. Lew. Why, say, fair queen, whence springs this deep despair?

* Q. Mar. From such a cause as fills mine eyes with tears,

* And stops my tongue, while heart is drown'd in cares.

* K. Lew. Whate'er it be, be thou still like thyself,

* And sit thee by our side: yield not thy neck

* To fortune's yoke, but let thy dauntless mind

* Still ride in triumph over all mischance.

* Be plain, Queen Margaret, and tell thy grief;

* It shall be eas'd, if France can yield relief.

Otherwise, he observes, the trunk that bears the head is to be encircled with the crown, and not the head itself

4 The old play reads with more propriety:—

'And set the aspiring Cataline to school.'

By which the anachronism is also avoided. Machiavel is mentioned in various books of the poet's age as the great exemplar of profound politicians. An amusing instance of the odium attached to his name is to be found in Gill's Logonomia Anglica, 1621:—'Et ne oemper Sidelos loquamur, audi epilogum fabulæ quam docuit Boreali dialecto poeta, titulumque fuit reus Machiavellus:—

'Machil iz hanged
And brenned iz his buks:
Though Machil iz hanged
Yet he iz not wranged,
The Di'el haz him fanged
In hiz cruket ciuks.'

- * Q. Mar. Those gracious words revive my drooping thoughts,
 * And give my tongue-tied sorrows leave to speak.
 * Now, therefore, be it known to noble Lewis,—
 * That Henry, sole possessor of my love,
 * Is, of a king, become a banish'd man,
 * And forc'd to live in Scotland a forlorn;
 * While proud ambitious Edward, duke of York,
 * Usurps the regal title, and the seat
 * Of England's true anointed lawful king.
 * This is the cause, that I, poor Margaret,—
 * With this my son, Prince Edward, Henry's heir,
 * Am come to crave thy just and lawful aid;
 * And, if thou fail us, all our hope is done:
 * Scotland hath will to help, but cannot help;
 * Our people and our peers are both misled,
 * Our treasure seiz'd, our soldiers put to flight,
 * And, as thou seest, ourselves in heavy plight.
 * K. Lew. Renowned queen, with patience calm the storm,
 * While we bethink a means to break it off.
 * Q. Mar. The more we stay, the stronger grows our foe.
 * K. Lew. The more I stay, the more I'll succour thee.
 * Q. Mar. O, but impatience waiteth on true sorrow:
 * And see, where comes the breeder of my sorrow.

Enter WARWICK,¹ attended.

- * K. Lew. What's he, approacheth boldly to our presence?
 * Q. Mar. Our earl of Warwick, Edward's greatest friend.
 * K. Lew. Welcome, brave Warwick! What brings thee to France?
 [Descending from his State, Queen MARGARET rises.]
 * Q. Mar. Ay, now begins a second storm to rise;
 * For this is he that moves both wind and tide.
 * War. From worthy Edward, king of Albion,
 My lord and sovereign, and thy vowed friend,
 I come,—in kindness, and unfeigned love,—
 First, to do greetings to thy royal person;
 And, then, to crave a league of amity;
 And, lastly, to confirm that amity
 With nuptial knot, if thou vouchsafe to grant
 That virtuous Lady Bona, thy fair sister,
 To England's king in lawful marriage.
 * Q. Mar. If that go forward, Henry's hope is done.²
 * War. And, gracious madam, [To BONA], in our king's behalf,
 * I am commanded, with your leave and favour,
 Humbly to kiss your hand, and with my tongue
 To tell the passion of my sovereign's heart;
 Where fame, late entering at his heedful ears,
 Hath plac'd thy beauty's image, and thy virtue.
 * Q. Mar. King Lewis,—and Lady Bona,—hear me speak,
 * Before you answer Warwick. His demand
 * Springs not from Edward's well meant honest love,
 * But from deceit, bred by necessity;
 * For how can tyrants safely govern home,
 * Unless abroad they purchase great alliance?
 * To prove him tyrant, this reason may suffice,—

1 This nobleman's embassy and commission, the insult he receives by the king's hasty marriage, and his consequent resolution to avenge it, with the capture, imprisonment, and escape of the king, Shakspeare found in Hall and Holinshed; but later as well as earlier writers of better authority, incline us to discredit the whole; and to refer the rupture between the king and his political creator to other causes. Perhaps we need seek no further than that jealousy and ingratitude which is but too often experienced in those who are under great obligations—too great to be discharged. There needs no other proof how little our common histories are to be depended on, than this fabulous story of Warwick and the Lady Bona. The king was privately married to the Lady Elizabeth Widville, in 1463, and in February, 1465, Warwick actually stood sponsor to the Princess Elizabeth, their first child. It should seem from the

- * That Henry liveth still: but were he dead,
 * Yet here Prince Edward stands, King Henry's son.
 * Look therefore, Lewis, that by this league and marriage,
 * Thou draw not on thy danger and dishonour:
 * For though usurpers sway the rule awhile,
 * Yet heavens are just, and time suppresseth wrongs.
 * War. Injurious Margaret!
 * Prince. And why not queen?
 * War. Because thy father Henry did usurp;
 And thou no more art prince, than she is queen.
 * Oxf. Then Warwick disannuls great John of Gaunt,
 Which did subdue the greatest part of Spain;
 And, after John of Gaunt, Henry the Fourth,
 * Whose wisdom was a mirror to the wisest;
 And, after that wise prince, Henry the Fifth,
 Who by his prowess conquered all France:
 From these our Henry lineally descends.
 * War. Oxford, how haps it, in this smooth discourse,
 You told not, how Henry the Sixth hath lost
 All that which Henry the Fifth had gotten?
 Methinks, these peers of France should smile at that.
 But for the rest,—You tell a pedigree
 Of threescore and two years; a silly time
 To make prescription for a kingdom's worth.
 * Oxf. Why, Warwick, canst thou speak against thy liege,
 * Whom thou obey'dst thirty and six years,
 And not bewray thy treason with a blush?
 * War. Can Oxford, that did ever fence the right,
 Now buckler falsehood with a pedigree?
 For shame, leave Henry, and call Edward king.
 * Oxf. Call him my king, by whose injurious doom
 * My elder brother, the Lord Aubrey Vere,
 Was done to death? and more than so, my father,
 Even in the downfall of his mellow'd years,
 * When nature brought him to the door of death?³
 No, Warwick, no; while life upholds this arm,
 This arm upholds the house of Lancaster.
 * War. And I the house of York.
 * K. Lew. Queen Margaret, Prince Edward, and Oxford,
 * Vouchsafe, at our request, to stand aside,
 * While I use further conference with Warwick.
 * Q. Mar. Heaven grant, that Warwick's words bewitch him not!
 [Retiring with the Prince and Oxford.]
 * K. Lew. Now, Warwick, tell me, even upon thy conscience,
 * Is Edward your true king? for I were loath
 * To link with him that were not lawful chosen.
 * War. Thereon I pawn my credit and mine honour.
 * K. Lew. But is he gracious in the peoples' eye?
 * War. The more, that Henry was unfortunate.⁴
 * K. Lew. Then further,—all dissembling set aside,
 * Tell me for truth the measure of his love
 * Unto our sister Bona.
 * War. Such it seems,
 As may beseem a monarch like himself.
 Myself have often heard him say and swear,—
 That this his love was an eternal plant;⁵
 Whereof the root was fix'd in virtue's ground,
 The leaves and fruit maintain'd with beauty's sun;

Annals of W. of Wyrcester, that no open rupture had taken place between the king and Warwick, up to the beginning of November, 1463; at least nothing appears to the contrary in that historian, whose work is unfortunately defective from that period.

2 There is nearly the same line in a former speech of Margaret's. It is found in its present situation alone in the old play.

3 This passage unavoidably brings to mind that admirable image of old age in Sackville's Induction to the Mirror for Magistrates:—

'His withered fist still knocking at death's door.'

4 He means 'that Henry was unsuccessful in war,' having lost his dominions in France, &c.

5 In the language of Shakspeare's time, by an eternal plant was meant what we now call a perennial one.

Exempt from envy,¹ but not from disdain,
Unless the Lady Bona quit his pain.

K. Lew. Now, sister, let us hear your firm resolve.

Bona. Your grant, or your denial, shall be mine :
Yet I confess, [To WAR.] that often ere this day,
When I have heard your king's desert recounted,
Mine ear hath tempted judgment to desire.

* K. Lew. Then, Warwick, thus—Our sister shall be Edward's ;

* And now forthwith shall articles be drawn
* Touching the jointure that your king must make,
* Which with her dowry shall be counterpois'd :—
Draw near, queen Margaret ; and be a witness,
That Bona shall be wife to the English king.

Prince. To Edward, but not to the English king.

* Q. Mar. Deceitful Warwick ! it was thy device
* By this alliance to make void my suit ;

* Before thy coming, Lewis was Henry's friend.

* K. Lew. And still is friend to him and Margaret ;

* But if your title to the crown be weak,—

* As may appear by Edward's good success,—

* Then 'tis but reason, that I be releas'd

* From giving aid, which late I promised.

* Yet shall you have all kindness at my hand.

* That your estate requires, and mine can yield.

War. Henry now lives in Scotland, at his ease ;

Where having nothing, nothing he can lose.

And as for you yourself, our quondam queen,—

You have a father able to maintain you ;²—

And better 'twere, you troubled him than France.

* Q. Mar. Peace, impudent and shameless Warwick, peace ;

* Proud setter-up and puller-down of kings !³

* I will not hence, till with my talk and tears,

* Both full of truth, I make King Lewis behold

* Thy sly conveyance,⁴ and thy lord's false love ;

* For both of you are birds of self-same feather.

[A Horn sounded within.]

K. Lew. Warwick, this is some post to us, or thee.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord ambassador, these letters are for
you ;

Sent from your brother, Marquis Montague.

These from our king unto your majesty.—

And, niadain, these for you ; from whom I know not.

[To MARGARET. They all read their Letters.]

Oxf. I like it well, that our fair queen and mistress Smiles at her news, while Warwick frowns at his.

Prince. Nay, mark, how Lewis stamps as he were nettled :

* I hope, all's for the best.

* K. Lew. Warwick, what are thy news ? and yours, fair queen ?

* Q. Mar. Mine, such as fill my heart with unhop'd joys.
